A long hour later Pollyanna sent Jimmy a letter. It was confused and incoherent—a series of half-completed, illogical, but shyly joyous sentences, out of which Jimmy gathered much: a little from what was written; more from what was left unwritten. After all, did he really need more than this: "Oh, Jimmy, he doesn't love me a bit. It's some one else. I mustn't tell you who it is—but her name isn't Pollyanna."

Jimmy had just time to catch the seven o'clock train for Beldingsville—and he caught it.

To be continued

made holy. Outwardness is but the form of the power within. Godlikeness is holiness or wholeness, completeness in him. One has said: "The great question of this age has come to be not is it right or wrong, but is it sterilized?" We are trying to reform men by externals; but it is internals and externals that we need. Holiness works from within outward. Holiness, like a banyan tree, is taking root among all denominations in all lands, and its leaves are for the healing of the nations. Wesley's "Holy Club" is a worldwide evangelistic organization now. Jeremy Taylor's "Holy Living and Dying" is being practiced everywhere. Thomas à Kempis's "Imitation of Christ" is becoming the ideal of all true Christians. Personal holiness is the privilege and mission of every believer.

The World-War on Alcohol

Continued from page 417

of Representatives by Richmond Pearson Hobson. The Hobson Bill was voted upon in the House, securing eight majority. It did not receive the necessary two-thirds majority; but the vote astounded the nation and the world. Despite the opposition of Mr. Underwood, the Democratic leader, and Mr. Mann, the Republican leader, all of the South but four states voted for the bill. Two Republicans to one and eleven Progressives to one supported it. The nation is now two-thirds "dry," as to geographical area, and sixty per cent. of the people have abolished the saloon by law. It would be expected that Washington would reflect this fact, which it did.

This vote marks the collapse of the liquor power in American politics. The eight majority will soon be multiplied, until soon the necessary two-thirds will have been secured.

Senator Shepard will press the matter with great vigor at the next session of Congress. A vote of three-fourths of the states is necessary for the ratification of this constitutional amendment. There are nineteen "dry" states already, and eleven more that are pretty certain to join them within the next two years, making thirty virtually in sight that the temperance people can count upon. Six more states only will be necessary for the three-fourths majority, which will doubtless be secured, and nation-wide prohibition prevail by 1920.

A FOOD DRINK

Which Brings Daily Enjoyment

A lady doctor writes:
"Though busy hourly with my own affairs, I will not deny myself the pleasure of taking a few minutes to the enjoyment obtained daily from morning cup of Postum. It is a good beverage, not a stimulant like coffee."
"I began to use Postum 8 years ago; not because I wanted to, but because coffee, which I dearly loved, made me nervous, weary periods to bed and unfitting me for business during the day."
"On advice of a friend, I first tried Postum, making it carefully as suggested on the package. As I had a used 'cream and no sugar,' I mixed Postum so. It looked good, was and fragrant, and it was a pleasure to see the cream color it as my Kentucky friend always wanted her coffee to 'like a new saddle.'"
"Then I tasted it critically, for I had tried many 'substitutes' for coffee. I was pleased, yes, satisfied with my Postum in taste and effect, and, being a constant user of it all these years."
"I continually assure my friends and acquaintances that they will like Postum in place of coffee, and receive benefit from its use. I have gained weight, can sleep and am not nervous."
Name given by Postum Co., Little Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.
Postum comes in two forms:
Regular Postum—must be well brewed. 15c and 25c packages.
Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.
Both kinds are equally delicious and cost per cup about the same.
"There's a Reason" for Postum—sold by Grocers.

Don't expose your family to draughts, cold and dampness

Open or close your shutter from inside

The Mallory Shutter Worker enables you to open, close, bow or lock your shutters at any angle, by using a crank on the inside of the window sash.
Simple and easy to install—on yourself, or a carpenter can put them in place on old or new houses, other brick, frame or stone.
Write today for further information
MALLORY MANUFACTURING CO.
310 Moore Street, Flemington, N. J.

The "REAL" Keens The All

Fitted with Grain Leather Strop, specially treated for sharpening Gillette, DuPont, Ever Ready, Gem Star and other safety Razor Blades, as well as all old-style Jack Razors.
AGENTS! DEMONSTRATORS! 100% profit in this for you. Write quick for prices a territory. Send $1.00 for sample. Money back you want it.

CANTON RAZOR STROP CO.
706 Cook Street Canton, Ohio

Curtains Direct from the Manufacturer

Our new Line of "Qualibest" velvety Curtains contains hundreds of beautiful designs at one-half Retail Price.
No. 104. Made of good quality sergeon, stitched with Picot edge, 2 1/2 yard long. White or Arabe; state color desired; exceptional value, postpaid pair.
Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.
Send for Free Illustrated Catalog
French Curtain Mfg. Co., Dept. C, 31 E. 2, N.Y.

THE FRONT THAT GRASS THE GRIFFIN SILO ME

An unobstructed Continuous cutting. Doors absolutely tight, but it is not so small. Permanent steel bar attached to front. Everything in class and prices right. Liberal discount to reliable agents—Wanted in every town.

GRIFFIN LUMBER CO.
Box 555 HUDSON FALLS, N.Y.

FREE RECEPTION WEDDING

prices on Engraved Invitations, announcements, Cards, etc. With each order we will make free HANDSOME CELEBRATION from copper plate they are engraved.

VIRGINIA STATIONERY CO., 915 F Main St., Richmond

THE FASTEST SELLING FINE AUTOMOBILE IN AMERICA

GENERAL Sam Houston won the Battle of San Jacinto because far in advance he had picked the place where the fight should occur—took his position and waited for Santa Anna to meet him there.

In the general competition of automobiles today, the owner of a Franklin Car occupying ground he picked for himself long ago.

It took foresight and sound judgment to see that ultimately the whole motor-car question would revolve around the principles represented by his car—lightness, strength, flexibility, easy riding qualities, high mileage per gallon of gas, low upkeep.

Now he has the satisfaction of having other men endorse his principles without being able to match his act.

He sees them all maneuvering toward that sacred ground of economy, lightweight and efficiency—supported by a battery of "talking points" to meet Franklin's facts, Franklin's figures, Franklin's performance.

Franklin's lightweight begins with the Franklin system of direct-Air-Cooling. All the weight of water, water-circulating system, radiator, pipes, belts, pump and fan are done away with at one stroke; and with these 177 super-light parts goes all the extra weight necessary to carry this plumbing.

But it does not stop there.

Franklin Light-weight is Scientific Light-weight with Flexibility

Less weight under the springs. On a Franklin Car the front axle, rear axle and wheels all together weigh only 321 pounds. What breaks up a car is rigid heavy construction below the springs pounding the road—sudden blows jarring every part of the mechanism. This is what causes rapid depreciation. It is almost as destructive as direct violence.

If you want to know what Franklin light-weight with flexibility means in added strength—what it means to the life of a car, go to a used-car dealer and try to buy a second-hand Franklin Car.

Franklin Economy is Not a Chance Result Depending upon Good Luck

It is built into the car.

Poor tire service is the fault of the car-maker—not of the tire-maker.

U. S. Government report showing that it costs less to maintain the Franklin Car than the cheapest car made.

Franklin Gasoline Mileage Performance. See the legally certified statements sworn before duly commissioned State officials throughout the United States, showing that 94 Franklin Cars averaged 32.8 miles to a gallon of gasoline.

Franklin Cooling Performance. See official certificates sworn before 116 American Notaries Public, that 116 Franklin Stock Cars ran 100 miles each on low gear within ten hours, without stopping the engine.

Franklin Tire Mileage Performance. See records loaned by permission of Franklin owners, showing an average of 8,997 miles per set of tires.

Franklin Oil Consumption Performance. See records showing that Franklin owners are averaging from 400 to 900 miles per gallon of oil.

Franklin Fuel Consumption Performance. See the official report of Yale University by Arthur Benjamin Browne, M. E., and E. H. Lockwood, M. E., that the Franklin Car showed the lowest fuel mileage cost of any car tested.

Franklin Efficiency Performance. See official test diagram of Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Worcester, Mass., showing that the Franklin Car delivered 84.4 per cent. of its engine power to the rear wheels in actual driving energy.

Franklin Easy Riding Performance. See any Franklin dealer. He will show you how a Franklin Car will go further in a day with the greatest comfort and at the least expense.

The facts are available. Any Franklin dealer will give them to you.

The Biggest Shipment of Fine Motor Cars Ever Made. A Train-load—Twenty-two Freight Cars of Franklin Automobiles Leaving Syracuse, N. Y., for the Pacific Northwest

In 1914 the people of New England bought $30,000,000 worth of cars, but spent 15,000,000 for new tires alone. In two years, tire expense equals the cost of their cars.

One of the reasons, perhaps, why the sale of the tire-saving Franklin Car shows such a startling increase in that section—an increase of more than 141 per cent. in the last six months.

You are going to buy a car on the basis of proven results. You are looking for facts—something more convincing than statements, claims, or assurances.

Franklin Economy Performance. See the

THE FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILE COMPANY
SYRACUSE, N. Y.

SAXON $395

This is the day of common-sense in buying motor cars

The day of false pride and extravagance over motor cars is past. They are no longer bought on a "price tag" basis to show that the buyer "had the price." We no longer hesitate to buy a low priced car, providing it possesses the very desirable qualities of style and efficiency. We buy today on the basis of dollar-for-dollar value. We judge motor cars by the service they give in relation to the price.

The Saxon idea from the beginning was to go one step farther than ever before was achieved by motor car makers in combining economy, efficiency and style.

We sell the Saxon car with the absolute confidence that, on the average, year in and year out, under all kinds of conditions, it will carry its owner whatever number of miles he wants to go at less expense than any other automobile in the world.

Have you had your Saxon demonstration? We urge you to act now—for only by your prompt action can we assure you delivery of your car when you want it. See the Saxon dealer. If you don't know his name, write us.

Address Dept. K,

Saxon Motor Company, Detroit

ROUND THE WORLD TOURS
P&O
The Best Regular Services to EGYPT, INDIA, CHINA, PHILIPPINES, JAPAN, AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND. Round World Trips and Winter Tours in INDIA, PENINSULAR & ORIENTAL S. N. CO.
Full information from CUNARD LINE, 24 State St., N. Y.

WANTED

In every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl, to represent The Christian Herald. This is

AN OPPORTUNITY

To build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address

AGENCY DEPARTMENT

The Christian Herald, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Bird Houses—Large & Small

Send for our free portfolio containing 25 new designs. The finest line of bird houses in the world. We also make the most practical bird baths in existence.

THE MATHEWS MANUFACTURING CO., 942 Williamson Bldg., Cleveland, O.

AGENTS—AT LAST!

A Hot Water Bottle that WON'T LEAK

Pure aluminum. Can't rust. Light. Comfortable. Guaranteed for 25 years. CHEAPER THAN RUBBER. Low price means a sale in every home. Agents will over big profits they are making. Your territory open. Write quick.

Thomas Bottle Co., 3524 Rome St., Dayton, Ohio

Tells why chicks die

E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert of 910 Main St., Kansas City, Mo., is giving away free a valuable book entitled "White Diarrhoea and How to Cure It." This book contains scientific facts on white diarrhoea and tells how to prepare a simple home solution that cures this terrible disease over night and actually raises 98 per cent of every hatch. All poultry raisers should certainly write Mr. Reefer for one of these valuable FREE books.

LADIES! Ease Your Feet

Send for free catalog telling all about our Neat, Noiseless, Flexible, Comfortable, unlined Vic Kid O'Sullivanized PILLOW SHOE. New shoes easy as old ones. No breaking in required. Fit and feel like a kid glove. O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on all styles.

$3.00 Postpaid PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept. 3 184 Summer St., BOSTON, MASS.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES

For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for Asthma All Druggists, or by mail, 35c. STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

SHALL we open our league meeting with prayer, using the words of Charles H. Spurgeon when he prayed, saying:

"O God, our God! When we come to thee our very weakness teaches us to look to the Strong for strength. We are driven by our necessities to thy all-sufficiency. We thank thee for a sense of our weakness. We would rather have it increased, to glory in our infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon us.

"May we delight to do thy will, and glory in tribulation; thanking thee that when the rivers have been deepest, we have not been drowned; the fires hottest, they have not kindled upon us.

"Hear our prayer for ungodly relations, children, near and dear kindred, who are out of the ark of safety. Save souls. Wherever we go, may we be as burning lamps, to scatter light in the dark. Let us not live to ourselves, but for him who bought us with his own blood.

"Keep us from evil. Let us not fall, or even stumble, but walk with God; so that others may safely follow us, as we, the Christ. Amen."

Mrs. J. H. D. writes to acknowledge answers to prayer in behalf of the restoration to health of her grandson. T. W. M. tells of five young men who have found work in answer to requests for prayer sent to the Christian Herald. Miss C. E. M. writes that the trouble has been removed for which she solicited prayer. J. L. H. writes that God has answered her prayer for the healing of her brother-in-law in body, mind and soul. She asks for prayer for the conversion of four young men.

E. M. writes that prayer has been answered that her son might find employment. Mrs. E. E. B. appeals to the Prayer League in behalf of the restoration of her hearing. Mrs. L. D. H. acknowledges answer to prayer in a business matter of great importance. Mrs. M. H. requests the league to set a day of prayer for the President of the United States, that he may be sustained and guided in the difficult affairs of state, now so perilous in European countries. L. J. K. says a blessed revival of religion prevails in a town in Kansas, in answer to the league supplications.

J. P. J. praises God for the saving of her son from the curse of drink. E. P. N. requests prayer for the healing of a friend of long illness. Mrs. E. L. W. writes that Jesus has answered her prayer regarding the healing of her body. G. W. N. of Dallas, Texas, writes: "I wish to say, through the Prayer League, that God has begun to answer prayers in my behalf, for which I praise his holy name."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have been received from W. J. G. Mrs. R. A. A., Petersburg, Pa., writes: "Wonderful answer to prayer for a revival; already more than 100 converted."

AMONG THE WORKERS

—COLORADO COLLEGE, Colorado Springs, is planning for a conference during May at the college for discussion of the educational and social movements carried on by the Foreign Missionary Societies of the various denominations and churches in the United States. A number of the ablest speakers have been invited to take part in the discussion.

—REV. H. B. ROLLER, evangelist, has been having a busy year. Last fall for about two months he was campaigning in Tennessee; December and January he was in Indianapolis, Ind. From there he went to Madison, Ind., for his third meeting in that city. Next to Windfall, Ind., and now he is conducting meetings in Salem, S. D.

—EVANGELIST CLYDE LEE FYFE and his associate workers have been conducting a most successful revival at Douglas, Wyo. Two hundred confessed Christ, among them some of the leading citizens of the place. The meetings were held in the Princess Theater, and practically all the churches in the town united in the movement. The evangelistic party opened a spiritual campaign in Laramie on April 7.

Prayers are asked for revivals at Greenville, Tenn.; Versailles, Ky.; Fredonia, Kansas; Yackinsville, N. C.; New Cambria, Mo.; Angton Square, New York City; Linton, Mass.; Cumberland Gap, Tenn.; and Malakoff, Texas.

Forty-two persons ask prayer for financial aid and guidance in temporal matters. Sixteen wives ask prayer that their husbands may be saved. Thirty parents ask that children may be converted. Twenty-one persons request prayer for the salvation of friends. Twenty-seven fathers and mothers ask that their sons may be saved. Twelve persons ask prayer for friends addicted to the drink habit. Forty-four friends present themselves as subjects for prayer for the possession of the fullness of the blessing of the Holy Spirit.

Thirteen friends ask for special blessings for others: that ten young people may become soul-winners; that a husband and wife may become more deeply interested in the Christian life, etc. Seven ask prayer that signs may be restored and five that hearing may return. Seventeen friends ask prayer for dear ones afflicted with failing mental powers. Twenty-four plead for physical restoration of health and strength.

Six husbands ask prayer that wives may be restored to health; seven wives ask that husbands be healed; five sisters that a brother may be healed; sixteen parents that children may be healed; nine children that parents may be restored to health; five brothers request prayer for sisters who are ill; forty-nine persons request prayer for themselves, believing the "prayer of faith" will save the sick.

Fifty-one people request to be remembered in prayer for various needs, believing that "my God will supply all your needs." Among these miscellaneous appeals are included several to be saved from the habit of drinking and drugs and tobacco; that enemies may be forgiven, burdens lifted or strength given to bear them; that alienated friends may be reunited; that a brother may turn home safely; that a husband, estranged, may return to his wife, and that God may abundantly bless the harvests this year on account of the many in distress throughout the world.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour spent in thy presence will prevail to make! What heavy burdens from our bosoms! What parched grounds refresh as with a river! We kneel—and all around us seems to rise. We rise—and all the distant and the near stand forth in sunny outline brave and fair. We kneel—how weak: we rise—how full of power.

Why, therefore, should we do ourselves wrong?

Or others—that we are not always strong; That we are ever overborne with care; That we should ever weak or heartless; Anxious or troubled, while with us is present. And joy and strength and courage are with thee! —TRINITY

PURE White Mountain COLD

"The Chest with the Chill In it"

A lifetime investment, insuring health, convenience and economy. Every interior part removable, every nook and corner accessible and cleanable. Duplex circulation of cold dry air by famous "MAINE" Duplex Ice Grate. Beautiful catalog on application.

DUPLEX CIRCULATION MAINE MFG. CO. REFRIGERATORS NASHUA N.H. GERM PROOF

WORLD FEDERATION THE SOLUTION

THE United States of the World cannot be established in a day. That it will yet come is the belief of the brightest minds of the century, and is the steadfast aim of important organizations. The petition to the President to inaugurate such a movement, printed in the Christian Herald of December 23 last, and afterwards circulated by many of our readers for signatures, and articles of the same import that appeared in other journals about that time, have made this vast project a living issue in our own Congress, and it is not too much to expect that when the conflict in Europe draws near its close, definite action will be taken at Washington looking to a convention of all nations in the interests of a world federation. One of the greatest forces behind this movement is enlightened labor. The Evening Post of New York on April 6 editorially declared that the peace program adopted by the German Socialist Democratic Party would, if adopted at the conclusion of peace, put the world forward a wonderful step. The climax of that program is a confederation of the European states. An organ of labor in Great Britain, the British Labor Leader, declares that this program is identical with that desired by Democrats in Britain, "and, indeed, in all the belligerent countries," and comments upon the scrupulously just character of the conditions proposed, and concludes that "the program is not in the interests of Germany, but of Europe—not to represent the triumph of one nation, but of all. That is the spirit in which the peace treaty must be drawn up and signed if it is to inaugurate an era of permanent peace." Below we give this program as published in the British Labor Leader, and also, first, the resolutions adopted on April 5 by the Independent Labor Party of England at their annual meeting in Norway given as follows in news despatches:

Lived. That the conflict between the nation of Europe with which this country is involved, is the result of the pursuit by foreign officials of diplomatic policies with the idea of maintaining the balance of power; that our national policy of understanding with France and Russia only was bound to increase the power of Russia both in Europe and in Asia, and endanger our good relations with Germany; that Foreign Secretary Grey is proved by the facts he gave in the House of Commons Committee to have given definite assurance of support to France in the event of any war in which she was seriously involved before the House of Commons had any chance to consider the matter; that the labor movement reiterates the fact that it had opposed the policies which produced this war, and that its duty now is to secure peace at the earliest possible moment on such conditions as provide the best opportunities for the re-establishment of amicable relations between the workers of Europe.

These resolutions contain the ideal of international federation so positively expressed in the peace program which received the commendation of the British Labor Leader and the New York Evening Post and which is given below. We do not begrudge the Social Democrats the honor of devising so splendid a peace program as this; yet we would wish that the Christian Church might be foremost in advancing and insisting upon such an enlightened policy:

1. Peace on terms that will heal fresh wounds.
 - (a) No humiliation, no mutual recrimination.
 - (b) Indemnifications determined by just claims and financial responsibilities.
 - (c) Restitution of territory occupied during the war: Belgium, German colonies.
2. Peace on terms that will heal old wounds.
 - (a) Adjustment of states by nationality.
 - (b) Plebiscite conducted by international committee in disputed territories: Alsace-Lorraine, Schleswig, Russian Baltic provinces, Finland, Poland, Trentino, Balkans.
3. Peace on terms that give lasting security.
 - (a) Confederation of European states.
 - (b) Alliance of all against aggressor.
 - (c) International parliament and international permanent committees in place of secret diplomacy.
 - (d) International police and international law courts for minor international offenses, espionage, assault, etc.
 - (e) International possession of European states: Bosphorus, Dardanelles, Suez Canal, Gibraltar, Kiel Canal.
 - (f) Limitations of armies and navies.
 - (g) Guarantees for democratic government: Universal suffrage, equality of electoral districts, redistribution every ten years, proportional representation, payment of members.

Samuel Gompers, in the name of the American Federation of Labor, has issued a call to all peoples to establish a United States of the World for the maintenance of permanent peace. Labor as a class, by putting its gigantic strength into such a movement, is doing more for itself than it could possibly accomplish by any other means.

A GREAT REVIVAL IN KOREA

ABOUT the middle of the fall term a great revival broke out in First Church, Seoul. Most of the students attend here. They were so deeply moved that for nearly a week we were compelled to discontinue with recitations and give ourselves up to meditation and prayer. It was like the disciples waiting in the upper room.

Seoul is all ablaze. The pastor of First Church was so moved for his people that he resolved to arise every morning and spend at least an hour in prayer for them. Beginning early in November he arose at 5 A.M. and went out to pray on the south mountain. He kept this up for more than a month. On rainy mornings he went into the church. It was not long before quite a number were attending these morning prayer meetings, and the first thing the pastor knew a great revival had broken out.

The experiences were nothing less than the marvelous. The whole church was shaken from center to circumference. The pastor himself, who before had been powerless, was filled with the Holy Ghost and became like a fire-bell. The meetings lasted over three weeks. As soon as they closed in First Church, they began in another church, and are still going on. All the churches began with their five o'clock morning prayer meetings. In Pyongyang, in less than three weeks, more than 3,000 men and women confessed Christ.

On a recent Monday morning one of the students in the seminary came to me and asked to be excused for a few days. He said that he had just received a letter from Kanghwa asking him to come up there and help in a revival. We gave him permission to go. Three days later news came that they were having a wonderful meeting. In a church where only fifty men and women had been in attendance, more than 150 were coming, an increase of 200 per cent. in less than a week.

REV. ELMER H. CABLE.
Seoul, Korea, February, 1915.

Practical Charity

EARLE E. DUDDING, founder of the Prisoners' Relief Society, Huntington, W. Va., announces the republication in pamphlet form of "The Miracle at Moundsville, a Wonderful Jail Transformation and How it Happened." The leading article contained in this pamphlet was published in the Christian Herald some time ago. It is now being circulated in aid of the work of the relief society, and any readers of this journal who are interested in the effort to introduce better conditions into our prisons, and to help the families of the prisoners, who are usually left penniless by being deprived of their breadwinners, can do so by sending the price of the pamphlet, 25 cents, to the Prisoners' Relief Society, First National Bank Building, Huntington, W. Va.

"Do you wear those sheer hose for all outdoor sports, John?"

"Yes; they're Holeproof—guaranteed to wear six months without holes."

Holeproof Hosiery
FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Holeproof Hose are stylish and light weight—seamless and comfortable. And six pairs are guaranteed to wear without holes for six months. If any of the six pairs fail in that time we give you new hose to replace them free.

We use the best Egyptian and Sea Island cotton yarns, costing an average of 71c per pound. And the best Japanese thread silk. Common cotton yarns cost 29c.

Go see Holeproofs at your dealer's—see them in white and in buff, the season's popular colors.

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY CO., MILWAUKEE, WIS.
Holeproof Hosiery Co. of Canada, Ltd., London, Canada

The genuine are sold in your town. Ask for dealers' names. We ship direct where no dealer is near, charges prepaid, on receipt of remittance.

Write for free book about Holeproof.

$1.50 per box and up for six pairs of men's cotton Holeproofs; $2.00 per box and up for six pairs of women's or children's in cotton; $1.00 per box for four pairs of infants' in cotton. Above boxes guaranteed six months. $1.00 per box for three pairs of children's cotton Holeproofs, guaranteed three months. $2.00 per box for three pairs of men's silk Holeproof socks; $3.00 per box for three pairs of women's silk Holeproof stockings. Boxes of silk guaranteed three months. Three pairs of Silk-Faced Holeproofs for men $1.50; for women $2.25. Three pairs of Silk-Faced are guaranteed for three months.

Whitcomb's "Flexsole" Shoe

Can Be Bent Double
Most comfortable shoe made for Women. Soft, perfect fitting, and handsome. No seams—no laces—no lining. Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded. Send outline size of foot and state size usually worn.
Postpaid—Lace $3.00
Oxford $2.50 Buton $3.25
EASTERN SHOE COMPANY
11 Broadway Beverly, Mass.

WHEEL CHAIRS and TRICYCLES

A Wheel Chair is often an invalid's greatest comfort. We offer over 75 styles of invalids' rolling chairs and tricycles with latest improvements. Ship direct from factory to you and sell on THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. Liberal discount on all sending for FREE Catalog now.
GORDON MFG. CO.
341 Madison Ave. Toledo, Ohio.

SNAP-ON CURTAIN RODS

are self-adjusting and require no nails, screws or fixtures. Instantly adjusted or removed. Fit any window. Last a lifetime. Slightly and sensibly. A big improvement. Price, 2 for 25c., postpaid. Agents wanted.
UTILITY MFG. CO., 425 Tuttle Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Sani-Steel Kitchen & Bath Cabinets

No wood, bugs or dirt. Cleaner and cheaper than old style wood. Sent on approval Illustrated Catalogue Gt. free on request.

Columbia School Supply Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

MONUMENTS

White Bronze is more enduring than stone and less expensive. Over $200,000 worth sold through Christian Herald alone. Write for free booklet, handsomely illustrated. We will send selected designs if you state approximate size or price.
Reliable Representatives Wanted
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
355P Howard Ave. Bridgeport, Conn.

BLMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

SANITARY-BEAUTIFUL-CYCLONE ORNAMENTAL FENCE

The man who takes pride in the appearance of his home will find lasting satisfaction in surrounding it with Cyclone-Waukegan Sanitary Fence. Substantial improvement in sanitary conditions follow wherever Cyclone-Waukegan Fence is put up, because it tends to turn mud holes into flower beds and discourages accumulations of rubbish. It affords an unobstructed view of the premises, a clear sweep for sunshine and fresh air at the fence line—no moisture, no decay. Reduces the fire risk to match. It costs little, and constitutes a permanent, repair-proof improvement, being built of heavy galvanized wire, firmly knotted.

We build Cyclone-Waukegan Fence in various designs to suit your taste, with gates to match. It costs little, and constitutes a permanent, repair-proof improvement, being built of heavy galvanized wire, firmly knotted.

Our engineering department will solve your fence problem. No charge for consultation service and estimates.

Write us for Free Illustrated Catalog, showing different designs

CYCLONE FENCE CO., Dept. 108, Waukegan, Ill.

These layers, of course, are vulcanized into one solid tube.

Goodyear Laminated Tubes Outlast Any Tire

We have built an Inner Tube—laminated and extra-thick—which outlasts any tire. Four Tubes outwear five Casings, on the average.

This year we have made them still thicker. To our smaller sizes we have added 12½ per cent. To our larger sizes, 16½ per cent of unadulterated rubber.

Yet, despite this increased weight—averaging 14 per cent—our prices are one-fifth less. On February 1st we reduced them 20 per cent. So these heavy, Laminated Tubes now cost about the same as others.

Built Layer on Layer

Goodyear Laminated Tubes are built layer on layer.

Tubes built by machines, of one thick piece of rubber, often have undiscovered flaws. We roll the rubber into sheets so thin that flaws can be seen and discarded. Then these sheets, wrapped layer on layer, are vulcanized into a solid rubber tube.

The valve patch—usually stuck on—is made a part of our Tube. No loosening here, no leakage.

This extra thickness, this pure rubber material, this layer construction and this leak-proof valve patch, make the Goodyear Laminated the greatest Inner Tube built.

Get This Extra Value

Lesser Tubes cost about the same as these do. In justice to yourself, get this extra value. Then remember that Goodyear Fortified Tires embody the same standards. They, too, excel all others—in five costly, exclusive ways.

Any dealer will supply Goodyear Tubes or Tires.

GOODYEAR
AKRON, OHIO

Laminated Tubes
Extra Heavy Tubes—Uncolored
Built Layer on Layer
By the Makers of Fortified Tires

They Are Gray

Goodyear Tubes are gray, the natural rubber color. Any other color requires mineral adulteration. Minerals absorb heat, the greatest foe of rubber. We cannot color without making short-lived tubes.

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY, Akron, Ohio (2317)

THE FRYE CASE

GERMANY has established a new record in the rapid exchange of diplomatic notes. The American note making a demand for the payment of $228,059 to compensate the owners of the American ship William P. Frye for her destruction by the converted German cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich was received in Berlin on April 3, and within twenty-four hours Herr von Jagow of the German foreign office sent to Ambassador Gerard the German reply—a feat of speed probably unequaled in diplomatic correspondence.

The German note opens by reciting the stoppage and searching of the Frye on January 27, the finding on board of a wheat cargo consigned to English ports, the effort to remove the cargo, the taking possession of the ship's papers, and finally the removal of the crew and the sinking of the ship. The note then continues:

The German commander acted quite in accordance with the principles of international law as laid down in the Declaration of London and the German Prize Ordinance. The cargo of wheat, being food or foodstuffs, was conditional contraband within the meaning of Article 24, No. 1, of the Declaration of London, and Article 23, No. 1, of the German Prize Ordinance, and was therefore to be considered as destined for the armed forces of the enemy, to be treated as contraband pending proof of the contrary. This proof was certainly not capable of being adduced at the time of the visiting of the vessel, since the cargo paper read "to order." This, however, furnished the conditions under which, pursuant to Article 49 of the Declaration of London and Article 113 of the German Prize Ordinance, the sinking of the ship was permissible, since it was not possible for the auxiliary cruiser to take the prize into a German port without involving danger to its own security or the success of its operations. . . . The legality of the measures taken by the German commander is furthermore subject to examination by the German prize court. These prize proceedings will be instituted before the prize court at Hamburg, as soon as the ship's papers are received, and will comprise the settlement of questions whether the destruction of the cargo and the ship was necessary within the meaning of Article 49 of the Declaration of London; whether the property sunk was liable capture, and whether or to what extent indemnity is to be awarded the owners.

To substantiate their claim, the owners of the ship and cargo would be at liberty to submit proof (in accordance with the Declaration of London) that the wheat cargo had an innocent destination and was, therefore, not contraband. Failing such proof, the German Government, according to international law, would have no liability for damages. But the note here points out that the situation is somewhat different, in view of the fact that under the old Prussian-American treaties of Friendship and Commerce, made in 1795 and 1828, it was provided:

that contraband belonging to the subjects or citizens of either party cannot be confiscated by the other in any case, but only detained or used in consideration of payment of the full value of the same. On the ground of the stipulation, which is, as a matter of course, binding on the German Prize Court, the American owners of ship and cargo would receive compensation, even if the court should declare the cargo of wheat to be contraband. Nevertheless, the approaching prize proceedings not rendered superfluous, since the competent prize court must examine into the legality of the capture and destruction, and also pronounce upon the standing of the claimants and the amount of indemnity.

It is made clear by the note that Germany holds that as the Declaration of London is practically unrecognized by other powers in the present war, it cannot apply to the present case, which is covered by the ancient treaties between Prussia and America. And thus it has strangely happened that, under Herr von Jagow's official construction, the German Government has gone beyond the demands of the United States by including indemnity for the cargo as well as for the ship.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

Continued from page 412

changed hands several times, finally resting in the possession of the Belgians. From here to the forest of the Argonne, a long distance, nothing has apparently taken place. In that much fought over terrain, Champagne, not even cannonading has been reported and quietness has been unbroken.

In the Argonne there have been a few slight skirmishes, resulting in no changes. Such activity as there has been has been south and southeast of Verdun. The Germans say that the French have increased their forces here, and are apparently about to make an effort to regain possession of St. Mihiel, which has been a thorn in their side since its capture some months ago.

Up to the present writing the French attacks, which have been made at many points, are in the nature of feeling-out movements; that is, made to ascertain the strength of the enemy's defenses in men, artillery and obstacles at these various points, in order that when a general assault is made, if it is, the thrust may be made at the point where success is most probable. The general position will be defended by the Germans to the last gasp, as they regard the semi-circle their armies describe around Verdun as the most important part of their line in France.

The mud, which is described as being impassable by horses slowed up operations in the Polish plains the whole week, and consequently there was little or no fighting anywhere in that country. The lines remain much in the same position as heretofore, and there probably will be no change of any importance until the country dries up, which will take a considerable time.

In western Galicia all was also quiet, the banks of the Donajec hardly being disturbed by a cannon shot. Such was not the case, however, further to the south in the Carpathians, where some of the heaviest fighting of the war took place. The Russian plan of campaign is now clearly defined and it is evident that it is their purpose to conquer Hungary and to effect a union with the Serbians.

In pursuance of this plan, which the way is in harmony with the suggested new strategy of the Allies, Russian troops during the week were incessantly hurled at the Austrian forces defending the passes through the mountains. These latter, though greatly outnumbered, put up a stout resistance, and though overwhelmed and forced back, made the Russians pay a high price for each foot of ground won.

As a result of the week's fighting it is clear that the Russians have succeeded in clearing the Dukla and the Vereczke Passes completely, and in possessing themselves of the crests of the other important passes, the Upkowitz, the Uszok Passes, and seizing the railways leading through them, while the Austrians have been driven all back across the Hungarian frontier.

The seizure of the railroads is important, as they will enable the Russians to bring up supplies and artillery with comparative ease. According to the Russians, the Austrian losses in prisoners alone since the 23d of March has been in excess of thirty thousand in the Carpathian battle.

Austria has appealed to Germany for aid in the emergency which confronts her and it is said, as a result, that Germany is rushing some of her new levies to her relief.

The campaign east of Bukowina is the only one in which Austria is winning any advantage at the moment, and even then she is little more than holding her own.

There is fighting again in South Africa and in the Belgian Congo, but details lack. The news from the Turko-Russian campaign in the Caucasus is scanty and vague, but the fighting is still taking place on Russian territory.

How Many Hides Has A Cow?

3/4 to 1 of this thickness is split away. To save the by-product, some manufacturers split it into two or more thin sheets, coat and emboss it to make it look like grain leather.

Hence, 3/4 to 1 of all leather upholstery is coated splits.

DU PONT FABRIKOID
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

MOTOR QUALITY
For Automobiles
CRAFTSMAN QUALITY
For Furniture

Is Guaranteed Superior to Coated Splits

It is coated and embossed the same way, but with much more coating, and the backing is a fabric twice as strong as the average split.

America's largest automobile manufacturers have used it on hundreds of thousands of cars with entire satisfaction and better service than they formerly got from splits.

In selecting a car, choose one of the many now using it.

Small Sample Craftsman Quality Free or a Piece 18"x25" Postpaid, 50c.

It is on sale by John Wanamaker, Philadelphia; McCreery & Co., Pittsburgh; J. & H. Phillips, Pittsburgh; John Shillito Co., Cincinnati; Sox-Baer-Fuller Co., St. Louis; The Palais Royal, Washington, D. C.; Redell & Co., Washington, D. C.; Stewart & Co., Baltimore, Md.; T. Eaton & Co., Ltd., Toronto and Winnipeg; Du Pont Fabrikoid Co., 90 West St., New York; Harrison-Faxon-Stokes Co., Atlanta, Ga.; D. N. & E. Walter & Co., San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Portland; Henry B. Day Co., Los Angeles, and upholstery dealers generally.

DU PONT FABRIKOID COMPANY, Wilmington, Del.
Canadian Branch: Toronto, Ontario

Now with 7-passenger body and longer wheel-base, $1295

CHANDLER SIX

The Pioneer Light-Weight Six

Chandler dealers are now showing the New Season's seven-passenger Chandler touring car, at the same sensational price announced recently for the five-passenger Chandler, $1295.

Except for the better value given it by its lengthened wheel-base and big seven-passenger body, this is a continuation of the same Chandler model that sold last year with only five-passenger body for $1595. Not a single feature of design or materials has been cheapened to make this price possible.

No Cramping, No Crowding

The luxurious new body is a genuine seven-passenger body. No cramping, no crowding. When not in use the two auxiliary seats fold away neatly, entirely out of sight in the floor and the back of the front seat, leaving the tonneau free from any marring obstruction and converting the car into an extremely roomy five-passenger carriage.

Not long ago a car of such beauty and size and convenience immediately brought to mind the thought of high price. Rich men were paying four and five thousand dollars for cars of such comfort only a couple of years ago. Yet today you can buy this car for $1295. Only a couple of years ago, too, such a price would have been sensational for a small, good four-cylinder car. And here, today, for this price you get the leader of speedy, powerful, flexible, light-weight sixes.

Value That Seems Impossible

All of these things—the splendid mechanical construction, the Marvelous Chandler Motor of our own design and built in our own factory, the big seven-passenger body, the beauty of design and finish, the economical light weight and the generous equipment seem quite impossible for $1295. But the Chandler has always offered seemingly impossible value for its price. It has brought the highest grade six-cylinder construction within reach of the average purse, and the conservative purse. It has set the pace.

Facts and Features

The Chandler weighs 2985 lbs., completely equipped. Runs 16 miles or more per gallon of gasoline, 700 miles per gallon of oil and 7000 miles per set of tires. Speed 3 to 55 miles per hour on high gear. Climbs every famous "demonstrating hill" in America on high gear.

The high-grade features of Chandler design, construction and equipment include: The exclusive Chandler long-stroke motor—Bosch magneto—Gray &

The small illustration above gives some idea of the spaciousness of the Chandler seven-passenger tonneau, and shows the clever construction of the auxiliary seats. Note how they fold away into the floor and back of front seat when not in use. No thumb-screws or levers of any nature are necessary for the adjustment of these seats. One direct motion of the hand raises either seat, ready for use, or lowers it away completely out of sight.

Davis separate unit electric starting and lighting system—Rayfield double-jet carburetor—Mayo genuine Mercedes type radiator—cast aluminum motor base extending from frame to frame, giving rigidity to the engine mounting, providing pedestals for magneto, generator and starting motor, doing away with necessity for dirty, rattly drip-pan—three enclosed silent chains for driving motor shafts—silent worm-bevel rear axle—genuine hand-buffed leather upholstery—Firestone demountable rims—Stewart vacuum gasoline feed—Golde patent one-man top covered with high finish Never-Leek—Jiffy curtains—motor-driven horn—Stewart-Warner magnetic speedometer—and all the usual incidental equipment.

See the Chandler at your local dealer's or write today for new catalog

Touring Car or Roadster, $1295

CHANDLER MOTOR CAR COMPANY, 1504-1534 East 131st Street, CLEVELAND, OHIO
New York City Office, 1890 Broadway
Cable Address, "CHANMOTOR"

Two beautiful Collar Pins for you

With a signature from a one-pound package of Arbuckles' Ariosa or Arbuckles' Ground Coffee and eight cents in stamps. Special introductory offer, ending May 31, 1915

Cut out the coupon and mail today

Collar pins will be worn more than ever this season. Fashionable high collars have made them absolutely necessary. You can see for yourself (from the picture) how exquisite the pattern of these pins is. You will be delighted with their beauty and value. They have absolutely solid rolled gold tops and will last for years. If they do not give excellent wear, we guarantee to exchange them without question. You could not get a prettier or more useful gift!

This special offer is made to get you to buy your first pound of Arbuckles' Coffee now. When you use this first pound you will know why more Arbuckles' Coffee is sold than any other packaged coffee, and why its sale is continually increasing. It comes to you with all its precious coffee aroma preserved in sealed packages. Its tempting aroma gives an edge to the appetite at every meal.

Get a package today, and earn these two beautiful collar pins for yourself or some one else. Cut out the coupon now; buy one pound of Arbuckles' Ariosa (whole bean) or Arbuckles' Ground Coffee; cut the signature from the package, and mail it with the coupon, and eight cents in stamps now. Do this today, before you forget. This offer positively ends May 31, 1915.

Other wonderful presents you can get with your first package:

Wedding Ring, No. 226—Mail the coupon below, with 9 Arbuckle signatures and 2-cent stamp. This solid gold filled ring is for men and women, it is of good weight, and wears well. It is one of our most popular presents. Tens of thousands of men and women every year earn it. Give size.

Baby Ring, No. 228—Mail the coupon below, with 7 Arbuckle signatures and 2-cent stamp. This solid gold-filled ring is a lovely new pattern; word "Baby" embossed and dainty flower design. Size 1/2 to 4. Give size.

Heart Ring, No. 227—Mail the coupon below, with 12 Arbuckle signatures and 2-cent stamp. This solid gold-filled ring is for ladies or lasses, the design is three hearts, each set with imitation turquoise. Give size.

Three Baby Pins, No. 252—Send the coupon below, with 8 Arbuckle signatures and 2-cent stamp. These pins have solid rolled goldplate tops, and are practically unbreakable. The pattern is absolutely new, and very pretty. Word "Darling" on each pin. Will give excellent service.

Bar Pin, No. 262—Send the coupon below, with 10 Arbuckle signatures and 2-cent stamp. This is an exceptionally attractive pin, with three large and beautiful imitation diamonds set in three knot design. Rose and burnished gold plated, making a most attractive combination. Length, 2 3/4 ins.

This is the signature you cut from the package and save to get valuable premiums.

Better than ever

THIS COUPON is good for the collar pins shown above, arbuckle signatures and 2-cent stamps, or for any of the other presents shown, with the proper number of signatures and stamps. This offer cannot hold good after May 31, 1915. Only one coupon accepted from any one person or family.

ARBUCKLE BROS., 71-A1 Water Street, New York. With this coupon, I enclose signatures from Arbuckles' Coffee, and 12c stamps, for which please send me:

State here article desired,

If ring, give size wanted,

Name,

No. and Street,

or R. D.,

City, State,

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, APRIL 28, 1915

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER YEAR
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

VOL. 38-NO. 17. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

*Peaches in the orchard, sunshine in the leaves,
Shadows dancing gently as the morning flies;
Little children playing in the world's own joy time,
Peach bloom on their faces, sunshine in their eyes.*

Copyright by Clarence A. Purchase

"How long should a man's legs be?" someone asked Abraham Lincoln.

"About long enough to reach from his body to the ground, I should say," replied Mr. Lincoln.

"How heavy should a motor car be?" someone asked Hugh Chalmers.

"Heavy enough to do what he wants it for," replied Mr. Chalmers.

"I want one heavy enough to see me over the rough roads without danger and big repair costs—light enough to be reasonably economical of gas and oil."

Among this kind of motor cars, the Chalmers Light Six-48 at $1,650 is supreme when you consider the cost of the motor car while you have it, instead of its cost when you get it.

Saving on gasoline and oil may be saving at the spigot, to run out at the repair bunghole.

There are only a few dollars difference in a season's oil and gas cost between any two cars—parts and repairs are what cost.

Good tires are all adjusted to your car and sold on a guaranteed mileage basis.

Yet there are other features besides the notable one of repair economy that will interest you in this class car leader—the Chalmers Light Six-48.

Few costly cars can claim equality with it in beauty. The streamline body possesses a distinctive grace of line that makes it noteworthy even when contrasted with the finest foreign models.

There are no fenders built—whether flat or merely crown—that are as handsome as the Chalmers molded oval fenders. They conform with exquisite harmony to the clean-cut sweep of the body lines.

The doors are wide and flush-fitting. The running boards are clear. The tires are carried in the rear.

Quality First

The Chalmers Light Six-48
$1650

Comparison Proves WHAT WE SAY Compare the Chalmers Light Six-48 point by point, detail by detail, with any other light six selling within several hundred dollars of its price—$1650—and the greater value of the Chalmers will be quite apparent.

First—in stability, which embraces construction, design, balance, quality of material and—as a result of all these—greater repair economy—or worded differently—more continuously efficient service at less upkeep cost.

Second—in looks, which means finish, design, upholstery, equipment and construction.

Third—in power—ample for every motoring need—with a long, strong pull that makes light of heavy roads and steep hills.

Fourth—in speed—you don't intend to shatter any speed records, yet it is deeply satisfying to feel that—if you ever want to—you can leave your rival in the rear.

Take the Measure of This Car's QUALITY Yourself Yet though these claims are all fortified by fact—we do not ask you to accept them on our assurance.

But we believe that you should personally investigate their truth.

We believe that the record of the Chalmers Motor Company during the past seven years and the record of this car—its fastest selling six—during the past season have earned the right to your serious consideration if you are contemplating purchasing a car between $1400 and $2400 in price.

Chalmers Motor Company, Detroit
Let your next car be a Chalmers

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

TOM BROWN—Alias Thomas Mott Osborne

BY ARTHUR H. HOWLAND

3 1-3 X 7 FEET

TWO BY TWO THEY PASSED; EARNEST, KEEN, KINDLY—BROTHERHOOD IN THEIR HEARTS

WHY does a miller wear a white hat?" That was an old-fashioned riddle to which the rather disappointing answer was: "To keep his head warm."

"Why does Thomas Mott Osborne wear a gray suit?" The answer to that question is far more interesting.

I had seen Mr. Osborne twice before seeing him in Sing Sing Prison. I had already grown to admire his raven face, a face that could show such reaches of earnestness and such depths of kindness. I had seen his eyes fill with sudden tears, tears that brought a stoppage in his throat, unexpected to himself as well as to his audience, when he repeated the words of a still unreconstructed prisoner at Auburn who when urged again to consider society his friend and join the prison league cried out: "Can the league give me back my lungs?" The new prison system may remake and reorganize a man's mind and spirit but it cannot give back lungs and some other things which the old system destroyed.

It is, as to that gray suit. Both times that I had seen Mr. Osborne before, he had it on, and there seemed nothing at all unusual about it. But when I saw it the third time I had a thrill.

I was standing at the rear of the mess hall in Sing Sing Prison, where were seated twelve hurried convicts eating their dinner. We had already spent an hour or more behind the wall, marveling at the "new spit." Cheerfulness, earnestness, hopefulness, helpfulness were everywhere to be seen and felt. And we knew that back of all this new spirit was a man—a man who had had a vision and who was striving with all his might not to be disobedient to it.

The rumor spread about the prison that the warden was to come and say something to the men after dinner. Looking about the room and waiting, my glance fell upon the quiet figure of a man whose entrance I had not noticed, but who stood now leaning against the wall near a rear window. About his throat was a gray woolen muffler, which looked from my distance exactly like a gray prison sweater, and upon his body was a gray suit whose hue blended with the universal gray of the prison dining-room. About the grounds had been seen guards in blue; visitors in civilian clothes were here and there. But when Warden Osborne, in a gray suit and gray muffler, sauntered into the dining-room and leaned against the window casing it was only as if another prisoner had come in to sit and wait his turn at dinner.

First I thought I would charge him with it. Then I decided not to. But my companion stated to him my theory as to that gray suit.

Mr. Osborne laughed.

"I have always rather liked gray," he said.

But I know why he wears a gray suit. And you will see that I am right before this story is ended.

Here is the heart of Mr. Osborne's system as he himself explains it. He quotes the words of a prisoner who spoke to him while suffering imprisonment for a crime of which he declared himself innocent.

"I could not tell the truth," this prisoner explained, "without implicating two of my friends. You know, Mr. Osborne, the ethics of my profession" (for while innocent of this particular charge, the man did not deny that he had been a thief) "the ethics of my profession are based on the rule that you are never to squeal on a pal."

Hitherto the most intense motive of these men has been the motive of loyalty to the gang, to the pal. "Now," Mr. Osborne pleads, "if we can only stretch that motive to include the whole community of the prison, there is a good chance that it can be stretched

The Mutual Welfare League, which is the physical organization of this new spiritual impulse, has for its motto: "Do good. Make good." In the office of the league's headquarters is a banner bearing the sign: "To our brothers in Sing Sing from their brothers in Auburn." Warden, guards, convicts—all together are members of this Mutual Welfare League. The oath taken by the delegates who are elected by the various shops and other groups to constitute the governing body of the league is as follows:

"I solemnly promise that I will do all in my power to promote in every way the true welfare of the men confined in Sing Sing Prison; that I will cheerfully obey and endeavor to have others faithfully obey the rules and regulations of the duly constituted prison authorities, and that I will endeavor in every way to promote friendly feeling, good conduct and fair dealing among both officers and men to the end that each man, after serving the briefest possible term of imprisonment, may go forth with renewed strength and courage to face the world again. All this I promise faithfully to endeavor, so help me God."

It is hard, in telling this story, to know which will be more interesting—to tell some of the things one has actually seen and heard, or to emphasize the real philosophy that lies back of Mr. Osborne's work. That philosophy comes out most strikingly in his advocacy of the "indeterminate sentence." Mr. Osborne claims that it is just as ridiculous to attempt to determine beforehand, even approximately, how long a man must stay in prison as it would be to attempt to tell a patient entering the hospital how long he must remain there. He uses the attack of grip from which he is still suffering as an illustration. The doctor told him he would be over it in two weeks. It is now more than five and the disease is still uncured.

Now Mr. Osborne holds that a man who has committed a crime should be kept in prison till he is cured; that is, until he can prove himself to have the right attitude, the right feeling toward society.

The old system made criminals. It herded men together in a spirit of sullen resentment. It fostered hate. The longer society kept men in prison the deeper grew this hate. And when a man left prison his one desire was to "get even," to punish society back for what he felt to be the unreasonable punishment society had inflicted upon him. Mr. Osborne is urging the passage of a law which will create a Board of Parole, selected with most rigorous care, who shall together decide when a man may come out of prison, shall decide this after he has served some time in prison, not before he goes there, shall base till it covers, in the convict's thought, all of society." "Canada Blackie," whose real name was John E. Murphy, died a few weeks ago in Mr. Osborne's home.

HERE WE ARE AT THE HEART OF THE NEW SYSTEM: THE PRISON-CONDUCTED COURT

"Blackie said to me a short time before he died," declares Mr. Osborne, "Now look here, do you know what the old system did? Under that system it was me and my pals against every one else. We were doing all we could against the prison system. We wanted to do all we could against society. Now the warden is one of our pals." [Are you remembering that gray suit?] "The prison authorities are our pals. They are trying to act on the level with us and we must try to act on the level with them. We must go the limit for them."

In other words the new system is summed up in this: The prisoner who wants to go straight is the pal of every man who is trying to go straight. The watchwords are Brotherhood, Friendship, Service.

this decision upon the man's record in prison and the sort of spirit he shows, upon the question whether or not he has "made good" as a helpful member of the prison community and so shown good promise of making good out in the world.

Mr. Osborne startles his hearers by declaring that there is no such person as a criminal. "Criminal" is only a name, a word, an idea. A criminal is a man. Most of the old characteristics attributed by penologists to criminals are palpably ridiculous. "Most criminals show a love for their families." "Criminals often show a love for animals." "Most criminals are tattooed." "I am slightly tattooed myself," chuckles Mr. Osborne.

No, a criminal is a man. That is all. He must be dealt with as a man. He must be inspired and helped and taught and encouraged as a man. The old system tortured and browbeat and deadened him, stifling his manhood, awakening the brute in him, stirring him to hatred and fanning the flames of the hatred it enkindled. The new system declares that he is a man and seeks to restore him to his place among men.

Lombroso's measurements of criminals have long been taken most seriously and freely used by penologists in their classifications and deductions. This had been going on a long time, declares Mr. Osborne, before it occurred to anybody to measure the people outside of prison. Recently a scientist in England did this and completely upset the old Lombrosian theories by making the astounding discovery that the measurements of people outside of prison were precisely the same as those of people inside.

And one cannot visit the new Sing Sing without being startlingly impressed by this fact. These convicts are just men. I stood watching them, company by company, as they marched in to dinner. Two by two they passed. Earnest, keen, kindly, bright-looking fellows. Already the light of "brotherhood" which they feel in their hearts is showing in their faces.

Now let me tell you some things about our visit about the prison yards and buildings. We were escorted by a fine, bright young fellow, a member of the reception committee of the league. He had been sent up from the league office to the warden's office and we were put into his care. No guide could have been more painstaking and considerate.

Throughout the afternoon we met other groups of visitors going about, most of them young ladies. Each group was escorted by a league guide. Some one remarked that these young ladies were safer from insult or loss here than they would be on Fifth Avenue. These league guides chatted with their visitors, and now and then one caught explanatory words which showed that the prisoner has grasped the meaning of the new prison science—"We are to stay here until we are fit to go out again."

Our guide was a popular boy—one of the leaders in the activities of the league—and everywhere he was hailed cordially by his first name. We visited the league office, where the sergeant-at-arms has his desk and where the league records are kept; we visited the mess hall, where we watched the men at dinner, and listened to the warden's announcements, where also, incidentally, we ate a prison dinner in company with our guide.

Understand that whereas there were formerly sixty guards on duty in the dining-room, twenty in each aisle, while the men ate, now there are none. And never since the dismissal of these dining-room guards has there been the slightest disorder.

In the knitting shop, known formerly as the place where trouble was most likely to start, there was not a guard in sight, nor, indeed, in the building. The printing-room, where the Star of Hope is edited and published, is just like any other printing establishment, and the editor we found to be a gentle, genial man who, despite the congeniality of his task and surroundings, found it hard to believe that the two years and a half remaining of his sentence would not seem long. I naturally had a strong fellow-feeling for this editor, and can not help wondering why he is in jail and all the rest of us out.

We visited the cart and wagon shop, where a friend of one of our party worked for four years—a real friend, who has shown my friend and the other workers at the Bowery Mission that a man who has been long in prison, and for good cause, can come to be a man of worth and honor. We visited the "cell block," eighty-two years old, that ghastly pile of little graves for living men. Each cell is so narrow that if you stand with your shoulders against one wall you can almost touch the other wall. And in one-third of the cells two men are crowded at night, winter and summer alike, one bunk let down above the other. There will be more to say a little later about the results of confining men in catacombs like these. But it may be said here that Warden Osborne is making an earnest effort to have the New York legislature, instead of appropriating money to build another block of cells at Sing Sing, make a larger appropriation and establish an altogether new prison somewhere out in the country where the men can live in buildings more nearly like houses, and work on the prison farm.

WARDEN (HIGHEST FIGURE AT RIGHT) MAKING AFTER-DINNER SPEECH

A MAN IN PRISON . . . CAN COME TO WORTH AND HONOR

We visited the band room, and I must tell you particularly about Tony and his band. The bandmen are freed from other work, and have their whole day to devote to music, like the musicians of an army. The prison yard had been echoing sundry haphazard sounds which indicated that there were the makings of a band somewhere in the neighborhood, and we wanted to see and hear the band in action. Sundry messages were called up to the boys at the windows above the power-house, and Tony was urged to get his men together. At last they were assembled.

"How many wanta the pictch taken?" demanded Tony.

There was very slight response.

"How many don't wanta pictch?"

Quite a number were unwilling. We were a little shy to take any pictures we wished, but on the knowledge and consent of the men photographed. We attempted to argue, but the unwilling remained so.

"Well, let us have a tune anyway. We can't do about that than we do about the picture."

Tony, coatless, vestless, with what looked like a chair-rung in his hand, stood in the center of the circle and tapped the bell on his rack. The jolly look on his face changed suddenly to one of great sternness. He had expressed the misgiving to one of our number that perhaps the band was a little lacking in discipline. But when Tony and his chair-rung, and his stern look got busy there was discipline in plenty. The piece on the rack was "Lustspiel," an overture. Tony held the chair-rung in the air. He brought it down. There was a magnificent flourish. Tony held that chord, glaring straight ahead, till he brought the chord to a end by a quick pull of the chair-rung toward his stomach. Another gleam, another downward thrust of the chair-rung and there was another exquisite flourish—two tubas, four clarinets, a piccolo, three or four cornets, a saxophone, trombones—all in fine harmony. The chair-rung Tony's stomach brought that chord to an end. The another, and another—out into the melody of the andante, on to the delights of the allegro. It was amazing. It was delightful. Cornets and piccolos rippled along, clarinets chimed in, drums and basses boomed—and through it all one could feel the sweet Italian spirit of Tony, serving long given an opportunity now to let off of the real music that is in his soul.

He says he taught himself, and has a little or no professional experience. The band has been organized three months. It is one of the units sending a delegate to the league's body of control. In the bass drum is the legend, "Tom Brown's Aurora Band." I asked the meaning of the name, forgetting Warden Osborne's alias at Auburn, when he went behind the bars as a prisoner for a week to learn the inside and the bottom of prison life. Oh, yes, that explained "Tom Brown," but why "Aurora"? "That means dawn," said one of the boys wistfully. "I had been very stupid."

Well, now they would have the picture taken if we would wait till they got their uniforms. We waited gladly, and here is the picture.

Back to the chapel again with our guide—this time to attend court. He was at the heart of the new system. The prisoners judge and punish the prisoners for offenses against the prison community. The fifty-odd delegates, elected by the various societies, making up the seventeen hundred inmate electorate, an executive committee of five into whose hands is put the active conduct of the league's affairs. This executive committee in turn appoints a Judiciary Board, also of five members, and the board sits as a court, judging the offenders brought before it. Only cases which the board feels itself incompetent to settle are carried to the warden, but any prisoner sentenced by the board has the privilege of appealing to the warden. We saw a young fellow sentenced to fifteen days in the lock-up for refusing to obey an officer. We heard a charge implying the theft of three sheets made against four men, against whom the evidence seemed altogether flimsy and dismissed.

And the success of the new system is strikingly shown in the number of cases brought up for prison discipline. The warden reports as follows: In December, 1913, under the old system, 117 cases of discipline came before the warden; in December, 1914 (Mr. Osborne began his work on December 2), the prisoners' court handled thirty-two cases; the warden's court only eight. In January, 1914, the warden disciplined 154 inmates; in January

Continued on page 458

"I SOLEMNLY
PROMISE—TO PROMOTE GOODWILL—SO HELP ME
GOD"

TONY, WITH TOM BROWN'S
AURORA
BAND

HARVEST TIME IN CHINA *

WHEN WHEAT IS "ENOUGH RIPE"
BY MRS. JAMES McFADDEN GARTON

WHEAT is wheat the world around, but harvests differ with every land and people. Memory stretches back to the Virginia plantation of forty years ago. From the pillared porch of the home could be seen half a mile of wheat fields, rolling on gentle hill slopes to the south. It was "cuttin' wheat time" to the negroes, or maybe they said "in de harves'." To us children there was a thrill of excitement in the air. Harvesters were already in use where the lay level, but were not suited to the hills; so the cutting was still done by the long curved blade and cradle, wielded by the strong arms of negro men. Many were the contests in speed and endurance, as they swept round and round the hills, fowed by the "binders" and the gleaners, negro women holding a good hand in this work. And as they reaped, they sang—sang as only plantation negroes could sing—light-hearted and carefree. We children watched them, barefooted, sun-bonneted, seated under the big oak, till the sun, riding high, drove us home to the not less interesting deils of the harvest dinner. There were always extra cooks, and always blackberry roll, and never stinting of anything. After cutting wheat time came the "thrashing," even more delightfully exciting, for down in the big barn the horses, even the carriage horses, took their turn in the stately ballet. That set going the only machinery we had ever seen. My! the thrill in our hearts and the din in our ears as the threshing and winnowing went gaily on. Then the golden grain was heaped in piles and poured through bins, and we might play in it a little with our bare feet if we didn't scorch it too much. That was one day of harvest—but it is a turned page and would seem strange and even if enacted upon the same ground.

Now, come and see a harvest in Shantung. Here, too, it is the time of supreme interest to the whole family. Life in the country is practically measured by so many wheat harvests, and every old man and woman hopes to live to see one more. For weeks before all plans are made with reference to it. Carpentry, masonry, work of every kind must either be finished before "pulling wheat time" or laid aside at that time to wait till the harvest is over. No matter how important, in the eyes of a foreign resident, the work in hand may become, he cannot bear buy his workmen to continue when once the wheat is ripe. In the hospitals all the patients want to get well by wheat-pulling time. One must stay on, but many a one, incapacitated in hand or foot for real work, goes home to take his or her place in "watching the gate," while all the rest of the family may go to the field and threshing floor.

For the children here, too, yield to the same thrill of excitement that we on the other side of the world know so well. The primary class in Sunday school has been known to count fifty up to harvest time, and not a pupil on the days included in that blissful season! Yesterday I saw from my window a pretty petomime. Just as the rising sun was shedding long lines of light upon the ripening fields, a neighbor woman came quickly from her home and ran along the length of her wheat field, stopping now and then to rub in her hands a head of grain. Was it "enough ripe"? At her heels came one of the children, capering with delight at the prospect of the fun to come. At the end of the field the woman turned and called to a man, following at leisurely pace—probably her husband or father-in-law. He, too, made a tour of the field, and as they all walked slowly back, it was evident he had decided that another day of sunshine was needed. At sundown the wheat was still standing; but when I looked out this morning at sunrise the field was bare, and all its precious store of grain was already upon the threshing floor. This would have been hard to believe had I not heard all through the bright night the soft padding of the donkeys' feet, the swish of the straw as grain packed upon their backs, and the cheery call of the leaders as they urged the little animals to and fro from field to threshing-floor, accomplishing in the cool of the night what the less provident might have done in the heat of day.

You may wonder that they say "pulling wheat," but that is just what they do. That is the work for the men and boys. Stooping, they pass from end to end of the fields, pulling up by the roots every stalk of grain, laying it in long rows to be gathered up immediately, roped upon the donkeys' backs and taken to the threshing floor. At this time no idlers such as we were sitting down, looking on. A six-year-old boy is quite big enough to lead a donkey, and girls of the same age find plenty to do on the threshing-floor.

PUZZLE: HOW DOES HE SAY "GIT AP"?

To the Western mind a floor means boards of some kind, but the Chinese threshing-floor is devoid of wood. A level place is selected, sometimes in the family yard, more frequently just outside. For weeks this has been prepared by beating, sprinkling and rolling with a huge stone, until it is as hard and smooth as cement. Here the grain is deposited when brought from the field. Mothers, grandmothers, daughters, daughters-in-law, children, babies and dogs gather here, and the work of threshing goes rapidly on. No singing such as we knew on the old plantation. These staid and sober people know naught of song until they learn the songs of salvation; but they are cheerfully busy, and as happy as they know how to be. A man works a big chopping blade. Sifting and fanning by lever, it cuts the roots away, and they are stored for fuel for the family cooking.

SHELLING THE HARVESTED GRAIN

Here comes in the doctor's work, for never a harvest passes but some finger ventures too near the big blades, and there is surgery to be done in that family. Formerly the treatment would have been to seal the wound hermetically with lime, flour, mud, or something less clean, even, than the last; but many have heard of the foreign hospital, where washing and cleanliness give better results, and frequently the little patients are brought to us. A mother said, as she watched our Chinese nurses deftly dressing her daughter's hand under the doctor's direction, "Why, I was scared nearly to death at the thought of coming here; but you treat me as your own dear kin sister."

AFTER the roots of the wheat are cut off, the heads are served in the same way and piled in the middle of the threshing floor. The family donkey has by this time finished bringing the grain in from the field. He is blindfolded, harnessed to a large cylindrical stone, and, driven by one of the men, goes round and round at a brisk trot, and soon the grain is shelled from the husk. Now another man draws it to one side with a fork, and, tossing it high, the wind blows the chaff to one side and the grain is heaped together.

The women have been busy, meantime, gathering the straw together, sorting and tying it into bundles for the great straw braid work of this province. Now their busiest time comes. Seated upon the ground, tailor fashion, with great, flat, open baskets before them, they sit and sort, and sort and sit, until the wheat and chaff and sand are separated, and wheat-harvesting is done. Now, when the wheat is stored, back to their plaiting they go, and their fingers must fly the faster for the time that has been lost. It is interesting to note the history of this, the shouting woman's perpetual harvest. From six years old; the little girls must learn to plait straw braid, and she is considered a good-for-naught who can't "fill her own mouth" from eight years of age up. The mother's injunction is often heard: "Plait, child, plait; if you don't plait, you shan't eat." One pities the girls that they have so little time to play; but their work has its advantage over factory work, as they may pick it up and take it around with them, out-of-doors in the shade and on the street, where they may watch the boys and smaller children play. In Sunday school it has been our rule that the wreaths of straw must be laid upon the teacher's desk during prayer and the teaching of God's Word. Further than that we dare not enforce the fourth commandment, for if we did the girls would be kept from Sunday school and would miss the card they prize so much, and we the one little chance we have of teaching them the Gospel.

Every girl who doesn't carry a baby brother or sister in her arms has her bunch of straw braid under her arm, and her fingers keep busy with the wreath. They don't need to look at the work any more than our grandmothers did at their knitting of a stocking. As I see the women take their braid and drop in to talk with a neighbor, I am often reminded of the way our grandmothers took their knitting and went out to visit, with knitting sheath pinned under the arm. Forty years ago this kind of work was unknown here, but Western wit saw the straw and the fingers, and putting the two together established the industry as we know it today. In these years it has lifted much of the poverty necessarily falling upon a district so populous. Until six years ago the straw was plaited whole, producing a coarse braid which sold cheap. But since that time the girls have learned to split the straw, using a tiny, four-pronged steel tooth for the purpose, and they now produce a much finer article. The average earnings for a good plaiter is five cents gold per day. This is so much valued by the parents that it is hard to persuade them to forego it and to send their girls to school. Only Christians recognize the duty of giving their girls an education. Food is the one thing necessary, and so it comes that when crops fail or the floods come—which in other districts turn thousands into beggars—our women and girls go right on with the plaiting,

SORTING STRAW FOR BRAID WORK. WOMEN AND CHILDREN CHIEF WORKERS

Continued on page 459

AT THE CROSSWAYS

A SERMON

BY

Rev. David J. Burrell, D.D.*

An evangelistic sermon from the text: "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." Jer. 6: 16.

TO WHOM is the Lord speaking? To a traveler at the crossways; wherefore it concerns us; for, sooner or later, we all come to the crossing of the ways.

The deepest longing in the heart of the average man is that of a young ruler who said, "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" Everybody wants to go to heaven, and really means to go, and expects to go; but there are so many voices calling this way and that. What is the bewildered pilgrim to do?

The good Lord has something to say in these premises; and the part of wisdom is to follow his direction: It is here expressed in five significant words.

The first word is "Stand"; that is, stop where you are and do a little thinking. Unfortunately, this is not an easy thing to do. We are under the momentum of life; entangled in "the rush hour" of business and pleasure, with the crowd pushing us on. Would it not be prudent to call a halt long enough to get our bearings? "Be sure you're right, then go ahead."

The second word is "See"; that is, look about you. There are diverging roads; and eternal issues are involved in choosing the right one. If you were planning to go to the Panama Fair you would get the maps of the transcontinental lines and study them. In that case you would have to determine between various roads, all leading to San Francisco. But not so here: there is only one plan of salvation; and the Bible is our road-map. If you are in earnest you will take down the neglected map and study it.

The third word is "Ask." But whom shall the traveler ask? Other travelers? Alas! many of them are as bewildered as he. Guides along the way? They are not infallible. Not long ago a signalman on one of our railways—a man specially appointed to avert danger—waved a white lantern instead of a red one before an engine approaching in the night, and a moment later the train plunged over an embankment, and the air was rent with cries of the wounded and dying. Ministers are signalmen, but they are only men; and when they speak for themselves without the backing of a "Thus saith the Lord," they are as liable to err as other men.

A Way That Seemeth Right

The only safe plan is to ask the Lord. To your knees, therefore, O traveler! Will God answer? "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Can you hear him when he speaks? That depends on whether you listen or not. "Ye shall hear a voice behind you saying, This is the way; walk ye in it." The voice is behind you; the Speaker is unseen; but if so disposed you can surely hear him.

We are admonished by the divine Guide, who speaks through the inspired Guide-book and in answer to prayer, that there is only one right way. The Latins had a proverb, "All ways lead to Rome"; and there are those who imagine that, in like manner, all roads lead to heaven. But the Scriptures teach otherwise; "There is a way which seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof is death." A man's destination is not altered by the fact that the wrong way seemed right to him. His sincerity has nothing to do with it.

The right way is the old way. Here went righteous Abel, and Enoch, and Abraham, and all the gray fathers. These red footprints are those of the noble army of martyrs who "climbed the steep ascent to heaven mid peril, toil and pain." This is the road traversed by our fathers and mothers, who believed in "the old-time religion"; and there is none better for us. The progress of the centuries has opened up no shorter or better route.

A railway has been laid from Joppa to Jerusalem. When Jonah trudged that way, in a vain effort to escape from the face of the Lord, it was a two days' journey. It required nearly as long when Solomon rode in his chariot of state to view his rafts of cedar floated from the north. Now that journey is made in two short hours. But the King's highway to Zion is just as it used to be. Truth and righteousness never change. The air we breathe is the same that Adam breathed; the sunlight is the same that sifted through the mists of primitive chaos; and water is the same as when Jesus, being athirst, sat down upon the curb of Jacob's well and tipped the water jar to his lips. The Gospel is like the air, like sunlight, like spring water, the same always and unchangeable.

We go the way the prophets went,
The way that leads from banishment,
The King's highway of holiness.

The right way is the narrow way. "And Jesus said, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." As a minister of Christ I am not at liberty to alter or modify the conditions of the Christian life. There are sins to be given up, there are duties to be taken on. The higher life is not the easy life; certainly not until one finds the compensations which were in the mind of Jesus when he said, "My yoke is easy and my burden light." There is a burden—a burden like the wings of a bird. There is a yoke; but the yoke is for two, and the Other bears the heavy end of it.

The King's Highway

The right way is a plain way. The Guide points to the Guide-book, saying, "Search it"; and the true searcher is never in doubt. "An highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of Holiness; the wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein." The things that are hid from the worldly-wise are revealed to a child on the Master's knee.

The King's highway leads down through the Valley of Repentance. I am aware that sin and repentance have gone out of fashion in some quarters; but what the Lord said of the self-righteous Pharisee and the contrite publican is as true as ever, "This man went down to his house justified rather than the other." Time was when sinners came to the Holy Hill beating on their breasts and crying:

Show pity, Lord; O Lord, forgive;
Let a repenting rebel live:

but nowadays how lofty are their eyes and their eyelids lifted up! Nevertheless, the needle of the Law must enter before the thread of the Gospel in the weaving of God's white linen. The heart must be broken before it can be bound up.

The King's highway leads over the Hill of Calvary. For without the shedding of blood—and without a vital faith in the efficacy of the blood—there is no remission of sin. Just here is the great offense. "We preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumbling-block and to the Greeks foolishness; but to them that believe, the wisdom and power of God." It is only under the shadow of the Cross that the burden of our sins rolls away.

I take, O Cross, thy shadow,
For my abiding-place;
I ask no other sunshine
Than the sunshine of His face:
Content to let the world go by,
To know no gain nor loss,
My sinful self, my only shame,
My glory all, the Cross.

The King's highway leads thenceforth across the open country. No skulking here! A refusal to confess one's sin casts a grave suspicion on one's sincerity. It is sometimes held that religion is a shy and modest principle that hides behind the lattice. But for this there is no warrant in Scripture. The Lord did, indeed, lift up his voice against the blowing of trumpets in the giving of alms, and against the making of long prayers on the corners of the streets to be seen of men; but he also said, "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

If I have found a Saviour and the joy of the great discovery has taken possession of my mind, how can I help disclosing it? Does not ointment lie in the hand "beyond itself"? It is a true saying, "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

So the King's highway leads on, clear to heaven's gate. A multitude of souls redeemed are entering there just now, "the ransomed of the Lord, with songs and everlasting joy upon their lips." "I saw and heard them as they passed in," says the pilgrim, "and I wished myself among them."

The fourth word in the Lord's direction is "Walk"; that is, having found the pathway of life, proceed to walk in it.

At this point everything depends on the first step. If I were intending to go afoot to Yonkers I would not reach there in a thousand years without lifting my foot and taking the first step. "Multitudes, multitudes in the Valley of Decision!" How long halt ye between two opinions? Men know they ought to be Christians, mean to be Christians, expect to be Christians, and never begin. They wait for a more convenient season, and the convenient season never comes. By common consent such indecision is fatal to success in any of the common walks of life. You may read this motto in numberless shops and offices: "Do it now." Why should we not be equally wise in a matter that involves our destiny through all the eternal ages?

Therefore, do it now. Take the first step of the King's highway by clasping hands with Christ in a covenant of faith and faithfulness: and then "walk therein." Walk side by side with the heavenly Guide, like Enoch, of whom it is written, "He walked with God: and he was not, for God took him."

At the Journey's End

The last word is "Rest"—"and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

When shall we find it? Hereafter? Surely in heaven we shall lay aside sin and sorrow and doubt and drudgery, and all the other burdens of this present life, and rest in the delight of service without weariness, of friendship without disappointment, and of clear-eyed knowledge of the great verities.

But we are not waiting for rest. Is it not written, "He that believeth in the Son hath everlasting life"? That is, he hath it here and now. "Celestial joys on earthly ground from faith and love do grow." Oh, there are moments in the trysting place—rewards at the close of well-spent days, and transports on the Mount of Vision that, like the grapes of Eshcol, serve as foretastes of the vineyards in the Land of Promise. Let us rest and be thankful for the joys by the wayside, and trudge on with a keener anticipation of the rest which is prepared for the people of God.

Are any of us halting still at the crossways? Will it be safe or prudent to remain there? The voice behind us is speaking, "This is the way, walk ye in it." You may read at railway crossings this admonition, "Stop, look, listen." The reason why the words "Move on" are not added is because they can be trusted to the traveler's common sense. You have stopped and looked and listened long enough. Why not move on? If you expect to get anywhere that is clearly the thing to do. The King's highway is before you. Plant your feet upon it and "walk therein," with a heart full of joy.

The Awakening Year

AR BUTUS, anemone, spring beauty and violet,
Loveliness on every hand now the wakening days beguile
Sweetest fragrance, hope and cheer to us all the flowers bring;
Glad the earth—reclaimed, revived—God is seen in every thing.

Bluebird, robin, marten, too, voicing brightest roundelays;
Feathered hosts in myriads hail the dawn of golden days;
Sweet their songs of promise true for new blessings purport rare,
Spreading tidings of God's love here and there and everywhere.

April's showers, May's flowers—harbingers of brighter day;
June, July, August coming, with the summer's glow ablaze;
All the world's a temple fair wherein men their hymns unlose
To the God whose gifts are free for our simple faith and praise.

GEORGE TAGGART

* Pastor, Marble Collegiate Church, New York.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON S. COOPER

The Treacherous Kiss

SUNDAY, May 2. Luke 22: 48. "Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?" To use a kiss in the ministry of betrayal is like using a sacramental cup to poison a friend. The very worst form of devilry is that which garbs itself in the robes of an angel of light. Evil which wears its own clothes is sufficiently repulsive, but it is not nearly so repulsive as when it counterfeits goodness, and decks itself in adornments stolen from the wardrobe of virtue. If betrayal comes with a case and a frown we know how to interpret its approach, but when it comes with smiles and kisses it can deceive the very elect. This kiss of Judas wounded the Lord far more deeply than did the nails which fastened him to the cross.

And we, too, can do our evil behind appearances of virtue. We can play mischief on our knees. We can appear unto men to pray while all the time we are busy hatching schemes to wrong our brother. We can even join the Lord's holy church for a badge of respectability. Our membership appears to throw the light of sanctity over our life, and the soft and mellow beams become a kind of screen behind which we can engage in questionable deeds. "Oh, she is a member of the church, and it must be all right!" And thus does membership act as a screen instead of being a lucid transparency through which we can see into the deepest depths of the consecrated soul. Yes, we can betray the Lord with a kiss!

Let us beware of religious cloaks. Let us beware of borrowing the livery of the saints to hide the dices of the sinner. If we are going to betray the Lord let us do it openly and not by assuming the mood and manners of a friend. But why betray the great Friend who sticketh closer than a brother? Let us rather pledge him a deeper fealty, and ceaseless service and sacrifice. J. H. J.

The Waiting Hours of Life

MONDAY, May 3. Isaiah 30: 6-18. "Therefore will the Lord wait that he may be gracious unto you." We are all familiar with the waiting hours of life. In nature there are days when the earth seems asleep. The fish does not rise in the pool, the bee drones past in the slumbrous air, there is no motion in the trees or across the grass. We have waited in the sick-chamber when there has been hardly a sign of vitality in the dear object of our fond affection. Mary and Martha knew what it was to wait four days on the tiptoe of expectation. Will that step never be heard down the path? Will that letter never come to hand? Will that closed door never open? Are our prayers lost like carrier-pigeons at sea? Hath God forgotten to be gracious and in anger shut up his tender mercies?

No, God is waiting that he may be gracious, i.e., until the exact hour strikes when he can interpose to the best advantage. When the storm pressed hard on the disciples, Jesus was by no means indifferent. It was hard for him to keep away. He was watching the boat amid the waters as the breaking broke, and came not a moment too early, but not a moment too late. The great peril is, when God delays to help us, that we should make the mistake of Abraham when he married Hagar, or of these statesmen, who sent an embassy to Egypt for help against Assyria. "Blessed are they that wait for God." None of them that look for his coming will ever be left desolate. "My soul, wait thou only upon God." "He will be very gracious at the voice of thy cry." F. B. M.

Cheerfulness a Healthkeeping Virtue

TUESDAY, May 4. Proverbs 17: 22. "A cheerful heart is a good medicine: but a broken spirit ceth up the bones." One of the great limitations on success is ill health. When we turn to the Bible and to life we find that both agree as regards the duty as well as the privilege of caring for the body and keeping well. Our government, through the Public Health Service in its various branches, including army and navy, now spends twenty million dollars yearly upon the public health of the nation. There are three surgeon-generals with thousands of assistants, and in 1913 there were 632 officers and employees engaged in caring for the bodily health of the citizens of the United States.

Much of disease and ill health is preventable. The Bible gives definite suggestions bearing upon this subject. We are pointed in the Scriptures to the necessity of securing in the first place the right attitude towards God. Ill health is frequently dependent upon a guilty conscience, a lack of harmony between a man's higher and lower self, or a sense of unforgiven sin. The first principle for a healthy body is a quiet mind, or what the writer of the Proverbs calls "a tranquil heart." Getting right with God, making a clean breast of our sins to him, securing a renewed intimacy with the great source of health and strength and wholeness, is first of all important to a man who would be truly well.

The Bible also teaches that a right mental attitude towards life and our fellows is the true attitude of the Christian. Jesus' attitude towards life and men was that of love and not of hate; one of constructive and sympathetic appreciation of good wherever he found it; not of cynicism, or criticism, or premature judgment. Good health is more often dependent upon harmonious relationships with others, and of willingness to put oneself in another's place, than we sometimes appreciate. An officer in the present war, who had expressed himself as hating an officer on the other side, was asked by his friend to meet the man of his hatred, for his friend said, "You should know him, for he is not such a bad fellow after all." The officer replied, "Meet him? Of course I will not meet him. How could I hate him if I knew him?" To eliminate hatred and suspicion from the heart is to eliminate the seeds of ill health. In their place there will come a new sense of harmony and cheerfulness. To love God and to love our fellow men is another way of expressing the certainty of keeping well. C. S. C.

The Clear Note of Trust in Jesus

WEDNESDAY, May 5. John 6: 60-71. "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." In verse 41, the men who a few hours before wished to crown Jesus were murmuring against him. In verse 52 they were striving among themselves. In verse 60 many confessed that his sayings were too hard and difficult to receive. In verse 66 the bulk of his adherents stole out of the synagogue, in the gathering shadows of the evening, until the building was almost empty, and he was left alone with the twelve, who had been the sorrowful witnesses of the crumbling of their Master's popularity and of their own ambitions. It was at that moment that he put the infinitely pathetic question which elicited this instant reply.

Yes, the words of Jesus are sufficient, without further evidence, to prove him to be the Son of God. Weary souls bathe in their pure depths; the dark passages of life are illumined by their radiance; and their clear note has again and again awakened souls to deeds of heroism. The long corridor of the ages, down which they float to us, cannot impair their beauty and force. They are as quick and powerful as when uttered. Those who most ponder the words of Jesus are most conscious of the life that is in them. To whom else can we go? To the agnostic with his negations? To the ceremonialist with his outward rites? To Buddha, Confucius, Mohammed? None of these can nourish or inspire our life as Jesus can. Let us stay with him though the shadows fall. He is the light of life. F. B. M.

The Hallmark of the Christian

THURSDAY, May 6. Romans 8: 9. "But if any man hath not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." In these days, when men are earnestly asking, "What is Christianity?" we may well consider these words of Paul as a working guide for the believer. A Christian, according to the apostle, is a man who has the spirit of Christ, who is continually and lovingly adjusting his standard of conduct and his relationship with his fellow men in accordance with the attitude, the point of view and the spirit in which Jesus taught and worked. The spirit of Christ is tolerance; it is love. It is the spirit that suffers long and is kind, forgiving seventy times seven times. It is the spirit that does not judge harshly, that indeed withholds judgment, since only God knows the heart and can with perfect justice measure out to every man his due. The spirit of Christ is often evinced in that golden silence which stops our mouths when we can not say good of another. It is the incarnation of that Golden Rule which places us in the position of our brother and helps us to look at things as nearly as possible from his standpoint.

Christ brought a new revelation, a fuller and larger interpretation of the laws of association between individuals. He suggested that the ultimate law of perfect civilization lay in the ability of men and women to actually forgive and forget. In the model prayer which he has given us, he has made the spirit of forgiveness a condition upon which we may look for reinstatement in the divine favor. "And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors!" Gladstone once said that he didn't have time to hate anybody. The Christian not only does not have time, but he does not have the right to carry around with him grudges and hatreds against his neighbor. If we have hatred in our hearts toward any living soul, we do not at that moment have the spirit of Christ.

Furthermore, if the mind of Christ is our rich possession we will have implicit trust in God. The spirit of faith is one of the first marks of the Christian. The man of the world who trusts entirely in his own strength and genius is limited. The man of God has a right to believe, he must believe if he is Christlike, that infinite resources are behind him, that underneath are the everlasting arms, and that no matter how dark may be the way, or how complicated may be his problem, all things work together for good, and that there is no possible defeat for the man who continually exemplifies the spirit of Christ. C. S. C.

The Preciousness of Jesus' Friendship

FRIDAY, May 7. Philippians 3: 1-11. "I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." Other religions are content with ornate rites, an elaborate priesthood, an intricate system of doctrines and rules, but the Christian, led by the Holy Spirit, cannot be content with these, counts them, in comparison with the knowledge of Christ, as loss and refuse, and presses through them all to know Christ as a personal Friend. Our Lord does not live back in the centuries, nor amid the clouds of heaven. He is near us, with us, in us. We must know him, not as the Stranger who turns aside to tarry for the night, nor as King of kings, but with the inner knowledge of a familiar Friend, whom he trusts with his secrets, and who eats of his bread.

Jake Parsons was a curious New England character. One night he lay down to sleep, a drunken, worthless wretch, and woke up the next morning an absolutely changed man. He said: "That night Jesus Christ appeared in my sleep, and his face was so pure, so lovely, so friendly that I forgot all my old vices and so loved him that I couldn't displease him." For thirty-five years he lived a blameless life, beloved of everybody. Sitting in front of his humble home, with his sightless face turned towards the sun, he would say: "The door opened into heaven just a little crack. I shall know him when I see him. He will look just so." This is a glimpse of the excellency of the transforming power of the knowledge of Jesus Christ! F. B. M.

Leaving the Old Home for the New

SATURDAY, May 8. John 14: 2. "I go to prepare a place for you." Jesus here gives us a look into eternity through the gates ajar. A full vision would have made the disciples unfit for this lowly life. They saw for a moment the heavenly hills on the sides of the mountains of immortality. How blessed to know that when the earthly house fails you have a building imperishable, designed and completed by the Architect of the universe for his bride. No artist, giving beautiful reflections from nature, can thrill the soul like him who paints heaven for his children.

Time's winged chariot is hurrying on. Life's journey will soon be ended. The old home will be left behind. The old business life will be no more. Your employment will be in the presence of the King. Old opportunities will be past, but more golden ones are coming. Old friends are gone where you are going, waiting to greet you. The ascended Christ says, "I will receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." Do you believe him, trust him, love him? Then his home will be yours; you will be joint heirs with him to the inheritance of a universe of worlds, of his infinite spiritual blessings. You will have the right of way to his heart and being forever. E. W. C.

REAPING DOLLARS FROM DEATH

WE HAVE what we think are some interesting things to say below about the traffic in war materials between concerns in this country and belligerent nations, but first, if you please, a word about words.

The United States has become war-mad, war-blind and war-deaf. The evidence of this is found in the fact that two of the most important words in the language have been wholly distorted from their true meanings. These words are "neutral" and "moral." The rock-bottom meaning of the word "neutral" is "having no part in; unaffected by; isolated from." These definitions are not found in so many words in the dictionaries, but any one who will stop to analyze in calmness the word and its definitions as given in the dictionaries, and its meaning as found in his own intelligence when applied to any subject in which he has no personal interest, will find that the above definitions are the rock-bottom ones.

The dictionary says that "neutral" means "friendly to each of two belligerents"; one might then humanely care for the non-combatants of either one or both of two belligerent nations, and still be friendly to both: but how can one supply both or either with the means for continuing war-murder and be regarded as friend to either! The dictionary says that "neutral" means to be "inactive," not inactive in the sense of not taking the part of one against the other in a quarrel between two; just inactive. If two neighbors are fighting in the street, a third neighbor might step in the house and quiet the hysterical wife and crying children, and still be wholly inactive in the fight. But if he stood by the two men and handed either or both new clubs as fast as they broke the old ones—is that inactivity in the fight?

As to "moral." The word "moral" has to do, according to the dictionary, with the conduct and spirit of men toward God and their fellow men with reference to right and wrong. It has to do with "oughtness" in conduct, and a thing is immoral that transgresses our right relations with our fellow men. When our fellow men seek to kill each other, our right relations toward them demand that we seek to stop the fratricidal strife. To do anything whatsoever that will tend to prolong the strife, that will help both to inflict deadly wounds upon each other, that will enable them to continue fighting unto the death, is nothing else but immoral. Where can there be any argument?

BUT now to the specific unneutral and immoral things which are being done in this country in connection with the war in Europe. Practically every day the press prints some item of news about increasing activity in those lines of business directly affected by the purchase here of war munitions for use in Europe. Despite the abhorrent character of such news, the items are accepted quite as a matter of course.

Early in March the New York Herald reported that the Winchester Repeating Arms Company at New Haven, Conn., were conducting "the most extensive building operations ever carried on by a corporation in the United States." Day and night, including Sundays, half a thousand men were engaged in hurrying to completion immense structures, and the explanation was that the natural expansion of business compelled this. The Herald pointed out that the expansion dates from the opening of the European War, and that the company had surrounded itself and all its operations with every possible protection against a discovery of its inside activities, a large staff of special police being on guard even to some distance outside the plant.

On April 15 the Christian Herald addressed the Winchester Repeating Arms Company, and ten other business houses, the following letter:

In order to give our readers reliable information as to the extent of the manufacture in this country of munitions of war for use in Europe, we are addressing all manufacturers of war materials this identical inquiry, and an early reply from you will be a greatly appreciated courtesy. Please understand our queries to refer solely to war materials.

1. Will you say if you had an established European market before the war, or if you have developed one since?
2. Will you say if your orders from this market have increased since last August?
3. Will you state approximately the kind and quality of war materials for which you have accepted European contracts since the outbreak of the war, and their approximate value?
4. Will you say how your shipments are made to Europe?

5. Will you say if you have refused to ship war materials to Europe since the outbreak of this war, and the approximate value of the contracts so refused?

6. If you have refused this class of business, will you state on what grounds?

7. Please state any views on the general subject which you would care to express in the Christian Herald.

For your information we would add that our circulation of over 300,000 gives us, we believe, approximately a million intelligent Christian readers, and they are manifesting keen interest in this subject. We wish to print facts, and shall also be glad to state both sides to the question of "moral neutrality" which has been raised.

We thank you in advance for the co-operation which we are hoping you will give us in preparing this important information.

To this letter the Winchester Repeating Company had not replied up to the time this issue of the Christian Herald went to press. The other concerns addressed were: Remington Arms, Union Metallic

The same letter has now been addressed to several other manufacturers of war materials, and a very definite suggestion may be made to our readers next week as to how they can assist in learning the facts about this traffic which makes the United States an active participant in the European war.

THE New York American of April 13 printed a list of over fifty steamships which had sailed from this country to ports in belligerent countries during March, carrying cargoes of firearms, ammunition, horses, vehicles, etc., all, presumably from their nature and destination, intended for use in the war. The total value of these cargoes was placed at over ten million dollars, and it goes without saying that the statement contained only such information as the correspondent had been able to obtain; like every other object for which men ought to be ashamed, this manufacturing and shipping of war materials is kept hidden as far as possible from the public eye.

Not only the Winchester Arms Company, but other concerns are enlarging their plants. It has been stated that we do not vouch for the accuracy of the statement, though believing it entirely probable, that one of the biggest, if not indeed the biggest, cartridge-making plant in the country, has contracts from Europe covering a period of two years, and when asked what would happen to them if the war should cease within one year, replied that in that case they could still afford to burn up their new buildings and cancel the balance of the contract. And this is business prosperity for the United States!

Not the least repugnant feature of this business revival is the fact that American money is actually paying for this war equipment, for the time being, the "balance of trade" as between Europe and the United States is turned tremendously in America's favor. England, France and Russia are said to have negotiated phenomenal loans in this country, and equally phenomenal credit, in order to finance their transactions here in war materials. At the beginning of hostilities the Administration at Washington declared that financial loans to the governments of any of the warring nations would be construed as a breach of our neutrality; immediately our money market was closed to Europe. But at present the Administration has practically rescinded its decision and has its back turned to what is going on. Thus hundreds of millions of dollars are now involved in this industry, every dollar stained with human blood.

The prolongation of the war is admittedly dependent upon the ability of the warring nations to procure arms and ammunition; the realization of these expected huge profits is dependent upon the prolongation of the war. Against such a combination what chance have two little words, "neutral" and "moral"?

Sweet Christ, Speak Peace!

By Myrta Lockett Avery

DEAR CHRIST, we pray thee walk between the warring lines,
And bid the tumult cease.
Our brothers slay our brothers. All the world
Is full of woe and wrong.
Sweet Christ, speak peace!

Lord, England is our mother. Save her, Lord!
France helped us to our freedom. Make her strong!
And Germany's our teacher. Father God,
Let her wrong no man, no man do her wrong.
Save Russia, Austria, Belgium, to our race.
Secure by reason of Love's sovereign grace,
Make every nation sure in her own place,
And make that place within the Lord's domain.
Grant all thy peoples of their woes surcease,
Bow down their kings to thee, O Prince of Peace!

Dear Christ, we pray thee walk between the warring lines,
And bid the tumult cease.
Our brothers slay our brothers. All the world
Is full of woe and wrong.
Sweet Christ, speak peace!

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

AMERICAN BULLETS MAY BE DOING THIS KIND OF WORK

Cartridge Company, Bridgeport, Conn.; British-American Manufacturing Company, Bridgeport, Conn.; Peters Cartridge Company, Cincinnati, Ohio; Western Cartridge Company, East Alton, Ill.; United States Cartridge Company, Lowell, Mass.; Colt Firearms Company, Hartford, Conn.; Marlin Company, New Haven, Conn.; J. Stevens Tool and Arms Company, Chicopee, Mass.; Bethlehem Steel Company, Bethlehem, Pa.; Midvale Steel Company, Philadelphia, Pa. Thus far, we have received two replies, which we quote in full below:

BETHLEHEM STEEL COMPANY
SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA.

April 8, 1915.

Gentlemen:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 6, requesting us to reply to a series of questions regarding our manufacture and exportation of war material to Europe.

This company has had a European market for ordnance material for the past 15 or 20 years. We are not, however, at liberty to divulge what orders we receive during time of peace or of war. This is an obligation which our purchasers uniformly impose. I will say, however, that the company has refused no business from Europe which it could possibly undertake, nor does it confine itself to any particular clients, but stands ready to furnish material to all buyers.

Further than this we are unable to reply to the inquiry in your letter.

Yours truly,
(Signed) J. E. MATHEWS, Manager of Ordnance.

J. STEVENS ARMS & TOOL COMPANY

Manufacturers of
RIFLES, SHOTGUNS, PISTOLS
CHICOPEE FALLS, MASS., U. S. A., 4, 3, 15.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to your inquiry of April 6, we will answer your questions in the order in which you give them:

1. Yes, we have had an established European market for a number of years, having an office and stock rooms in London.
2. While our London business has increased since the commencement of the war (wholly in sporting and not military guns), yet it has decreased in other parts of the country where war is being waged.
3. We have taken no contracts whatever for any military guns and have never made anything but sporting rifles and shotguns.
4. Our shipments to Europe are all made by vessel from New York; almost always to London rather than to any other port.
5. This is answered under question No. 3, as we have made no war materials whatever.
6. Is answered under questions Nos. 3 and 5.
7. It is our belief here that if the warring nations were completely equipped with munitions of war, peace would be declared much quicker than it will be if some of them are short of munitions of war and allow the contest to drag.

Trusting we have answered your letter in a satisfactory way, we beg to remain

Very truly yours,
(Signed) J. STEVENS ARMS & TOOL COMPANY,
I. H. PAGE, President.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

THE campaign in Galicia has been the most engrossing feature of the war during the past week and, in view of the conflicting despatches, it has been very difficult to form a precise idea of the actual state of that campaign. Towards the end of the week, however, the situation grew slightly clearer, allowing us to perceive the outlines of the movements under way in the province.

The Russians are in possession of all the passes leading through the Carpathians from Dukla Pass on the west to a point near Jablonica Pass on the east, excepting the Beskid and Uszok Passes, the latter being the most important of all, and the one whose control is so vitally necessary in a strategic sense to any force invading Hungary that any advance from the mouths of the other passes, without controlling this pass would be almost suicidal.

The Russian front, therefore, at present occupies, beginning at the west, the exits of the other passes on the Hungarian or south side of the mountains, until in the vicinity of the Uszok Pass, when it turns north and runs through the mountains and then north into the foothills of the Carpathians on the Galician side, and then turns east and runs parallel to the mountains to the east of the Beskid Pass, which practically is the eastern end of the battle line.

The Austrian line opposing the Russians begins on the eastern end in front of the Beskid Pass and runs westwardly and parallel to the mountains till the Uszok Pass is reached, then turns and runs south through that pass, then westerly through the foothills of the Carpathians on the southern side.

Nowhere on this southern side have the Russian forces advanced as much as five miles from the southerly end of the passes. Consequently Hungary is at the present time, practically free from the tread of Russian foot.

Behind the Russian line thus described is one large Austro-German force advancing from the east, which we know has attacked the Stryi River, and thus stretches for a considerable distance behind the Russian left wing, while on the west end another Austro-German army is making its way east from Krakow with the object of achieving a like position in the rear of the Russian right wing.

From Petrograd despatches, which admitted April 1 that the Russians are menaced on both flanks, and that the Russian invasion through the Carpathians may have to be temporarily abandoned, it is a fair inference that this Russian army is actually in a more or less precarious position and that it is in some danger.

The official German statement of the number of prisoners of war in Germany on April 1 reached during the week. This census runs as follows:

	Officers	Men
French.....	3,868	238,496
Russians.....	5,140	504,210
Romans.....	647	39,620
British.....	620	20,207

This affords us a basis for calculating the losses of the countries mentioned since the beginning of the war. Adding the official statistics of the killed, wounded and prisoners of the Federals during the principal battles of our Civil War—Gettysburg, Vicksburg, Wilderness, Antietam, Chancellorsville, Chickamauga, Cold Harbor, Fredericksburg, Manassas, Shiloh, Stone River and Petersburg—rough battles under very varying conditions from which to work out an average—we find that there were 22,458 killed, 120,859 wounded and 38,126 taken prisoner. Roughly, the proportion is one killed to five wounded to two prisoners.

Applying these results to the figures stated above, we would arrive at the following:

	Killed	Wounded	Prisoners	Total
French....	120,000	600,000	242,000	962,000
Russians...	252,000	1,258,000	509,000	2,014,000
Romans...	19,000	98,000	40,000	157,000
British....	10,000	50,000	20,000	80,000

Assuming that 35 per cent. of the wounded were permanently disabled and unable to return to the firing line, we would have the following total of permanently disabled:

Dead.....	401,000
35 per cent. of wounded.....	700,000
Prisoners.....	805,000
	1,906,000

This only covers the fighting with Germany, and not the fighting with Austria or the Turks.

A similar computation cannot be made for the Germans, Austrians and Turks, as we have never had similar figures to base it on furnished us.

Some time ago Premier Asquith announced the British loss as 104,000, but probably in that was included the naval loss of about 6,000, the interned naval brigade in Holland, and the various other losses in Egypt, South Africa, etc. The British loss in the fighting in France and Belgium, under the hard this week around Verdun and in the Woevre. The district in which the heavy fighting on the western battle-line is now taking place may be roughly described as the country between the Meuse on the west and the Moselle on the east, of which a line drawn east and west through the town of Spincourt would form the northern boundary, and a like line through Commercy would form the southern.

The whole covers an area of less than 300 square miles, and it is within these comparatively narrow boundaries that, for the last ten days, several hundred thousand men have been struggling for the mastery.

At the commencement of this French offensive the German line began at Cosenvoye and the Meuse and thence ran to the eastward through Flabas and between Azannus and Ornes to a point a little to the north of Etain. At this point it began to curve to the southward, and the curve, increasing rapidly in abruptness, describes a figure much like the upper part of a question mark. At the end of this mark it reached to Les Eparges, almost passing through Fresnes.

From Les Eparges the German line ran almost due south, passing through Lamorville to St. Mihiel on the Meuse. From this point the line runs, slightly curving, to the east of Pont-à-Mousson, bisecting the forest of Le Prêtre, which has figured so frequently in the recent bulletins. The country from St. Mihiel to Pont-à-Mousson is well wooded and somewhat rough. From St. Mihiel northward to Les Eparges the line runs along the foot of the Côtes [hills] de Lorraine, and is in some places marshy. The French attacks on this part of the line have had the slight advantage of being launched, as a rule, from higher ground than that occupied by the Germans.

The result of this fighting is still far from being clear, the bulletins contradicting each other on important points. The only thing which is clear is that the losses on both sides have been in all probability the heaviest so far in the war in proportion to the number engaged.

The German general staff has issued a complete review of the late fighting, which differs very greatly from the information which we have received from French sources. For instance, the French claim to have captured the hamlet of Les Eparges, a most important point, and the Germans categorically deny, not the loss of the point, but the fact that there was any fighting at all there. In view of this conflict of statements the only thing possible to do is to await the corroboration of one or the other account.

On the rest of the line, except for intermittent skirmishing and occasional cannonading, the week passed very quietly. The heaviest skirmishes took place in the Argonne and in Champagne, while the cannonading was most violent near La Bassée and Ypres. No change of the slightest importance took place, apparently. This western battle line is now stated officially to be 588 miles in length, whereof, for the Allies, the French hold 540 miles, the British 31 and the Belgians 17.

Sir John French has reported to the war office at London that the losses of the British army in the three days' fight, March 10 to 13, at Neuve Chapelle total as follows: Killed, wounded and missing: Officers, 572; men, 12,239. The German loss he estimates at considerably more.

The total of the loss in the fight at St. Eloi on the next two days has not yet reached us. Early estimates, though, were erroneous, as the St. Eloi losses will run to somewhere around 5,000.

All is quiet along the Dardanelles; only once during the week, according to the reports which come to us, was that quietness disturbed, and then the disturbance was not serious. A cruiser shelled the forts on the Asiatic side of the entrance, and a torpedo-boat destroyer ran in on a scouting trip as far as the Narrows.

The attack on Smyrna would seem to have been given up. The French force of sixty thousand men, mentioned last week as having landed in Egypt, are, as far as we know, still there, no news having system of computation adopted above, totals 80,000, and is, it would seem, not very far out of the way.

Continued on page 458

TROOPS CONSTRUCT A SUSPENSION BRIDGE ACROSS IRRIGATION CANAL IN EGYPT

I have the official computation of the Geneva International Bureau of the Red Cross as of March 15, and its figures are very much higher for all than those arrived at by the above computation. It is, however, well to be conservative in estimating losses, as it would seem that there has been very considerable exaggeration in many of the reports which have reached us.

Great Britain has withdrawn cotton from the list of contraband of war, according to a statement made Wednesday in the House of Commons by a government representative. But it is explained that this applies only to neutral countries, so the decision loses any importance.

Contrary to expectation, and much to public disappointment, when the House met on Wednesday the government did not announce the policy it proposed to adopt in dealing with the drink evil. In the meantime, the number of persons of more or less general or local prominence and influence, who have voluntarily pledged themselves and their families to abstain from the use of all alcoholic beverages during the war, has, it is said, grown to over four hundred thousand. If these reports be true, the government will probably be forced to take some affirmative action.

The usual rumors about Italy have continued during the week. The Italian propagandists of the policy of taking part in the war held several hundred meetings all over the kingdom on Sunday, April 11, and all told drew some 65,000 auditors, which was not a large number considering the number of meetings. In Rome and Milan and two or three other places the manifestants tried to carry things with a high hand, but were roughly handled and dispersed by the troops, and there were some killed, besides the wounded.

The fighting on the western battle-line has been

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

Neutrality—Which Kind?

IN OUR modern dictionaries, "neutral" is defined as "a state or nation that refrains from aiding or interfering between belligerents in a war, taking no part in the contest, but continuing friendly relations with both." If one may judge, however, from the many different views concerning our neutrality in the European war, there must be a large proportion of our citizens who have very hazy notions on the subject. At the beginning of the war, official advice emanated from Washington counseling absolute impartiality, and that our people should be careful to avoid forming "camps of hostile discussion." This was wise and well understood. It was clearly our cue not only to keep our hands off as a nation, but to be fair and unbiased as individuals, and to refrain from any attitude or public expressions which might be calculated to interfere with our availability for the rôle of peacemaker later on, should it happen to come our way. Now, however, either we are no longer neutral, or there are two kinds of neutrality, the one flatly contradictory of the other.

That there is a problem here which needs to be solved is made clear by a single illustration. On August 27, 1913, an event occurred which has had no parallel since the time, over a century ago, when Washington appeared before Congress to address its members on the subject of our foreign relations. President Wilson on the date mentioned addressed the joint session on the subject of Mexico. Just before closing his speech he outlined the neutral policy which it was his intention to follow. His words in this connection were:

I shall follow the best practice of nations in the matter of neutrality by forbidding the exportation of arms or munitions of war of any kind from the United States to any part of the republic of Mexico—a policy suggested by several interesting precedents and certainly dictated by many manifest considerations of practical expediency. We cannot in the circumstances be partisans of either party to the contest that now distracts Mexico, or constitute ourselves the virtual umpire between them.

This was clear and unmistakable language. Mexico's quarrel was no affair of ours, and we should neither interfere nor sell arms or war munitions to either side. Thus was the accepted definition of neutrality carried into practical effect by the highest authority.

To the average mind it has the aspect and character of good, sound common sense, as well as safe statesmanship. There had been a good deal of trading in arms and ammunition along the border, but all that was stopped, first because we were neutral, and next, because we did not propose to supply fuel to keep up the war. Where the Mexicans got their guns and cartridges was a matter of little moment to us, as long as they did not get them from the American side. Our steel factories and powder works did not work overtime then; the embargo shut down the traffic in arms absolutely. The national conscience was clear and untroubled.

Now, if a certain principle which differentiates between right and wrong, between neutrality and unneutrality, be applicable in one case, it is logically applicable in another which has many essential points in common with the first. If "the best practice of nations" was suited to the emergency when we were dealing with Mexico, why not with Europe too? Europe's quarrel is not our affair; we have neither share nor portion in it; and it was clearly understood that as a nation, as states, communities and individuals, we were to be neutrals. Suppose, for the sake of continuing the illustration, that the paragraph already quoted from the President's speech on Mexico were to be applied to the European war. Let us see how it would fit:

I shall follow the best practice of nations in the matter of neutrality by forbidding the exportation of arms or munitions of war of any kind from the United States to any part of the continent of Europe—a policy suggested by several interesting precedents and certainly dictated by many manifest considerations of practical expediency. We cannot in the circumstances be the partisans of either party to the contest that now distracts Europe, or constitute ourselves the virtual umpire between them.

Such is the neutrality which we observed in our relations with Mexico, as it would be if applied to our relations with Europe. It is logical, just and reasonable, and accordant with the requirements of Christian civilization. That it would be real neutrality can hardly be questioned. But what do we see? We see every week ship-loads of arms going to Europe: cannon, rifles, shrapnel, bullets, cartridges by the million, sent off in vast consignments. We see our ammunition factories and steel works busy day and night, turning out a stream of these deadly weapons to keep up the war. Any of the combatant powers can buy all it wants by paying a good round price, for it is wholly a commercial affair, without a particle of sentiment in it. The buyers can depend on getting enough supplies to go on fighting, even if, as General Grant remarked, "it takes all summer." Our factories make no distinction; they sell to the first comer, fix their own prices and make a royal profit out of the deadly traffic. God alone knows how many lives have been sacrificed through these means! If any of the powers, unfortunately for itself, is so situated that it can't get to market, that is its own affair, not ours. We're neutral, and we are willing to sell to everybody that comes.

This is the other kind of neutrality, and to stop it, we are told, would be unneutral. Won't somebody with a long head on his shoulders kindly explain to a wondering public just where real neutrality comes in, and if there is such a thing in the world? Are human life and suffering irredeemably commercialized?

Several members of Congress, prompted by a humane impulse, tried to make it clear in a frank and honest way that it was all wrong to sell weapons and munitions to keep up the slaughter. But the ammunition brokers and manufacturers were so busy making money on their contracts that the trade was too profitable to be stopped. In many of the states good, well-meaning Christian people protested against our participation in the struggle in this savage way, claiming that the money made by the traffic was the price of human lives; but their protests, too, were unavailing. Next, the churches, here and there, made a fitful dissent, but they went with the tide of commercialism. The almighty dollar" was too much even for them.

Again we ask: What is neutrality? Why should there be two kinds of it? Which is the real and which the spurious? Can the reader help to solve the problem?

Which kind of neutrality do you favor? The neutrality that will supply shot and shell to one or to both belligerents, to help them keep on killing each other and thus prolong the war indefinitely, or the neutrality which, while friendly to both sides, will firmly refuse to sell weapons or munitions to either, or to have any responsibility for the terrible sacrifice of human life?

Have You Found the Treasure?

IN TIMES of sorrow and tribulation, it is a blessed thought that God's Word becomes the solace and comfort of multitudes who in the days of unclouded prosperity had almost forgotten it. They can find in its pages what the world denies them—the assurance of a better life to those who are willing to turn their back on sin and enter the Way. They find there the revelation of a Father's love and a Redeemer's sacrifice. Yet, let us confess it with sorrow, there are many who, even with the casket in their possession, fail to discover the priceless treasure within. The Bible may be in their hand, but its message does not reach their heart.

It is related by an ancient writer that when Alexander the Great was plundering the palace of Darius, one of his soldiers found in a leather bag the crown jewels of Persia. The prize was worth millions, but the stupid fellow opened the bag, shook out the little glittering stones among the rubbish and went away boasting about the fine sack he had got for carrying his food. A slave was one day climbing a mountain, when his foot slipped and he fell. To break the fall he caught a shrub, which gave way, and man and bush went rolling together down the mountain slope to the bottom. When he arose he noticed curious little white particles sticking to the roots in his grasp. They looked like silver. He hastened back to the spot where the bush had grown, got down on his knees, and with his hands dug away a few inches of the soil. He had discovered the mines of Potosi, which have yielded hundreds of ship-loads of solid silver. The owners of "the Silver Mountain" were up till that day poor men, for they knew nothing of the riches beneath.

So with the Bible. We sing of it, "Precious treasure, thou art mine." Is it yours only as the jewels belonged to the soldier, or as the silver mines belonged to the owners before the slave made his happy discovery? The scribes and Pharisees are said to have known the Bible so well that if every Bible in the world had been destroyed they could have reproduced it, without a mistake, from memory. What good did it do them? Many who have the Bible in their homes—its histories, its prophecies, its precepts, its promises—seem to be no more affected by it than they had merely eaten the printed pages.

The Bible in the hand is not enough; the Bible in the head is not enough; but the Bible in the heart made a living thing by God's good Spirit that means eternal life. That means the finding of the great Treasure.

Preparations for Revival

THERE is widespread interest among pastors and laymen over the plans of the clergymen of New York City to prepare the way for a great metropolitan revival. Evangelism is in the air. All the foolish talk which declared so sagely that evangelism and evangelistic methods are out of date is seen at last to be what it truly is, the outcome of uninformed and enlightened minds. Churches and pastors that refuse to enter into the great evangelistic movement which is sweeping America will find themselves left behind in the onward sweep of the kingdom.

And it is good to emphasize the fact, as these New York pastors are doing, that the ministers and their laymen can bring revivals to pass even if the services of specially appointed evangelists are unavailable. Every pastor should be an evangelist. Every church member should be an evangelist. "Then they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." This must happen again. It is beginning to happen. The rekindling flames of evangelistic fervor among all classes of church workers is the most hopeful sign of the times.

These New York pastors are emphasizing two other vital facts: one that prayer is needed in revival preparation, the other that unity among the workers is required. It is a beautiful thing to see the pastors of our metropolis gathering together week by week for united prayer that God's Spirit will visit New York with quickening power.

This example of New York's pastors will doubtless be followed in many other cities. The first necessity is to desire that souls shall be saved the next, to make definite plans for united service of prayer. And as the pastors and laymen prepare together for a new equipment of soul-saving power, and as they put into practice the gifts received, souls shall be won in great multitudes in towns large and small and in the country places.

The day of the Lord's visitation has come at last. May all his people, pastors and laymen alike be willing and obedient in the day of his power."

Huerta's Visit

DOUBTLESS to his own surprise, as well as to that of many other people, Victoriano Huerta, ex-president and dictator of Mexico, has been permitted to visit us. It was a plucky thing to do, for he, probably more than any other ruler of his kind, has been criticized by our press and people, and not without reason. His responsibility in the Madero affair, his defiance of the United States authorities, and all the trouble and expense in which this nation became involved on his account, have not yet been forgotten. But the old dictator is a wily diplomat and knows how to face a delicate situation. His salute to the Statue of Liberty as he came up the bay, his tactful and gracious manner in greeting the officials and others who received him, and his expression of pleasure at "the opportunity to admire once more the greatness of the American people," all went to show that the veteran had taken especial pains to create a good impression at the outset. To the immigration inspectors he declared that he had no intention of going to Mexico or Cuba, but nothing was said of the possibility of his visiting Nicaragua, or some other point of vantage from which he could direct a propaganda for the restoration of the old régime in Mexico, if such be his plan, as some have proposed. Huerta is sixty-one years old, young and vigorous enough yet to be heard from in Mexican affairs, and it is clearly within the range of probabilities that he will not remain here an idle and disinterested spectator, where Villistas and Carranzistas and other factions are still keeping up an indecisive struggle. His presence on American soil is significant, to say the least.

The BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Great Zoological Specimens Secured

FROM the Belgian Congo, where he went six years ago with the intention of spending a year collecting zoological specimens and making a study of its ethnology for the American Museum of Natural History, James P. Chapin, a young student of Columbia University, returned to New York the other day with many rare trophies. He brought with him one-fourth of the collections, and Herbert Lang, his partner in this expedition, is left to pack and ship the other three-fourths. Dr. Chapin talked freely of the four rare "okapi" he secured, of cannibal tribes, of roving bands of tribes whose chief diet is honey, white ants, and scorpions; of eagles that live on monkeys, and of bats that live on bats; of hornbills whose females are plastered into a hole in a tree by their mates during the period of nesting with a tiny opening left for food supply. So far as known no white man has ever seen a living okapi. It is as large as a small-sized horse, with zebra-like markings on legs and hind quarters. The four specimens taken by the Lang-Chapin expedition were secured by natives in traps. Two of the stuffed carcasses will go to the American Museum, and the other two to Belgium. The two scientists employed native hunters, guides, and porters, the carrying numbering at times two hundred. During the six years, some forty thousand specimens have been secured for practical use. The explorers in a certain place encountered a system of primitive wireless telegraph. On huge drums made of hollow logs the natives beat out sounds which can be heard for ten miles. And they have a code by which the people communicate across long distances with these drums. These tribesmen, with six years of successful chase, call to mind Nimrod, the great hunter in the early history of the world, whom Moses credits with having founded the Babylonian monarchy: "And Cush begat Nimrod; he began to be a mighty one in the earth. He was a mighty hunter before the Lord." (Gen. 10: 8, 9.)

Passing of Passenger Pigeon

THE United States once possessed a distinctively American bird belonging to the great family of pigeons, but so different from the rest of them as to mark it as one of the marvels of the New World. It was as different from the species of the Old World as the red man is from the European. It came into American literature. It might have claimed a place there on account of its beauty, with the upper parts of its body adorned with a bluish color, with metallic reflections about the neck, and the color underneath changed to a brownish or reddish purple or violet. But it demanded a place on the page of the historian and naturalist on account of its enormous numbers. John James Audubon computed the number of a flock of these pigeons he saw at the almost incredible number of 1,100,000,000, and estimated that the host would consume 8,500,000 bushels of grain per day. In Fenimore Cooper's "The Pioneers," there is a graphic description of a flock of passenger pigeons "extending from mountain to mountain in one solid blue mass." Before the white men came to make the farms and raise the grain they stole, they lived on berries, soft-shelled nuts like beechnuts, acorns and wild fruits, and their migrations were simply a search for food sufficient for their enormous flocks. But these beautiful birds are about gone, and the Audubon Society record classes them now among the practically extinct birds of America. The pigeon family was drawn upon largely in the offerings of the Mosaic dispensation: "And if the burnt sacrifice for his offering to the Lord be of fowls, then he shall bring his offering of turtledoves, or of young pigeons." (Lev. 1: 14.)

Business Combined with Study

IT HAS just been made known that Dr. Elmer E. Brown, chancellor of New York University, has fifteen business fellowships at his disposal. Professor Jeremiah W. Jenks, of the School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance, has arranged with several large concerns whereby graduates of New York University can secure positions for part time with the company while the remainder of the students' time is spent in post-graduate study. The business house pays the students' living expenses and the university tuition. Business experience coupled with scientific training is the aim of these fellowships. Some of the finest students and greatest men in America have worked their way through college wholly or in part. The business fellowship is a happy thought. It will give a post-graduate course to some who otherwise could not afford it, and the practical, self-dependent element will develop splendid fiber, and be a guarantee of a larger measure of success. The close relationship between business and the mental and spiritual realm is thus declared: "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." (Rom. 12: 11.)

CASTING THE LIBERTY SUFFRAGE BELL

PENNSYLVANIA has a new "Liberty bell," which is to be rung for the first time when the women of the state secure the right to vote. Mrs. Katherine Ruschenberger of Strafford originated the idea of the bell. It weighs 2,000 pounds, and is made of bronze. It was cast at Troy a few days ago in the presence of the leaders of the suffrage movement in Pennsylvania. It will start May 1 from Erie on a tour of the state, stopping in all the principal cities and towns. The tour will end in Philadelphia in time for the bell to be used as a feature of the big parade, which will close the campaign for woman suffrage in that state. Speakers will accompany the bell and make their plea for the vote at open-air meetings. The cause of woman suffrage is progressing marvelously, and will prevail before long, and woman's influence, despite an unfriendly minority, will be cast in favor of sobriety, virtue, benevolence and piety. Woman's loyalty to the kingdom of Christ is illustrated by Mary's love for her risen Lord and by his recognition of her reverent devotion: "Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself and saith unto him, Rabboni, which is to say, Master." (John 20: 16)

Typhus Claims Physician Hero

DR. ERNEST PENDLETON MAGRUDER, a Washington surgeon at the head of a Red Cross unit caring for plague victims in Serbia, died of typhus fever in Belgrade the other day. He fell a victim to the disease which he had offered himself to combat. Dr. Magruder is the second American physician to fall a prey to this deadly malady while undertaking to cure it in others. The first victim was Dr. James F. Donnelly of Brooklyn. Dr. Magruder was born in Upper Marlboro, Md., forty years ago, was graduated from Johns Hopkins University, had twelve years of hospital service in Washington, was for four years in charge of the Emergency Hospital there, and for the last five years he was professor of clinical surgery in Georgetown University. About five years ago Dr. Magruder made a tour of Europe. While in Scotland he decided to locate the family from which the Maryland Magruders had sprung. He found that the head of his clan was Sir Malcolm McGregor, an admiral in the British navy. Dr. Magruder also met Sir Malcolm's daughter, fell in love with and married her. The widow and two children are in Scotland, whither they went when the doctor was sent abroad on his ministry of mercy. Last autumn Dr. Magruder was sent to Serbia by the Red Cross with two surgeons and six nurses. They were sent to the town of Gevgeli in southern Serbia. This heroic physician leaves an example to his profession and to the world of self-sacrificing service to humanity.

Few realize how heroic the medical profession is, even in its ordinary practice. When the history of the European war is written, it must include a chapter on the disinterested and admirable work of American surgeons and nurses in the army hospitals of Europe. At great personal loss and personal risk they have gone at the call. These heroic doctors imitate the example of the Great Physician who gave his life for others. "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again." (II Cor. 5: 15.)

His Grave Too Short

ECCENTRIC people are to be found everywhere, and their actions are sometimes very strange. A farmer of western Connecticut, having a premonition of death, selected and purchased his own burial plot, dug his grave with his own hands, and a month ago ordered a tombstone to mark his resting-place. The man died about the time he expected to and his friends found that the deceased had made a mistake in calculating the size of the coffin case, and that the grave was eight inches too short. The burial was delayed two hours while diggers enlarged the grave. It is a rebuke to so foolish a performance, which may deter some other eccentric person from imitating the example. A reasonable concern for the disposition of our bodies or those of loved ones is in keeping with the demands of the best civilization. "And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, and laid it in his own new tomb." (Matt. 27: 59, 60.)

Money Savings of Children

A CANVASS of the banks of Los Angeles, Calif., shows that 40,000 children under sixteen years of age have almost $1,000,000 in savings deposits, an average of $25 each. One bank has 15,000 depositors between the ages of two and fourteen years. The largest account is that of a twelve-year-old boy, who has $1,572. He began seven years ago with fifty cents. Savings banks are a great blessing, especially to the plain people with moderate incomes. Many of the children of all parts of the country have deposits in these savings institutions. Children should be taught the value of saving money, and of the earning power of money through interest. The fact should be impressed on their minds that money has to be saved before the necessities of life can be purchased, the charities of earth dispensed, or the kingdom of God maintained. There should be great caution just here. It should be impressed on the minds of the children that the saving of money is not the most important duty; that the education of the mind, the formation of character are the most important. Christ thus puts the special emphasis on spiritual accumulation: "But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." (Matt. 6: 20.)

Robert Collyer Memorial Unveiled

A MEMORIAL to the late Rev. Robert Collyer has been unveiled in the Church of the Messiah, New York, where he was pastor for thirty-three years. It is a heroic bas-relief in bronze and Sienna marble. Dr. Collyer was born in Keighly, Yorkshire, England, in 1823, was a Methodist local preacher and a blacksmith. He became a Unitarian, founded a church of that denomination in Chicago, and remained its conspicuous pastor for nineteen years. He then came to the Church of the Messiah, New York, of which he was pastor and pastor emeritus till the time of his death. He was an eloquent preacher, kind-hearted and charitable and liberal in his theological views, and with many warm friends in all the Christian churches. The memorial is another illustration of the truth that "The memory of the just is blessed." (Prov. 10: 7.)

BETWEEN THE MILLSTONES

HOW long could you make a five-cent loaf of bread last, if you were not sure of more? A Polish mother, the fear of famine chilling her heart, can make it last far longer than you can, and keep a little starveling alive besides. (Just at this moment, however, one mother has died for lack of bread.)

If there were nothing more in sight with which to buy food, how long could you make fifty cents last? How long, by the way, will that fifty cents last that is in your pocket now? What will you have to show for it after it is spent? Or put it this way: If you had sent it to a mother in Poland, and she should keep herself and little child alive on what it would buy, for a week, and then another fifty cents from some one else, and so on and so on, should preserve their lives until good times come again, would that be a good showing for your fifty cents? (Two or three infants in Poland died of starvation while you were reading that question.)

It is just a little hard, isn't it, to get very much stirred up about people who are dying off by starvation in Poland. And even when I say that since beginning this paragraph another Polish mother turned her face to the ground where she fell, and dropped off to sleep forever, you are unmoved. Whether there was one or whether there were five small children who just naturally looked to that mother for their protection, and who stood about her hand in hand not knowing what it all meant, of course I cannot say. There is scarcely a doubt, though, that her last conscious thought was a wish that those children had never been born. Can anything be more pitiable than a mother brought to such woe that she wishes her children never had been born?

I am sorry, but still another little tot has made its last wailing cry for something to eat. These things are not pleasant for you to read, and neither are they to tell, but they are facts just the same. They are terrible facts; tragical facts, commonplaces. Yes, cozy little homes scattered to the winds; peaceful, happy families driven like hunted animals far afield and into the terrifying protection of the forests; bread-winners, the aged, nursing mothers, babies, young men and young women, all classes, engrossed the one moment in all those things that you and your neighbors are engrossed in at this moment; the next, every ambition, every hope, every plan, every tie ended—all this is commonplace now in Poland. Nothing left except their trust in God—and the high, glorious honor of making good that trust is offered by God to Christian America.

BUT there are now at least six souls fewer to share any bounty from America than there were when I began to write the above sentence. They are dropping down in their tracks, while you read; and their tracks, friend reader, are not in the neighborhood of a hospital or of a drugstore or of somebody's automobile. Their tracks in which they drop are not the familiar pathways to their homes, they are not the furrows in their fields, they are not the lanes by which in happier days they found their way to church. No, all such things have been trampled main famine has claimed its victims, disease has taken up its abode, misery and want have closed in the blinds.

So what avails it to those who are fleeing hither and yon, that they come to such a home? Home!

WELL, there they are. You may not believe it, because you simply cannot conceive of such a situation; but there they are just the same. Unquestionable authorities state that upwards of fifteen million human beings in Po-out by war. The lanes and the furrows and the paths to the doorsteps are obliterated in Poland. And while it is not an easy thing to believe that millions of decent human beings are fugitives in their own land, it has just got to be believed because it is so. That means that they are without homes, without shelter, dependent upon strangers for a night's shelter, and dependent upon strangers for a crust of bread.

CARRYING ALL THEY NOW OWN, THEY SEEK A REFUGE

The crushing thing about it is that the "strangers" themselves—families here and there who have managed somehow to cling to their homes—are under the same ban of fate. They have held on to their homes, but at what sacrifice! How few families in that weeping land are still intact! Fathers have been torn from their households to fight in the opposing armies which, in six months, have slaughtered the land with their cannonading, their charges, their marches and counter-marches, and their huge and voracious encampments. In such homes as reland are this moment without homes and certainty of food from day to day. Millions of them are actually without any shelter from the weather. They are resorting to primitive methods in the forests to protect themselves from the elements and from worse. They subsist through sheer desperation, yet cannot tell how they got through the last twenty-four hours. They are digging holes with their thin hands, in which to bury their dead whose graves they never again will see, and though spring may return with all its wondrous promise of new life, spring brings no new hope to them. Their fields have been plowed, it is true—but by shot and shell. Their fields have been harrowed by countless rushing feet. Their fields have been sown broadcast with leaden seed. Yes, if you must hear it, their fields have been fertilized by the countless slain left to rot. What shall the harvest be?

IF ONLY Christian Herald readers could realize the naked truth of all this! It may help you to do so, you will imagine your own town to have been in a plague-swept district. Assume that for miles around a light had destroyed the crops and even the fertility of the land so that perhaps for a year nothing could be expected from it; and imagine that in every home some one had died of a sudden plague; in some homes two or three; and in most cases the bread-winners and imagine that fire had taken toll and destroyed half of the homes and business houses. What would you who remained alive do in such a situation? Upon what would you subsist? What would stimulate your business and your industries? What cheer and comfort would there remain to you in your nearly demolished town with its mourning homes, its ruined business men, surrounded on all sides by a blighted land? And if you saw you would snatch up a few possessions, gather together those who remained of your household, and in hatred and fear of the plague would flee—then imagine that not your section of country alone, but the entire land had been blighted by that dread visitation. Everywhere you turned was ruin. What then?

Shut your eyes and see Poland in that condition, but worse, worse. Words cannot tell the story. Use your imagination, your reason, your heart. Get under Poland's burden, friends. Don't stop to count the cost, to weigh the need, to estimate the returns. While you have been reading this, a score of lives have ceased for lack of food and shelter. How many the millions who still plead will you elp?

THE fund being raised by the Christian Herald Family for the relief of widows and orphans of the war is now, in large part, at work in Belgium, France, England, Holland, Austria, Germany and Palestine. Never before has international relief work been surrounded by so many obstacles, and it has taken our committees some little time to so arrange their work as to assure the greatest amount of benefit to the neediest cases. Reports have already appeared from the above committees, excepting Germany and Palestine, and we are daily plying to have those reports in hand. We wish to get money into Poland at the earliest possible moment and so to Serbia and wherever else the war has left its blight. The need is acute everywhere, but the extent of it in Poland is so appalling that for the moment we are bending every energy to help the widows and orphans in that territory ere it is too late.

Address all gifts to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR THE RELIEF OF WIDOWS AND ORPHANS OF THE WAR

The receipts to April 14, $137,948.55, not all acknowledged in the Christian Herald as yet. Acknowledgments will continue each week.

Miscellaneous Amounts

United Charities Association, Macon, Ga., 85 cents; Miss Faye Stevenson, $4; Free Methodist Church, Chicago, Ill., $12.26; M. L. Sunday School, Valley, Wash., $4; Bertha Salsbury, $1.25; Mrs. T. R. Jewell, $2.75; Jacob Bauman, $11.00; I. W. Garner, $7.50; Miss John J. Buren, $12; — Page, N. D., $4.10; College S. S., Cumberland Gap, Tenn., $36.93; Sunday Schools, Bucyrus, N. D., $7.10; Winterport, M. E. S. S., Winter, Me., $2.75; Chautauqua Literary Soc., Independence, Iowa, $5.10; Friends Church, Hubbard, Iowa, $9.11; United Evangelical S. S., Middlesex, Pa., $16.20; Melancthon Chapel S. S., Weaver's Cove, Va., $6.82; S. S. of the First Reformed Church, Greenville, N. Y., $22; Baptist S. S., Miami, Ariz., $4; Amherst Baptist Church, Williamsville, N. Y., $11.51; Citizens, Canton, S. D., $448.86; The Churches of Nashville, Ind., $12.41; M. & M. S. S., Has A Broom, 36; First Baptist S. S. and Community, Jordan, N. Y., $28; South Flat S. S., Worland, Wyo., $1.70; S. S., Springer, Wyo., $1.55; Christian Endeavor Soc., Mitchell Hollow Chapel, Winham, N. Y., $6; Lutheran Church, Smicksburg, Pa., $8; Mrs. A. J. Fagg, $7.10; Anna L. Miss Ada, & Miss Libbie Johnston, $14; R. R. Houston, $4; S. S. Collieries, Annetto, Calif., $6; H. W. Lybrook, $5.50; M. Duncan, Fla., $3.50; Ladies' Twentieth Century Club, Ann, Calif., $2.80; Mary P. Shedd, $4; The College Hill R. P. S. S., Beaver Falls, Pa., $6; Rev. O. J. Lundell, $7.61; Citizens, Green Banks, Va., $46.61; M. E. Sunday School, South, Waterproof, La., $1.51; T. A. Suter, $2.15; M. A. Slater, $1.25; H. M. Slater, $1.25; L. P. Slater, 35 cents; Frank A. Dahl, $4; Alfred Kepeer, $4; Friends, Trade River, & Wolf Creek, Wis., $24.51; Reformed Church, New Baltimore, N. Y., $12.35; Friends Church, High Point, N. C., $35; Alex. G. Williams, $13.

Gifts of $25 Each

—, Roseville, Ill., Methodist S. S., Kagoshima, Japan; P. C. Sloan; Annie N. Bradford; Nettie King; R. F. Herbig & G. R.

Gifts of $20 Each

Mr. & Mrs. Fletcher Duglay; Friends Wellsville, Ohio; The Ladies' Aid Soc. & Friends, Unadilla Forks, N. Y.; A. Y. Parr.

Gifts of $15 Each

S. S., Flat Creek Cheney Memorial Church Lemmon, S. D.; Irving Jayne; Mrs. T. W. Chapin & Family; Presby. S. S. Peckville, Pa.

Gifts of $10 Each

R. Ivins; Mrs. A. M. Graham; Holbrook Waterman; First P. M. Sunday School, Plymouth, Pa.; Free Meth. Mission, San Francisco de Macoris, Dom. Rep., W. I.; Mrs. Julia Nelson; Geo. Bloomer; Rev. W. A. Derick; General Missionary Soc., G. B. Church, Philadelphia, Pa.; Italian Presby. S. S., Pittston, Pa.; Edward W. Miller; Opportunity Club, Cong. Church, Stafford Springs, Conn.; Charles Calvert Ellis; Mrs. Clement T. Paul; Mary Tote; Ladies' Aid Society, Centerville, Mich.; J. Ashby Sheets; F. B. Brewer; Mr. & Mrs. D. F. Her; Mr. & Mrs. C. C. Warner.

Gifts of $5 Each

Annie Borgman; Miss Sarah Benedict; An Old Man, Fountain City, Wis.; S. T. Hedrick; S. W. Hamblin; Mrs. A. R. Raley; A Reader, Prairie City, Iowa; One Who Cares, Menio, Iowa; H. L. B. Winchendon, Mass.; E. D. Judd; J. E. Dalby; Mr. & Mrs. G. H. Hummel; Mrs. O. E. Thoson; Mr. & Mrs. L. M.

Sargent; "Tri Sigma" Class, Immanuel Baptist S. S., Salt Lake City, Utah; Friends, Santa Cruz del Norte, Havana, Cuba; J. J. Rymph; Mr. & Mrs. C. W. & Earl W. Miller; Mt. Bethel S. S., of the Nittang Valley Charge, Pa.; Mrs. E. M. Williamson; Pauline M. Root; John S. Duley; Mrs. J. L. Stuart; I. G. Kimball; R. E. Jones; Mrs. Mary E. Pratt; —, Louisville, Ky.; Mary C. Yokel; David W. Karraker; H. F. Ommen; C. W. Rule; Florida W. M. U., Jacksonville, Fla.; Bethany United Evangelical S. S., Ashland, Pa.; Miss Elizabeth Ewart; Mary O. Wilson; A. Friend, Princeton, N. J.; "Friend 5," Jamaica Plain, Mass.; Per. Person; O. Swanson; Union S. S., Cedarville, Mich.; Mr. U. M. Stiles; W. J. Alford, Jr.; C. J. Comstock; Percy Anderson; F. W. Leet; Beetown S. S., Beetown, Wis.; S. E. Barton; Sophia Shellum; Mrs. Etta Spald; In Memory of Leet; S. S. Beetown, Wis.; S. E. Barton; M. L. Holway; Summerbell; Mary J. Emmons; Fred W. Smith.

Gifts of $3 Each

Wm. Thiessen & Family; Rev. G. D. Gurley; Philathea Class, Central Baptist S. S., New Decatur, Ala.; Mrs. A. G. Deputy; Mrs. K. Mangold; Bertha M. Reed; E. W. L.; Mrs. M. Louise; Mabel Spencer; "In Jesus' Name," Laotto, Ind.

Gifts of $2.50

Mrs. C. F. Hammer; Mabel D. Nelson; Mrs. H. E. Kamholz.

Gifts of $2 Each

Mrs. Gertrude Hamre; Mrs. John Martin; Mrs. Mary C. Silpher; Mrs. Wm. A. Cobb; Mrs. J. W. Conrad; James Aitchison; Sarah Merrick; Jas. Grievie; Miss Lucia Caldwell; Agnes B. Caldwell; Eliza Todrick; Mrs. M. J. White; R. M. Rawls; A. Friend; St. Mary's, Ontario, Canada; F. C. Ferguson; A. Friend, Tiskilwa, Ill.; Mrs. M. A. Farney; W. P. Ocock; H. W. Kinzer; Miss J. L. Clarke; S. L. Gardiner; Wm. J. Williams; Mrs. J. E. Jackson; T. J. Graham; Mrs. O. H. Harting & Emma Dawson; Miss Mary A. Finch; Mr. & Mrs.

James Ashby; Mrs. H. V. Barton & S. T. Hill; Daughter, Jersey City, N. J.; Virginia; Mrs. H. Putnam; A. Friend, Gallion, Ohio; J. A. & Eleanor J. Brumbaugh; J. A. Dinwiddie; Mrs. W. C. Hyer; Mrs. Amelia Haddad; Two Readers, Exeter, Neb.; Mrs. W. R. Hambrick; J. Beals; Jennie Nichols; W. B. Faze; A. Schramm; W. E. Hooper; Mrs. J. J. Smead; Alex. Cameron.

Gifts of 50 Cents Each

Elizabeth M. Tubbs; M. Ella Ohrlit; M. Laura Isbell; Mrs. C. A. Marston; Mrs. K. B. Will; Jane Dudgeon; J. M. Sullivan; J. K. Brown; Stinson; D. B. Bosley; Mrs. H. T. Boardman; P. Hastings; Mrs. Mary Moores; Mrs. J. C. Hastings; Mrs. Chas. B. Adley; Sara A. Keller; Jo Le Fever; C. H. Paul; John Wm. Ellis; Jo Mrs. J. McIntosh; J. F. Beseker; E. H. Jay; E. E. Frush; Mrs. M. S. Gay; Mrs. M. E. Mrs. J. A. Musgrove; A. Friend, Florence; Elizabeth M. Tubbs; —, Seward, Neb.; M. Distler; A. Friend, Eau Claire, Wis.; Mrs. A. Friend, Ransomville, N. Y.; M. McIntire; Fugay Springs, N. C.; Mrs. A. Sprague; C. Ball; Miss Lizzie Skinner; Mrs. Jos. Dan; V. E. Johnson; Mrs. Ann E. May; Eliza McInnes; Mrs. N. Scobie; Mrs. E. B. Butler; B. B. Baiding; Mrs. G. H. Blake; Rosetta Shaw; M. son; Martha Colwell; Mrs. C. S. Swobe; M. Mebus; Mrs. E. Furtney; Mrs. Mary C. L. May; May Alrich; Eddie Armstrong; Mrs. L. E. Mrs. E. A. Loucks; E. A. Tinkham; Mr. E. West; Mrs. Mary S. Clark; Miss Lucy Roach; Goodell; E. W. Ladd; Mrs. L. Tivey; Mrs. E. L. B. Eubank; Florence Collier; Myrtle Hull; Wm. G. Forman; Mina Elerting; Jam. Joyal; Mr. John Lamey; Mrs. B. M. Johnson.

Additional contributions to be acknowledged later.

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

ANOTHER VICTORY OF PEACE. Announcement is made of a discovery in the realm of bacteriology which, in its far-reaching influence, may rival that of the celebrated bacillus of tuberculosis. Dr. Harry Plotz, a young bacteriologist connected with Mount Sinai Hospital in New York, several months ago found the bacillus of typhus fever, but the fact was not permitted to be announced publicly at the time, in deference to the wishes of the leaders in the medical fraternity, who desired that the discovery should first be thoroughly tested. On April 15, the news was made public that the tests were complete, and 250 eminent physicians, representing New York and other states, assembled to learn the details from Dr. Plotz and his co-workers. It is stated that the physicians were amazed at the result that was spread before them at this gathering. It is claimed that Dr. Plotz has not only satisfied the opinion that he has found the true typhus bacillus, but he has also discovered an antityphus vaccine, which is said to be a protective agent against the disease. The pathologists and bacteriologists who listened to his explanations and noted the results of his work, united in warm commendation of all that has been claimed for it; but, while recommending the use of the vaccine, they could not guarantee its efficacy, as the studies concerning it are still progressing and may not be completed for many weeks. Dr. Plotz, in the course of his experiments, examined the blood of about forty patients who were suffering from B's disease, a form of typhus. He isolated a bacillus. As it happened, about this time several cases of European epidemic typhus arrived in the port of New York and were taken to one of the hospitals in the lower bay. From half a dozen of the cases Dr. Plotz succeeded in getting blood tests, with the result that they yielded the same organism that he had isolated from Brill's disease in the hospital. The germ was a bacillus sometimes straight, again slightly curved, and some with rounded and others with pointed ends. The protective vaccine will in all probability be used on the European battlefields, and some members of the medical commission now on the way to Serbia were imbibed with it before leaving. Dr. Plotz, who was warmly congratulated by many distinguished physicians, is only twenty-five years old—one of the youngest men who ever made a famous name in medical science.

PROGRESS ON ALASKAN RAILROAD. The complete route of the railroad to be built in Alaska by the government has been determined, and the 471 miles of standard-gauge track will run from Seward, on Resurrection Bay, to Fairbanks, on the Tanana River, the total cost being estimated at $26,800,000, about $100,000 less than Congress provided for. The description of the route abounds in such words as "running along shore of said lake," "along said stream," "to a summit in," "across said creek," "along the slopes of said mountain," "crossing Broad River," "entering and continuing along the drainage of such and such a stream," etc., fairly indicating the enormous difficulties that are to be met and overcome in the construction of this, the first government-owned railroad.

TCH IN AND GET YOUR SHARE. The whole country is basking in the sun of prosperity, according to the Treasury Department, which bases its announcement upon the reports of one eighty national bank examiners who have been making observations throughout the states. Pronounced hopefulness, excellent agricultural conditions, manufacturing increase, small borrowing by merchants, and other signs point, in their opinion, to an era of general prosperity, the state of Maine alone reflecting continued depression.

COUNT J. H. VON BERNSTORFF

"COLORADO MADE OVER." Under this caption the Boston Transcript thus summarizes recent state legislation: "Denver, Col., April 10.—Among the laws enacted by the Colorado General Assembly which will adjourn sine die at midnight are: Statutory provisions to enforce the state-wide prohibition constitutional amendment adopted by the voters last November. Creation of an industrial commission with powers to adjust industrial disputes and to administer workmen's compensation. Authorization of mutual insurance to supplement the compensation law. A law limiting the sale of habit-forming drugs similar to the new Federal anti-drug law. Prohibiting the issuance of a divorce decree until six months after a divorce is granted.

MATTER MATTERS IN NEW YORK STATE. The New York Assembly on April 13 killed a bill designed to exempt Christian Scientists from the law which requires practicing physicians to be examined and licensed.

THE F-4 LOCATED. Making a world's record dive of 288 feet, in an ordinary diving suit, chief gunner mate Frank Criley on April 14 walked on the top of the submarine F-4, lost March 25 off Honolulu Harbor. The huge steel casket lies on her side on a smooth bottom, headed shoreward.

MOB DEMONSTRATION BEFORE AMERICAN CLUB, MEXICO CITY

"THE 'COMMON' PEOPLE OF BOSTON WON'T HEAR SUNDAY. The Boston Common Society, which has supervision over the famous Boston Common, has announced that it will oppose to the end any attempt to erect a tabernacle on any part of the Common for the Sunday campaign in the fall of 1916. All previous attempts to invade this great public park have failed, and a law forbids the erection there of any structure covering more than sixty feet for a public purpose.

DIPLOMAT FORGETS DIPLOMACY. Readers of the daily papers were surprised on April 12 by the publication of a memorandum from the German ambassador at Washington, Count von Bernstorff to the United States Government, complaining with some asperity of the government's policy toward the belligerent nations, and venturing the assumption "that the United States Government has accepted England's violation of international law," inasmuch as after eight months of effort nothing has been accomplished toward securing freedom of neutral trade with Germany. The note openly criticized the government's attitude toward the shipment of war munitions to belligerents, as unneutral. Administration officials are reported as chagrined and irritated by the publication of the memorandum, which had been in the possession of the State Department for some time. The incident is still open as the Christian Herald goes to press.

VOLUNTARILY JOIN THE UNEMPLOYED. Chicago has another huge industrial strike upon its hands, 10,000 union carpenters quitting work April 15 to enforce an increase from 65 to 70 cents an hour, and upwards of 130,000 men in allied trades may soon become involved, tying up building contracts to the value of over $100,000,000, the erection of the great Union Railway terminal being halted.

IN THE REVOLUTIONARY BELT. President Jiménez of Santo Domingo has been at a deadlock with his congress since it convened, no legislation being the result, and the United States cruiser Des Moines has been ordered to join the Nashville off the Dominican capital to watch the new revolution which now threatens.

WHAT? WELL, THEY'D BETTER JUST TRY TO ONCE! Elizabeth, N. J., a town which only recently celebrated its two hundred and fiftieth birthday, now has all its mothers

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koehn, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

in tears—of indignation—because of an alleged attempt by some business men to have baby carriages ruled off the sidewalks in the store section. Think of it! (Elizabeth ought to offer a boom market just now to the perambulator trade.)

A JUDGE DEFEATS HIS FOES. Personal and political enemies of Judge Ben B. Lindsey of the Juvenile Court of Denver, Col., have met with complete defeat in a concerted movement to have him discredited, and the grand jury has indicted an attorney who was active in the matter, for libel, and censured others who attacked Judge Lindsey.

A UNIQUE VISITOR TO THE UNITED STATES. On April 12 Victoriano Huerta landed on American soil at New York, magnanimously forgetting the refusal of our government to recognize him as president of Mexico and our strenuous but unavailing efforts to compel him to salute the American flag in token of his repudiation of the firing by his soldiers upon an American crew in a cruiser's small boat off Tampico. The exact purpose of General Huerta's present journeyings is not disclosed, but it is commonly believed that he is inclined to return to the country from which he fled, and take a strong hand in straightening out its conditions, which he describes as a state of anarchy of the worst kind. In an interview with newspaper men, he denied that he was concerned in the death of his predecessor Madero, but refused to name the murderer on the ground that the matter was a "soldier's secret." No reassuring reports have as yet come out of Mexico, and the armies of Carranza and Villa are supposed to be ready for a decisive engagement. So far as known, conditions are improved in Mexico City, where, not so long ago, rioting and mob rule for a while prevailed, foreigners and particularly Americans being singled out for hostile demonstrations.

FLAGS AT HALF-MAST FOR LINCOLN. On April 15, the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Abraham Lincoln, the executive offices of the United States were closed and the national flag was displayed at half-mast upon all Federal buildings, at all forts and military posts and naval stations and on all vessels of the United States, by order of President Wilson, and our representatives abroad and the owners and masters of all merchant ships of the United States were requested to pay appropriate tribute to Lincoln's memory. Flags generally were placed at half-mast throughout the country.

WILL SLIP DYE-STUFFS THROUGH. Secretary Bryan has arranged with the British Government to have two shiploads of dye-stuffs from Germany pass through the blockade, if the vessels sail from Rotterdam under a neutral flag, the cargo to be consigned to the United States Department of Commerce for distribution in the textile trade.

COAST TO COAST BY AIR LINE. A transcontinental prize has been offered by the Aero Club of America, to be competed for by aviators over three routes from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the plan including short distance cross-country contest flights to demonstrate the practicability of an interstate mail service by air-line connecting with a coast-to-coast air route. Entries are already being received and the contest is scheduled to take place between July 4 and August 12.

BASEBALL TIME OFFICIALLY ANNOUNCED. President Wilson pitched the first ball of the season from the grandstand at the Washington grounds on April 14, and thus started the great series between major leagues and all the other series dwindling down to the backyard scraps, the cleanest, truest and manliest game in the world, according to Billy Sunday and some fifty million other men and boys. But Sunday denounces professional baseball played on the Sabbath, and the New York Assembly has by a vote of 58 to 59 defeated a bill permitting professional baseball in that state on Sunday.

VICTORIANO HUERTA

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

Perplexed, Avilene, Kan. What is your idea of keeping the Sabbath Day holy? Is Sunday visiting wrong, even if one goes to church?

Paul, who apparently had to answer many questions concerning Sabbath observance at a time when legalists were urging the most rigid conformity with the strict Jewish laws on the subject, wrote: "Let no man judge you in meat or in drink or in respect of . . . the Sabbath days." (Col. 2: 16.) When the question of the obligation of the Gentile converts in the new church to observe the forms of the old religion was discussed by the apostles in council for the first time, the whole subject of legalism was simplified in two verses (see Acts 15: 28, 29). Jesus himself rebuked the old slavish restrictions which were so prominent a part of the teachings of the Scribes and Pharisees, and showed them that the Sabbath was made for man, meaning that it was designed for our common humanity and for the doing of those acts which would conduce in largest measure to the general good. An act which is not in itself sinful but rather commendable, such as a deed of kindness, of charity, of urgent help and even of absolutely indispensable labor (which if left unattended too might entail loss or suffering), might thus not only be regarded as justifiable on the Sabbath but even as a duty. In general, the observance of the day may be summed up in rest and worship. No labor that can be done on other days should be performed on the Sabbath, but it is not to be a day devoted to social pleasure or amusement. It is the Lord's day, and we ought to spend it in a manner becoming its character. The question of visiting must therefore be one for the individual conscience. There may be visits that come within the range of Sunday proprieties. Even the rigid Jews were permitted a "Sabbath day's journey," presumably for recreation and exercise, and we cannot believe that they shut off all social intercourse. There is a wide difference, however, between such happenings and the carrying out of a deliberate purpose of spending a portion of the day on social calls, which we take to be the meaning of the letter.

C. H. D., Chicago, Ill. In a recent article on preaching, the Continent seems to be discussing good taste in the language of the best society in that particular section in which he happens to reside. If this is the subject the editor considers, that article is fine and to the point. If, on the other hand, he is discussing the ostensible purpose of all preaching—the kind of ministry which results in the eternal salvation of the souls of men—then there is neither point nor logic to the article in the Continent. If Christ was right and if the professed belief of all the evangelical churches of our country is right, viz., that man possesses a spiritual part which neither time nor death can efface, then and in that event, the one fact which must forever overtop all other facts is this: that man's soul, or the spiritual part of a man—call it what you will—must be awakened to the consciousness that to "fear God and keep his commandments is the whole duty of man." If any man or woman wants to see the results of preaching nice-sounding words and phrases and pleasant-to-listen-to platitudes, all he or she has to do is to visit any of the churches in the indicated section of Chicago, or any other city in the United States, and note how fast the men are not coming to realize their need of "the soul's awakening." There is one thing that, in a Christian sense, is like the light of the sun compared with the light of the millions of stars which the sun's light hides absolutely, and that one thing is this: the soul's eternal salvation. If this is not true, then the professed belief of all of our so-called Evangelical churches is a farce, and the teachings of Jesus Christ are simply so much idle talk. If this is true—if the consequences are fraught with such awful destinies—then the kind of preaching which is most productive of bringing the most people to this consciousness is the best kind of preaching, view it from whatever standpoint you will.

When a preacher of the Gospel delivers his message with strength and courage, dealing with the evils of his time, he doubtless does his duty as a servant of Christ, as he understands that duty. The battle against sin is not one to be fought with kid gloves, nor to be settled with polite speeches or elegant phraseology.

Paul and Silas, when they preached in Thessalonica and were accused of "turning the world upside down," met with the same kind of criticism that is visited upon some modern preachers and evangelists. That preacher or evangelist who never strikes fire, or arouses opposition, is an indifferent servant. We need today zeal and earnestness in the pulpit, even more than literary or oratorical ability. Simplicity and directness, strength and gentleness, fervent persuasion and humble appeal—each has its proper place. Luther's words have been described as "half-battles" in their intensity and forcefulness; Weaver used the dialect of the coal-pit; Jerry McAuley, that of the prison and slums, and Sunday that of the ball-field and the thoughtless multitude. There are times when the modern minister or evangelist feels that he is dealing with an antagonist, to cope with whom he can use at times only the homely sling of David and a vulgar pebble of the brook. God in his wisdom uses many diverse instrumentalities in reaching the hearts of men, and multitudes are moved and won by methods that would not influence and might even repel others. The real test lies in the result of the work. If it finds acceptance and souls are won, who then should be against it?

interest in the person or persons to whom the message is to be given and our real desire that God's will shall be done will impel us to go ahead and state what seems to us to be God's plan and purpose. In your particular case the matter ought to be very easy. You are anxious that this friend make the most of his life. Tell him frankly what you think God wants him to do. Continue urging him to accept Christ's salvation, and when he, too, has become a personal friend of the Saviour, he will soon know whether or not you have been mistaken in thinking he ought to become a minister.

H., Iowa. In most of the modern religious denominations elders are elected, presiding elders or district superintendents, however, being appointed in the Methodist body. Your church should consult the manual of the denomination to which it belongs, and follow the rules laid down. There seems to have been no trace of ruling or presiding elders in the early church. The functions of elders are varied in different denominations. In the New Testament church, elders were also pastors (Eph. 4: 11), overseers (Acts 20: 28), leaders and rulers (Heb. 13: 7; I Thess. 5: 12), and today they are still regarded as the spiritual teachers of

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

Once each month we attach, just under this notice, a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose CHRISTIAN HERALD subscriptions expired at any time during the past month. If your copy of this subscription blank attached, please use it to renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR RENEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THREE WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION TO THE BLANK.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our premium books, My Gleanings of Hearts, $2; The Fundamentals of the Faith, $2.20; Wonder Stories, $2; The Strange Adventures of Captain Quinton, $2; India Past and Present, $3, with your subscription or a straight year's subscription at $1.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR $3. It is understood that the old subscriber must get the full subscription price of $1.50 for the new subscriber and must not in any way share the special price with the new subscriber.

Send money by postal or express money orders. Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Bible House, New York.

A GLADDER DAY IS COMING

BY LELIA M. ROWAN

THERE'S a gladder day a-comin', and the "writin' on the wall"

Says the universe is filling up with love enough for all;
That our God has not forsaken us, his children here below,
But he still is in his heaven, and his promise in the bow.

That a Brotherhood is working in the lowlands and the high Gettin' ready for the Jubilee that's comin' by and by,
And already there's a glinting through the darkness of the night,
Through the toiling and the fearing, gleams of glory-tinted light.

Don't you know the time is coming when each tremor of the soul
Shall be tuned to music only, when the notes upon the scroll
Will be tender tones o' lovin' and of melody so sweet,
That they'll almost seem like echoes from some angel-bright retreat?

Don't you know the time's a-comin' when God's smile shall touch old earth

Into wonderful new beauty, into blossom-tinted birth?
Then we'll sing on sunny hilltops up against the azure skies
While his hand of love is brushing all the teardrops from our eyes.

Yes, a gladder day is comin', and we may as well begin
To push away the shadows and let the sunshine in;
For the signs are all a-tellin' that the day is drawin' nigh,
When the kingdom of the Master shall be ruling earth and sky!

Petoskey, Mich.

Anxious Inquirer, Kentucky. Do you believe that God's Spirit ever speaks or gives impressions to Christians today as he did to Ananias, when he asked him to go and announce to Paul that he was called to preach the Gospel? (Acts 9: 15-17; Acts 22: 12-15.) Have you known or read of any preacher being led or helped to decide the question of the call to preach by some one's telling him this, even before he became a Christian? This impression has come to me several times in the last two years, to go to one who is not yet a Christian with this message. I know that God's Spirit has been striving with this person. I have talked with him about becoming a Christian, but was afraid to mention the other matter for fear I would be presumptuous.

There have been many cases in which the Christian friends of one still unconvinced have felt convinced that he ought to preach. It is often the refusal to become a preacher that prevents such a person from finding the light. So far as impressions go to do or say certain things to certain people, a Christian should never be in bondage or distress about a matter like this. God does not compel us, by painful, bewildering, oppressive urging, to go and do some such duty while our whole nature is shrinking from it. He treats us as friends. If he has a message to deliver through us he makes us want to deliver it. This does not always mean that the way will be perfectly easy or that we may not have to fight to overcome a certain timidity, but our the congregation, the right hand of the pastor in all spiritual work, and in most denominations, next to him, the leading functionaries at the sacrament and other offices. When the spiritual work of the church is in peril from any cause which they can remedy, it is their duty to take such steps as may be necessary for that purpose. An "honorary" elder, and indeed any honorary member of a fixed board, is not entitled to vote. A fixed board whose members are elected should organize by electing rather than appointing its officers.

W. J. C., Hackettstown, N. J. There are thousands of prodigal sons adrift on the sea of life today, without rudder or destination. Many of them are saved by the kindness of God's people, who come to their rescue and help to bring them back to their right mind. There are two kinds of socialism, the sane and serviceable, which believes in accomplishing its ends through peaceful means, and the kind which is revolutionary. We cannot believe that the former could interfere in any way with the Christian progress of the age in which we live.

W. E. F., Nassau, Bahamas. In the religious census, as we understand it, none are classed as "adherents" of a denomination unless they sustain some definite relation, either being carried on the membership roll or on the list of the congregation. Occasional attendants, or that class who float around from one church to another, cannot be claimed as giving allegiance to anybody and, of course, are not included in the figures.

Constant Reader, Cherokee, Iowa. The prophecies have not yet been fulfilled, notably those that refer to the restoration of the Jews and other far-reaching predictions of the Old Testament prophets. The Messianic prophecies, especially those relating to the coming of the kingdom, are now, commentators hold, in process of fulfillment. The Gospel has not yet been preached to all the nations of the world. There are parts of Central Asia, some parts of China and almost all of Tibet, together with regions of Central Africa, the Sahara tribes and parts of South America, still unevangelized. Is the imperative duty of the church of Christ to hasten this work, which Jesus himself laid down as one of the principal tasks of his followers.

Miscellaneous

Arthur R. Parker, 192 Laurel Hill Avenue, Norwich, Conn., would like to have some reader send him the name of the author of the following lines:

"One of the sweet old chapters,
Quietly sitting alone,
Drinking the life-giving water,
Making each movement my own"

J. A. S., Kent, Wash. 1. Our little children at Mont-Lawn at the end of their earthly journey are invariably sorry to leave the Children's home. Those who have been there tell other children about it in glowing terms of praise. We have never heard of the incident of the Confederate flag mentioned in your letter, and doubt it very much. 3. We are forwarding your question about righteousness to Dr. Gray.

J. A. H., Illinois. 1. According to the scripture record, Cain was the first-born of Abel the second son of our first parents. Traditions have been preserved among the Jews, however, that both had twin sisters. It is made clear in Gen. 5: 1-4 that Adam had many children, although these two are expressly indicated as the first and second. 2. Your second question does not admit of an answer. What might have happened, had conditions been otherwise than they were, or had the whole race accepted the divine revelation of the Son and turned from their sins to righteousness? The transmutation would have been so stupendous that the human mind cannot conjecture as to the outcome.

Mrs. J. A. P., Washington Court House, Ohio. There has been much discussion concerning the passage in I Cor. 3: 15. Dean Alford gives the sense as "if any teacher's work consists of such materials as the fire will destroy," loss will be suffered, and he adds that the meaning is that though the structure reared by a builder (not the foundation) is consumed by the fire, he escapes, but with the loss of his work, as Bengel puts it, as a shipwrecked merchant, though he loses his merchandise, is saved though having to pass through the way. It is really a crucial test of the value of the man's work; all those parts that will not stand the ordeal of burning investigation will perish, although the man himself may be saved. These perishable portions may be interpreted as doctrines that are valueless in themselves, and which have been superadded to the essential. They are frail handiwork and cannot stand the fierce heat of the furnace of trial. Thus it follows that there are some who, stripped of the last of all their assumption of personal merit, will stand naked before God and yet receive the precious gift of his clemency.

CHURCH AND WORKINGMAN

BY O. H. PANNKOKE

IN LOOKING for the first time over the symposium on Church and Labor recently conducted in the Christian Herald, one is bewildered by the great number of ideas and suggestions offered. Many of the ideas are familiar and have become the current property of the students of the subject. Their restatement by leading men gives added weight to them. Others are new; at times, in fact, startling. However, all the answers gathered together are pervaded by a vital freshness and grasp of the problem which clearly shows the interest it has aroused. A number more responses were received which could not be published for want of space. Among them were letters from Mr. J. H. C. Fritz and Martin Sommer, and Professor Th. Graebner and J. G. Payne, all from St. Louis; Mr. J. G. Lewis of Cleveland, Professor V. Rauschenbusch of Schenectady and Rev. William Schoenfeld of New York City. The Christian Herald sends its thanks to the writers.

Certain broad ideas stand out around which it is possible to group the contents of the symposium in order to obtain a definite program. The two representatives of organized labor, Mr. Lennon and Mr. Garretson, are convinced that the church is at fault. While the former lays stress on the lack of interest shown by the church in industrial evils, the latter goes a step further and upbraids the church for her class interest. No doubt many will think such expressions overdrawn, even offensive. But these men are offering their honest conviction, as well as the conviction of a great body of the best American workmen who chose them as their representatives.

The note of criticism is heard from most of the other contributors. It may not be expressed so severely; at times it is veiled and indirect. It is there, nevertheless. The church has been interested in every man's problem but the laboring man's. She has become the spokesman of the middle classes. The clergy have been inclined to find their friends as well as their inspiration among the educated, and have thus failed to understand the viewpoint of the common man. The rapid rise of industrial society, with its new, untried forces, its new alignment of society, its new relations of man with fellow man, has found the church strangely hesitant to act, as though she were before unknown territory upon which she felt reluctant to enter.

THERE is one noteworthy exception. Dr. Wenner, speaking of the Lutheran Church, maintains that the labor problem does not exist for her; ninety per cent. of her membership is made up of workingmen. It is, of course, impossible to substantiate these figures. If one excludes farmers and counts them with the middle class where they really belong, they are much too high. But this much is true, that the Lutheran Church in the cities, large and small, is mostly made up of workingmen. The organization is democratic, and the attendance and co-operation of the men at divine worship and church work has been the surprise of every outsider who has had opportunity to observe it.

True, the church may be at fault. She is made up of men whose vision is only too frequently dimmed and whose courage falters. Christ and Christianity are not at fault. The Christian religion is not yet ready to be cast off like a garment, worn out and outgrown. Jesus is timely today, even as he was timely in the agricultural society of Palestine or the cosmopolitan Roman Empire, or the feudal society of the Middle Ages. Labor leaders, reformers, churchmen, beckon to Christ, a fuller, better understanding of Christ, a deeper faith in his divine guidance, a more honest application of his teachings to the questions of the day as they fall under the measure of the Gospel.

TWO fundamental suggestions are made, along which the church shall act: In the first place she shall take a clear stand on the moral issues involved. To wear out human beings before their day under the pressure of modern industry; to tie young children to machines, stunt their body, deaden their mind, rob them of the glorious buoyancy of youth; to cut and mutilate human beings and make them a burden to themselves and their fellows, is largely considered an integral part of modern industry. At best, it is deplored only as economic waste.

The church cannot consider it anything but a crying moral wrong, for which some one is responsible. If that someone is within the church, then it ought to be her duty to convince the man of his sin. It may demand courage to do this, but when once understood the duty is clear. That the church has not spoken out as clearly as she might have done may, perhaps, be due to "an idealized individualism." In saving individual souls, she warned against sins that were obvious in the simple relations of men with fellow men, but she failed to see that modern society has brought infinitely complex and indirect responsibility and multiplied opportunities for sin.

The second great duty of the church in the present situation might be called preventive charity. As it is, the church is dealing with the human waste of modern industry in her hospitals, her sanitariums, her homes, her poor funds. She does that because Jesus gave her commission to love even as he loved. But a great if not the greatest portion of this suffering is preventable. Experience has shown that. Surely greater love it is to save men before they are in need.

BUT with all her possibility to help men, the church can never forget that an "ungospelized humanitarianism" is but an empty shell. Her opportunity lies not so much in a program as in an inspiration. She is not called upon to gather statistics and systematize them into formal, comprehensive platforms on every indifferent question of daily life. She is called upon to engender a living fire of righteousness and love through faith in Christ Jesus. Accurate knowledge is demanded by her only in so far as is necessary to lead these powers for social reform aright.

As its own members are more and more imbued with the Christ-spirit, they will see where they have done wrong and make amends. As she goes on fulfilling her missionary obligation to lead men to Christ, the newcomers will be pledged in the army of Christ to fight against the sin of the world and to bring Christ's love to their fellows. In this continued growth of faith and love lies the hope for a solution of the labor problem.

Much has been written in recent years on the relation of church and labor. The books would fill a small library. Many utterances bear the stamp of despair. The men felt the overwhelming need for action, but had little confidence that the church would awaken to her duty. Time and again it has occurred in the last years that ministers gave up their profession, even becoming embittered advocates of social revolution, because they were impatient with what they termed the lifelessness of the church.

The present symposium sounds a different note. It is severe and plain-spoken. But through it all rings the clear note of courage and of hope. Though the task may be grave and the difficulties many, the selfsame high faith and patient devotion which triumphed in former days will win out today and make the religion of Christ again the big power in men's lives.

Stories of Old Elgins

G. M. WHEELER

Bought When Grant Was Inaugurated

"I HAVE carried one of your Wheeler Movements in a 10-Carat Old Style Key Winding Case since 1869. I do not think the watch has been off my person for a day during that time except when in shop for cleaning, no other repairs having been found necessary. The watch has always proved a correct time-keeper."

(ORIGINAL LETTER ON FILE AT ELGIN HEADQUARTERS.)

The watch was made in 1868, so that its record of 47 years, without other repair than cleaning, is remarkable, although every Elgin Watch is capable, with proper care, of a like performance.

The three cardinal Elgin virtues are sturdiness, accuracy and beauty. In the selection of gifts for approaching commencements, weddings or birthdays, no mistake will be made in the serious consideration of an Elgin watch.

Ask your Elgineer

Write for the booklet about the Elgin Observatory, where Elgin time is taken from the stars. Send stamped and addressed envelope for a set of Elgin Poster Stamps.

ELGIN

Watches

KEEP TIME

LORD ELGIN
(Extra thin model)
$100 to $175

B. W. RAYMOND
(R. R. Watch)
$15 to $25

G. M. WHEELER
$25 to $50

LADY ELGIN
A wide range of prices

ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO.
Elgin, Illinois

PHIMISTER

BY ISABEL GORDON CURTIS

"AM sending you a new man, MacGregor. He's a fresh arrival from Scotland, one of your own people. You ought to understand him. I can't. He is a big, strong fellow, and said to be a good workman, only his tongue is Dutch to me." About ten minutes later Phimister "stumped" into the superintendent's office. "Staumped" may not be in the dictionary, still the word rings with the thud of tacketed shoon. In the doorway stood a young giant with a winning smile on his ruddy face. His head was thatched with yellow hair, a cutting beard covered his chin and he had the honest, blue eyes of a child. His rough, gray tweeds bore the mark of Scottish village tailor. In his hand he carried a hairy, Arctic-like cap, such as men wear in the Highlands.

Weel, I'm thinkin' this is Phimister," MacGregor looked up at him with a smile. The man in the doorway stepped forward holding out a hand which was as big as a ham.

"Eh, man; ye're Scotch yersel'!" he cried.

He would not sit down, but all the awkwardness had gone out of him. There was only one complaint in the shop: nobody could understand his brogue. When the countrymen met, however, and there was time for a "crack," his face glowed. He was home again, sailing wind-swept lochs, climbing heathery hills, or plowing a straight furrow with a steady eye and a stalwart hand.

One Saturday afternoon when the whistle blew, Phimister "staumped" into the office again.

"I'll wait, Mr. MacGregor, till you are through," he said. "I'm in nae great hurry."

The superintendent shut down his desk.

"What can I do for you?" he asked.

"Ye're aye sae weel dressed, Mr. MacGregor," began Phimister hesitatingly. "I mean yer cleas fit ye sae weel, I thocht maybe ye'd be gude eneuch tae tell me wha ye're tailor is?"

The man could not smile with the guileless eyes of Phimister upon him. "I gang tae a gey high-priced tailor," he explained.

"We'll no talk o' prices. I want new claes. I'm weel eneuch clad the noo, an' there's a hantle wear left in my auld shoon." Phimister glanced regretfully at his feet. "Only New York's nae like hame. I canna gang roon this gait muckle langer—on Sundays, anyway."

"Is it a lass?" asked the superintendent.

"It's no ae lass. It's two o' them! They sing in the Kirk o' the Messiah."

"What hae you got to do wi' kirk singers?"

"I'm the tenor there."

"You, Phimister! why, I didna ken ye could sing!"

"Neither did I," the young giant laughed merrily. "It knocked the

Continued on page 452

10% More for Your Money

The 25-cent package of Quaker Oats is nearly three times larger than the 10-cent size. By saving in packing it offers more for your money.

Sun Power

Makes a Vim-Food of Delicious Quaker Oats

Sun and soil store up vast latent energy in oats—just as they did in coal.

Set free, it creates vitality. It gives spirit and go. So much so that to "feel one's oats" signifies vivacity. This power has for ages given oats a unique place among foods.

Nature, to win folks to this vim-food, makes it a luscious grain. On no other cereal does she lavish such flavor and aroma.

In Quaker Oats we are simply helping Nature. We pick out the biggest, plumpest grains. We enhance their deliciousness by heat. And we bring them to you—just the cream of the oats—in the form of rich, inviting flakes. Thus we multiply this great food's fascinations.

That's why Quaker Oats is important. It makes oat food attractive. And that's what mothers want.

Quaker Oats

The Energizing Dainty

You will never find, in all probability, an equal oat-food dainty. Oat lovers today, from nearly all the world over, send here for Quaker Oats. You can get them at your nearest store without any extra price. Don't you think it wise to do it?

10c and 25c per package
Except in Far West and South

Quaker Cooker

Each package of Quaker Oats contains an offer on a perfect double cooker, made of pure aluminum. It is made to cook Quaker in the ideal way.

(52)

THE RETURN OF POLLYANNA

BY ELEANOR H. PORTER

Copyright, 1914, by ELEANOR H. PORTER. All rights reserved, including the right to translate into all foreign languages

CHAPTER XXX

AFTER LONG YEARS

POLLYANNA was so happy after she had sent her letter to Jimmy that she could not keep it to herself. Always before going to bed she stopped into her aunt's room to see if anything was needed. Tonight, after the usual questions, she had turned to put out the light, when a sudden impulse sent her back to her aunt's bedside. A little breathlessly she dropped on her knees.

"Aunt Polly, I'm so happy I just had to tell some one. I want to tell you. May I?"

"Tell me? Tell me what, child? Of course you may tell me. You mean, it's good news—for me?"

"Why, yes, dear; I hope so," blushed Pollyanna. "I hope it will make you—glad, a little, for me, you know. Of course Jimmy will tell you himself all properly some day. But I wanted to tell you first."

"Jimmy!" Mrs. Chilton's face changed perceptibly.

"Yes, when—when he—he asks you for me," stammered Pollyanna, with a radiant flood of color. "Oh, I'm—I'm so happy I had to tell you!"

"Asks me for you! Pollyanna!" Mrs. Chilton pulled herself up in bed. "You don't mean to say there's anything serious between you and Jimmy Bean!"

Pollyanna fell back in dismay.

"Why, auntie, I thought you liked Jimmy!"

"So I do—in his place. But that place isn't the husband of my niece."

"Aunt Polly!"

"Come, come, child, don't look so shocked. This is all sheer nonsense, and I'm glad I've been able to stop it before it's gone any further."

"But, Aunt Polly, it has gone further," quavered Pollyanna. "Why, I—I already have learned to lo—c—care for him dearly."

"Then you'll have to unlearn it, Pollyanna, for never, never will I give my consent to your marrying Jimmy Bean."

"But—w—why, auntie?"

"First and foremost because we know nothing whatever about him."

"Why, Aunt Polly, we've always known him ever since I was a little girl!"

"Yes, and what was he? A young little runaway urchin from an Orphans' Home! We know nothing whatever about his people, and his pedigree."

"But I'm not marrying his p-people and his p-pedigree!"

With an impatient groan Aunt Polly fell back on her pillow.

"Pollyanna, you're making me positively ill. My heart is going like a trip-hammer. I shan't sleep a wink to-night. Can't you let this thing rest until morning?"

Pollyanna was on her feet instantly, her face all contrition.

"Why, yes—yes, indeed; of course, Aunt Polly! And tomorrow you'll feel different, I'm sure. I'm sure you will," reiterated the girl, her voice quivering with hope again, as she turned to extinguish the light.

But Aunt Polly did not "feel different" in the morning. If anything, her opposition to the marriage was even more determined. In vain Pollyanna pleaded and argued. In vain she showed how deeply her happiness was concerned. Aunt Polly was obdurate. She would have none of the idea. She sternly admonished Pollyanna as to the possible evils of heredity, and warned her of the dangers of marrying into she knew not what sort of family. She even appealed at last to her sense of duty and gratitude toward herself, and reminded Pollyanna of the long years of loving care that had been hers in the home of her aunt, and she begged her piteously not to break her heart by this marriage as had her mother before her by her marriage.

When Jimmy himself, radiant-faced and glowing-eyed, came at ten o'clock, he was met by a frightened, sob-shaken little Pollyanna who tried ineffectually to hold him back with two trembling hands. With whitening cheeks, but with defiantly tender arms that held her close, he demanded an explanation.

"Pollyanna, dearest, what in the world is the meaning of this?"

"Oh, Jimmy, Jimmy, why did you come, why did you come? I was going to write and tell you straight away," moaned Pollyanna.

"But you did write me, dear. I got it yesterday afternoon just in time to catch my train."

"No, no; again, I mean. I didn't know then that I—I couldn't."

"Couldn't! Pollyanna"—his eyes flamed into stern wrath—"you don't mean to tell me there's anybody else's love you've got to keep me waiting for?" he demanded, holding her at arm's length.

"No, no, Jimmy! Don't look at me like that. I can't bear it!"

"Then, what is it? What is it you can't do?"

"I can't—marry you."

"Pollyanna, do you love me?"

"Yes. Oh, y—yes."

"Then you shall marry me," triumphed Jimmy, his arms enfolding her again.

"No, no, Jimmy, you don't understand. It's Aunt Polly," struggled Pollyanna.

"Aunt Polly?"

"Yes. She—won't let me."

"Ho!" Jimmy tossed his head with a light laugh. "We'll fix Aunt Polly. She thinks she's going to lose you, but we'll just remind her that she's going to gain a—a new nephew!" he finished in mock importance.

But Pollyanna did not smile. She turned her head hopelessly from side to side.

"No, no, Jimmy, you don't understand! She—she—oh, how can I tell you?—she objects to—to you—for—me."

Jimmy's arms relaxed a little. His eyes sobered.

"Oh, well, I suppose I can't blame her for that. I'm no—wonder, of course," he admitted constrainedly. "Still"—he turned loving eyes upon her—"I'd try to make you—happy, dear."

"Indeed you would! I know you would," protested Pollyanna, tearfully.

"Then why not—give me a chance to try, Pollyanna, even if she—doesn't quite approve at first? Maybe in time, after we were married, we could win her over."

"Oh, but I couldn't—I couldn't do that," moaned Pollyanna, "after what she's said. I couldn't—without her consent. You see, she's done so much for me, and she's so dependent on me. She isn't well a bit, now, Jimmy. And really, lately, she's been so—so loving, and she's been trying so hard to—to play the game, you know, in spite of all her troubles. And she—she cried, Jimmy, and begged me not to break her heart as—as mother did long ago. And—and, Jimmy, I—I just couldn't, after all she's done for me."

There was a moment's pause, then, with a vivid red mounting to her forehead, Pollyanna spoke again, brokenly.

"Jimmy, if you—if you could only tell Aunt Polly something about—about your father, and your people, and—"

Jimmy's arms dropped suddenly. He stepped back a little. The color drained from his face.

"Is—that—it?" he asked.

"Yes." Pollyanna came nearer and touched his arm timidly. "Don't think—it isn't for me, Jimmy. I don't care. Besides, I know that your father and your people were all—all fine and Cut your wash in half

—not with a knife, but by using Fels-Naptha Soap.

Of course, you sort your clothes first—white and colored fine and heavy.

Then—and this is important—put them to soak for 30 minutes with Fels-Naptha Soap.

While they soak, take a few minutes to look over the pair, or straighten up the house.

When you come to wash, the Fels-Naptha has already done the hardest part—loosened the dirt. All your clothes need is a light rub or two, (no boiling nor scalding) rinsing, blueing, wringing, and they are hanging on the line by noon—clothes basket is empty—afternoon tea.

Every woman who uses Fels-Naptha Soap can get her wash done without loss of strength in half the time, and without waste of fuel to keep up a house fire. Fels-Naptha is just as time saving and labor saving for all soap and water work about the house.

Fels & Co., Philadelphia

nce, because you are so fine and nce. But she—Jimmy, don't look lil that!"

at Jimmy, with a low moan, had tued quite away from her. A mate later, with only a few choking ws, which she could not understand, heft the house.

om the Harrington homestead
Jiny went straight home and sought ou John Pendleton. He found him in the great crimson-hung library where, so years before, Pollyanna had loed fearfully for the "skeleton in Joi Pendleton's closet."

Uncle John, do you remember that pet that father gave me?" demended Jimmy.

Why, yes. What's the matter, son?"
Joi Pendleton had given a start of surprise at sight of Jimmy's face.
That packet has got to be opened,
sh.

But—the conditions!"

can't help it. It's got to be.
It's all. Will you do it?"

Why, y-yes, my boy, of course, if yo insist; but—" he paused helplessly.

Uncle John, as perhaps you have gused, I love Pollyanna. I asked her to my wife, and she consented." The ek man made a delighted exclama-tic but the other did not pause, or chge his sternly intent expression.
"Says now she can't—marry me.
M. Chilton objects. She objects to mu.

jects to you!" John Pendleton's ey flashed angrily.

Yes. I found out why, when—wholly Pollyanna begged if I couldn't tel her aunt something—about my faer and my people."

hucks! I thought Polly Chilton ha more sense—still, it's just like he after all. The Harringtons have ahys been inordinately proud of race an family," snapped John Pendleton.
"Vil, could you?"

ould I? It was on the end of my tongue to tell Pollyanna that there coln't have been a better father than mi was; then suddenly I remember—the packet, and what it said.
As I was afraid. I didn't dare say a ord till I knew what was inside the packet. There's something dad dic't want me to know till I was thy years old—when I would be a me grown, and could stand anything.
Se. There's a secret somewhere in ouives. I've got to know that secret, an I've got to know it now."

ut, Jimmy, lad, don't look so tragic. It may be a good secret. Per-ha it'll be something you'll like to kn."

erhaps. But if it had been, would he ave been apt to keep it from me till was thirty years old? No! Uncle Jo—it was something he was trying to ve me from till I was old enough to and it not flinch. Understand, I'm not blaming dad. Whatever it was,
it is something he couldn't help, I'll waant. But what it was I've got to kn. Will you get it, please? It's in yo safe, you know."

hn Pendleton rose at once.
"I'll get it," he said. Three minutes lat it lay in Jimmy's hand; but Jiny held it out at once.

would rather you read it, sir, plee. Then tell me."

ut, Jimmy, I—very well." With a decisive gesture John Pendleton pied up a paper-cutter, opened the envelope, and pulled out the contents.
The was a package of several papers tie together, and one folded sheet alc, apparently a letter. This John Pendleton opened and read first. And as a read, Jimmy, tense and breathless watched his face. He saw, therefor the look of amazement, joy and something else he could not name, that lead into John Pendleton's countenae.

Uncle John, what is it? What is it? he demanded.

Lead it—for yourself," answered the man, thrusting the letter into Jiny's outstretched hands. And Jiny read this:

daughter of William Wetherby of Boston. There is also a letter in which I explain to my boy why I have kept him from his mother's family all these years. If this packet is opened by him at thirty years of age, he will read this letter, and I hope will forgive a father who feared to lose his boy entirely, so took this drastic course to keep him to himself. If it is opened by strangers, because of his death, I request that his mother's people in Boston be notified at once, and the enclosed package of papers be given, intact, into their hands.

JOHN KENT.

Jimmy was pale and shaken when he looked up to meet John Pendleton's eyes.

"Am I—the lost—Jamie?" he faltered.

"That letter says you have documents there to prove it," nodded the other.

"Mrs. Carew's nephew?"

"Of course."

"But, why—what—I can't realize it!" There was a moment's pause before into Jimmy's face flashed a new joy. Then, surely, now I know who I am, I can tell—Mrs. Chilton something of my people."

"I should say you could," retorted
John Pendleton, dryly. "The Boston Wetherbys can trace straight back to the Crusaders, and I don't know but to the year one. That ought to satisfy her. As for your father—he came of good stock, too, Mrs. Carew told me, though he was rather eccentric, and not pleasing to the family, as you know, of course."

"Yes. Poor dad! And what a life he must have lived with me all those years—always dreading pursuit! I can understand—lots of things now that used to puzzle me. A woman called me 'Jamie' once. Whew! how angry he was! I know now why he hurried me away that night without even waiting for supper. Poor dad!
It was right after that he was taken sick. He couldn't use his hands or his feet, and very soon he couldn't talk straight. Something ailed his speech.
I remember when he died he was trying to tell me something about this packet. I believe now he was telling me to open it, and go to my mother's people; but I thought then he was just telling me to keep it safe. So that's what I promised him. But it didn't comfort him any. It only seemed to worry him more. You see, I didn't understand. Poor dad!"

"Suppose we take a look at these papers," suggested John Pendleton.
"Besides, there's a letter from your father to you, I understand. Don't you want to read it?"

"Yes, of course. And then—" the young fellow laughed shamefacedly and glanced at the clock. "I was wondering just how soon I could go back—to Pollyanna."

A thoughtful frown came to John Pendleton's face. He glanced at Jimmy, hesitated, then spoke.

"I know you want to see Pollyanna, lad, and I don't blame you; but it strikes me that, under the circumstances, you should go first to—Mrs.
Carew, and take these." He tapped the papers before him.

Jimmy drew his brows together and pondered.

"All right, sir, I will," he agreed resignedly.

"And if you don't mind, I'd like to go with you," further suggested John Pendleton, a little diffidently. "I—I have a little matter of my own that I'd like to see—your aunt about. Suppose we go down today on the three o'clock?"

"Good! We will, sir. Whew! And so I'm Jamie. I can't grasp it yet!"
exclaimed the young man, springing to his feet, and restlessly moving about the room. "I wonder, now," he stopped, and colored boyishly, "do you think—Aunt Ruth—will mind—very much?"

John Pendleton shook his head. A hint of the old somberness came into his eyes.

"Hardly, my boy. But—I'm thinking of myself. How about it? When you're her boy, where am I coming in?"

"You! Do you think anything could put you to one side?" scoffed Jimmy,

Continued on page 455

Keep Things Bright

WITH

JOHNSON'S PREPARED WAX

Every family has dozens of uses for Johnson's Prepared Wax. It is just as necessary around the house as soap—use it for cleaning and polishing

The furniture, woodwork and floors
—In Your Home

The body, hood and fenders of automobiles
—In Your Garage

The desks, filing-cases, cabinets, etc.
—In Your Office

It is clean and easy to use and economical. Gives perfect results over any finish —varnish, shellac, oil, etc.

It gives a hard,
dry surface as smooth as glass
—it protects the varnish and adds years to its life.

It imparts a velvety, protecting finish of great beauty and durability. You will find it splendid as a polish for

Floors
Linoleum
Woodwork

Pianos
Furniture
Automobiles

Our new Instruction Book "The Proper Treatment for Floors, Woodwork and Furniture" is just off the press. This is 100% more beautiful and comprehensive than former editions. You will find it full of valuable ideas on home beautifying.

USE COUPON

for a free copy of this book, together with a can of Johnson's Prepared Wax. For sale by all leading hardware, paint, drug and grocery dealers. One pint Johnson's Prepared Wax by Parcel Post 60c.

I enclose 10c for Instruction Book and a can of Johnson's Prepared Wax —sufficient for polishing several pieces of furniture, an automobile, or a small floor.

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY & STATE

Fill out this coupon and mail to
S. C. JOHNSON & SON
"The Wood Finishing Authorities"
RACINE, WIS.

C.H.G.

FRIENDSHIP OF DAVID AND JONATHAN

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MAY 9. I SAM. 20

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.D.

"A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity." Prov. 17: 17.

It is only in adversity that we discover who are our friends, and what worth there is in their professions of attachment. What revelations there are in trouble! One of the most touching incidents that could be quoted as an illustration of this is the following extract from a letter, which appeared in one of our newspapers: "We have in W. two Belgian waifs boarded out with the mother of one of our soldiers. Frightened, motherless, in a strange country, with an unknown language, is it to be wondered that they showed fear and a child's unreasonableness? One day the son of their foster-mother appeared in his khaki uniform, and these poor little mites immediately brightened up, forgot their disconsolateness and tears, and ran to him crying 'Breeteeesh! Breeteeesh!' " But if a uniform would help two little children to comfort and joy, what shall not be the effect of the revealed presence of Jesus!

What can we say of His friendship! At first we knew him only as Rabboni, our Master. But he has said: "Henceforward I call you not servants, but friends." As Jonathan's soul was knit to David's, and he gave him his apparel, even to his sword, his bow, and his girdle, so our Lord has stripped himself for us. We are his friends, as we do whatsoever he has bidden us; and his love never changes. Through all our transitions of mood and circumstance he loveth at all times, and is never so near and dear as when we are called to face adversity. Then he walks the burning fiery furnace at our side.

The Blessedness of Friendship

By Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell

MRS. BROWNING asked Charles Kingsley the secret of his happy life. He replied, "I had a friend." How poor the soul that cannot say the same, as he looks backward over the struggling pathway of life! True friendship is ennobling, as well as delightful, having a gentle, restraining power over the person; making sin a sacrilege and sorrow a solace. Each must be true to the other to complete perfect friendship. Such friendship is not broken by a fault, a mistake, a suspicion, or even a single sin, but, at such times, calls for greater sympathy and affection. How blessed to feel you have one friend to whom you feel you can tell everything, just as you would to God!

Some of the strongest friendships have existed between persons of the same sex, as Ruth and Naomi, John and Peter, Luther and Melancthon, Tennyson and Hallam.

After David slew Goliath, "the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul." He stripped himself of his royal robe and gave it to David as a covenant that he surrendered his claim to the kingship to the young hero. It was like the seal of a wedding ring to the sacred union and communion of two loving hearts. Jonathan said to David, "Thou shalt be king of Israel and I shall be next to thee." Once, when Saul was seeking David's life, Jonathan "arose and went to David in the wood and strengthened his hands in God." David often felt, as Saul's javelins flew at him, that "there was but a step between him and death," and when delivered by the aid of his loving friend in the providence of God, he would sing, "Thou hast been my defense and refuge in the day of trouble." "In the secret of his tabernacle will he hide me."

When Jonathan brought the terrible news that his father was determined to slay David, they kissed each other in a long farewell embrace, they wept together, they looked their love out of eyes that had oceans of affection behind them.

Jonathan and David were nearly alike in age, in feelings of patriotism, in soldierly qualities and religious aims. But to be friends, they did not need to be alike in temperament and opinion, for kindly diversity increases the bond of union. "As his unlikeness fitted mine."

Jonathan's love may have been more disinterested than David's, for David could give nothing but love, while Jonathan surrendered a kingdom. He was like John the Baptist, who said of Jesus, "He must increase but I must decrease." Is it not a difficult step to go downward while your friend is elevated? Joseph's character was beautiful, but he did not have to leave the premiership of Egypt in order to help his brothers. But Prince Jonathan became poor that David through his poverty might become rich. He not only loved his neighbor as himself, but much more than himself—as Christ said, "Even as I have loved you." Jonathan's was a masterpiece of self-sacrificing love, a lily of beauty on the dark background of selfishness and war, a rainbow circling a tempest of persecution.

In the highest love there is neither male nor female. It is an angelic, spiritual affection. Napoleon said: "A faithful friend is the true image of the Deity." He is like the Friend that sticketh closer than a brother. As Jonathan said to David, "Whatsoever thy soul desireth, I will do it, even for thee." So Jesus gave himself for humanity, saying, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." Those whose affections are cemented together by friendship with Christ are lasting lovers.

David, on hearing the news of Saul's and Jonathan's death, uttered a song of lament for Saul as well as for Jonathan, placing father and son together in immortal eulogy:

The beauty of Israel is slain upon thy high places.

Saul and Jonathan were lovely in their lives. In death they were not divided.

They were swifter than eagles, stronger than lions.

How are the mighty fallen in battle! I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan. Very pleasant hath thou been unto me.

Thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of woman.

Jonathan's character will ever shine with the glory of true friendship, while that of Saul his father emits only the gloom of the treachery of the traitor, to both David and his own son and heir.

Jonathan might have been one of the noblest kings of Israel. He had a brilliant mind, a beautiful form and features, a loving affection and valor of the highest order. How sad to think that his own father should have blighted his hopes by his mad efforts to destroy David—even being willing to slay his own son in order to kill the companion of Jonathan. What an infinite contrast—the fascinating friendship of Jonathan and the jealous hatred of Saul! Jealousy is the great enemy of friendship. How much happier one is who makes the mistake of thinking his friends are better than they really are! How miserable the soul that is always hungry for slanderous gossip! Christ can cure the leprosy of jealousy by giving the anti-toxin of love.

Keep the old friends with the new,
Never turn from them away;
For the old are tried and true
And their friendship won't decay.

Friendships

By Arthur H. Howland

IT MEANS much to have a friend. Perhaps it means even more to be a friend. It was with this in mind that

A Million-Dollar Biscuit

Every day, at noon, the employees of The Shredded Wheat Company at Niagara Falls eat luncheon as the guests of the Company in the beautiful, sunlit dining room of "The Home of Shredded Wheat."

Treating employees as guests bespeaks a relationship that insures loyal, faithful service—and in this instance the service means a good breakfast for you. It has taken millions of dollars to perfect and to build a sanitary, sunlit factory in which to make it. You couldn't make this Biscuit in your kitchen. Our kitchen is your kitchen when you serve Shredded Wheat. It contains all the body-building material in the whole wheat grain, made digestible by steam-cooking, shredding and baking.

Shredded Wheat Biscuit

For breakfast, heat the Biscuit in the oven to restore crispness; pour hot milk over it, adding a little cream. Delicious with any meal served in combination with sliced bananas, baked apples or candied or preserved peaches or other fruits.

TRISCUIT is the Shredded Whole Wheat Wafer, eaten as a toast with butter or soft cheese. A delicious substitute for white flour bread or crackers.

Made only by

The Shredded Wheat Company
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

Hardy Everblooming 6 ROSES

Postpaid For Only 25

All Sure to Bloom and Bloom All Summer

Clothilde Soupert, delicate variegated
Etoile de France, the reddest of reds
Kaiserin Victoria, magnificent white
Hermosa, the popular pink
La France, beautiful rosy pink Yellow Cochet, the best yellow

Our 25c Collection

- 6 Chrysanthemums.....
- 6 Pansies.....
- 6 Carnations.....
- 6 Geraniums.....
- 6 Coleus.....
- 6 Petunias.....
- 6 Tuberoses.....
- 13 Gladioli.....
- 12 Pansies.....

The ten collection including the six Rose 72 Plants for $2.00.

Any Five Collections For $1.00

We guarantee satisfaction and safe arrival. Our 1915 catalog, "Floral Gems," showing over 200 flowers in natural colors, sent FREE!

McGregor Bros. Co., Box 600 Springfield, Mo.

Be Proud of Your Kitchen

Make your kitchen bright and beautiful with the shining cleanliness of

"Wear-Ever"

Aluminum Utensils

"Wear-Ever" aluminum utensils are made from thick, hard, sheet aluminum which has been pressed under enormous rolling mills and pounded by huge stamping machines. Only the strongest, best metal can stand such tremendous pressure—and that is the kind of metal you get in "Wear-Ever" Utensils.

Made all in one solid piece without joints or seams, "Wear-Ever" Utensils are easy to clean, pure and safe. No place for food to lodge—no coating to chip off.

Replace utensils that wear out with utensils that "Wear-Ever"

Cut out coupon now. Mail it to us with 20 cents in stamps, and we will send you the "Wear-Ever" one-quart Stewpan shown below and an illustrated booklet which shows various tests and tells how to care for and clean aluminum ware. A million women have bought these "Wear-Ever" Stewpans, and have tested their superiority over ordinary ware. Send today for your pan.

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL CO., DEPT. 34, NEW KENSINGTON, PA., OR (IF YOU LIVE IN CANADA) NORTHERN ALUMINUM CO., LTD., TORONTO, ONTARIO.

Send me prepaid, a 1-qt. "Wear-Ever" Stewpan, for which I enclose 20c in stamps—to be refunded if I'm not satisfied.

Name

Address

I buy cooking ware of (Dealer's Name)

WONDERFUL OFFER

This Beautiful 26 Piece

OF WM. A. ROGERS SOLID GERMAN SILVER SET WITH CROWN FANCY KNIVES, of handsome design, full size for family use. Fit to grace any table, carefully packed in an elegant leatherette fancy lined box, fully warranted. A Splendid and rich present for any occasion. Best bargains you ever bought in four payments.

Money promptly refunded if set not as represented. FREE. A United States Seal Souvenir Spoon, if you order at once.

BARGAIN SALES CO., Dept. 114
261 Broadway, New York City

Albie Davenport Babcock wrote:

And if I may
I'd have today
Grace from above
To set my heart
In heavenly art,
Not to be loved but to love.

have love in one's heart, to be faithful, to be loyal, to feel the delight of giving and trusting and serving someone who is worthy—that is the thing that counts most.

When to this is added a wealth of love received, when besides the motive of loving one who is noble one catches the ambition of being noble and why for another's sake, when there is not only a stream of love issuing from one's own soul, but a stream of love returned blessing the heart, then life is rich indeed.

Jesus offers the supreme delights and benefits of his friendship to all who will receive them. He wants to be the best friend, the soul's closest companion. And he has suggested and insured the plan for regenerating the world by spreading the principle of friendship.

Once heard a prominent member of a great college fraternity express the conviction that the problems of society would be solved ultimately by the triumph of the principles of fraternity. Thomas Mott Osborne declares that the root fact which has worked such changes in Sing Sing during his administration is that the convicts are coming to feel that the principle of loyalty to one's "pals" is to be applied to all in the prison—warden, guards, fellow prisoners and all. Then his theory is that this spirit is to grow till the convicts get the conception that all the members of society are his pals and that he must pull with them, not work against them.

This is the theory of Jesus. He discloses himself as mankind's best and greatest friend. He urges every one to friendship with himself, and then calls upon all to be friends of one another.

The Society of Friends is a small denomination, but its members have certainly succeeded in carrying forward the principles of the New Testament. That is what Christians are to be friends. The Friends refuse to call one another "mister" or "mistress." This is a relic of slavery and feudalism. They call one another "friends." Whatever opinion one may hold upon the principles of Socialism one cannot help admiring the unusual title which the followers of that philosophy employ in addressing one another—"Comrade." This means companion, fellow worker.

It means friend. It is a word which would save the world if given a chance.

There is one sad thought in considering the subject of friendship—that is, that often one who had been a friend becomes unworthy of friendship. We cannot go on admiring and rejoicing in the companionship of one who has been false to the ideals of friendship. This is the eternal fact that underlies the spiritual tragedies of the universe. Some souls will not be true to love. They turn away from it. They forget that, as Edwin Markham expresses it:

To turn from love is the soul's one treason
That treads down all the suns.

Echoes from the Holy Land

By Rev. Franklin E. Hoskins, D.D.

Member of Syria Mission

THE friendship of David and Jonathan is almost the only bright spot in the many dark pages of the first book of Samuel. For that love Jonathan risked his own life.

"The field" is probably the one in which David had hidden before when Saul's first threat was made. It was here that David and Jonathan met many times, where they promised to show kindness to each other forever, after both were fully aware of Saul's deadly hatred to David. The "stone Ezel" is in all probability not a proper name, because no such place or name occurs elsewhere in the Old Testament. It most probably means "yonder cairn" or rock, and was easily seen and pointed out from the spot where they stood and talked and toward which they shot their arrows.

The celebration of the "new moon" belongs to the most ancient of Hebrew rites (verses 5, 18, 24, 27). It was the time when special sacrifices were offered, succeeded by feasting. The feast lasted two or three days and all the courtiers were expected to dine at the royal table. Saul expected David, perhaps after some partial reconciliation. In medieval Jewish circles the festival of the New Moon and the Blessing of the New Moon is observed by the recital of certain passages and prayers. The modern Arab of the desert greets the new moon with devout ejaculations and the women dance for an hour or two repeating certain refrains. The custom of trying to catch the first glimpse of the new moon over the left shoulder has its origin in some remote superstition.

"Bowed himself" on his face to the ground as to the king's son. One of the most beautiful forms of salutation in the customs of the world is found in its most graceful fashion in Syria. Then drawing nearer all was forgotten in the warmth of friendship; they embraced, kissed each other and wept. This can be seen every day in Bethlehem as people meet and separate.

"Go in peace." The commonest word in Arabic today at parting, but it must never be spoken until after the person going has risen and said his farewell, otherwise it would be an insult. "El-jar el-kareeb wala el-akh el-baieed"—the neighbor near is better than the brother far away. This Arabic saying gives the quintessence of Arabic wisdom on friendship and sheds a new light on the second great commandment of the law—"Love thy neighbor as thyself."

CALLED HIGHER

M. Rebecca Gibson, Canton, Ill. 85.
M. B. A. Carleton, Kalamazoo, Mich.
M. Julia M. Lang, Mitchell, S. D., 81.
Viam E. Oates, Gorman, W. Va., December 1, 1914, strong in the Faith.
M. Rachel Shaffer Dorland, Spencer, Iowa, May 6, 1915. 83.
Did L. Williams, Prince Albert, Ont., Can., May 11, 1915. 82.
M. Josephine Miller, Lemon Grove, Calif., October 19, 1914. 43.
M. L. D. Giddens, Goldsboro, N. C., February 7, 1915. 72.
M. Mary Jane Bent, Tuppersville, N. S., Canada, February 14, 1915. 90.
M. Jacob Spear, South Charleston, Ohio, December 21, 1914. 67.
M. Elizabeth Hutchinson, Front Royal, Va., January 14, 1915.
M. Christina Jansen, Sullivan, Wis., January 10, 1915. 89.
M. H. E. Breidenstein, South Haven, Mich., November 24, 1914. 67.
M. F. Schoelkopf, Welcome, Wis., January 25, 1915. 78.
Ea Jane Thompson, Brooklyn, N. Y., December 25, 1914.
M. Hook, Orangeburg, S. C., December 13, 1914.
M. Elizabeth H. Edlowes, Somerville, N. J., November 5, 1914. 86.
M. Henry Austin, Perry, N. Y., December 31, 1914. 83.
M. S. S. Baldwin, Louisville, Ky., January 19, 1915.
M. Wealthy Ricker, New Portland, Me., December 12, 1914. 85.
M. Margaret Boyd, Harlem, Ga., January 5, 1915.
M. George Payne, Sodom, N. Y., February 28, 1915. 93.

Mrs. Catherine Fletcher, Bowling Green, Ohio, January 12, 1915. 68.
Louis I. Stephens, Welaka, Fla., February 2, 1915.
Mrs. Elizabeth Richard, Bluff Point, N. Y., January 24, 1915. 87.
Mrs. Rebecca Robinson, Rogers, Ohio, December 7, 1914. 84.
John Wesley Cobb, Binghamton, N. Y., January 14, 1915. 76.
Mrs. William H. Brusie, Ancram Lead Mines, N. Y., February 10, 1915. 59.
Mrs. H. T. Mortimore, Pontiac, Ill., February 15, 1915. 79.
Mrs. G. S. C. Barton, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, February 15, 1915.
William Young, Harlan, Iowa, December 9, 1914. 87.
W. Dunham, Shabbona, Ill., January 29, 1915. 93.
Edwin Isaac, Skaneateles, N. Y., January 7, 1915. 58.
L. L. Long, Evansville, Ind., February 3, 1915. 70.
Mrs. Jane L. Wilson, Lincoln University, Pa., February 24, 1915. 80.
Mrs. Almira Wood Millar, Kalamazoo, Mich., March 12, 1915. 83.
Mrs. Mary Henner, Willoughby, Ohio, February 21, 1915. 84.
Mrs. Catherine Skinner, White Water, Wis., March 13, 1915. 91.
The Rev. Dr. William Paley Swartz, general secretary of the New York Sabbath Committee, and a well-known Presbyterian pastor, died at Forest Hills, N. Y., on April 10. Dr. Swartz had held several important pastorates in his lifetime. He had traveled much in missionary lands and written and published a number of books on religious and social topics. He was fifty-seven years old.

Different— and as much better as it is different

Less gasoline—fewer tires to buy, fewer repairs, less skidding; more comfort, more power, greater speed. These are the fixed facts for Oakland owners this year. They are assured by mechanical laws.

Read the Five Leading Oakland Superiorities Below

Every feature works toward a definite economy—maintenance becomes a mere incident. Combined with low upkeep are the final touches of comfort, convenience, ease of handling and beauty that make up real luxury.

Then see the Oakland—drive it—get a demonstration that's a real road test—and decide.

The Oakland Catalog upon request. Fours and Sixes: Speedsters, Roadsters and Touring Cars—$1100 to $1685 f. o. b. factory

OAKLAND MOTOR COMPANY
Pontiac, Michigan

Oakland

1—Great Strength with Light Weight.

2—High Speed Motor with Great Power.

3—Low Center of Gravity with Usual Road Clearance.

4—Flying Wedge Lines with Least Wind Resistance.

5—Economy with Luxury.

No other car combines all these features.

We Help You Raise Money

$20.00

For Your Church or Sunday School Easily Earned

SEND NO MONEY — Just the Coupon

SEND NOW

A Wonderful Opportunity for Every Community

This Box of Toilet Soap contains 7 assorted bars of our most popular Soaps—has a retail value of 70c—You sell it for only 50c. We will send any Church Organization, Sunday School Class, Ladies' Society, etc., 80 Boxes of our 7-bar Assorted Toilet Soaps, without one cent of money in advance. You sell the Soap at 50c a box—send us $20.00 within 30 days, and keep $20.00 for your fund.

C. & R. Soap Easy to Sell

Everybody knows that C. & R. Toilet Soaps are high quality? We have been making high grade Toilet Soaps for twenty-six years. The 7-bar Big-value Box sells readily at 50 cents. If your Class or Society consists of ten members, each member need sell only eight boxes. Or, you can have one or two members sell the entire order, allowing them a commission for their work. This is a Model Method Plan of Money Raising for any congregation and affords you an excellent opportunity for making money at your Bazaars, Fairs, Entertainments or Church Charity Work.

We Guarantee Satisfaction

Send for this liberal offer NOW. Remember, you take no chances—we agree to take goods back if you are unable to sell them. If you do not find our goods to be just as we represent them, if you do not find our soap sells easily as we have claimed, you can send the whole shipment back at our expense. You take no risk whatever. Fill out Coupon below, giving name and address of party to whom you wish goods shipped—name and address of your Minister—name of Church with which your Society is affiliated.

CROFTS & REED CO., Dept. B-253 CHICAGO, ILL.

USE THIS COUPON

Crofts & Reed Co., Dept. B-253 Chicago, Ill.

Kindly send me 80 boxes of your 7-Bar Special Toilet Soap. I agree to sell the soap at 50c a box and send you $20.00 within 30 days, keeping the balance of $20.00 for our own use.

Name _____
P. O. _____
Street _____
State _____
Name of Minister _____
Address _____
Name of Church _____

New Triumphs in Desserts.

Write for "Freezer Book" (free) with Mrs. Rorer's recipes, and showing how expertly and easily you can make frozen desserts in the

LIGHTNING FREEZER

Your dealer can supply the Lightning Freezer
NORTH BROS. MFG. CO., Philadelphia

PHIMISTER

Continued from page 447

breath oot o' me to be tauld my v'ice was worth a bawbee. They're payin' me a wee maitter o' fower hundred a year tae sing there."

"Fower hundred?"
"Ay." Phimister laughed again, as if it were a ridiculous joke. "I've been singin' there three Sawbaths the noo. But, Mr. MacGregor, I canna gang there anither Sawbath in these claes. I dinna care what I pay for a new suit. The fower hundred is like findin' money. It's a high-priced tailor I want."

The older man knew better. While Phimister went to brush up he sent a message over the 'phone to his tailor. "I am bringing you a new customer," he explained. "Rather a queer one. Remember, you are not to show him a suit that costs less than twenty-five dollars. If he makes any fuss about the price, drop it to twenty. I will pay the extra five."

When Phimister joined him he was not alone. Two sturdy young Scotchmen had come along to see that their friend was not cheated. The tailor took a look at him, and brought out a fine, thin, navy blue suit.

"What's the price of it?" queried the Scotchman before he laid a finger upon the clothes.

"Twenty-five dollars," answered the tailor.

"Twenty-five dollars!" A stunned look crept into Phimister's ruddy face. "Losh preserve us! Five poun', fower an' tuppence!"

"Five poun', fower an' tuppence!" echoed the other Scotchmen. "Hoot, man, that's fair robbery!"

Robbery or not, Phimister carried home that suit, while MacGregor paid an odd five dollars on it. Besides, he spent a week's wages on new shoes, a hat and up-to-date haberdashery.

That night MacGregor happened to meet the rector of the Church of the Messiah and he questioned him about Phimister.

"The man has a wonderful voice," he answered. "One rainy night, when the church was full empty, I heard a clear tenor ring out above every other voice. Phimister sat almost in front of me. People everywhere in the congregation stopped to listen. He was perfectly unconscious; he went on alone, singing with the choir, almost as a child would have done. The organist got hold of him before he left the church. He thinks we have made a big find. If he—if we could only get him to brush up a bit—it is not so much that we care, but the girls in the choir—I'm afraid they—"

"Wait till you see Phimister tomorrow," said the superintendent.

It was not the Phimister of yesterday who tramped up the aisle that Sunday morning. It was a man who had looked into a mirror and seen a handsome young giant, fresh shaved, with shining yellow hair and clear blue eyes, which looked the world in the face. Besides, he had donned the dignity which comes with new clothes, earned by a man's own toil. There was a soul behind Phimister's voice, a soul which knew little of life outside its own sunny, serene, clean world.

A week later he came into the office to show the superintendent a photograph of himself. It was a cheap thing, but a good likeness.

"I'm sendin' it hame tae my mither," he explained. "I never tell't you aboot my mither, Mr. MacGregor. She's an unco fine woman. She brought up ten o' us an' did a' the wark o' the hoose, besides mony a day helpin' my father to hoe turnips."

You may not believe me, but I know hundreds of women in Scotland like Phimister's mother, and "unco fine women" they are, who toil all day in a wet turnip field with a dignity as fine as that of a queen receiving her courtiers.

More than once during the spring Phimister turned to his friend woefully. He was certain his letter had been lost in the mail, for never a word came from his mother to tell she had received the photograph. One day a man who hailed from Phimister's old home came to the mill searching for a job. MacGregor told him that they had already one of his townsmen in their employ.

"I ken that," he replied, "and I'm fairly dreadin' tae meet him. The first thing he'll dae will be tae ask me aboot his mither gettin' his picter. My, but it did upset the auld body! She's put it awa oot o' sicht o' human een. There's nae sayin' but occasionally she may take a glimps at it when she's by hersel'."

"What was wrong with it?" asked the superintendent.

"Ay, sir, the messages she sent by me tae Phimister! I wadna deliver them for the war! She says she would rather see him lyin' deid than brawled up American fashion, singin' in a Papist kirk, wi' its organ an' altar an' graven images an' painted windows, settin' alongside o' a row o' painted hizzies in plain sicht o' the whole congregation. 'Wae's me, Geordie,' says she, 'he'll be marryin' ane o' them Romanists.' An' she was greetin' while she said it. 'Lad, I'd a hantle rather see him lyin' in his coffin.'"

The winter wore on. Phimister's voice was beginning to make him famous, but he never knew, never cared. One night in the spring he and the superintendent walked home together.

"I'll be biddin' you good-by next week, Mr. MacGregor," he said.

"Where are you bound for?" asked the man by his side in astonishment.

"I'm guain' hame. I'm tired o' this country. It's a fine, big, rich country whaur there's graun' wages an' braw hooses an' gude food, but I'm fairly sick, man, for a glimps o' hame. I'm longin' for the heathery hills an' the smell o' the sea an' a taste o' oat cake an' fresh herrin' an' the sicht o' the lads playin' cricket on the green an' the skirl o' the pipes an' the bonnie Scotch tongue an' the—"

"Phimister," said the superintendent gravely, "you are a foolish chap. I love Scotland mysel' as weel as you can. Only one's hert is big enouch to hold two countries, an' twa sic' countries as oors! Man, get oot among fowks; find a nice lass!"

"A lass! Whaur could I find a lass in this country—like my mither? They're a' empty-haired, fushionless creaturs. I'm guain' hame. I'll send you a boxie o' my mither's short-bread by the next man that comes across."

There was no holding Phimister. He sailed six weeks later. A few months afterward the superintendent left for the Northwest. It was months before he returned. The first morning he sat at his desk he heard a clear sonorous voice out in the yard singing:

There's nought but care on every han'
In every hour that passes, O,
What signifies the life o' man,
An' 'twere not for the lasses, O,
Green grow the rashes O,
Green grow the rashes O,
The sweetest hours that e'er I spent
Were spent among the lasses, O.

He threw the window open. A giant with a thatch of yellow curls on his head was crossing the yard.

"Phimister!" he called.

"Guid be here, Mr. MacGregor," he shouted, "you back?"

"And you back?"

The warm Scotch blood rushed to the man's face.

"Are you back to bide?" asked the superintendent.

"Ay, Mr. MacGregor, I'm back tae bide. It's a fac' the auld country's nae the same as when I left it. There's the simple, kind herts an' the auld lovin' kindness but—there's the hard chauvin' for bread. I'd got used tae the sunshine tae, an' a' a' hantle o' things ower here that I missed. An' yet," he added eagerly, "Scotland's a braw, fine country—I'd gang back an' fecht for her any day she needed me."

The superintendent laughed—an "I

Knit To Fit Without A Seam

Comfort for every woman who wears these smart trim fitting stockings that are so smooth and so perfectly shaped

BURSON
FASHIONED HOSE

are made on patented machines which knit in a wash-proof and wear-proof shape, without seams.

Cotton, Lisle, Mercerized — 25c 35c 50c 75c
Ask your dealer for them Booklet sent upon request

BURSON KNITTING CO.
55 Church Street Rockford, Ill.

PATENT YOUR IDEAS

$9,000 offered for certain inventions. Book "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for report as to patentability. Patented, verified for sale at our expense in manufacturers' Journals.
CHANDLER & CHANDLER, Patent Attorneys
Est. 16 Years 1035 F. St., Washington, D. C.

TELL YOUR BOY ABOUT THE

Boys, you can make big money each month selling THE BOYS' MAGAZINE. Send no money. Write us today for 10 copies. All unsold copies can be returned.

THE BOYS' MAGAZINE, Dept. A49, Smethport, Pa.

is the toughest and most durable Wood Finish possible to make. It will not crack, peel, chip or turn white, is easily applied, dries quick and hard with a permanent gloss, cleans perfectly, and is thorough sanitary.

Kyanize is especially made to stand wear. It is the most satisfactory factory finish you can get for floors, woodwork and furniture.

25-cent Can FREE Fill out and send us the coupon shown below and enclose with it twelve 2-cent stamps to pay for postage, packing and a 1-inch chisel-edge brush to put it on with.

Try Kyanize yourself on some old piece of furniture.

your list around the or you want. Natl. — Light Oak — Dark Oak — Walnut — Mahogany — Colonial Green — White Enamel.
Boston Varnish Co., 42 Everett Station, Boston, Mass.
Please send me free as offered above a full half pint can of Kyanize. I enclose twelve 2-cent stamps to pay for brush, postage and packing.

Name _____
Address _____

—and Sanatogen brings, too, a new joy in living!"

FOR with Sanatogen there comes into the flagging system a new elasticity—a new vigor that stirs up the mind to its old-time activity, to its old-time readiness to do and to accomplish—a new endurance, bodily as well as mental—and withal, a general improvement in one's health that makes it a joy just to be alive.

Such has been the experience, freely expressed in writing, of men and women in every walk of life. And if the carefully recorded experience of the medical profession counts for anything, then we know that this effect of

Sanatogen THE FOOD-TONIC

is the natural result of its ability to nourish and fortify—naturally and persistently—the starved cells, the impoverished blood that are the cause of nervous breakdowns.

Read what Col. Henry Watterson, the famous editor, writes—

"I feel that I owe it to truth to state that I have made a thorough trial of Sanatogen, and that I have found it most efficacious and beneficial. I do not think I could have recovered my vitality, as I have done, without this Sanatogen operating continually upon the digestive organs and nerve centers."

—and what Madame Olive Schreiner, the gifted writer, says—

"Nothing that I have taken for years has given me such a sense of vigor as Sanatogen."

They voice the opinions of thousands of others, including yours, if you will but give Sanatogen a fair trial. Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in three sizes, from $1.00 up.

Grand Prize, International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913

Send for a Free Copy of "Nerve Health Regained." If you wish to learn more about Sanatogen before you use it, write for a copy of this booklet, beautifully illustrated and comprising facts and information of the greatest interest.

THE BAUER CHEMICAL COMPANY
6F Irving Place New York

told you so" laugh. Phimister dropped his head and pulled nervously at his shirt cuff, then suddenly lifted his radiant eyes and smiled.

"I've got news for you, Mr. MacGregor. I brought back a lass wi' me, the bonniest lass in Aberdeenshire. We've got a but an' a ben in a Harlem flat. Winna ye come up the nicht for supper? Kirsty will put a finnan haddie on the brader for ye, an' I brocht back the boxie o' my mither's short-bread that I promised you."

MacGregor returned to his desk in a silent ecstasy over the "but an' the ben" in a Harlem flat. That night, however, he supped with the Phimisters. Old bachelor as he was, he almost envied the younger man. Kirsty was a neat, clean-skinned, sonsy lass, who had only one thought in life, one idol; that was her husband.

Some months afterwards he noticed that Phimister was not on his job and he asked about him.

"Poor fellow," said the boss of his room, "his wife is terribly ill; they doubt if she can live."

The superintendent pulled down the lid of his desk, and a subway express carried him in haste to the "but an' the ben" in a Harlem flat. Phimister came stealing out to meet him. The man's face had gone white as ashes and his blue eyes stared out from dark hollows.

"Kirsty's sinkin'," he began in a hoarse whisper. The doctor's in there the noo, Mr. MacGregor; it is nae ane—I may lose—it is twa!"

"Man, cheer up," said the superintendent huskily. "Kirsty may get weel."

"Mind ye, Mr. MacGregor—the agony of the world was in the man's eyes—"mind ye, it's jist ae thing I am tellin' ye, gin Kirsty's taen awa' frae me, ye'll never see me again!"

"Man alive!" cried the superintendent, while he shook the great figure as one would have shaken a dog, "here we stand bletherin' while there still is hope. We ought tae be fechtin' tae keep Kirsty with us instead o' mournin' afore she is gone. Ye maun hae the very best doctor in New York. I ken o' ane. He's the greatest doctor for women that ever was. Only—he charges something awfu'. He may ask ye as muckle as fifty dollars a veesit."

Phimister straightened himself to his stalwart height. Hope sent the hot blood flushing into his pale face.

"Fifty dollars! Mr. MacGregor," he cried, "I dinna care gin he asked five hundred dollars. I havena got the money the noo, but I can work for it." He thrust out his huge, brawny hands. "An'—fowks will trust me."

"Ay, fowks will trust ye, Phimister," agreed the older man quietly. "Only ye'll hae tae get a nurse, an' trained nurses dinna come cheap."

The young Scotchman threw back his broad shoulders and shook himself impatiently.

"Kirsty can hae three nurses gin she needs them."

The famous doctor came, not once, but many times—and Kirsty recovered. When Phimister returned to work he gave the superintendent a handshake that left his arm tingling all day long. A week later the two friends said good-by, for mill affairs took the older man off on a long journey. During his travels a note caught up with him to tell that there was a little boy in the "but an' the ben at Harlem." It was five years before he returned to the New York office.

One morning Phimister, the same hearty, handsome giant, came in, leading by the hand a rosy-faced little lad, who wore a kilt of the Black Watch tartan.

"Wee Dugald," said his father solemnly, "shake hands wi' Mr. MacGregor. He's a graun' good frien' o' yours, laddie. Noo, min' ye this—it's something I never telled ye before, wee man, but Mr. MacGregor saved your life afore ye were born!"

Brings Joy to the Family

We enjoy the Christian Herald very much, and we are glad to see Pollyanna's return. Your covers have been of much use to me in my Sunday school work. They are beautiful. MRS. W. R. H. Wilmington, Del.

McCANN EXAMINES CLAIMS OF LOOSE-WILES BISCUIT CO.

Bakers of Sunshine Biscuits

By ALFRED W. McCANN

(Food Expert—New York Globe)

Never were such extravagant claims made in behalf of a bakery as those set up by the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, consisting of J. L. Loose, J. S. Loose, J. H. Wiles, G. W. Hopkins and B. L. Hupp.

For instance, these people call their establishment in Long Island City a "cracker palace," "largest in the world," "white tiled inside and out," "flooded with sunshine," etc. Sunshine is the trade mark of the institution.

Lured by the big words and the fine frenzy and the bubbling enthusiasm of the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company's advertising I visited the place, which they call their New York Cracker Palace, Long Island City, and asked to be allowed to run throughout the building.

I was passed along from pillar to post, meeting the senior member of the firm, J. L. Loose, and all the others who were in the city at the time of my inspection. They decided to let me have the run of the plant, and I started off.

McCann Apologizes

Now I am up against the necessity of apologizing to the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company for my skepticism in the presence of their big talk. If I were the president of the Loose-Wiles concern I would never stop talking. As a matter of fact they cannot say too much about themselves. They have aimed high and have hit a star. Big biscuit concerns come and go, but the Loose-Wiles Company has snapped the backbone of idealism and made it sit down among them, a captive.

Yes, the Sunshine enterprise is a twentieth century affair. The best way to prove this is to go yourself to the Sunshine plant at Long Island City and see with your own eyes the things that I saw.

Here is a bakery that uses butter by the ton. Globe readers know what kind of butter is employed in the average bakery business. Globe readers know of the poor wretches in New York City who have been arrested for meddling with the "ladies butter" business, and Globe readers know the meaning of the phrase, "bakers' butter," "processed butter," "renovated butter," "reclaimed grease," "inedible fats," etc.

Got into Their Books

I found the Loose-Wiles concern to be using Elgin Creamery firsts. To put my discovery to the test I demanded permission to scan the books of the company, and was not denied. I ran over those books as far back as July, 1914, checking up every purchase for nine months, and found that during that time the Loose-Wiles Company paid premium prices for Elgin Creamery firsts, ranging from 28 cents to 32 cents a pound in carload lots. They could have bought stuff at 18 cents a pound, and the dear public, bedeviled and bedamned, would never have known the difference. If my enemies in New York are anxious to get something on me, let them send an expert accountant to the Loose-Wiles establishment to check up on what I have said here.

"How about gelatine? I'll get them there," I thought. So I did. The gelatine used in my presence was top-notch quality. It was odorless, flavorless, pure. I knew they had paid at least twenty-four or twenty-five cents for it. I went to their books and found them to be paying twenty-eight cents. There was one shipment at eighteen cents. It disturbed me. I traced it and found that it had been condemned upon its arrival and had not been used. The bakers reported it "not up to quality," and it was rejected.

In the same manner I found the price paid by the Sunshine people for egg powder to be sixty-three cents a pound. Egg men know more of the meaning of this fact than cake-eaters can understand.

They make their own vanilla extract, using Mexican beans in the process. The last lot of beans cost them $4.12 a pound. No Tahiti beans and no Tonka beans can get into the Sunshine laboratory.

They don't use Alsoped flour, by which I mean bleached flour. Bleached flour contains nitrate reacting substances. It is a fake—a strictly legal fake!

Museum Specimens Absent

They don't use compound lard in the Sunshine Cracker Palace. When it comes to fats, other than butter, they use cottonseed oil of the kind listed in the Globe's Pure Food Directory, and coconut oil, which is just as fine a product. There isn't anything finer.

They use no cocoa treated with sodium hydroxide or any other alkalizing substance. Here, again, as in connection with every other raw material in their establishment, they pay a top price for top quality.

Particularly was I interested in their product, the Sunshine Whole Wheat Wafer, which is a real whole wheat wafer, made of whole wheat flour, decaseinated butter, and salt. It contains no lard. In flavor and character it is the de luxe edition of the Sunshine family. If there ever was an unsweetened whole wheat aristocrat worthy of the name, this wafer, buttered and salted to perfection, is it.

"Dead Soldiers" in Ginger Snaps

For years it has been the custom in the biscuit business to gather up all the "dead soldiers," consisting of trimmings, margins, ledges, corners, cuttings, fragments of dough that have dropped to the floor, broken crackers, waste from the rollers and stampers, and convert them into ginger snaps.

I wanted to know where the Loose-Wiles cracker refuse went. They told me it was "sold for poultry food." I wanted the proof and I got it.

No, it is impossible to go through that wonderfully tiled, perfectly ventilated, sunlit institution, with every modern sanitary device installed in its mixing, cutting, baking and packing departments, without paying tribute to the genius which has devised it.

Cheapness Exiled

The employees by no means are forgotten. They operate and manage their own restaurant, where foods of the best quality are served at cost. The average meal, consisting of soup, chicken fricassee, stewed carrots, boiled potatoes, greens, puddings and coffee, costs 14 cents. I consumed a 14-cent meal and was filled!

Some of the girls, working on piece work, earn as much as $22 a week. They have their own rest room furnished with beautiful rugs, lounges and comfortable chairs. They will continue to have it as long as they continue to respect it, as they do now.

The men are provided with dressing rooms opening into an airshaft and equipped with shower baths. They are all on fighting edge, working for their employers. I tell you it pays food manufacturers to be good.

A perfect little hospital, in charge of a trained nurse, is one of the features of the establishment. It is provided so that any emergency may be met with. As a matter of fact the nurse in charge was formerly in charge of St. John's Hospital, Long Island City. Efficiency and thoroughness, plus quality, not cheapness, are at work in the Sunshine family.

Go Ahead and Shout

The bakery operates its own laundry, and thus, by insisting on clean uniforms, does not penalize the employee in order to maintain cleanliness.

I have not told half that is to be told of the Sunshine plant. It is not possible to tell it all. The beauty of it is, one has to see it to appreciate it. A mere superficial visit will disclose only such virtues as are obvious. I pried into every nook and corner. I got under the skin of the place. I went to the store-rooms in the basement. I examined all the stock, every barrel, bag, pail, case, carton, can, tierce, and package in the establishment. I inspected the spices, fruits, flavors, molasses, cheese, oils, butter, chocolate, cocoa, flour, eggs, sugars, in fact everything that could be critically examined or put to the test.

Hereafter when the Loose-Wiles people shout, I will say with those who know, "They have a right to shout."—N. Y. Globe.—Adv.

Another Element
of Paige Prestige

"The Standard of Value and Quality"

Power

FEW of us have the need or desire for a racing car. But every man wants to sit behind a motor car which responds eagerly—buoyantly—to the slightest touch of the throttle.

Steep hills and heavy, clinging sand roads have no terrors for the Paige owner. Whether he be driving the Glenwood "Four-36" or the Fairfield "Six-46," he knows that he has but to "step on" the accelerator and the hills flatten out like smooth boulevards. From a walking pace to the speed of the winds—this range is at the service of every Paige driver without a change from high-gear.

Sit behind the steering wheel of either of these cars. Sense the flexibility and power under the impressive, "deep chested" hood just in front of you. Swing easily up those grades that are the despair of many vastly higher priced automobiles.

Then, ask yourself if you could possibly require more of any motor car. And remember that the "Six" costs only $1395. The "Four"—$1075.

The supreme dollar-for-dollar value of Paige cars is established by comparing them, feature for feature, with any and all other motor cars of lower, equal or higher price. We don't have to ask the intelligent purchaser to make that comparison.

The GLENWOOD
FOUR - "36"
$1075

Paige-Detroit Motor
Car Company
1205 McKinstry Ave.
Detroit, Michigan

The FAIRFIELD
SIX - "46"
$1395

$15 ON TRIAL
Upward
AMERICAN CREAM
SEPARATOR

A SOLID PROPOSITION to send fully guaranteed, a new, well made, easy running, perfect skimming separator for $15.95. Skims warm or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. The bowl is a sanitary marvel; easily cleaned. ABSOLUTELY ON APPROVAL.

Different from this picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. Western orders filled from Western points. Whether your dairy is large or small write for our handsome free catalog. Address: AMERICAN SEPARATOR COMPANY, Box 4184 Bainbridge, N. Y.

SAVE HALF Your Paint Bills

By using INGERSOLL PAINT—proved best by 66 years' use. It will please you.

Only paint endorsed by the "Grange." Made in all colors—for all purposes. DELIVERED FREE

From the Mill Direct to You at Factory Prices. INGERSOLL PAINT BOOK—FREE Tells all about Paint and Painting for Durability. How to avoid trouble and expense caused by paints fading, chalking and peeling. Valuable information free to you, with Sample Color Cards. Write me. DO IT NOW. I can save you money.

O. W. Ingersoll, 253 Plymouth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' With the MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right. 'The Morley Phone for the DEAF' is to the ears what glasses are to the eyes. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over one hundred thousand sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Bldg., Phila.

Christian Health Movement

led by W. Earl Flynn, America's Christian Health lecturer and teacher. Brightens intellect; renews ambition; lengthens life; adds beauty to face and form. Information FREE; two cents added brings a valuable book. W. Earl Flynn, Dept. 6, Lincoln, Nebraska

DO YOU READ MAGAZINES? Our Big Money-Saving Club Catalog FREE. Write TODAY. AGENTS WANTED. Write for full particulars. J.M. Hanson-Bennett Magazine Agency, 223 West Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ill.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers and Owen patents. Send for a free book. Inventions wanted. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

THE STORY OF A SMILE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

IT ALL happened because Mary Ann smiled at the Butcher Boy when he came to the Large House for his order. Mary Ann had lately come from a country where the simple people believe that fairies dance in the morning and banshees cry at night, and smiling was one of her habits. Besides, the Butcher Boy was good to look upon, in a freckle-faced, red-haired sort of way.

The Little House where the Young Clerk and his Younger Wife lived, rested precariously in the shadow of the Large House, and the Butcher Boy—going in there for his order—smiled at the Wife when he left; so the Wife, bearing the sunshine of the smile in her heart, smiled at her husband as he started for the office. She kissed him, too.

It was a spring day with blue skies and yellow sunshine, and a breath of flowers in the air. As the Young Clerk swung along, he forgot that he was overworked and underpaid, forgot that he had worries and cares. He only remembered that some one at home loved him and that the world was beautiful, so, as he passed through the outer office, he smiled at the shy Little Stenographer, who banged away at an army of letters. That is why the Little Stenographer, when she took the letters to the Big Boss to be signed, smiled embarrassedly as he glanced up into her anxious face.

The Big Boss was hated by his foes and admired—grudgingly—by his business associates. He was feared much, and avoided much (as the case might be) by his employees. He was tolerated by society and his church because he could sign a check with seven figures on the left side of the decimal point; but he was loved by—nobody. He was pleased at the Little Stenographer's shy smile, for smiles did not come his way very often. Suddenly he too realized, just as his Young Clerk had realized, that the world still held blue skies, and flowers, and spring-time.

Mateo was the bad man of the city. He was hailed below a certain street as "Chief"; above a certain street as "Villain." The Police Court had a picture of him in their very fine gallery, a picture labeled "The Wolf." Mateo was a clever man, with eyes that were wonderfully soft and a tongue that spoke a language of music, with feet that were swift and sure to escape, and hands that were horribly cunning in the manufacture of little black boxes that ticked like alarm-clocks and were lined with strange wires and stranger chemicals. Like the Big Boss, Mateo was hated and feared and admired, but, unlike the Big Boss, Mateo was loved—had always been loved. His Mother had loved him—a dark-faced baby in swaddling-clothes; his wife had loved him as he came, straight as a sapling, with eyes that sang of love, to woo her; and, now that mother and wife were both dead, his daughter loved him as he dangled her on his knee!

This same daughter was the pride of Mateo's life. All the love of his southern nature was poured out on her tiny head, all the good of his soul looked into her eyes. But although Mateo would have done anything for the sake of his child, he would not have given up his profession. His business of blowing people to bits was just as much his life-work as the Big Boss's business of blowing people's dreams to fragments was his life-work. Besides, the little daughter would not have wanted him to give up his profession! Some people called him "The Villain" or "The Chief" or "The Wolf"; but she called him "Daddy."

Just now, Mateo had an important bit of business to do. Bending over a table, he was putting together some intricate little wheels, mixing some white powders in a test tube. As he worked he hummed a song, and a smile flitted across his handsome face. His song was in a foreign tongue, and told of flowers and blue sky and spring time.

Mateo had a text that he lived by a text that had been quoted in the newspapers after several daring murders. When the smoke of his exploding bombs had swirled away into the sky, the police always found a scrap of paper, typewritten, nailed to the wall. It always said, "The Wolf never forgets—he pays!"

The Big Boss had a way of taking money, indiscriminately, from folk. He had a way of giving interviews to the papers, also indiscriminately.

The taking of money hurt most people; the interviews hurt very few. In one of them he had quoted Scripture ponderously: "Unto him that hath shall be given," he had said, and quoted his own bank account. He had spoken about polite robbers who took money in a "lawful" way (had praised them) and of criminals like Mateo who did their work in the dark—artistically. He had said that he was going to spend some of his money on banishing the Wolf and his associates from the city. After reading the article, Mateo began on a large, splendid black box. He sang as he worked, and wondered what part of the Big Boss's office would place the finished product in.

Mateo's home was not far from the gloomy pile of architecture that surrounded the Big Boss's private life. In the city, crime and prosperity, religion and wickedness, life and death, often rubbed elbows unknowingly. When the Big Boss, dismissing his limousine, walked home, he passed within stone's throw of a remarkable little laboratory that the police chief would have spent many thousands of dollars to locate. He often passed the small daughter of Mateo playing in the sun. To Mateo she was a cherub, but to the Big Boss she was a rather dirty foreign child that cluttered up the right-of-way.

Fate, weaving swiftly with threads of life, often stops to play a practical joke on people. Sometimes her jokes are brutal, unladylike jokes; but sometimes they are as gentle as the breeze of summertime. Perhaps it was she who put the smile on Mary Ann's lip; perhaps it was she who made the Little Stenographer forget her shyness; surely it was she who made the beauty of the day.

Mateo sat in his room working happily, and Fate, spinning at her wheel, made the Big Boss to walk home. Mateo, watching from a narrow window, saw his small daughter playing with a china doll; but Fate made the doll slip from the tiny mother's arm; the Big Boss swung down the street. The daughter of Mateo began to scream.

On another day the Big Boss would have sworn at the small figure; but he remembered just in time that she was bright and that a smile was blooming in his heart. He stopped before the little girl.

"What is the matter?" he asked kindly.

The daughter of Mateo was fearless as her father was fearless. She looked up into the eyes of the tall, grim figure in the immaculate clothes.

"I break-a my bambina," she sobbed. The Big Boss rumbled his beautifully creased trousers by kneeling the dust of the street. His hands, powerful hands, picked up the fragments of doll. Mateo, looking from his window, gasped.

"Perhaps," said the Big Boss, "I can fix it."

The daughter of Mateo stamped her foot. She was spoiled.

"No! No! No!" she shrieked, "my bambina is broken!"

Quite desperately the Big Boss put his hand in his pocket. He had found that money usually solved problems. When his hand came out it held a round, shiny gold-piece. From his tea-

that's only half word — the other half is LIPTON'S

YOUR grocer can give you a blend of Lipton's Tea to suit your particular taste, for there are five kinds to choose from. Ceylon and India Black, English Breakfast, Black and Gen Mixed, Formosa Oolong, and Ceylon Green.

Lipton's Tea is always sold in airtight sealed packages, which ensure all the natural fragrant aroma and strength of the tea.

25¢, 30¢, 35¢ (in full size standard packages, ½ lb. net). Also in ¼ lb., 1 lb. and 10c trial sizes. None genuine without the signature of Sir Thomas J. Lipton.

Send 10c for trial size tin of kind of tea you like best

Thomas J. Lipton
BRAND CO. PLANTER, CEYLON

8 Franklin St.
New York City
LONDON, CEYLON
DIA-LICAGO
TORONTO

Other Lipton Products
Coffee, Cocoa and Biscuits

Japanese Rose Bushes Five for 10c.

The Wonder of the World
Rose Bushes with roses on them in 8 weeks from the time the seed was planted. It may not seem possible but we guarantee it to be so. They will BLOOM EVERY TEN WEEKS Winter or Summer, and when 3 years old will have 5 or 6 hundred roses on each bush. Will grow in the house or outdoors as well as in the ground in summer. Free The Year Around. Package of seed with guarantee by mail, only Ten Cents. Expanded Co. Box 116 South Norwalk, Conn.

"BLLY" Sunday

and does the Scofield Reference Bible $1.50 and up
for sale by F. M. DAVIS
24 N. 16th Street, Philadelphia and postal card for free specimen pages

Don't-Snore"

U.S., Canada and British Patents.
Stops snoring and Mouth Breathing. Money refunded if it Don't. Keeps the nostrils open for normal breathing by reinforcing the muscles of the nose while asleep. Made of Rolled Gold. Comfortable the wearer is unconscious its presence. Sent under plain cover. Ask for booklet.
The B. B. B. Co., Inc., 712 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44
THE B. B. B. CO. Est. 1888 Hillsboro, Ohio

Fish Bite better, if you bait with Magic-Fish-Lure. Bait fish bait ever discovered. Write to-day get a box to help introduce it. Agents Wm. J. F. Gregory, K-127, St. Louis, Mo.

window Mateo could see the glitter of it in the sun.

The daughter of Mateo knew gold when she saw it. Her baby soul was thrifty. Gold meant many new dolls. Her tears dried miraculously as the Big Boss laid the money in her hand, and with a smile, as sudden as the sun after an April shower, she lifted up her dirty-cherub face. The Big Boss, with an embarrassed smile, kissed her.

Up in his remarkable little laboratory Mateo began to take the small black box apart. He laid the powders away.

The wheels of fate spin steadily on. The Big Boss still breaks people's dreams (for a spring day does not last), and the Wolf still makes bombs and leaves curt messages (for a gold piece does not convert the bad man of a city permanently); but the daughter of Mateo plays happily with a new doll, and Mary Ann still smiles!

THE RETURN OF POLLYANNA

Continued from page 449

fervently. "You needn't worry about that. And she won't mind. She has Jamie, you know, and—" He stopped short, a dawning dismay in his eyes. "Uncle John, I forgot—Jamie. This is going to be tough on—Jamie!"

"Yes, I'd thought of that. Still, he's legally adopted, isn't he?"

"Oh, yes; it isn't that. It's the fact that he isn't the real Jamie—himself—and he with his two poor useless legs! Why, Uncle John, it'll just about kill him. I've heard him talk. I know. Besides, Pollyanna and Mrs. Carew both have told me how he feels, how sure he is, and how happy he is. Uncle John, I can't take away from him this—but what can I do?"

"I don't know, my boy. I don't see as there's anything you can do but what you are doing."

There was a long silence. Jimmy had resumed his nervous pacing up and down the room. Suddenly he wheeled, his face alight.

"There is a way, and I'll do it. I know Mrs. Carew will agree. We won't tell! We won't tell anybody but Mrs. Carew herself, and—and Pollyanna and her aunt. I'll have to tell them," he added defensively.

"You certainly will, my boy. As for the rest—" John Pendleton paused doubtfully.

"It's nobody's business."

"But, remember, you are making quite a sacrifice—in several ways. I want you to weigh it well."

"Weigh it? I have weighed it, and there's nothing in it—with Jamie on the other side of the scales, sir. I just couldn't do it. That's all."

"I don't blame you, and I think you're right," declared John Pendleton heartily. "Furthermore, I believe Mrs. Carew will agree with you, particularly as she'll know now that the real Jamie is found at last."

"You know she's always said she'd seen me somewhere," chuckled Jimmy. "Now, how soon does that train go? I'm ready."

"Well, I'm not," laughed John Pendleton. "Luckily for me it doesn't go for some hours yet, anyhow," he finished, as he got to his feet and left the room.

CHAPTER XXXI A NEW ALADDIN

WHATEVER were John Pendleton's preparations for departure—and they were both varied and hurried—they were done in the open, with two exceptions. The exceptions were two letters, one addressed to Pollyanna and one to Mrs. Polly Chilton. These letters, together with careful and minute instructions, were given into the hands of Susan, his housekeeper, to be delivered after they should be gone. But of all this Jimmy knew nothing.

The travelers were nearing Boston when John Pendleton said to Jimmy:

"My boy, I've one favor to ask—or

Beech-Nut Peanut Butter

IN this age of Domestic Science study, the feeding of Children has changed—wholly for the better.

Nowadays a Mother consults the child's tastes—knowing that the Beech-Nut Peanut Butter sandwich, for instance, is all the more nutritious because it appeals to the palate.

There you have the secret of the wonderful success of Beech-Nut Peanut Butter.

The flavor is there—the flavor of a blend of selected peanuts; just the cream of the nuts delicately salted, roasted and crushed to a smooth butter.

Beech-Nut Peanut Butter comes in vacuum-sealed jars—three sizes, 10 cents, 15 cents, 25 cents (in the extreme West, a little more). Your grocer has it.

Makers of America's most famous Bacon—Beech-Nut Bacon

BEECH-NUT PACKING COMPANY
CANAJOHARIE, N. Y.

Only 5%

That's all the profit I want on my Split Hickory Vehicles. The big new book tells why. It contains the most remarkable price reduction offer ever made.

Get the Book

It also tells of the 30 days' Free Road Test and 2 years' guarantee. 112 pages and over 200 illustrations. Your name on a postal will bring the big book, also my new harness catalog. Address

H. C. Phelps, Pres.
THE OHIO CARRIAGE MFG. CO.
Station 220, Columbus, Ohio

Only $39.25

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.

THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO. Box 150 LIMA, OHIO.

Boston Garter

Vitrol Grip

Holds Your Sock Smooth as Your Skin

Men who dress well prefer the silk "Boston" for personal satisfaction.

LISLE 25¢ SILK 50¢

EVERYWHERE

GEORGE FROST CO., MAKERS, BOSTON

"These long, tough studs are scientifically correct" - - - - - - says Old Man Mileage

The principles governing the construction of the Republic Staggard Tread are based on study of road surfaces, on analysis of skidding dangers, on real knowledge of conditions that beset tires.

First of all, the studs are designed to meet the road in a longitudinal position, which insures a firm grip and prevents skidding and side slipping.

Second, they are "staggard," each row overlapping the other on the road, thus giving perfect traction and a smooth, even running surface.

Third, they are rounded at the ends, and therefore will not catch nails and other sharp objects.

Fourth, they have a filleted base and are set far enough apart to prevent trapping of sand and grit.

Fifth, they are set in six rows, thus distributing the strain over the largest possible area.

Add to these five points of superior tread construction the highest quality of material and workmanship obtainable, and you have in Republic Staggard Tread Tires the world's greatest non-skid mileage maker, the original, effective non-skid tire, that costs more to buy than many, but less to use than any.

Try a "find out" tire today. Write for "Old Man Mileage His Book," which contains facts of vital interest to every tire buyer.

THE REPUBLIC RUBBER CO., Youngstown, Ohio

Branches and Agencies in the Principal Cities

REPUBLIC TIRES

PLAIN, "WM"
AND STAGGARD TREADS

TRADE MARK REGISTERED
U. S. PATENT OFFICE

He whose paint lasts, paints best.
Your painter should know, and you should let him know that you know, that the ingredient which makes paint last longer and look better while it lasts is

Zinc

We have three books discussing Zinc from the three view-points of the parties most concerned.

For House Owner: "Your Move"

For Architects: "One of Your Problems"

For Painters: "Zinc That Made a Painter Rich"

Ask for yours. Sent free.

The New Jersey Zinc Company
Room 404, 55 Wall Street, New York

For big contract jobs consult our Research Bureau

rather, two. The first is that we say nothing to Mrs. Carew until tomorrow afternoon; the other is that you allow me to go first and be your—er—ambassador, you yourself not appearing on the scene until perhaps, say—four o'clock. Are you willing?"

"Indeed I am," replied Jimmy promptly; "not only willing, but delighted. I'd been wondering how I was going to break the ice, and I'm glad to have somebody else do it."

"Good! Then I'll try to get—your aunt on the telephone tomorrow morning and make my appointment."

True to his promise, Jimmy did not appear at the Carew mansion until four o'clock the next afternoon. Even then he felt so suddenly embarrassed that he walked twice by the house before he summoned sufficient courage to go up the steps and ring the bell. Once in Mrs. Carew's presence, however, he was soon his natural self, so quickly did she set him at his ease, and so tactfully did she handle the situation. To be sure, at the very first, there were a few tears, and a few incoherent exclamations. Even John Pendleton had to reach a hasty hand for his handkerchief. But before very long a semblance of normal tranquillity was restored.

"And I think it's so fine of you—about Jamie!" exclaimed Mrs. Carew, after a little. "Indeed, Jimmy—I shall still call you Jimmy, for obvious reasons; besides, I like it better, for you—indeed, I think you're just right, if you're willing to do it. And I'm making some sacrifice myself, too," she went on, tearfully, "for I should be so proud to introduce you to the world as my nephew."

"And indeed, Aunt Ruth, I—" At a half-stifled exclamation from John Pendleton, Jimmy stopped abruptly. He saw then that Jamie and Sadie Dean stood just inside the door. Jamie's face was very white.

"Aunt Ruth!" he exclaimed, looking from one to the other with startled eyes. "Aunt Ruth! You don't mean—"

All the blood receded from Mrs. Carew's face, and from Jimmy's, too. John Pendleton, however, advanced jauntily.

"Yes, Jamie; why not? I was going to tell you soon, anyway, so I'll tell you now." Jimmy gasped and stepped hastily forward, but John Pendleton silenced him with a look. "Just a little while ago Mrs. Carew made me the happiest of men by saying yes to a certain question I asked. Now, as Jimmy calls me 'Uncle John,' why shouldn't he begin right away to call Mrs. Carew 'Aunt Ruth'?"

"Oh! Oh-h!" exclaimed Jamie, in plain delight, while Jimmy under John Pendleton's steady gaze managed to save the situation by not blurting out his surprise and pleasure. Naturally, too, just then, blushing Mrs. Carew became the center of every one's interest, and the danger point was passed. Only Jimmy heard John Pendleton say low in his ear, a bit later:

"So you see, you young rascal, I'm not going to lose you, after all. We shall both have you now."

Exclamations and congratulations were still at their height when Jamie, a new light in his eyes, turned without warning to Sadie Dean.

"Sadie, I'm going to tell them now," he declared triumphantly. Then, with a bright flood of color in Sadie's face telling the tender story before even Jamie's eager lips could frame the words, more congratulations and exclamations were in order, and everybody was laughing and shaking hands with everybody else.

Jimmy, however, very soon began to eye them all aggrievedly, longingly.

"This is all very well for you," he complained then. "You each have each other. But where do I come in? I can just tell you, though, that if only a certain young lady I know were here, that I should have something to tell you, perhaps."

"Just a minute, Jimmy," interposed John Pendleton. "Let's play I was Aladdin, and let me rub my lamp. Mrs. Carew, have I your permission to ring for Mary?"

"Why, y-yes, certainly," murmured that lady, in a puzzled surprise that found its duplicate on the faces of others.

A few moments later Mary stood in the doorway.

"Did I hear Miss Pollyanna come in a short time ago?" asked John Pendleton.

"Yes, sir. She is here."

"Won't you ask her to come own please?"

"Pollyanna here!" exclaimed an amazed chorus, as Mary disappeared. Jimmy turned very white, the very red.

"Yes. I sent a note to her yesterday by my housekeeper. I took the very first of asking her down for a few days to see you, Mrs. Carew. I thought the little girl needed a rest and a holiday; and my housekeeper has instructions to remain and care for Mrs. Clifton. I also wrote a note to Mrs. Chilton, 'herself,' he added, turning suddenly to Jimmy, with unmistakable meaning in his eyes. "And I thought after she read what I said that she'd let Pollyanna come. It seems she did, for here she is."

And there she was in the doorway, blushing, starry-eyed, yet with a bit shy and questioning.

"Pollyanna, dearest!" It was Jimmy who sprang forward to meet her, who, without one minute's hesitation, took her in his arms and kissed her.

"Oh, Jimmy, before all these people!" breathed Pollyanna in a roused protest.

"Pooh! I should have kissed you then, Pollyanna, if you'd been sitting in the middle of—of Washington Street itself," vowed Jimmy. "For that matter, look at—all these people, and see for yourself if you'd worry about them."

And Pollyanna looked, and showed. Over by one window, backs carefully turned, Jamie and Sadie Dean; or by the other window, backs also carefully turned, Mrs. Carew and John Pendleton.

Pollyanna smiled—so adorably that Jimmy kissed her again.

"Oh, Jimmy, isn't it all beautiful and wonderful?" she sighed. "And Aunt Polly—she knows everything now and it's all right. I think it would have been all right, anyway. She was beginning to feel so bad—for me. Now she—she's so glad. And I am, too. Why, Jimmy, I'm glad, glad, glad for—everything, now!"

Jimmy caught his breath with joy that hurt.

"God grant, little girl, that it may be so—with you," he chattered unsteadily, his arms holding her close.

"I'm sure it will," sighed Pollyanna, with shining eyes of confidence.

THE END

Some Day

SOME day, I wonder when that time will be,
When all the world to all the world is in,
I wish I might be living then to see
This dear old world all free from strife and sin.

When every heart to every heart is true
And each and all are living in the rig
When God is real to me and real to you
And earth has lent her force to heaven's might.

But you and I have each a task to do,
To help in bringing that glad day about
If every soul to his own soul were true,
That day would quickly come, there is no doubt.

Then let us each give to the world our little share,
And make the little space around us rare,
If each were true to each and all the rest,
Your corner would be bright and sweet and best.

That we might have a part in God's great plan,
Might shine, a star, in heavenly diad,
Has been his will since e'er the world began,
To bring Christ's "Peace on earth, and good-will to men."

CORA A. A. M.S.

A Cry from China

LITTLE HAI IEH TSI (the "Abused Child") is a story of Childhood and its Heavens in China. All who are interested in sweet and innocent childhood will find this a fascinating story. A postal card addressed to "China Orphans, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York," will bring you free copies of this illustrated booklet.

This Car—This Company—This Price Command Your Consideration

This month—today perhaps—you are going to make your choice of a motor car. We hope your choice will be a Hupmobile. We feel sure you will buy a Hupmobile, when you know its great value—realize what wonderful satisfaction Hupmobile ownership will give you.

The Hupmobile prestige—its enviable reputation as the leader among $1200 cars—forces its consideration upon you. In six years we have built just three chassis models.

The Hupmobile "20" was the first, and remains today the greatest of all cars in its class.

The Hupmobile "32" added immeasurably to our reputation as quality car builders. Its owners say it is the best car of its type.

Now we want you to know the 1915 Hupmobile—the best car, we believe, of its class. Certainly the best car we ever built. Judge it by Hupmobile standards of the past.

Prove to yourself—as over 48,000 others have proved—that here is a moderately priced car with every essential of motor satisfaction. Let us go over the big value of the Hupmobile together.

Big in Roominess

The Hupmobile's wheelbase is 119 inches—longer than the average five-passenger car. So much room is afforded that seven passengers can be seated in comfort.

Yet the Hupmobile turns a complete circle in a 40 foot street.

No car at the price has a longer wheelbase, or more room, front and back.

Big in Comfort

Cushions are deep and soft; seat backs high and restful; upholstery shaped to fit the body; seats pitched at precisely the right angle.

Long, flexible, semi-elliptic springs smooth a rough road and take the shock of the bumps. Also, they are self-lubricating; they never squeak.

Its low-hung design is an advantage because it makes the car steadier and easier-riding.

The driver easily reaches the pedals, levers and switches.

Gear-shifting is reduced to the minimum by the engine's great flexibility. The long stroke does that.

Big in Quality

Hupmobile quality is assured by two agencies.

First, the engineering department, through its material specifications.

Second, the inspections and re-inspections which materials and parts must pass.

Our engineers specify, for instance, that the Hupmobile crankshaft be forged from the same high quality steel that goes into the crankshaft of the most expensive cars.

Nothing short of bronze bearings, lined with babbitt and fitted by the costly hand process, satisfies them for the crankshaft.

They distinguish the Hupmobile from other cars around its price by putting spiral-bevel gears in the rear axle.

Material is inspected when it is received.

The rough product is inspected before machining.

The machine product is inspected.

Assembled units must pass another inspection.

The finished car, after road testing, is inspected before shipment.

Five inspections in all—each accurate to the thousandth part of an inch—are made to safeguard Hupmobile quality.

Big in Economy

Hupmobile economy is a big factor—this car does cost less to run.

The average cost of all the Hupmobile repair parts sold, on the basis of 8000 miles per car per year, is less than ¼ cent per mile.

Owners are reporting an average of over 18 miles to the gallon of gasoline, and 800 miles on a gallon of oil for the 1915 model.

Tires are 10 per cent larger in proportion to weight than on other cars using the same size—34 x 4 inches.

It is this in-built quality that makes the Hupmobile the fastest selling $1200 car. We tell you honestly that we shall not be able to fill all orders for 1915 Hupmobiles. Surely you know that the 1915 Hupmobile has attained this position only through fulfillment of our every claim; through delivering fullest satisfaction; through living up to the Hupmobile reputation for quality.

You owe it to your own good judgment and to us because of our reputation, to accept our offer to prove the Hupmobile to you. See the 1915 models at the nearest dealer's. Ride in them—drive them. Put the Hupmobile to a real merit test. Then order your car now so you can get the greatest enjoyment out of this best of motoring seasons.

Five-passenger Touring Car and Roadster	$1200
Seven-passenger Touring Car	1225
Five-passenger Sedan	1365
Coupe	1325

Hupp Motor Car Company
Detroit, Michigan

Write for the 1915
Year Book

NON-SKID

-An Exclusive
Sign

THE word "Non-Skid" was originally a general term, but now, in the minds of thousands of motorists, by right of extras in service, it has come to stand for—

Firestone

Those powerful angled slabs forming the Non-Skid letters are just so much added rubber—just so much added mileage.

This extra wear with sure skid-prevention has linked inseparably the words "Non-Skid" and "Firestone."

Yet they cost no more than the ordinary.

See price list below. Your dealer will supply you.

Firestone Tire and Rubber Co.

"America's Largest Exclusive Tire and Rim Makers"

Akron, Ohio—Branches and Dealers Everywhere

Firestone Net Prices to Car Owners:

	Case Round Tread	Case Non-Skid	Grey Tube	Red Tube
30x3	$ 9.40	$10.55	$2.20	$2.50
30x3 1/2	11.90	13.35	2.60	2.90
32x3 1/2	13.75	15.40	2.70	3.05
34x4	19.90	22.30	3.90	4.40
34x4 1/2	27.30	30.55	4.80	5.40
36x4 1/2	28.70	32.15	5.00	5.65
37x5	35.55	39.80	5.95	6.70
38x5 1/2	46.00	51.50	6.75	7.55

Great Introductory Offer!

Blank's Famous Sanitary Drip Coffee Pot, complete, only $1, with a 50c pound of World's Renowned FAUST FREE COFFEE absolutely FREE. This surprising offer starts you right using FAUST COFFEE. Goes twice as far as any ground coffee. Send $1 and grocer's name for pot and coffee. Charges paid east of Denver.

Write today.
C.F. BLANK
Tea & Coffee Co.
Dept. D
St. Louis, Mo.

$1

THERE IS A BEST IN BIBLES AS IN OTHER THINGS

Patent Unbreakable Back.

Why not get the Best?

At bookstores or of JAMES POTT & CO., Publishers, 214 E. 23rd St., N. Y.

WANTED in every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl to represent The Christian Herald. This is an opportunity to build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address: Agency Dept., THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Bible House, New York City

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER—30 days free trial on this finest of bicycles—the "Ranger." We will ship it to you on approval, freight prepaid—without a cent deposit in advance. This offer absolutely genuine. WRITE TODAY for our big catalog showing our full line of bicycles for men and women, boys and girls at prices never before equalled for like quality. It is a cyclopedia of bicycles, sundries and useful bicycle information. It's free.

TIRES, COASTER-BRAKE rear wheels, inner tubes, lamps, cyclometers, equipment and parts for all bicycles at half usual prices. A limited number of second-hand bicycles taken in trade will be closed out at once, at $3 to $8 each.

RIDER AGENTS wanted in each town to ride and exhibit a sample 1915 Model Ranger furnished by us. It costs you nothing to learn what we offer and how we can do it. You will be astonished and convinced. Do not buy a bicycle, tires or sundries until you get our catalog and new special offers. Write today.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. D-71, CHICAGO, ILL.

MONUMENTS

White Bronze is more enduring than stone and is more responsible. Over $200,000 worth sold through Christian Herald alone. Write for free booklet, beautifully illustrated. We will send selected designs if you state approximate size or price.

Reliable Representatives Wanted
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
355P Howard Ave. Bridgeport, Conn.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

Continued from page 441
been received of any movement of these troops.

Not a word has reached us concerning the campaign in Asia Minor between the Turks and Russians, nor has there been any known activity by the Russian or Turkish fleets in the Black Sea during the week. In fact, the only activities reported from the East are that the French battleship St. Louis bombarded an important Turkish camp near Gaza in southern Palestine. This is the first time this place has figured in the bulletins. Also that the Turks are invading Persia in force. This movement seems to have the head of the Persian Gulf, where there is quite a British force, as its objective.

The condition of Serbia, resulting from the epidemic of typhus, seems to grow worse. The number of deaths is stated to be enormous, and the facilities for caring for the sick are almost nil. The attention of Europe is being turned very seriously to this condition, as it constitutes a grave danger to the world, since this disease is very easily carried and spreads rapidly.

[The United States also is taking active interest in the Serbian situation, and the Rockefeller Foundation is sending an expedition there with in all probability will be headed by Major General William C. Gorgas, surgeon general of the army. The Foundation announces that General Gorgas has been offered a permanent post as its general advisor regarding sanitation and the control of epidemics, and in that capacity would go to Serbia and direct the work of stopping the typhus epidemic there. General Gorgas, if he goes to Serbia, may be instrumental in stamping out what might even become a world epidemic. —EDITOR.]

TOM BROWN—Alias Thomas Mott Osborne

Continued from page 436
1915, the prisoners' court disciplined 34, the warden 9.

Most marvelous of all is the story of the "dope." The new warden confesses that that problem seemed so difficult that he postponed attacking it till he had formulated a definite plan. The plan was hard to find; then suddenly he learned that the problem had settled itself.

It is a ghastly memory of the old system, that the system itself had much to do with making so many of the men drug fiends. Most of all, it was the plan of Sabbath observance that drove the men to the habit. Are you remembering the size of those cells? Well then, fancy being locked in one of them from Saturday night till Monday morning, let out only for Sunday breakfast and Sunday morning chapel service. This was done so that the guards might have their Sunday rest. If by chance a holiday followed a Sabbath, the men were locked in their cells from Saturday night till Tuesday morning. The nervous tension was unbearable. Most of the outbreaks and riots occurred after one of these "double-headers." In seeking relief from the horrors of this long, close confinement, the men took to drugs. The "dope" was smuggled in in every way. Visitors brought it. Guards sold it. In one way or another the prisoners got it, and the dreadful habit had the prison in its grip.

Then one day the warden met a man whom he had seen two months previously on his release from hospital where he had received treatment for the habit, and who told the warden that he dreaded to go back among the men, because he had a gold watch, and feared he would not be able to resist the temptation of trading it with certain guards for "dope." The man now was straight and stalwart. He told the warden he had gained forty pounds in two months.

"How have you managed to get along without the dope?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"Warden," the man replied, "I don't think you could find an ounce of it in the prison today."

The new system, the new spirit, has banished it. What the law could not do, the spirit of brotherhood has done.

This is the new system. Under the old, silence, torture, hatred. The men were not allowed to talk to one another. Day by day, week by week, month by month, year by year they lived in sullen, silent hatred. Now they live in the joys of fellowship, good cheer and service, and look forward eagerly for a chance to show society that as they have made good in the league they can and will make good in the world. Another prison acquaintance of my friend has stated that during the twenty-one years of his imprisonment at Sing Sing the time he spent strung up by his thumbs would equal three months. Fortunately in his case a mission stepped in and brought him the good news of the Gospel that puts love in a man's heart.

But at Sing Sing, Warden Osborne and his Mutual Welfare League are doing that thing today. They are demonstrating how love is to win its way finally throughout the world.

He was christened Thomas Mott Osborne. His relatives, his friends, and the public know him by that name. But in the hearts of the prisoners is Tom Brown, "my pal." And because he is the prisoners' pal, he wears a suit not unlike the prison gray, and a muffler that cannot be distinguished from a prison sweater.

CAMPBELL'S VARNISH STAIN

People are finding out more and more each year what a wonderful finish Campbell's Varnish Stain is for floors, furniture, and all interior woodwork; but although tests show Campbell's to be the most satisfactory Varnish Stain ever produced, we want more people to know about it, hence this advertisement.

We are anxious to tell you about it because we know what it will do. We absolutely guarantee satisfaction with every can.

Stains and varnishes with one sweep of the brush. With it you yourself can fix up that little job whether it be floor, table, chair, or what not.

Get Campbell's and get satisfaction.

If your dealer cannot supply you we will send a half-pint can (any color), enough to cover 25 sq. ft. 2 coats, together with a handsome Fly Swatter, prepaid, for 25c. In stamps, providing you enclose your dealer's name with order. Name color desired.

13 COLORS natural wood, light oak, dark oak, walnut, cherry, mahogany, green, rosewood, white enamel, flat black, gloss black, piazza green, and piazza red. Also ground color and surface for graining.

All Sizes: 1/4 Pints to 1 Gallon.

MANUFACTURED BY Carpenter-Morton Co.
ESTABLISHED 1840
85 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.

HARVEST TIME IN CHINA

Continued from page 437

as they manage not only to fill their mouths, but their little earning the whole family to go over the des. Beggars we have, too plenty, bi they are mostly from other distrs. Many poor there are, but most of them have a roof called home, a qit and food for the day. Prices for bid fluctuate, it is said, according tone size and style of Western headge. Needless to say that wars and ruors of wars also sadly affect the pres. China's own use of straw hats he greatly increased in recent years. Wn the Ching Dynasty wore the cr'n, China was practically a hatless npon; but with the passing of the cr'n went the queue, at least to some exnt, and with the passing of the que comes the need of a hat.

THE end of the wheat harvest comes the feast day that is the deht of children and grown-ups as we. It probably accounts in part for the joyful anticipation of the harvest tir.

i the fifth day of the fifth moon everybody eats "tzongtzers"—small bakes of sweetmeat rice and sugar plus, done up in three-cornered shape an wrapped in rush leaves. This fer day, they say, dates back three thousand years, and the legend is this: The was a great and good official, Kian. He didn't want to be an official—didn't want to rule. Perhaps the was already, at that early age, son corruption in office that made it unlatabe to the conscience of a go man. But the emperor said he mu rule, and the people said he must rule and so distraught was he by the difficulty of his position that he threw himelf into the river and ended his troles by drowning. Then his people, to ovide his spirit with food, threw ma things into the water; but everythi they threw in was eaten by the fish; until somebody concocted the "tzgtzers," wrapped them in rush leas and threw them into the water. Thish did not eat them, so they have eve since been sacred to the spirit of the god Kii An. Years ago the custom of throwing them into the river ceased; doubtless it was felt that the spirit was satisfied—but the custom of making the toothsome balls is kept up, and many a one goes into the little stomachs of the fat little Shantungese.

The autumn harvest is not less interesting than that of June. In September the "gaw liang" (or tall grain) is ripe. Like solid walls it has lined every road and pathway. It is so tall and dense that it affords an excellent hiding-place for thieves and robbers, and all travel at this season must reckon with these factors. Like the wheat it is pulled up by the roots, with the difference that the roots of this grain are first chopped all around with a sharp hoe. Probably from the vigor with which this act is accomplished, it is called "slaying" the grain, instead of pulling it. The long blades are stripped from the stalk as high as a man can reach, and this serves as stock food. The roots are used for fuel, and the stalks for a variety of purposes—for walls, for roofing, for basketry and mats. It is to North China almost what bamboo is to the South. The threshing process is similar to that of wheat. The grain corresponds somewhat to the kaffir corn known in other parts of the world. It makes a rich, reddish meal, the main foodstuff of the masses.

The foliage of trees here does not take on the autumn tints found in other lands, but nature makes amends in advance by giving to the grain fields her most gorgeous hues. Each stalk of the "gaw liang" is topped with grain, which in the ripening season is a glorious study in color. From green it shades to gold and brown and at times all are softly blended into one, and reproduced in the stalk and blade. By the side of the "gaw liang" grows the millet, its graceful heads hanging full of the porridge food, which is to supply all these millions. After the "gaw liang" and the millet comes the bean crop, and after the beans promptly comes the plowing for next year's wheat.

THE PRAYER LEAGUE

LAGUE Scripture for April: "As the earth bringeth forth her bud and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to bring forth, so the Lord God will cau righteousness and praise to sprg forth before all the nations." Isa:1: 11.

Te acknowledgments of answered prar this week are unusually rich and varied. "Some time ago," writes G. J. G., "I was anxious to be free froi debt, and asked the Lord to help in the of need. He did so almost immedately." L. P. writes: "I wish to acknwledge answer to prayer for relief from physical and mental suffering. I was so weary and discouraged whe I wrote you a short time ago. I want to give thanks to God." A Friend froi Michigan writes, rejoicing that he is been able to quit the morphine hab and that the appetite for it has been entirely taken away. This friend ask prayer for perfect healing from long continued illness. Mrs. A. L. P. writes from East San Diego, Calif.: "Soe time ago I wrote asking prayers for e healing of my two children and mysf. I am happy to say that God has answered my prayers. The children have not been sick a day since, and have not been so well for years." A. P. writes: "I asked prayer for final help when I could see no way of retng my obligations. I thought that great amount of money would be set to enable me to pay my indebtedns, but it is not so. But every time ne money to meet a debt a way has beerovided." S. A. S. writes from Emria, Kan.: "The mother and children for whom I asked prayers are well. Mrs. E. A. R. acknowledges ansr to prayer for being able to buy a hee.

Acknowledgments of answers to prayers have also been received from:

Mrs. B. G., Hagers Grove, Mo.; Mrs. W. F. K., Eckert, Col. (for answers to a great many prayers); Subscriber, Texas (for relief from financial embarrassment); Mrs. E. W., Brooklyn, N. Y. (for restoration to health); A Friend, Morgan Park, Minn.; Mrs. J. S. W., Lincoln, Neb.; Mrs. H. E. P., Carrolltown, Pa. (for a stirring revival in the community); C. C. J., Swift River, Mass.; Mrs. J. W. R. (for selling farm and for answer to many other prayers); One of the Christian Herald Family, Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. H. C. S., East Fairfield, Vt. (for restoration of son's health); A. D. B., Ohio (for relief from financial difficulty); Mrs. M. E. S., Defiance, Iowa (for a deeper work of grace); S. L. C., Lawrenceville, Pa.; Mrs. C. H. R., Gowanda, N. Y.; F. E. J., Nelsonville, Ohio, who sends a joyous testimony of having been saved twenty years ago from the curse of strong drink; Mrs. F. L. R., Bayfield, N. B. (for special spiritual blessing); Mrs. E. A. R. (for being enabled to buy a home).

A mother requests that a special time be appointed for prayer for her little son who is in very delicate health. It is suggested that next Sunday, May 2, be made the time of this special prayer. A Mother in the West wrote recently asking prayer that two sons and a grandson be converted and saved from the drink habit. She writes that one of her sons is now reading the Bible every day and asks that earnest prayers be made for his conversion and deliverance from the drink habit. She also asks for the conversion and blessing of other members of her family, and that the cause of state-wide prohibition in Nebraska may triumph.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at Fond du Lac, Minn.; Winona, Texas; Gowanda, N. Y.; Verona, Texas; Glenwood Springs, Colo.; at the Swedish Baptist Church, San Diego, Calif.; a church at Olive, N. Y.; Ellsburg, Pa. Prayers are also asked that many be saved at revival meetings at

REGAL

Here's Your Car

No matter how exacting your needs, among the Three Regals is a car admirably adapted to your use.

The Light Four—Regal—provides you a handsome streamline, five passenger car—unusual in size, appearance and performance—but light of weight and so economical to operate, at $650.

The Standard Four—Regal—supplies a larger more powerful and luxurious car—the standard in size, beauty and equipment among four cylinder cars, selling at $1085.

The De Luxe Eight—Offers the highest development in gasoline motors—the powerful, flexible, balanced eight. The smooth vibrationless operation of which makes a ride in it a new and pleasing sensation in motoring—Price $1250.

All these models are five passenger capacity—fully equipped, including electric lights and starter—have crown fenders, demountable rims and one man tops. Send for literature and name of nearest dealer.

Regal Motor Car Co

6640 Piquette Ave.
DETROIT, MICH.

Light Four $650

INITIALS FOR STAMPING

270 of your own initial letters, assorted designs, in book form for stamping personal and household linens. Sent postpaid for 12 cents.
The Ullman Manufacturing Co., 342 East 59th St., N. Y.

SHINES LIKE A MIRROR

Try this easy 3-in-One way: Wring out a soft cloth in cold water and put on a few drops of 3-in-One. Then wipe your piano, dining room table, buffet, chairs—any tin, varnished or veneered furniture. Dry and polish with clean, dry cheese cloth. (Be sure to rub always with the grain of the wood; never rub in circles.)

All the grime and soil, all the marks of ordinary wear and tear, will positively vanish. Back comes the original beauty and lustre of wood. 3-in-One contains no grease to rub off on your clothes; no acid to injure; no usual furniture polish odor. Just a clear, pure oil preparation that women have been using constantly for over 17 years—because it's so good.

Rub the leather seats and backs of your furniture with a soft cloth moistened with a little 3-in-One. This prevents the leather from hardening, cracking or rotting. Mrs. Alvin Gaumer, Blandinsville, Ill., writes: "As a furniture polish 3-in-One is the best I have ever tried."

FREE—Write today for a generous free bottle and the 3-in-One Dictionary. Try before you buy.

At all good stores in 3 size bottles: 10c, 25c, 50c. (New 50c Half Pint size is the money saving home size.)

3-IN-ONE OIL CO.

42 CF. BROADWAY.
New York City

3 IN 1

TABLE GRACES

For DAILY USE SPECIAL DAYS and OCCASIONS
All Will Welcome This New Book of Graces. Postpaid. Paper, 25c. Cloth, 50c. M. E. MUNSON, 77 Bible House, New York, N.Y.

$35 FOR THIS KENYON HOUSE

IT will bring to your very door all the fun and health of camping out without the discomforts of roughing it. Set it up on your back lawn and have a cool, shady refuge from the summer sun, an airy sleeping place on sultry nights. And when vacation time comes this weather-proof house will provide a comfortable summer home, rent free, at your favorite camping ground. Twenty other sizes, $16 to $320.

Write for beautifully illustrated catalog.

The R. L. Kenyon Company,
411 Albert St. WAUKESHA, WIS.

LUXEBERRY WHITE ENAMEL

Whitest White · Stays White

In the wake of the brush

A surface finished with Luxeberry White Enamel becomes whitest white and lastingly so. No trace of brush marks remain—only a smooth snow-white effect, dull or brilliant as you prefer. It is a finish that never turns yellow, nor does it chip or crack.

You can enjoy these unusual qualities—heretofore obtainable only in imported enamels—by specifying and using American-made Luxeberry White Enamel.

The varnish for your floors and exposed natural woodwork should be of highest quality, too. Liquid Granite like other celebrated Berry Brothers' products has withstood the hardest wear and tear in homes and public buildings for over 57 years.

These products are specified by architects, used by painters and decorators and sold by paint and hardware dealers everywhere. Let us send you free interesting literature on home finishing.

BERRY BROTHERS
World's Largest Varnish Makers
Established 1858

Factories: Detroit, Mich., Walkerville, Ont., San Francisco, Cal.
Branches in all principal cities of the world

MEMBER RICE LEADERS OF THE WORLD ASSOCIATION

LIQUID GRANITE

Lasting Waterproof Floor Varnish

WANTED Vacuum Cleaner Agents
We want a live Vacuum Cleaner agent in every locality to sell one of the world's best vacuum cleaners, on easy payments. We carry all deferred payments. Easy to sell on this plan. Big profits for you. Write for particulars and illustrated matter.

Sweeper Cleaner Co.
500 Lakeside Bldg. Chicago, Ill.

Tells why chicks die

E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert of 910 Main St., Kansas City, Mo., is giving away free a valuable book entitled "White Diarrhoea and How to Cure It." This book contains scientific facts on white diarrhoea and tells how to prepare a simple home solution that cures this terrible disease over night and actually raises 98 per cent of every hatch. All poultry raisers should certainly write Mr. Reefer for one of these valuable FREE books.

Cornish Why Shouldn't You Buy As Low As Any Dealer?

Will Be Sent to You For a Year's Trial

More than 250,000 people have made a big saving on a high-grade piano and a first-class organ in purchasing by the Cornish plan—and so can you. We offer to send you an instrument, freight paid if you wish, with the understanding that if it is not sweeter and richer in tone and better made than any you can find elsewhere at very much more than we ask, you may at any time within a year send it back at our expense, and we will return any sum that you may have paid on it, so that the trial will cost you absolutely nothing—you and your friends to be the judge and we to find no fault with your decision.

You Choose Your Own Terms

Take Three Years To Pay If Needed. The Cornish Plan, in brief, makes the maker prove his instrument and saves you the tidy sum that other manufacturers of high-grade instruments must charge to protect their dealers and agents.

Let Us Send To You Free The New Cornish Book

It is the most beautiful piano or organ catalog ever published. It shows our latest styles and explains everything you should know before buying any instrument. It shows why you cannot buy any other high-grade organ or piano anywhere on earth at as attractive a price. You should have this important information before making your selection. Write for it today and please mention Dept. "C. H."

Cornish Co. Washington, N. J.
Established over 50 Years

Colver, Pa.; for the camp-meeting to be held at Seashore camp grounds, New Orleans, during the second week in July; for a revival throughout the state of Utah; for state-wide prohibition in Nebraska, and that the saloons be voted out of Lincoln at the coming May election; for state-wide prohibition in Texas; that a league be formed to prevent the selling of cigarettes to boys; T. G., of Ellensburg, Pa., asks prayer for success in starting a Christian mission; M. L. S., for help in opening a missionary work; R. P. T., that some definite work for Christ may be given him.

Nearly every week one or more readers suggests prayer for a world-wide revival. While praying for lesser blessings and for special blessing upon certain localities, we should never lose sight of this greatest desire of every Christian heart, that the whole world may be won to the Saviour.

Mrs. J. W. asks prayer that her son's mind may be restored; Mrs. B. J. E., her husband's; G. W. F. and "A Believer," their brothers'; Mr. A. J., her mother's; A Subscriber, a sister's. Ten other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening of other relatives, friends, or for themselves.

Seven friends ask prayer for restoration or strengthening of sight for themselves or others.

A Mother asks prayer that God will take away the appetite for drink from her son and daughter. Twelve other friends ask prayer that dear ones may be saved from the drink habit.

A Mother asks prayer that her daughter may be cured of the morphine habit; Mrs. D. E. C., that a relative may be cured of the drug habit.

Forty-three friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Thirty-one parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons, including one that son may be thoroughly converted and return home.

Ten wives ask prayer for the conversion of their husbands.

Forty-three friends ask prayer for the conversion of other relatives and friends.

Ten readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends, including one that husband may win souls for the Master and gain the confidence of his friends.

Two husbands ask prayer for the healing of their wives; six wives or the healing of their husbands; four parents for the healing of daughters; eight for the healing of sons; fifteen friends ask prayer for healing of self, including one for the regaining of her power of speech; one, for regaining use of limbs, and two that they may be cured of lameness; forty readers ask prayer for healing of other relatives or friends, including one at sister may be strengthened in body and mind.

Ten friends ask prayer for the healing of hearing for themselves or friends.

Thirty-eight friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Forty-eight friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including one for a man who is despondent, another that son may be reconciled to his wife and child, another that an old lady may be delivered from trouble, another that God may give a child, another that son may return home, another that a false accusation be taken back and friends reconciled, another that an absentee may communicate with sorrowing parents, another that she may have a child and may overcome an affliction. Seven friends ask prayer that burden be lifted, one a "terrible burden."

BAKERS AND THE PRICE OF BREAD

Correspondents Defend Rise

THE price of wheat has risen one-third. The best grades of hard wheat flour formerly cost from $1.20 to $1.35 a sack (wholesale rates). It is now $1.75; that is the very best price we can get here. Now, it seems to me that the addition of one cent per loaf to the price of bread is small in comparison to the increase in the cost of flour. I know what I am talking about, for I bake and sell bread. Ours is a ten-cent loaf of home-made bread. We have not increased the price, but we make our loaves two ounces smaller, and that does not nearly make up to us for the difference in the price of flour. It seems to me that if bakers made only a reasonable profit on a five-cent loaf eight months ago, they are not robbing any one by charging six cents now, when flour is so much higher.

Vinita, Okla. AGNES RUSSELL.

An Up-State Baker's View

THE Christian Herald of March 24, 1915, contains an editorial on "The Price of Bread." The subject "The Price of Bread" has certainly been well discussed in the press during the past few weeks, and surely no one should object to such discussion, if conducted fairly and intelligently. Any one who knows about the business would see at once the absurdity of many of the statements made in the articles published in the daily papers; but the people who do not know these facts are likely to be misled and prejudiced by them.

There are certain facts that must be considered. First, the price of flour has greatly increased above its normal value, and this must mean that the manufacturer of bread must in some way get more for his product. If he, fortunately, has contracted in advance for flour covering a long period, and is willing to give his customers the advantage of his foresight or good fortune, he may for a time continue to sell at the usual price. It is hardly fair, however, to expect that he should give his profit in this way. Again, because of the increased cost of doing business due to legislation in recent years, and the increasing demand of the people for larger service, the manufacturer and seller of bread cannot afford to sell his product on as low a basis as formerly.

If I may be permitted to do so, I would like to make some inquiries regarding the "one man satisfied with honest profits" referred to in the editorial of March 24. Did he pay a normal rent and were his expenses such as might be usual in an established business? Did the facts that he was selling bread at a lower price than most of his competitors, and that he was getting an immense amount of free advertising, enable him to sell his bread with less expense than would be possible in ordinary times? Is he still doing business and as successful as when his competitors were charging six cents per loaf? How much had he give for five cents?

It is very possible that bread at five cents per loaf may cost the consumer more per pound than bread at six cents per loaf, and bakers could afford to give more value by weight in six-cent than in a five-cent loaf. I do not quite understand the statement about his twenty per cent. clear profit. If it were a clear profit above all expenses, why did he give half to the retailer? The statement seems to mean that this man, conducting an extensive business in a normal way and yet paying an advanced price for the chief item used in the making of bread, was able, after paying all costs of manufacture and selling, to show a clear profit of twenty per cent. I think I know a few men who, even when flour is selling at an average price, would like a business that would yield a profit of the order even of one-half that amount.

I am not trying to justify that attempt made in your city to advance the price per loaf of bread. I do not know enough of the bread situation there to enable me to express an opinion on that subject, but I do believe the subject important.

CHARLES A. HAGAM.
Albany, N. Y.

You Get the Discount

When the big Wholesaler or Jobber buys a bill of goods, he demands and is always allowed a certain reduction for cash payment.

The Consumer pays the full price for the goods, unless he takes advantage of the Sherry System of sharing profits.

When You Insist on Having Hamilton Coupons

You obtain a genuine Discount, payable in premiums at any of our 600 Merchandise Banks in the United States.

Your effort ends when you buy those goods with which the manufacturer is wise enough to pack

Hamilton PROFIT SHARING COUPONS

By linking the Hamilton Coupon with the Famous J.N. Green Trading Stamps, we are able to guarantee the most generous and widest distribution of standard merchandise—Premiums—offered by any organization in the world. You may take your choice from over 4,000 items, including everything from Furniture to Fine Jewelry.

THE HAMILTON CORPORATION

2 West 45th Street

GEORGE B. CALDWELL, Pres.

New York City

BRANCHES EVERYWHERE IN THE UNITED STATES

The Name Behind the Goods

Always at Your Service, Sir!"

For a trip around the block or cross the continent—in fair weather foul—the CASE Car is ever a willing, eager companion. It always takes you "there" and back again—complainingly.

On good roads or bad, it never sitates or stops—except at your ill. Sit at its wheel and the world yours.

Its serviceability is balanced its unusual comfort. Women e the CASE because its genuine leather upholstery on very ep cushions and long, flexible cantilever springs make it tremely comfortable, even for all-day trip.

The CASE Car comes ready for the road. No "extras" to buy. Its regular equipment includes added features found in no other car in this class—ones you'll have to buy. Such as extra tire and tube on rim with tire cover, Weed non-skid tire chains and 8-day clock. If the CASE were equipped as other cars it would cost $1239.75.

So, with the added equipment, and 5 per cent off for cash, the CASE is by far the best buy on the market.

FREE—Our new booklet describing the famous CASE Car. Merely send postcard. Dept. 561.

J.I. CASE T.M. COMPANY, Inc., Racine, Wis.

Founded 1842

This Catalog SAVED My $6⁵⁰ Husband on his last Suit

Bell Tailors made him the best looking suit he ever wore—and he saved $6.50 on it.

Write for this Bell Tailors' Style Book today—it will show you how you positively get a

$20 Suit made to measure $13.50

By selling direct by mail, by means of our catalog, we eliminate so many in-between costs—such as salesmen, commission-men, and retailers' profits, that we positively give you a $20 suit for $13.50. You get the smartest New York style in clothes made to your individual measure.

Our self-measuring outfit is 100% efficient—and we guarantee a perfect fit from the measurements you send us.

No matter how satisfied you are with your present clothes, you owe it to yourself to investigate our positive guarantee to save you at least one-third of your clothes money.

Send for the Bell Style-Book and 64 Samples. It will save you at least $6.50.

Bell Tailors of New York
228-230 Canal Street, New York

The Flag of 1915

In these days, when nearly every great nation is at war, "Old Glory" is one of the few flags that are not being riddled with bullets. It is really the "Peace Flag" of the world today.

Have you a Flag for use on Memorial Day, Flag Day, and Fourth of July?

Our 1915 Flag (6 feet long by 4 feet wide) is made by the Dunkards of Pennsylvania, within sight of Valley Forge, where Washington and the Patriots once struggled for liberty.

Here is your chance to own one of these large American Flags, the same as those shown in the picture below. Not a little flag, but a large-sized "Old Glory," 6 feet long by 4 feet wide—bigger than the top of your dining-room table—real red, white and blue, with stripes double-stitched together, and guaranteed not to fade, run or shrink, no matter what the weather.

Here is an opportunity to keep faith with your patriotism. You will not only have use for a flag on every holiday for years to come, but you can also use it constantly for decorative purposes in public and private sociables, in the club-house, in the church and in the home. Memorial Day is almost here. You will be able to celebrate it properly with this flag.

The Tabernacle at Medina, N. Y., decorated with The Christian Herald Flags Described Herewith.

The flags used in the illustration herewith are actual Christian Herald Flags which were sent to Messrs. Burgess and Butts for the purpose of decorating the tabernacle during the "Good News" campaign in Medina, N. Y., recently. The photograph of the tabernacle interior was sent to us by Mr. Benjamin F. Butts, Director of Music, during the revival.

HOW TO SECURE ONE OF THESE FLAGS

At this time of the year, the Christian Herald usually puts forth extraordinary efforts to increase the membership of the Christian Herald Family. YOU are a member and we know you will help us. But we have no right to accept your good offices for nothing, so we make the following proposition:

We will send the large American Flag described above and The Christian Herald for one year, all for only $2

Or, you may secure the Flag FREE. To any old subscriber who will send us one new eight-months' subscription to The Christian Herald (remitting $1.00 with order) we will send one of these large American Flags

FREE

ACT NOW

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

For a Thirteen-Month Year

IN THE Christian Herald Almanac for 1914, page 12, appears an account of a proposition made by the International Almanac Reform League to reform the Julian Calendar in 1916, so that there would be thirteen months, each having twenty-eight days, or exactly four weeks. This would leave only one day out of the 365 to dispose of, and it is suggested that this day be "killed off" at the end of each year, or not counted.

A reform of this kind, in my opinion, would be one of the great forward movements of the age. It would simplify the calendar so that it would forever meet the practical demands of future generations. Instead of having to carry a calendar in the pocket, or have it hung on the walls of the home or business office, all intelligent folks could easily carry the complete calendar in their craniums. This would stop the endless confusion caused in trying to find the right day, and the continual worry and loss of time required in looking up dates. It would also minimize the many legal difficulties that are always arising because the proof that certain business transactions occurred on a given date can not be established.

The writer in the New York Evening Post points out that this new month should be thrown in the middle of the year, which, of course, is its logical place; that the first day of every month would fall on Sunday; that Sunday would be the first, eighth, fifteenth and twenty-second of every month in the year. "In the same manner," he says, "Monday would either be the second, ninth, sixteenth or twenty-third of every month."

"Saturday, December 28, would be the last day in the year—at least the last calendar day. Now, instead of calling the next day Sunday, the new calendar would declare a holiday and name it 'Dies Non,' a day of public rejoicing and merry-making. The next day after 'Dies Non' would be January 1 of the next year, and it would be known as Sunday, just as if nothing had happened between Saturday, December 28, and Sunday, January 1. Dies Non would not count. Things that happened on Dies Non would happen neither last year nor next year—just when you could say they did happen is hard to say." (Italics mine.)

I see no need at all for a puzzle as to the dating of the events that would happen on Dies Non, such as the Evening Post sees. We could use the date thus: "Dies Non after 19—" It would be abbreviated to this: "D.N. 19—" This scheme of dating "Dies Non" will be seen to be correct, and also very simple.

I do not agree with the almanac reformers as to their disposal of "Leap Day," which would come every four years along with "Dies Non." To drop this day in the middle of the year, as they suggest, would be wrong; for it would require a readjusting of the calendar in the middle of the year, thus destroying the beauty and perpetuity of the scheme of the new calendar. It would be better to drop this day after "Dies Non," and to date it this way: "Leap Day after 19—" It would soon be written "L.D. 19—" This would be correct, and is as simple as the disposal of Dies Non.

Let us hope that all friends of the new calendar will clamor for its adoption, and that the reform will come early. Why need we be sticklers for antiquated forms when something infinitely better is apparent?

M. C. LUNS福德, JR.,
Pastor, Baptist Church, Grundy, Va.

Did You Send This?

IN THE Christian Herald of February 17, mention was made of the receipt in our mail of twenty dollars from Findlay, Ohio, accompanied by no letter, and we were unable to acknowledge same and do not know for what it is intended. Once again, we ask that the sender of this twenty dollars will communicate with us on the subject.

Developed Under Racing Conditions

We develop Spark Plugs of maximum efficiency by repeated testing them under the heaviest strains in the particular motor for which they are intended.

was tested over and over again in Overland Motors, which we subjected to heavier strains than you ever would

In like manner we developed Spark Plugs every make of gasoline motor, Ford, Overland, Studebaker, Maxwell, Metz. In fact 80% of all American automobiles, marine and stationary gas engines are equipped by their builders with Champion Spark Plugs. To accept a substitute is to disregard this most definite expression of scientific determination.

Our Guarantee
We guarantee complete satisfaction to the user—free replacement or money back.

Insist on Champions.
See your dealer or write direct to us.

Champion Spark Plug Company
302 Avondale Ave. Toledo, Ohio
Dealers:—Write for our 1915 Profit Sharing Agreement.

CAREFUL DOCTOR

Prescribed Change of Food Instead of Drugs.

It takes considerable courage for a doctor to deliberately prescribe food for a despairing patient, instead of resorting to the usual list of medicines.

Some truly scientific physicians recognize and treat conditions as they are and should be treated. Here's an instance.

"Four years ago I was taken with severe gastritis and nothing would stay on my stomach, so that I was on the verge of starvation.

"I heard of a doctor who had a summer cottage near me—a specialist in N. Y.—and, as a last hope, sent for him.

"After he examined me carefully he advised me to try a small quantity of Grape-Nuts at first, then as my stomach became stronger to eat more.

"I kept at it and gradually began to have color in my face, memory became clear, where before everything seemed a blank. My limbs got stronger and I could walk. So I steadily recovered.

"Now after a year on Grape-Nuts I weigh 153 lbs. My people were surprised at the way I grew fleshy and strong on this food."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Villville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

WANTED in every town in the United States an intelligent man or woman to represent The Christian Herald. This is an opportunity to build up a business of your own, should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address: Agency Dept., THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

'Standard' Summer Bargains for "Christian Herald" Readers

MAKE SURE you get this season's choicest offers. Here's a notable money-saving event, typical of "Standard" value-giving. Order liberally from the extraordinary bargains shown below and order promptly. But, Madam, these are only a few of the many equally splendid bargains offered in the free

"Standard" Summer Bulletin. This latest, best display of the new summer fashions is just printed, and it represents the country's biggest values. No one can afford to miss it. A surprise for every reader of the "Christian Herald"—a most welcome surprise, too, for every thrifty woman will delight in these splendid opportunities to save money and to dress herself and her family in the season's most charming, becoming clothes at so small a cost.

Clip coupon below and mail it today—now. Don't allow another day to pass without seeing this free money-saving, latest Summer Bargain Bulletin. Remember, there are up-to-date, handsome clothes for all—men, women and children. Each garment is perfectly made, perfect-fitting, and guaranteed to thoroughly please you or your money will be promptly refunded. And—about the low prices—That is also a surprise. Clip coupon and mail it to us at once. A postal card will do also, but mail it quickly—the Bulletins are

FREE

Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back

Stylish Flowered
Crepe Waist 49c

5NW49M—Bargains like these have made the "Standard" famous. A stylish, very pretty button-front waist made of the popular Flowered Crepe; this dainty, serviceable material is woven in novel, lace effect and comes in pretty blue, rose or lavender floral patterns. Liberal fullness gives the stylish blouse effect and a dainty trimming is provided in the embroidered white organdy vest, collar and cuffs. (Sizes 34 to 46 Bust.) Our bargain price, postpaid in the U. S. 49c

Smartly Modelled Linene
"Middy" 49c
For Women and Misses

NW49M—The smart summer "middy" every one wears and which is equally popular with misses and women. A very pretty, becoming model made of good, serviceable quality Linene and stylishly trimmed with Galatea stripe material. Patch pockets finish the front; boxed pleats and pearl buttons are used for the visible front closing. (In women's sizes 32 to 44 Bust; also Misses' and small women's sizes, 14 to 20 yrs.) Our bargain price, postpaid in the U. S. 49c

Best Petticoat Offer!
Special
Price 49c

2E49M—Exceptional petticoat bargain offered here for your special attention. This dressy petticoat is made of good, serviceable Cambric with correctly fitted gores and required width measures about 2 yds. at bottom. The deep, pretty embroidery flatters the matching insertion. (Sizes 38 to 44-in. lengths.) Special, postpaid in the U. S. 49c

Striking Bargain!

All-Wool Serge
Circular Model Skirt $2.00
(Also Stout Sizes NS269)

NS200M—Handsome, new circular skirt at a guaranteed saving. The season's most remarkable skirt opportunity, and a very stylish, jaunty model, sure to immensely please you. Made of splendid quality All-Wool double-warp Serge in black, navy, gray, tan or cream. The deep yoke is very fashionable and a button-trimmed patch pocket smartly trims side. Correctly flared and a pretty finish is provided in the single front fold and satin button trimmings. Closes at side. (Sizes 22 to 30-inch waists and 37 to 43-inch lengths.) A bargain at $3.00; our price, postpaid in the U. S. $2.00

Stout Sizes
NS269M—Same as NS200M but in stout sizes, 30 to 38-inch waists. Special postpaid in the
U. S.
$2.69

Little Fellows'
4 Piece Combination 59c
Good $1.00 Value

N4Y59M You'll just love to see your little boy in this cute outfit. Extra-special money-saving opportunity every mother should be quick to share, for here's $1.00 value for only 59c. And, Madam, we pay the mail charges to any point in the U. S. Smart 2-piece Dutch suit; the blouse is of durable blue or tan striped Drill with one pair of straight pants and one pair of matched solid color pants. Becoming "rah-rah" hat. Serviceable, washable quality and exceptional value. (Sizes 3 to 8 yrs.) All 4 pieces, postpaid in the U. S. 59c

R99M 99c

IND11M $1.00

Girls' Dress
Specials

NR39M—Cute little tulle dress for ages 2 to 6 yrs. Becomingly made of serviceable quality Linene, pleasingly combined with matched plaid Gingham in novel gumpie effect. Colors are blue or pink with neat white piping. This splendid 66c dress, postpaid in the U. S. 39c

R99M—Charming dress for girls 7 to 15 yrs. Stylishly made of the popular, serviceable quality Flowered Crepe in pretty blue or pink patterns. The broad front panel hangs effectively beyond a black velvet belt and a dressy trimming is provided in the lace-edged embroidery collar and revers. Smart triple-ruffle skirt. This fine $1.50 value, postpaid in the U. S. 99c

R100M—Extra-special value. This attractive, becomingly made dress at a decided saving. Beautifully patterned, wide embroidery flouncing is effectively employed in bodice and laid back at neck in smart revers effect. Lace-edging daintily finishes the plain, neatly tucked back. (Sizes 7 to 15 yrs.) Our bargain price, postpaid in the U. S. $1.00

ENTIRELY NEW Stunning Striped
Voile Dress, $1.79
—Special

2NDD179M—You will be delighted with the dainty, serviceable quality Striped Voile in this dress. A charming, entirely new model, very serviceable and comes in black-and-white, blue-and-white or lavender-and-white stripes. The bodice is becomingly bloused and an odd square yoke is prettily piped with matched satin messaline; messaline bandings and buttons and a chic "roll" collar of embroidered organdie completes the handsome effect. Belt and sash of black velvet ribbon. The yoke at hips is a very fashionable feature from which the skirt hangs in graceful, becoming fullness. Closes, conveniently in front. (Women's sizes 34 to 44 Bust, 40-inch lengths; Misses' sizes 14 to 18 yrs. and 32 to 38-inch lengths.) Remarkable offering at our "half price" Postpaid in the U. S. $1.79

Charming Embroidered
Voile

Dress $1.99 Splendid $3.00 Value

JD199M—Dainty summer dress charmingly fashioned and of dressy, washable quality. An exceptional bargain, too, for you can't duplicate it anywhere else at our low price. Carefully made of fine quality, good-wearing white Voile, very becoming and stylish and displays a practical feature in the convenient front closing. Wide, prettily embroidered flouncing smartly trims bodice in surprise effect and lace-edged double net forms the chic vest and "flare" collar. Another pleasing feature is the draped crepe belt that comes in either white or light blue. Wide matched embroidery is cleverly employed in the full, flared skirt to give the modish, new double-flounce effect. (Ladies' sizes 34 to 44 Bust; also Misses' and small women's sizes 14 to 18 yrs.) A bargain at $3.00; our special price, postpaid in the U. S. $1.99

Exceptional
"Half-Price" Offer!

Embroidered $1.00
Linene Dress

IND11M—One of the season's most striking bargains. The smart, dainty dress one wants for comfortable, becoming wear, made of excellent wearing Linene and priced at practically "half value." Tastefully trimmed with dainty embroidery, carefully worked with white floss in new, very pretty patterns. The embroidery is equally as effectively employed both in bodice and skirt; a novel white piping emphasizes the graceful, full flare at bottom. Daintily finished with white poplin collar and cuffs. In blue, tan or lavender. (Women's sizes, 34 to 46 Bust; also Misses' and small women's sizes 14 to 18 yrs.) A splendid money-saving opportunity; our bargain price, postpaid in the U. S. $1.00

FREE
Bulletin
Coupon

Standard Mail Co.
Dept. 425, New York
Send me FREE the "Standard" Bargain Bulletins.

Name
Street
P. O.
State

Standard Mail Co.

Dept. 425, New York City

"BILLY SUNDAY The Man and His Message"

Authorized by MR. SUNDAY

MANY have criticized the unconventional methods of Billy Sunday, but the sobering fact remains that he has led 300,000 men and women to a profession of Christianity.

Serious men and women the country over are asking, "What manner of man is this?" This book, written by Wm. T. Ellis, LL.D., provides the answer. It not only tells the story of Sunday's eventful life, gives a keen analysis of his manner and methods, traces his remarkable success as the most conspicuous Christian leader in America, but it also contains the heart of his message arranged by subjects and published by special agreement with Mr. Sunday for the use of copyright material and photographs which could be used only with his permission.

The Message that led three hundred thousand to hit the Sawdust Trail is contained in this story of Mr. Sunday's life

This book gives a keen analysis of his methods and traces
the remarkable success of this most conspicuous Christian leader

Preaches Religion in Homely Phrases

"I never preach a sermon until I have soaked it in prayer."—BILLY SUNDAY

Mr. Sunday is tremendously in earnest. His utterances are vivid. His epigrams, like his stories, are of the homely Lincoln sort that people remember. He bars the truth and makes it enter and stick. The crowds follow him. They come to hear a man preach a strong Gospel, which can meet the real need of the human heart.

"Billy Sunday, the Man and His Message," is an intensely interesting book because it deals with a subject of the greatest human concern in a new way.

Bound in cloth. 496 pages. 32 chapters. Illustrated.

How to Obtain This Remarkable Book

We will send you a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," and The Christian Herald for one year, for $2.00
OR, We will send to old subscribers a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," as a reward for sending a new $1.10
eight months' subscription, accompanied by

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, N. Y.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

Why I Am Proud of My Denomination
Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U.
Topic for May 9. Rev. 3: 7-13

IT IS right to be proud of one's denomination. Most of the denominations have glorious histories, though some of them were the outgrowth of strifes and dissensions that are to be regretted. But for the most part, each of the denominations was founded upon some great principle which was believed in ardently by a small and often persecuted group of Christians. Great sacrifices were often made for the sake of these principles, and it is right to be proud of the heroism of these pioneers, even if in some cases the opinions they stood for are not believed to be so vital now as then.

But some of the denominations still stand for great, distinctive, essential doctrines, and those who still hold to them are justified in supporting them ardently, while eagerly co-operating with other denominations in active Christian work.

Denominational differences are often chiefly differences of temperament. Certain people prefer certain forms of worship, feel more at home in a certain spiritual atmosphere and do better work in certain surroundings. It is right for them to choose to worship and work under these conditions and to be proud of the friends and the organization which make the conditions possible.

Yet denominational pride can easily be carried to a wrong degree. Paul refused to boast of anything but the cross of Christ. And we must avoid anything like strife and unseemly rivalry in our relations to other denominations.

As the different denominations come nearer together they are nearer to Christ, the Center, like the spokes of a wheel. United, they stand; divided, they fall.

A Prophet Who Wrote Nothing But Did All Kinds of Things

Epworth League Topic for May 9.
I Kings 17: 20-22; 18: 17-19, 40;
20: 18-20; II Kings 2: 9-11

ON the death of Solomon the kingdom of Israel was rent in twain. The royal house of Judah reigned at Jerusalem, while Jeroboam appointed two other places of worship at Dan and Bethel. The golden calves were erected as the symbol of Jehovah, but Ahab and Jezebel went far beyond Jeroboam in their wickedness and alienation from true worship. Jezebel, the devotee of Baal and Astoreth, virtually ruled over Israel. The old religion was eclipsed by the new idolatry.

In the midst of these wild scenes of revelry and heathen splendor, Elijah the prophet of God appears, not like Joshua, Gideon or David, with a sword to fight, but with words of prayer and prophecy. Elijah comes like John the Baptist out of the desert of long preparation and meditation. He feels that God and he are a majority. Men would say, What can one person do against a whole nation? But what did Abraham Lincoln do against slavery and disunion? What did Washington do against tyranny? What did Cromwell do against oppression? Only what Elijah accomplished in reforming a nation from its vices. Behold the mighty hero on Mount Carmel, where he by prayer and faith vanquishes the hosts of Baal. It is true that discouragement filled his heart with a great sorrow when Queen Jezebel threatened his life. The still small voice of God in the cave of his retreat showed Elijah that great victories are won by spiritual means and not by spectacular scenes, as on Mount Carmel.

All young people should cultivate Elijah's spirit of invincible heroism, of unyielding will, of sublime courage and of perfect faith in Almighty God.

Millions of women use Gold Dust daily in washing dishes, scrubbing floors and woodwork, and washing windows—but they do not realize the many ways in which Gold Dust can be used.

GOLD DUST

meets every cleaning and brightening need in the house.

Use Gold Dust not only for washing dishes, but for washing bathtub and bathroom fixtures, cleaning a brightening metal work, pots, pans and kettles, for scrubbing floors, washing woodwork, cleaning a freshening linoleum and oilcloth and for all the hundreds of uses in which it is so particularly supreme.

5c and larger packages sold everywhere

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY
MAKERS

Let Our Experts Draw up Your FREE Heating Plans

TAKE advantage of our trained experts—be sure of heating every room. Knock down coal bills. Deal direct with manufacturer—save $25 to $75 by buying at

Low Wholesale Factory Price

We grant year's test—best guarantee with bank—cash or long time credit—easy payments. We freight. Blue prints if whether you order or not—obligations. Write today catalog No. 927

Kalamazoo Stove Co., M
Kalamazoo, Mich.

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"

Increase Your Income

Grow MUSHROOMS in spare time

Spawn now produced by scientific methods. Makes crops certain. Anyone, where, when, can now grow mushrooms—at home, in cellar, barns, sheds, etc. No special experience necessary. If you have a good soil, etc. Good prices, market, sell, etc. My instructions based on years' experience. Used in State Agricultural colleges. Information free. A valuable opportunity to increase your income. A. V. JACKSON, Falmouth Mushroom Culture, Inc., 346 Gifford Street, Falmouth, Mass. Only Scientific Mushroom Farm in U.S.

FREE "Linene" COLLAR

State size on postal and whether you want collar like cut or low turnover collar. REVERSIBLE COLLAR, Dept. T. Boston, Mass.

ALL trays get burned and brown, but you can clean and polish them quickly and easily with Parrot Polish. Parrot is something new—a polish that works better than you thought a polish could work, yet without the objections that you've always had to metal polishes. For Parrot contains no dangerous ingredients—no explosives, no acids nor ammonia—nothing to stain or harm your hands. Use it for copper, brass, nickel, glass and aluminum.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

Question List No. 4
1 Corinthians, Part 2

1. In what verses of what chapter does Paul state his opinions about the relation of a wife to her husband? [expressed in such detail doubtless because Corinth was a city notoriously immoral, where godly women would need to guard jealously their modesty.]
2. (a) What careless and greedy habits had become common in Corinth at the celebration of the Lord's Supper? (b) What expressions indicate that in those early days the Lord's Supper took the form of a quite complete meal?
3. (a) What spiritual offices, gifts and activities does Paul mention in the twelfth chapter? (b) What beautiful illustration does he use in emphasizing his argument that Christians should live and work in unity? (c) What is still better than seeking a special spiritual gift or work?
4. (a) To what does Paul compare speech that is not prompted by love? (b) Than what special gifts does he declare love to be greater? (c) Repeat sixteen definite statements which Paul makes in chapter thirteen as to what love does or does not do.
5. (a) Of all the special spiritual gifts what does Paul in chapter 14 declare to be the greatest? (b) With what other special gift does he compare this?
6. (a) What should be the motive and purpose in seeking and exercising spiritual gifts? (Two verses.) (b) What two factors should be present in the exercise of spiritual gifts?
7. (a) What condition does Paul make as to the use of unknown tongues? (b) What verse indicates that the early Christian meetings were in character much like the modern prayer-meeting? [It is understood that throughout this chapter to "prophecy" means not specially to foretell, but to speak some message believed to be directly inspired by the Holy Spirit.]
8. (a) What different persons or groups does Paul mention as having seen the risen Saviour? (b) What must happen to a grain of wheat before it can bear grain? (c) What illustrations does Paul use to show that there are different forms and grades of existence, and thus to show that it is not unreasonable to look forward to an incorruptible and immortal existence?
9. (a) Quote the three great verses in which Paul sums up his joyous confidence that Christ has overcome death. (b) Quote the closing verse of this chapter and also quote the last two verses of one of the Psalms dealing with immortality, which refer as Paul does at the close of this chapter to our work and of God's blessing upon it.
10. (a) Upon what day does Paul recommend the laying aside of a share of our substance for God's work? (b) State again from what city Paul writes this letter. (c) Through what country did he expect to pass in coming to visit Corinth? (d) What Christian household at Corinth does he mention in the last chapter of this epistle which is also referred to in the first?

Honor Roll and the correct answers to the questions of list number three will appear next week.

A Case for Your Help

SOME TIME ago we printed in the Christian Herald the facts concerning an aged and infirm preacher of the Gospel of Christ, now far on in the seventies, who is no longer physically fit for ministerial service and who, besides, is taking care of an aged and invalid wife. This veteran minister, who is a man of education and ability and a grand old Christian, has no means of support, and his denomination has been doing what little it could toward his maintenance, but in this particular case it has been only an occasional source of meager help. Kind-hearted friends of the Christian Herald Family sent in their contributions and, for more than a year, supplied the means of supporting the pair in a very humble fashion. This little fund is now exhausted and we would be glad to hear from any readers sympathetically interested in the case, who may feel like giving the old preacher a helping hand in his declining years. Lately he met with an unfortunate accident which very nearly cost his life. We believe there are among our readers some who would take it as a privilege to help a little in so worthy a cause. To any who may feel disposed to do this "in His name," we will, on receipt of a postal, send the names and address of the old couple, with full particulars.

All communications should be addressed to the "Old Minister," care the Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

GAS STOVE COMFORT WITH KEROSENE OIL

KITCHEN CHORES FADE AWAY

WITH a NEW PERFECTION OIL COOK STOVE in your kitchen you secure gas stove comfort. Your work becomes a pleasure. You then enjoy a cool kitchen. All the heat is concentrated on the cooking instead of spreading through the room.

The burners light at the touch of a match and produce full heat in less than a minute. You can have a very low, or a medium, or a high flame—any size flame you want. A simple movement of the wrist turns the flame up or down. Once turned to the point desired, the flame remains constant and uniform.

You will have a clean kitchen—no kindling, coal, ashes, smoke or soot. You are assured of good cooking. You can do everything that can be done with any stove of any kind.

This is the oil stove of steady habits—abundant heat—always ready—like gas.

NEW PERFECTION Ovens (with steel or glass doors) fit any stove. They bake better because fresh air baking means better baking. A current of fresh hot air passes continually over and under the oven, drying out the steam and preventing soggy— an exclusive advantage of the NEW PERFECTION Oven.

NEW PERFECTION Oil Stoves come in 1, 2, 3, and 4 burner sizes with or without cabinet tops; also in 2 and 4 burner models with fireless cooking ovens.

Adopted by the STANDARD OIL COMPANY as the standard.

Sold at moderate prices by hardware, furniture, department and general stores, or wherever you see a picture of the NEW PERFECTION GIRL.

"NOW SERVING 2,000,000 HOMES"

Send to Dept. E for our free illustrated catalogue
Send 10 cents in stamps for the famous NEW PERFECTION Cook Book containing 227 recipes
MANUFACTURED AND GUARANTEED BY
THE CLEVELAND FOUNDRY COMPANY
7607 PLATT AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO
Made in Canada by THE PERFECTION STOVE COMPANY, LIMITED, SARNIA, ONTARIO.

Your "Rainy Day" Fund

This Book is for You

A Christian Herald reader wrote us the other day, asking how he could invest a fund—not very large, either—in good securities.

He called it HIS "Rainy Day Fund."

It is an apt name—expressive, don't you think? Our friend had to have SECURITY AND 6%—and he got it.

Every one should have a "Rainy Day Fund." Have you started yours?

We sent HIM a list of GOOD, SOUND bonds. HE bought. HE has started his "Rainy Day Fund." Why Not YOU? Let us send you the suggestion made the Christian Herald reader. It will interest you, if you wish to INVEST WHILE YOU SAVE OR SAVE WHILE YOU INVEST.

Bonds in $100, $500 and $1,000 amounts.

Bowman, Cost & Company
615 Third Nat'l Bank Bldg. St. Louis, Mo.

The Legal Endorsements of nearly 61,000 responsible American citizens are written upon the Commercial Paper by which the

COMMERCIAL SECURITY COMPANY'S

6% Bonds

are secured.

Nowhere can there be found an opportunity to invest money at 6% with a greater degree of security than in these bonds.

A postal asking for booklet C-4 will bring full information and free monthly magazine "Income."

COMMERCIAL SECURITY CO.

Capital and Surplus $1,100,000
Knabe Building - New York
First Nat'l Bank Bldg., - Chicago

THRIFT

With Sound Diversified Investment Leads to a Competence

The Partial Payment Plan
Points the Way

Send for our Booklet "C. H." with List of Approved Securities

RENSKORF, LYON & CO.

Members { New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

33 New St. (Ground Floor) New York

First Farm Mortgages

More Desirable
Than Ever Before

The disturbed conditions throughout the world has had a tendency to decrease the value of many other securities, but well placed First Farm Mortgages are by reason of the increase in demand for farm land and farm products made even more desirable than ever before. Our experience furnishes investments of this character covers 21 years. "Right On The Ground." Send for descriptive pamphlet "G." and list of offerings in large or small amounts.

E. J. LANDER & CO.

Grand Forks, N. D.

Est. 1883

Capital and Surplus, $400,000

INVESTIGATE BEFORE INVESTING

Trinity
First
Farm Mortgages

6%

Non-fluctuating, high-grade, unquestioned security. Principal and interest payments guaranteed.

INCREASE YOUR INCOME. You can do so with absolute safety. Farm values are higher and farm securities more desirable than ever.

Trinity Mortgage and Investment Securities Co.
149 Broadway, New York City

INVESTMENT AND INSURANCE COUNSEL

This department is maintained for the benefit of our regular readers; the service is offered entirely free of cost to them, and all correspondence is strictly personal and confidential, in so far as the identity of the inquirer is concerned. Always enclose letter postage and write name and address plainly, addressing your inquiry to Financial Editor, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

Neither THE CHRISTIAN HERALD nor any other publication can guarantee the value of investment securities. We do all we can, however, to make sure of the integrity of our advertisers before admitting them to our columns. Any advice given is an expression of our conclusions, based upon information we believe to be reliable; but we must not be held responsible, should any loss arise from its acceptance.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

C. A. B., ILLINOIS. (1) The Copper Handbook reports on Butte & Great Falls Mining Co., developing a group of mineral claims in Dixie Gulch, Mont.: "Property not regarded favorably, but management honest." (2) Consult a lawyer; we do not give legal advice.

A. C. D., ARKANSAS. Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company Convertible 5s at 93½, return 5.65 per cent., which is a good yield for a bond having such ample security back of it and always possessing a ready market. The bonds appear to be a most attractive issue.

D. E. P., IOWA. (1) Jefferson County, Ark., Long Lake Drainage District 6 per cent. bonds (1927) in $500 denomination are a sound investment security. (2) The first interest coupon is payable at the St. Louis (Mo.) Union Trust Company August 1, and every six months thereafter. Accept the firm's offer.

W. E. E., INDIANA. If you desire a short-term 6 per cent. investment we suggest two $1,000 United States Public Service Company 6 per cent. collateral lien gold notes due April 1, 1918. You would probably find no difficulty in obtaining these notes through Middle Western banking firms.

MRS. E. C. R., WEST VIRGINIA. (1) Diebold Safe & Lock Company's preferred stock can hardly be considered a conservative investment for a woman. (2) The United Security Company is well regarded and would not make recommendations to you unless they believed they were in the right. But opinions differ. It is our opinion that you should keep out of industrial investments.

F. H. J., NEW YORK. (1) New York Central Railroad stock is a speculative issue. (2) Any of the bonds of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway are high-class investment securities. No railway bonds rank higher. (3) The common and preferred stocks of the Atchison are attractive. (4) California Gas & Electric Corporation General Mortgage and Collateral Trust 5s are regarded as sound securities. These bonds are an underlying issue of the Pacific Gas & Electric Company.

MRS. M. S. T., PENNSYLVANIA. (1) Public Service Corporation of New Jersey General 5 per cent. gold bonds, due October 1, 1959, are regarded as fairly secure. (2) People's Passenger Railway 4 per cent. Stock Trust Certificates, due February 1, 1943, are an underlying issue of the Philadelphia Traction Company. They are believed to be absolutely sound. They are quoted on the Philadelphia Stock Exchange around 80. (3) Carbondale Railway Company General Mortgage 5 per cent. bonds are believed to be fairly well secured.

P. Y., PENNSYLVANIA. Telepost stock probably will never be worth anything more than it is today, and this is not much. The scheme offered by the Washington promoter is just one more effort to wring a little more money from the pockets of unfortunate shareholders. "Correctly stated," says the Financial World, referring to John A. Nicol's attempt to get 1,000 Telepost stockholders each to buy one convertible trustee certificate at $5, "it is an invitation to one thousand suckers to buy stock for double what outside brokers will sell it for."

MRS. C. L. M., MASSACHUSETTS. Stock in the Prince Edward Island Black Fox enterprise is no better than a poor gamble. Keep out. The black fox industry, with its alleged marvelous profits, has received a shaking down from United States Consul L. T. Mays, stationed at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, in his report to the Department of Commerce at Washington. Mr. Mays says in part: "In April, 1914, there were in Prince Edward Island 1,600 silver black foxes and a number of red and patch foxes that had little value. The total authorized capital of the companies selling shares of stock based on these foxes was $28,500,000 or a sum equal to the number of pairs of black silver foxes in the island multiplied by $35,000. The total number of black silver foxes, counting this year's (1914) pups, is now 2,600, and the authorized capitalization is $41,500,000. Probably $26,000,000 of this stock has been issued; hence the capitalization is at the rate of $20,000 per pair, counting pups and grown foxes."

MISS "PRUDENCE," CONNECTICUT. (1) We presume all three of the Western farm mortgages are secure, inasmuch as the firm endeavoring to sell you the loans stands very high. One of the members of this firm during a visit to the office of the Christian Herald told us that in 34 years no investing customer of the house has ever lost a dollar of principal or interest and that in all this time no investor has had his interest payments delayed. Prudent New England women are large investors in Western mortgages. No safer form of investment can be devised. (2) Reliable mortgage firms always stand ready to repurchase loans from Christian Herald readers.

A. D. C., PENNSYLVANIA. (1) Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company Equipment Trust gold 5 per cent. certificates (in series), Pennsylvania Railroad stock, and Insurance Company of North America stock are excellent investment securities. (2) The equipment certificates on a 5.09 per cent. basis probably come nearer to what should be considered a woman's investment than either Pennsylvania stock or Insurance Company of North America stock. We think, however, that you would be perfectly safe in buying Pennsylvania Railroad stock in order to get the additional yield from your investment. Whereas the equipment bonds are quoted on a 5.09 basis, Pennsylvania Railroad stock can be bought on a 5.70 basis. (3) Insurance Company of North America stock is quoted at around $21 a share, which is more than twice its par value. The company pays dividends at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. The stock bought at 21 will yield about 5.90 per cent. This company is one of the most successful and strongest financial institutions in your state, and we believe the stock represents an attractive investment.

REV. D. M. M., OHIO. The Partial Payment Plan for acquiring ownership of sound investment bonds or stock is, as the name implies, a method of buying securities on the instalment plan. Thousands of thrifty persons who do not find it convenient to invest $100 or $500 or $1,000 at once avail themselves of this convenient means of buying a bond or shares of stock. A banking firm will require a deposit of $20 per share and $10 per $100 bond, and then regular monthly payments of $5 per share or per bond until the investment is fully paid for. Under the vigilant supervision of the New York Stock Exchange, the Partial Payment Plan as conducted by investment firms appeals to any thrifty person who wishes to increase his income by taking advantage of the many investment bargains that nowadays abound and to do so is willing to save small sums, intelligently, methodically, persistently. This systematic thrift yokes a man to responsibility—he is prodded into self-denial, but he will save money he would otherwise squander, and so his frugality becomes abundantly recompensed. Partial Payment Plan securities discriminately bought never wear out, never seriously become impaired in value, never go out of fashion, never tarnish, never become second-hand. They are the rewards that have come from a cultivated habit of doing without unnecessary things, and, like valued friends, they go on down through the years with their owner giving him freedom from worry—a sense of comforting security, in that he has laid by in store for inevitable old age when he cannot produce.

(This page went to press April 16, 1915)

Twice Each Month

Our "Investors Review" clearly discusses the prevailing financial conditions and offers timely security suggestions.

Let us send you a Copy Gratis

Williams, Dunbar & Coleman

Dealers in Public Utility Securities
60 Wall Street New York

Save $25 a Month

Our Partial Payment Plan will show you how to invest $25.00 a month and upwards in sound $100 mortgage bonds and short-term notes of established Public Utility Companies to net

6 to 6¾%

Write us for Special List H3

A-H-Bickmore & Co.
111 Broadway, N.Y.

How Money is Made

Systematic plans for saving have worked out in so many instances that we have inaugurated a partial payment method of proven worth.

You can start with a small initial payment and then monthly payments.

Dividends on your securities are credited to you from the day the first payment is made.

Write for our Booklet 31,
Sent free on request

HARRIS, WINTHROP & Co.

Members New York Stock Exchange
THE ROOKERY CHICAGO 15 WALL STREET NEW YORK

Six Per Cent. Bonds Based on New York Real Estate

6% Coupon Bonds—For income. Denomination of $100, $200, $500, $1000 and upward, pay interest semi-annually and maturing in ten years.

6% Accumulative Bonds—For saving. Denominations of $1000 and upward, purchasable annual, semi-annual or quarterly instalments earning 6% compound interest.

We have issued and offered these Bonds for more than a quarter of a century, returning to investors nearly $13,000,000 in principal and interest. Complete descriptive matter will be sent on request.

American Real Estate Company

Founded 1888 Capital and Surplus $3,560,855.
527 Fifth Avenue Room 534 New York

Send for Our New Booklet

ODD LOTS

Over 28% of them are of dollars worth of stock that changes hands on the Stock Exchange bought and sold by people who deal in odd lots.

We have published a very interesting booklet entitled "The Odd Lots" outlining how and why to buy odd lots for investment and explaining our simple plan for the purchase of standard securities in any amount—one share, one-half share, one-quarter share, etc. It gives much valuable information to those who wish to invest at this opportune time on securities are below normal levels.

Free Booklet E-5 on "Odd Lots"

Sheldon, Morgan & Co., 42 Broadway, New York City
Members New York Stock Exchange

AUTHORIZED BY U. S. GOVERNMENT

6% FARM BONDS BEST

Under the new Federal law we can now offer farm bonds. We offer you choice farm bonds at 6%. Clip this now, write for full list.

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK, DEPT. A, Richmond, Va.
Resources over $9,000,000.00

WANTED in every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl to represent The Christian Herald. This is an opportunity to buy a business of your own, which should grow and more profitable year after year. Address: Agency Dept., THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

Making You Sure of the Best

Minute Gelatine and Minute Tapioca are in New Packages with bright red and blue coloring. Let them remind you, as you see them on the grocer's shelf, to order a box of each.

Also be sure to try some of the new and delicious recipes for Minute Tapioca and Minute Gelatine to be found in our New Minute Cook Book.

Minute Tapioca

Requires no Soaking

These products represent not only the utmost in quality but they mean a saving of time and energy that makes them invaluable to the modern housewife.

Unlike pearl tapioca, which must be soaked for several hours before cooking, Minute Tapioca requires no soaking. It is ready to cook immediately. This makes it possible to prepare a tapioca dessert in 15 to 20 minutes instead of 4 or 5 hours. It also adapts tapioca to use in many dishes which would not be possible if long cooking were necessary.

Minute Gelatine requires no soaking. It dissolves immediately in boiling water or milk. It is also measured for use so that anyone is assured success in the preparation of gelatine dishes if the directions on the envelope are followed.

Minute Tapioca and Minute Gelatine are approved not only by millions of users but vouched for by the leading authorities on pure food—Dr. Wiley of Good Housekeeping Institute and Prof. Allen of Westfield. Sold by good grocers.

Send for the New Minute Cook Book Just Out—It's Free

Every woman should have this invaluable little cook book. It has a host of choice new recipes as well as the favorite old ones. These will afford many surprises in the way of tempting desserts, entrees, soups and salads, as well as ice creams and candies. With it we send generous samples of Minute Gelatine and Minute Tapioca—enough of each for one day's dessert. It's free. All we ask is your own and grocer's name.

Minute Tapioca Company, 506 East Main Street, Orange, Mass.

ORANGE SALAD

Separate sections of a Sunkist Orange and remove the inner peeling (or simply cut the orange in small pieces) and combine with an equal quantity of diced pineapple. Marinate with French Dressing and serve on a bed of lettuce. Garnish with an orange cut in quarters.

ORANGE JELLY

Dissolve 1 teaspoon of granulated gelatine in 2 tablespoons of cold water. Add $\frac{1}{4}$ cup of boiling water, 3 tablespoons of sugar, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup orange juice, 2 teaspoons lemon juice. Mix thoroughly and put in a cool place until jellied.

ORANGE BLANC MANGE

Half cup hot water, 2 tablespoons cold water, 2 tablespoons corn starch, 3 tablespoons sugar, whites of two eggs, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup orange cut in cubes, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup orange juice, $\frac{1}{8}$ teaspoon salt.

Mix sugar, corn starch and salt, add cold water, hot water and cook in a double boiler 2 hours. Cool slightly, add orange juice. Pour over stiffly beaten whites. Add pulp. Wet a ring mold with cold water, arrange sections of oranges in bottom. Pour in mixture and chill.

The Free Book, "Sunkist Salads and Desserts," describes our premium offer in detail. Cut out and mail the coupon for it NOW.

Now Comes the Time for Lighter Foods

—when Sunkist, Queen of Oranges, Rules

These delicious, healthful, seedless navel oranges—now sweetest, juiciest, firm and tender-meated—are the oranges chosen by millions of housewives, and by world-famous chefs, for salads and desserts. For they lend to these dishes an enticing flavor—the kind that connoisseurs demand—and they form the most healthful Spring and Summer foods.

California Sunkist Oranges

Famous Seedless Navels

They are chosen, too, for these culinary features: A free skin, easily removed. No seeds to mar the fruit in slicing. The tenderest pulp, which gives way at a touch of fork or spoon, and permits easy and perfect peeling of the individual sections when desired.

Write for Free Book "Sunkist Salads and Desserts"

A beautiful book, printed in colors, just out, will be mailed free to all who send the coupon below. It contains the choice recipes for Orange and Lemon Dishes—all prepared by a famous domestic science expert. This book is worth having. Send for your copy now.

86 Sunkist Lemon Uses

Sunkist Lemons are practically seedless, juicy, tart, full flavored. Use lemon juice in all recipes that now call for vinegar. Ask for our famous lemon book describing 86 uses for Sunkist Lemons.

Why We Exchange These Beautiful Silver Pieces for Sunkist Wrappers

Sunkist Oranges and Lemons are the most beautiful fruits of their kinds that California offers and dealers are tempted to remove the tissue wrappers to better display the color. But these wrappers are for your convenience in identifying the genuine Sunkist and, therefore, should remain on the fruit. The sole reason why we make this offer is because it is to produce the desired result. Mail us 12 Sunkist wrappers from oranges or lemons and 12c (coin or stamps) and get a beautiful Wm. Rogers & Son Silver Spoon. You can get an entire set in this manner—an exquisite set of genuine Wm. Rogers & Son Silverware made by the International Silver Company, the world's largest makers of sterling silver and plate. You can have any number of the 46 pieces purchased.

No advertising of any kind on any piece. Buy a dozen Sunkist today. Send for the spoon. Then save Sunkist wrappers for the entire set.

Every SUNKIST Premium stamped "Wm. Rogers & Son" is made and guaranteed by the International Silver Company, of Meriden, Connecticut, the world's largest makers of sterling silver and plate.

California Fruit Growers Exchange

Dept. A-32, 139 N. Clark St., Chicago

Please send me your free book, "Sunkist Salads and Desserts," and details of premium offer.

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY

STATE

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MAY 5, 1915

VOL. 38—NO. 18. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

*We thank the Father great and good, who made this peaceful scene,
That he has bathed the world in gold and tinted it with green.*

By Otto Ackermann

COPYRIGHT 1915 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

BABIES and Ivory Soap seem to belong to each other. It is natural to think of Ivory Soap in connection with a baby's tender skin and it is almost impossible not to think of baby's bath when recalling the many particular things which Ivory does so well.

The sensitive little body demands a soap that is mild and pure, above all else. To most people Ivory has come to mean the mildest and purest soap that can be made.

Users of Ivory Soap now think of it as the soap for all better-than-ordinary purposes. They know that it is capable of the most exacting things—that even the tender skin of a new baby is unhurt by its use.

The Ivory Soap "Baby Book" is a valuable treatise on the raising of healthy, happy children. You may have a copy free of charge by addressing The Procter & Gamble Company, Dept. 7-B, Cincinnati, Ohio.

IVORY SOAP...

IT FLOATS

... 99 ⁴⁴/₁₀₀ % PURE

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

AND THE FAMILY WAS GOING BACK TO—WHAT?

THE CAPTAIN SAID THEY LOOKED VERY BLOODY AND SORT OF MIXED

IT IS fifty kilometers to Suwalki," said Rittmeister Tzschirner of Von indenburg's staff; that is about 30 miles)

"We should make our arrival there by seven o'clock." He must have forgotten that it was the line of communications from East Prussia.

As we set out on this road it was growing dark. Turning in a southerly direction toward Kowahlen began a ride through a vague darkening country, peopled, except when our searchlight picked them up, with vague things. Through the trees at fringe Goldap on the east, there gleamed a large campfire that spread its yellow light on a lined wall; as long as we could, we watched the black forms that must have been soldiers, passing across the flames. The motor rumbled on; signs of the retreat began to appear. In the ditch beside the road, I saw a dead horse, a second dead horse, a third dead horse. An abandoned Russian cannon leaned against the night, its long howitzer barrel pointing an angle of ruin into the sky. One thought that as a symbol of the Russian rout.

Along the road there commenced a strew of things, a trail of discarded hats and coats, the rusty brown of the Russian soldiery. I saw rifles, cartridge boxes, single shoes and then a broken mission, a hooped-roofed transport, overturned in the ditch; and then, even whiter in the failing light, the scarred trees torn with shrapnel and shell.

"Did your artillery harass their retreat?" I asked Rittmeister Tzschirner.

"Oh, yes," he replied. "It was very fine."

And the strewn debris of war continued in a silent clutter of horror; and an inky darkness closed around, shutting it all out; and we sat listening to the motor's rumble and thinking of the things we had seen and what their genesis must have been a few days before. Where were the dead? In the fields? We strained our eyes to see, but the damp night was impassable; yet we felt they were there.

"Rittmeister," I asked suddenly, "were many men killed here?"

"Oh, yes. The losses of the Russians were very great. Our artillery shot very well. I cannot give you the exact number. We do not know. The Russians did not wish us to know their regiments engaged, they carried away their dead. I mean they carried away as many as they could; but our soldiers were very fast and the Russians had not always the time. Yes, they left many, but we cleared the road of them."

"And the fields, too?"

"Oh, no," he said quickly, almost as if unwilling that I should make a mistake. "In the fields here are many Russian dead. We shall bury them."

We were passing between the fields of the untried dead.

It was when we had made the turn of Kowahlen, which is where the road strikes due east toward the frontier, that we saw the man, the woman and the girl. Caught by our headlight, they stood beside the road, as if they had paused there to rest. The

THREE ROADS WHERE CAME WAR

BY

[War stories straight from the front have been extremely rare. Few outside men are allowed within the lines, and even then are not always permitted to get very close to rearguards. Mr. Fox has been man, in the heavy coat of an East Prussian farmer, leaned on a cane, watching with suspicious eyes. The woman, stout and motherly, sat on a stone, her hands folded in her lap, her eyes blinking from an awakened sleep. And the girl seemed to draw a cheap shawl as if to hide her face, but not so quickly but that I saw she was astonishingly pretty. And they stood there like statues, the leaning suspicious man, the tired mother, the alert nervous girl; and I thought: "I wonder if the Cossacks got her, too."

EDWARD LYELL FOX

The road tunneled through a vista of trees. We passed another peasant family—a father and a mother, bearing packs; three children, one carrying a bird-cage, in which there was no bird. And it began to dawn upon me that they too were on the heels of the retreat, only they were going back to the homes which they had fled in those terrifying November days when the Russians had overrun the land . . . going back to what?

The sledge had stopped. A scrawny girl held the cow by a rope. As our searchlight glared into their faces, the children, piled among the household goods, frowned and blinked. The man was holding the horse. The woman was staring off into the night.

Our gaze followed hers. Our headlight was shining on a roofless house whose charred windows were as the empty sockets of a skull. Our headlight was shining on the jagged wall of what must have been the barn; on a trample of fence palings and soft earth that must have been a garden; on a blackened chaos that must have been a home. And the woman who sat with her children on the loaded sledge must have sobbed—although we could not hear for the motor's din—for the man who was holding the horse turned, and the girl holding the cow turned, and the frowning, blinking children turned. And after we had passed, we looked back and they were standing there in the same postures, transfixed; they had come back home.

There are many villages between Kowahlen and the frontier—the villages of Lukellen, Drosdown on the actual firing-lines, and his story given here of the retreat of the Russians after the great battle of Augustowo is written from untrammeled personal observation right on the spot. THE EDITOR.]

tact on this road to the frontier, not a home but was ashes or, if of stone, whose walls were black. Not even the church at Mierunsken had escaped the torch; and then we were in Russia. We did not need the striped frontier posts to tell that; nor did we need the holes and lumps, contrasting with the German road. There was something more significant to tell us that at last we had come to the land of the Bear. For we passed through two villages but a kilometer apart, and in these not a house had been burned, not even a fence smashed. They were Amt and Filipowa, in the Czar's domain.

"Rittmeister," I asked, "did German soldiers follow the Russians down this road?"

"All the way to Suwalki," replied Tzschirner.

"German soldiers," I persisted, "who passed through Goldap and all those villages to the frontier?"

"Natürlich. That was the line of advance."

I was silent.

"Rittmeister, you have wonderful discipline in your army."

Tzschirner seemed surprised. "Why?"

"I cannot understand," I said, "how your soldiers, seeing what the Russians had done to East Prussian villages, could refrain from taking vengeance on the first Russian village they entered."

I think the Rittmeister was a little offended.

"We are soldiers," he said with dignity, "not criminals." He paused, and, perhaps guessing that Belgium was in my mind, "we only make war on non-combatants when they make war on us."

Near Jemieliste we overtook the army. Visible at the extremity of our long, yellowish light, there grew out of the darkness the grayish tops of transports rolling as on a sea; and as we came up with them we distinguished in their muffled clamor the clanking of chains, the cries of the drivers and the cracking of whips on the horses' backs. Throttling down until we barely crept along, our soldier chauffeur dexterously guided the car between the maze of wagon wheels and balking horses, so on until after I had counted twenty wagons struggling hub-deep through the frozen snow we came to the head of the column and the serene officer, utterly oblivious to the chaos behind him, leisurely riding the lead. As one thought of that other man who dared the Russian snows and who, without railroads and all that modern science has given war, penetrated this land to Moscow along this frightful road through the heart of the Russian winter, where now the Germans were going where he had gone a hundred years before, one marveled at him the more. In that night I felt the greatness of Napoleon.

The yelling of the transportmen died away. The gloom thickened; rain fell. Milanowizna passed, a ghostly village. Torn by heavy wagons, furrowed and frozen into icy ridges, the road became almost impassable. It was like going over a huge washboard and Mierunsken. But today they are only names by which may be characterized certain works of Russian arson. Not a house did we find inwith the corrugations running in criss-crosses. Jumping insanely from ridge to hole, our motor stood up wonderfully, until we came to an abrupt hill where bubbles of frozen snow impeded the way. Three times did Gelbricke, the chauffeur, try to make it; and three times the wheels spun helplessly. Finally with reluctance the rittmeister said it would be better if we all got out. And then in the pitch darkness and cold rain we put our shoulders to the car, but the effort was futile.

"Let's find some wood for treads," I suggested. The rittmeister would have none of it. He seemed to be mortified that we should be put to this inconvenience while guests of the German army. "Seyring!" he called.

"Jawohl." Of course, out on a Russian plain, in pitch darkness, it was quite easy to find wood; but one thought that Seyring's "jawohl" would have been equally as cheery had the rittmeister ordered him to find a bottle of wine. I too went to find wood; only I found something else. I found it lying in the ditch. My foot stumbled against it and I almost fell upon it. And when I flashed on my electric torch I saw that it was a Russian soldier. His face was buried in the snow and I thought his stiff, extended arms had pawed the frozen ground. On the shoulders of his long brown coat I read the number of his regiment, 256; and his feet, from which the boots had been stripped, were wound with strips of knitted wool, that made me think of a Russian mother; and his black, bare head, intensified by the contrasting snow, seemed the blackness of a raven. . . . The others found the wood.

The car climbed the hill. Near Mlinisko we passed a clanking transport, near Turowka a mired limousine of the flying corps, in which two young officers slept. The rain froze to hail and as we crossed the great open plain to Suwalki, snow came, a slow steady fall, unnaturally white in the headlight's glow. Progress became even slower. Ahead the road seemed choked with wagons, but always there opened up a lane through which drove this soldier, shaving the hubs of transports with a race-driver's nicety.

And then we came up with the artillery, two batteries to pound away at the crumbling Russian front. We saw the drivers, each with a carbine slung over his shoulders, striding the straining, struggling horses, while the heavy caissons and guns rumbled behind. Our headlight shone upon a gray and red cloaked soldier, sitting on the gun-carriage, his spurred boots dangling, his body jumping and jouncing, while quite complacently he munched at a bar of chocolate. The battery blocked the road; Seyring blew his horn; Rittmeister was shouting, "Los! Los!" (Away! Away!) But the soldier with the chocolate simply ignored us and went on munching that sweet of which the German army is so fond.

"Abspannen!" the command guttured from driver to driver. It was the order to unhitch the horses. It being impossible now to drive ahead, we watched the tired carabineers slide down from the saddles and loosen the horses from the spans while the gun-crews poured out oats from big gray bags and gave the horses their meal. And two by two the drivers led them clanking off into the night, with the gun-crews, following on foot with the caissons and cannon, left standing in the snow. They were going to sleep. Where? On either side the rolling snow-covered plains seemed to spread illimitably before graying into the black Russian night.

The horses gone, a gap opened in the road. "Los, Gelbricke! Los!"

To the rittmeister's urgings, the car was sped forward, and as we rushed past the battery, so silent now, in the snowy night, but on the morrow to roar forth death, I was thinking of the artilleryman munching the chocolate. Would he live to eat again!

Through the gray white curtain of snow the lights of Suwalki came winding to meet us, and as we drove down a shaded street, even there I could see the debris of war—discarded uniforms, guns and shells. And then finally we stopped before an old stone building and followed the rittmeister through a damp archway into a dirty-looking café where we had ham and tea. After I had stretched my sleeping-bag on three chairs and said good-night, I heard the guns. There was a swift succession of heavy reports.

"That's Russian artillery," said Rittmeister Tzschirner.

"How do you know?" I asked.

"Because the Russians fire like this—one-two-three-four, then one-two-three-four. Listen."

I caught then the quick but measured beat of their guns, but having just ridden down the road of their retreat, I could not think of their artillery as firing so methodically; rather to me those quick salvos seemed to be the firing of desperation, the frantic gunnery of men who knew the enemy was closing in—an enemy who upon their heels had followed the red Russian trail through East Prussia, across the snow-swept plains to the pine forests of Augustowo, where even now the guns bellowed that a hell on earth was there.

ENJOYING A CAPTURED FIELD KITCHEN

The Road to Augustowo

WE AWOKE to hear the guns, great drums beating a hurried roll.

"Today," said Rittmeister Tzschirner, I take you to the front. Do you wish?"

I was for a quick breakfast.

"Oh, no, Mr. Fox. There is much time. The battle will endure all day."

Nevertheless I hurried the rittmeister to breakfast downstairs in the Europiski Hotel in a gaudy chamber. Quantities of black coffee, served in long glasses, platters of white buns coated with some tasteless powder, suspiciously Russian, and Oberleutnant Lieckfeld of the Eighth Battery of the

Copyright, International News Service

COSSACKS

First Guard joined us—a handsome, healthy-skinned smiling man, who spoke a fair English. He told us what an officer had seen on the road back from Augustowo this morning.

"Just this side of Augustowo," explained Lieckfeld, "the captain saw a Russian gun that had been hit by one of our shells. The horses and men were all killed and the carriages smashed. The captain said they looked very bloody and all sort of mixed."

This was the kind of war I had seen for years in pictures—the war of de Neuville and Verestchagin. I wonder if the officers noticed my impatience to be on the road to Augustowo. And then the rittmeister did a significant thing. Drawing his Browning, he drew the clip from the magazine to see that it was full.

"And now," he said, "we go to Augustowo," adding with a tantalizing smile, "Do you wish?"

"Don't kill any Russians," Lieckfeld called after us and chuckled.

Following the Petersburg Prospekt, a wide unpaved highway obviously the main street of gray squat-housed Suwalki, our motor bumped out on the road to Augustowo—a road of frozen brown snow in the middle of a dreary snow-covered plain and tunneling ahead into a green forest of pine. We passed a huddle of miserable huts and a great

Russian church with bulb-shaped cupolas, slender minarets and a dome gleaming with gold. We passed the deserted garrison barracks, place of filth, in which the Germans would not live. We went along a line of pretty pale blue fence palings; and then we saw the boys.

They seemed to be playing a game. A little fellow whose round fur hat and brown pea-jacket typical of his chums, was poking at something with a stick. Greatly excited, he called the boys, seemed to be looking for something across the snow. Stridently he called to them.

"That boy is saying," explained the rittmeister, who understands Russian, "that he has found another one."

And we saw that the youngster was poking the snow away from a big bearded man in a sheepskin coat. The game the boys of Suwalki were playing was hunting the dead.

The woods opened up; a funereal stillness closed in. A Uhlan on patrol passed at a canter. Tzschirner gave a command and the motor stopped. "Laden," he said. And while the red-haired mechanicians were loading the two carbines strapped to the car, Tzschirner said: "The battle is continuing. Russians cut off from their regiments are in the woods. They are fugitives. They are hungry, and if they see us they'll shoot. I must say you this."

We began to take an interest in the woods. We saw that the slender trunks of the pines gave for concealment to a man, but in the snow we discerned many tracks. Somewhere in their depths a rifle cracked. Tzschirner stopped the car. We listened; everything was still. We drove on. We came upon an abandoned howitzer and in the snow a magnifying glass of unexploded shells, a great stain that had turned black and a yellow mound of fresh clay.

"A gun position," said Tzschirner briefly. "The soldiers made advance too rapidly for the Russians to retreat."

There are thirty kilometers on the road from Suwalki to Augustowo, and the thirty kilometers were strewn with the tangle and debris of war. I found myself counting caps—round Russian caps of gorkin and fur, and the black-peaked caps of murlach. I counted these caps until I counted thirty-three in unbelievably short a time, and I found myself thinking of them as thirty-three dead. For a soldier will discard his coat before his cap.

Near Szczobra we overtook the "clean-up squad." We saw them advancing, as in extended order, the teeth of a great comb, clearing woods, fields and ponds. We saw segments of the line abruptly stop, and come together and begin digging in the snow.

"How," I asked Tzschirner, "did they miss the dead we saw along the road?"

"They have not been there," he explained. "They first went where considerable actions have occurred; then they take up more isolated points of the line."

All this time the grumble of the guns had grown more distinct. We were nearing Augustowo. A horde of prisoners stolidly shuffled past and I saw that their hands and faces were black with the battle. The German light wounded commended to struggle along, one holding a white bound hand, another concernedly handling a cigar while the other arm hung cradled in a sling. I thought they all looked tired, but their step was alert. And always the roll of the guns grew louder, monstrous drums insanely beating their Miserere from somewhere beyond the tips of the pines.

ing their Miserere from somewhere beyond the tips of the pines.

Finding at Szczobra a field bakery, we ate. Seated around an empty box with two officers of the commissary, we ate from deep tin dishes filled with stew of white beans and beef and chunks of brown bread made from Russian meal. And the floor almost in the long shed that the engineers had built that night was covered with loaves of brown bread baked fresh in the twelve oven transports outside; while at the other end of the shed white-aproned bakers were mixing their dough.

"They are all volunteers," the commissary officer was saying. "By trade they are bakers, and when war broke out they at once put themselves at the disposal of the government. I am sorry," he went on, "that I cannot give you better bread, but here in Russia—" and he shrugged.

"I like the Russian meal," I told him. "What do you do—commandeer quantities of it?"

"We bought it," he replied a little indignant, "and paid cash for it. As soon as we occupied Suwalki, all the Jews took their meal out of the hiding-places and brought it to us. Here," and opening a wallet he handed me a receipt that showed how Herr Friedmann of Suwalki had received 10,000 marks

Continued on page 482

THE NEW OCCUPANTS OF THE FARM

THE SOWERS GO FORTH TO SOW

OUR RESPONSIBILITY IN THE WAR

HAS THE TRAFFIC IN ARMS DELAYED REAL PROSPERITY, LOWERED AMERICAN PRESTIGE AND DESTROYED OUR POWER TO PROMOTE PEACE?

LAST Christmas time, over in Saxony in a large manufacturing town there were many desolate homes of poor families in which the children could not hope for their usual modest joy under the Christmas tree. Then came the news that America had sent a large ship with Christmas gifts to Europe, and that a share of them would come to the town to which the war had brought so much sadness and mourning. The citizens discussed it in a long session and finally decided by unanimous vote that no gift from the Americans could be accepted for their dear little ones. They would feel deeply ashamed to accept presents for the children of the town from a people who at the same time send weapons and ammunition by which their fathers are killed and maimed.

Those simple-minded men of the factories in Saxony spoke aloud the words which expressed the silt feeling of all Germany. America has given us the feeling, the rôle of the warm-hearted neutral, whose kindly acts of goodwill can be accepted without feeling of shame. In their minds America has entered the circle of nations which are held together by the desire to maim, to starve, to kill, to crush. They all know that the war would be over quickly if the sale of American ammunition were stopped.

If we Americans may say that we do not have to act for the sake of a foreign nation, and if our national interest demands that we take the lead in this destructive traffic we must not flinch and must not give even a thought to sentimental or humanitarian ideas. Hearts may be cut to the quick, but we were told that we should ignore the prayers for neutrality if our nation, as a whole, can really profit from its eagerness to be the world-market for arms. But do we really profit? Was ever a trade less helpful to the nation? Was ever a trade more ruinous? Was ever a trade more threatening for tomorrow and ever after? Not a few faghted business men are fully convinced that even the mere account of dollars and cents ought to warn us against the trade which prolongs this tremendous war, with its wholesale deduction of economic values. To be sure, some fortunes will be amassed at the moment; but the figures are small, after all, compared with the tremendous increase of African trade which can be hoped for immediately after the war is over. Every shipload of rifles and cartridges that leaves the harbor of New York delays the hour when at last the great commerce of the world can peacefully pass the Statue of Liberty. The commerce surely will be the larger, the less the belligerent nations have mutually destroyed their economic energies. To stop the war by an embargo on exports of arms is the only possible advice of the true economist who, not swept away by fanaticism, has only true national interest before his eyes. The lobby of manufacturers of arms should not be permitted to mislead the nation, which badly needs the prosperity which only peace can bring.

It is the gain and loss of our country to be measured only by import and export? How does our account stand in the spiritual clearing-house? Can we deceive ourselves about the fact that our standing in the world has pitifully lost in the last few months? We may discount the loss of sympathy among certain nations; it is a matter of course that they must despise those who claim to be leaders in the peace movements of the world, and who build their palaces in The Hague, and yet who make the continuation of the world war possible by their feverish war industry; but the neutral nations of the world are clear-sighted enough to see this demoralizing contrast. Even our noblest actions become degraded by this unholy trade. It was a Swedish paper which wrote only recently that it is absurd for America to speak of its charity to Belgium and Poland, when its collections are hardly three per cent. of the net profits from the sale of munitions for the war! Have we really the respect of those nations whose political ambitions our course may serve? On the contrary. We have their loud applause, of course, and their encouragement, so momentous opportunity for our own practical national life. If we had declared from the first hour that we would do our moral share to make this war impossible, by denying every means of destruction to all combatants alike, we would have risen above all the countries of the world and would have been the arbiter of Europe in this gigantic hour of history. It is much greater to be an umpire state than an empire state. From what quarter of the world is an early peace to come to the civilized nations if not from neutral ground? The belligerents, left alone, must be swept by the passion of the battlefield which swells with every new encounter, and finally turns hostility into boundless hatred that crushes every longing for peace. But the spectators without are called to voice the emotional soberness of reason and of brotherly love. Yet the neutral states of Europe are half enmeshed in the struggle, and the neutral states of Asia or of South America lack the authority. The great republic of the New World alone had the power and the strength and the mission. Alas, it has lacked only that supreme vision which should have warned it not to be dragged into the European turmoil by the craving for profits from munitions of war. Can any one imagine that the anti-Allies would accept now the propositions of Washington as the real message of a neutral referee? President Wilson intuitively felt the greatness of America's task in the first hour; he had built the pedestal for the judge; but the merchants have broken it down, and history will tell only of its scattered fragments.

THE SEED

But even if we felt superior to the judgment of the world, and if we did not care whether we missed the great historic chance, could we overlook the possibility of ultimate danger to our own country?

What has happened? In a few months' time we have transformed the industries of our land into one great factory for war purposes. In many an industrial city there is not a plant running full time today that does not help the gruesome game of war. The industries which were our pride are pushed to the wall, and industries that were our horror have their fires burning night and day. Have we forgotten that old reproach which the friends of peace hurled at the gun factories of Europe, that their influence was responsible for the war spirit of the nations? Must we not fear, when the day of peace comes and the big orders are canceled, that these hundreds of plants will supply our own country not only with munitions but with a thousand half-true and quarter-true reasons for making use of them? What is to prevent those men, who want to go on with their war gains, from stirring up that pseudo-patriotic hysteria which may set the mind of the country now against Japan and now against Mexico, now against England and now Germany.

In tampering with our own highest good—our moral spirit—it may prove that we have acted against our true national interest and undermined the future of our own peace. We have been disloyal to the one conviction before which all dissensions would have disappeared—a conviction which was preached from the pulpits of all denominations. We have really believed in the Gospel of Peace. And now, when temptation came, we have been led into the betrayal of our faith by those who preferred to kill rather than to be satisfied with smaller profits. The ghosts of those hundreds of thousands whom our shrapnel has slain will march for many a day through our land. We have maimed those who are not our enemies. When will this our shame come to an end, and America awake again to its sacred mission of goodwill and love and moral righteousness?

BRINGING IN THE HARVEST

that we may not think of putting an embargo on the export of the arms they need for their strategy; but anybody who reads the newspapers and magazines, or who comes back from a time of real observation in Europe, must frankly confess that the respect for America has sunk as quickly as the satisfaction in the American military aid has risen. Mr. John Reed, a well-known war correspondent, since his return from Europe has declared in public meetings that there is really no difference at present among the Allies, the anti-Allies and the neutrals; all are convinced that American help can be had by the highest bidder. And yet the United States was the nation which, only a year ago, stood before the whole European world as the symbol of moral idealism in public life!

But if we have lost not only the good opinion of the world, we have lost, by the same stroke, a tre-

WHAT IT IS TO BE BORN AGAIN

A REVIVAL SERMON BY REV. C. A. MUTCH, D.D.*

Text: "Ye must be born again." John 3: 7

CHRISt was the dominant figure of his day. His teachings and works formed the principal topics of discussion in the cities, towns and hamlets he visited. It is not strange that Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, came under the spell of Jesus' power, and in order to secure the knowledge he was seeking at first hand, sought for a private interview. He introduced the subject which was giving the people so much concern and which, doubtless, lay nearest his own heart, by saying: "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God; for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." He came by night, probably because there was less liability of being disturbed than at any other time. Nicodemus was well versed in Jewish law, familiar with the Jewish ritual and the temple services. As a member of the Sanhedrin he was a man of authority. He was singularly free from pride, prejudices, bigotry, hypocrisy—the prevailing sins of the sect to which he belonged. He came as an open-minded, honest seeker after truth. Though he was a scholar, and perhaps the peer of any of the Pharisees of his day, yet he was ignorant of the fundamental requirement of entrance into the kingdom of God.

When Jesus said, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God," Nicodemus was amazed. In his astonishment he cried: "How can a man be born when he is old?" Without attempting to answer his question or explain the process of the new birth, Jesus reiterated the great truth with even greater solemnity and with added emphasis.

All through the centuries the trail of sin is easily traced. We are all tainted. The question which should greatly concern us is: "How can clean-minded, God-loving men and women be made out of these depraved natures of ours? How can this spirit be changed? These are the questions of questions. How can he be changed? Will education do it? Will ethical culture do it? Will science do it? Will civilization, or evolution, or environment, do it? Will any or all of the "isms" offered as panaceas for human ills do it? Has man ever succeeded in cleansing his own heart and renewing a right spirit within him? No. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?" is the challenge of the Book to all man-made schemes of redemption. Man left the kingdom of God of his own choice, and if he would enter it again he must be born again.

The Fundamental Reason

I remark in the first place that the new birth is a reasonable necessity (Matt. 5: 8; John 3: 5; I Cor. 2: 14). The Christian life has its beginnings in the new birth. There are doubtless many agencies employed leading up to this change. There are many contributing elements in bringing about this change, but regeneration, the new birth, is wrought by the power of the Holy Spirit. In conversion, man is the active agent; he turns to God. In regeneration he is the passive agent; he receives from God. Conversion is a change of mind; regeneration is a change of nature. Sin is not a mere foible; it is not merely human weakness. It is the foulest thing on earth. No human scheme of redemption, no matter how well planned and executed, has sufficient virtue to counteract the hereditary tendencies to sin. Men rarely turn to God before they have an approximately correct conception of sin's destructive nature. A bishop once said that much of the preaching of modern times, with reference to sin and the necessity of regeneration, is simply a parody on this cardinal doctrine of the Bible. Instead of declaring, with positive conviction, "Except ye be converted . . . ye shall all likewise perish," "He that believeth not shall be damned," a burlesque of this doctrine is made by saying: "Ye must repent, as it were, and be converted, in a measure, or you will be damned, to some extent." Call it dogmatism if you will, but it must be insisted upon that man must be born again if he would see the kingdom of God.

We are told that the sincere acceptance of Jesus as Saviour and Lord, with the purpose of following him, is all that is necessary to salvation. To "accept," to "determine," to "purpose," are acts of volition, acts of which each is capable, and of course necessary on the part of the penitent; but in no sense are they to be understood as the equivalent of the new birth. As we are not saved by the works of the law, neither can we enter the kingdom of God by simply "willing," "determining." We are born again, "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1: 13). "The great mystery of religion," said Dr. Westcott, "is spiritual regeneration." "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit" (John 3: 8).

Not Development—Bebirth

There is no process known by which one can grow out of a state of sin and into a state of grace. Jesus himself said so. What he insists on is not evolution, but regeneration. You cannot educate a man into the kingdom of God. Greece was probably the most cultured of all the ancient nations, but her culture did not save her morally or politically. Some of her philosophers held that virtue could be taught, and there are those in every age who hold to the same theory; but the Bible declares, and experience corroborates it, that this is not possible. Before Greece came into being, Egypt had reached heights of civilization unknown to contemporary nations. Her people had great inventive genius. They excelled in the mechanical arts. It is said the first libraries were in Egypt. Historians tell us that they invented or improved the science of physics. They understood astronomy, for they were among the first to observe the courses of the planets. From earliest antiquity their year was composed of three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours—about twelve minutes longer than our year. Wendell Phillips says the railroad dates back to Egypt. He says also that they had machinery, the arrangement of which could only be accounted for by supposing the motive power to have been that of steam. But her education, her splendid civilization, did not save her. We find similar examples among modern nations. Education can save no one. "The intellect, cultured to all refinement, is nevertheless the degradation of intellect, unless the spirit of man is in harmony and in actual intercourse with the spirit of God." A cultured mind is no evidence of a clean heart. Intelligence is no passport to heaven. Knowledge is no certificate of a godlike character. The attempt to make men Christians by a process of education has often been tried and as often failed.

A missionary spent fifteen years in Greenland educating the people; attempting, as he said, to bring them to that standpoint where they could become intelligent Christians. But the well-intentioned effort ended in dismal failure. With a sad heart he preached on the text: "I have labored in vain; I have spent my strength for naught" (Isa. 49: 4), and returned to his native land. He was succeeded by another, who preached on sin, repentance, regeneration, the love of God, which resulted in the conversion of one native who became a flaming evangelist amid the frozen regions of the North, bringing many others to accept Christ as their Redeemer. The mystery of the new birth effected in him and in those whom he won to Christ what fifteen years of training the intellect could not do. We cannot even reform a man by educating him.

All Things Become New

The need of the world is a new heart. None can walk in the statutes of Jehovah nor keep his judgments unless he be born again. "A new heart will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh. And I will put my spirit within you and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments to do them" (Ezek. 36: 26-27). Man was created for the kingdom of God, but by sinning he has closed every avenue of approach to God. And "no native genius or acquired scholarship, no endowment of nature or attainment of culture, can supply the place of regeneration." He is dead in sin, and if he would have life, if he would enter the kingdom of God, he must be born again. None is exempt. It applies to each individual alike. Carlyle never gave utterance to a greater truth than when he said: "The new birth is the deliverer of us all." The learned and the ignorant, the high degree and of low degree, the virtuous and the vicious, if they would enter the kingdom of God must be born into it.

The necessity of regeneration is absolute. The Son of God makes that declaration, and he speaks with authority. "Ye must be born again." There is no substitute for it. Civilization, race, morality, culture, position, wealth, respectability, education, church membership, are lighter than vanity, many or all are to take the place of regeneration. A man can no more change himself from a hater of God into a lover of God than the biting north wind can melt the ice and snow of the Frigid Zone and change that region of death into fertile fields and blooming gardens. Salvation by character is a delusion and a snare. "If I wash myself with snow water and make my hands never so clean; yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes shall abhor me" (Job 9: 30-31). "For though thou wash thee with niter, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord God" (Jer. 2: 22).

Marvel Not, Therefore

When James Calvert came to the Fiji Islands his first work was to gather up the remains of a cannibal feast held the day before; yet in less than fifty years these same cannibals sat around the table of the Lord in reverent worship. A miracle! Yes, a miracle, wrought through the mystery of the new birth. On no other principle can we explain the marvelous change in the life and character of Saul, that bitter persecutor of the early church; or of John Newton, that cruel slave-trader; or of Jerry McAuley, spending thirty-five years of his life in prison until God saved him; or of degraded heathen; or of the countless thousands of earth's teeming millions, except that they were born of God. On no other principle can we account for the marvelous and instantaneous change wrought on the countless thousands saved in our missions or homes for fallen women and other life-saving stations throughout the world. Man has sought out many inventions to avoid God's way of entering his kingdom; but according to the teaching of our Lord, they have simply made clean the outside of the cup and the platter. It was simply paying the hire of mint and anise and cummin, and omitting the weightier matters of the law.

Making clean the outside of the cup is worse than useless. The trouble lies in the heart, and out of it are the issues of life. No external remedy can set the heart right or make it clean. A change of habit is not a change of heart. We may succeed in checking the outward display of sin, in controlling our passions, yet there is always the possibility of that which is within the natural heart showing itself in practical life.

The creation of a new heart is beyond the reach of man or of man-made schemes. While he cannot destroy himself, he cannot save himself. From the immemorial the nations of the world have endeavored to settle their disputes and right their wrongs by diplomacy, by compromise, by force, by every expedient known to statecraft, and all have failed. "Now," wrote an editor recently, commenting on the European war, "let them try Christianity." So every man-made scheme to make his heart right with God has failed. Try God's way. Enter the door he opens. Allow him to cleanse the heart and renew a right spirit within. The one thing man needs is the power to overcome the forces of evil within him. That power is given him by the Holy Spirit, when he, through the process of the new birth, enters the kingdom of God. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

* Pastor, Messiah United Brethren Church, Schuylkill, Pa.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON S. COOPER

Glory Everywhere

SUNDAY, May 9. Isaiah 6. "The fulness of the whole earth is his glory." This was the song of the seraphim, those burning ministers whose purity is translucent, and who dwell in the immediate presence of God. And they sang that the fulness of natural glory is the vesture of the Lord. Wherever they gazed upon beauty they knew it to be the hem of his garment. Every glorious thing was significant with God. Everywhere they heard the rustle of mystic wings. Their purity gave them senses of superlative refinement, and material things became transparent and sacramental, and they held communion with the inward spirit, which was the Spirit of God.

Now we can almost test our spiritual strength by our discernment of the divine glory. The power of our lens is determined by the measure of our purity. We may gauge our purity by our vision. How much then of "the fulness of the whole earth" do we recognize as the glory of God? How much of nature is vesture, the garment of an immediate presence? When we go on our holidays to grand novel places, what kind of a time has the soul, in vision and communion? How much of the grandeur or loveliness is felt to be holy ground, haunted by the indwelling Spirit of God? Or when we gaze upon anything noble and glorious in human life with what measure of readiness do we interpret the human "fulness" as the shining glory of God? Are our eyes dim, and is our vision sealed, so that we can be in the wide house of the Lord and not know it, and be in the very brightness of his glory and not discern his presence? It is all a matter of eyes, and eyes are all a matter of holiness.

Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. "Lord, that I might receive my sight!" "Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean." "I will, be thou clean." And in that reaction the eyes are enlightened to behold the glory of the Lord.
J. H. J.

Tender to Our Weakness, Gracious to Our Cry

MONDAY, May 10. Isaiah 30: 19-26. "He will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry." The weaker the cry the quicker will be God's response. When a child cries lustily the mother can take her time, but her feet hardly touch the floor when she catches an almost inaudible sob. It is the touch of the garment's hem which arrests our Saviour's steps most absolutely and quickly. Once saw a big, burly smith, who would wield the heaviest hammer in his shop, kneeling over the cot where a tiny babe was lying. His wife called him to the evening meal, but he replied, "Don't you see that I can't come? The child is holding me fast!" The little hand had got entangled in his bushy beard, and he was a prisoner to the weakness of his little babe. The weaker your hand, the more broken your heart, the tenderer the grace of God. "He will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry."

Grace is the remedial aspect of the love of God. When that love comes in contact with the beings of a sinful world it shows itself as grace, but when it comes to us here, it is as grace. If our flesh is wounded and torn the blood pours out a reparative product that makes the rent good; so God's love is always suiting itself to whatever wound we have inflicted on ourselves or received through others. Jesus was the great repairer of the miseries of this time. He dwelt among men "full of grace." Can your heart-trouble to God. He will comfort, repair and make whole, with love passing the love even of woman.
F. B. M.

The Christian's Glass of Vision

TUESDAY, May 11. Isaiah 33: 17. "Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty: they shall behold a land that reacheth afar." In Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress we read of the shepherds placing a glass in the hands of the pilgrims and bidding them look away to the Heavenly City. At first their hands shook with nervousness so that they could hardly see. But after a little, the account tells us, "They thought they saw something like a gate and also some of the glory of the place." God places in the hands of the Christian the glass of vision, so that we may look not only forward but backward for new inspiration on our pilgrim way.

We look backward and in memory count the blessings of which we are so often forgetful when our eyes are looking into our own troubled hearts. "He hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins" is the way in which the Scripture suggests one reason for human discouragement. We too often have a bad memory for past blessings. Gratitude is the memory of the heart. "Behold," said Tennyson, "the man who was and is, and all he was is overworn." Myopia is a disease of the eye that comes from looking at things too near, too much in detail, picking out fine threads, or studying fine print. Spiritual myopia is caused by a lack of getting far-sighted vision both on the path up which we have come and also out upon the distant journey upon which we have been promised God's presence as our constant guide and cheer.

God has promised to show us the path of life, and the difference between men is often not simply in "remembering the days of old," but also in recognizing the "land of far-stretching distances" toward which God with loving and wise hand is leading us. We have implicit trust in a faithful earthly friend for the future. Do we have like unswerving trust in God to lead our steps aright?
C. S. C.

The Virtue of Willing Obedience

WEDNESDAY, May 12. John 7: 1-18. "If any man willeth to do his will he shall know." Our Lord constantly insisted that his teaching was not his own, but the Father's. He spake what he had heard, been taught, and had seen with his Father (8: 26, 28, 30). He said that his Father had given him a commandment as to what he should say; and as the Father spoke to him, so he spoke (12: 49, 50). He passed on the words as they had been given to himself (17: 8, 14). He insists that if we are willing to do God's will we shall know what God would teach us, and that his words are truth.

A phrase has been coined from this great saying, which is eminently illuminating, viz.: Obedience is the organ of knowledge; but we may question whether it would not be still more apt to say that our willingness to obey is the organ through which we see and know the certainty of Christ. He speaks of himself as equal with the Father (5: 18), as the only Way to God, as the Saviour of the world. If these words are true they end all controversy. It is at our peril that we refuse him.

But how may we know? The answer is unmistakable: Be willing to do! The difficulty, after all, is not in the reason or mind, but in the heart. We love our own will and way. Let us show that we are willing, by assuming that Christ is the Son of God. Let us begin to do what Jesus says in every detail of life; and as we obey, the light will break and grow to perfect day. We shall no longer assume, we shall know. Fénelon said that if you have traveled for six months with a guide through an unknown country and have found that he never failed, your confidence would not rest on testimony but on experience.
F. B. M.

Where Faith Is Better Than Knowledge

THURSDAY, May 13. Isaiah 41: 10. "Fear thou not; for I am with thee: I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." We often see tired, nervous men or women, loaded down with responsibilities, carrying burdens that seem all too heavy for their shoulders, and hear them say, "I don't know which way to turn"—and they often turn in every direction except in the right one in their search for the help they eagerly crave.

The stress of life is so great at present, even the task alone of earning the daily bread for ourselves and those depending upon us, that we find ourselves frequently dismayed, and at the time when strength is most needed, giving up the fight for the lack of a positive faith that is powerful in just such times of obstacle and need. At this time we need to go back to first principles, to realize that God once spoke to men who feared that they could not win, saying, "The battle is not yours, but God's." These words were not spoken for the benefit of a man four thousand years ago; they were given for the world of men who today must needs go into the daily fight that marks our modern world.

The battle-ground may be the market place, the shop or the lawyer's office, or even the humble kitchen, but if the cause is just for which we struggle, if we battle for our own, if the motive is unselfish, we know that we have God's promise that he will give us strength. Are we not all entitled to the best that we can get out of life for ourselves and for our loved ones, provided that best will not cause unhappiness or harm to others? Today if I am faint or dismayed or weary let me take this great word of God, given to his people for assurance and hope at a time of their greatest need. Today let me remember that his strength is made perfect in my weakness. We may not know the way before us, but we may be assured of the character of our Guide.

I know not what the future hath of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death his mercy underlies;
I know not where his islands lift their fringed palms in air;
I only know I can not drift beyond his love and care.

C. S. C.

The Soul-Hunger That Craves for Growth

FRIDAY, May 14. Philippians 3: 12-21. "I press on, if so be I may apprehend." Surely Paul might have been content with the results of his life-work, as he counted the churches he had founded, the epistles he had written and the commanding influence of his words. But he could not rest content with past attainment while the summits of the higher Alps rose unclimbed before him.

A friend one day discovered Thorwaldsen in tears, and on asking why the distinguished sculptor was giving way to depression he received this reply: "Look at that statue. I have realized my ideal, and fear therefore that I have reached the high-water mark of my profession. When a man is satisfied he ceases to grow."

It is said that Tennyson was seventeen years in writing "In Memoriam." He wrote the little song, "Come Into the Garden, Maud," fifty times before he published it. The wife of a distinguished painter said, "I never saw my husband satisfied with one of his productions." Thus self-dissatisfaction lies at the root of our noblest achievements. What is true generally is particularly true as a condition of growth in the divine life. Even if we have been kept from outward and disgraceful sin, how frequently we come short of the glory of God! If we do not commit trespass, we are burdened with debt! Never yield to discouragement, never admit that failure is a necessary part of your life, never abandon your quest for the highest! Remember that Christ is just in front! "My soul followeth hard after thee, thy right hand sustaineth me!"
F. B. M.

Sinful to Doubt Christ's Willingness

SATURDAY, May 15. Mark 9: 23. "If thou canst believe." The "if" implies a doubt. We put the "if" on the Christ side. "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." Jesus puts it over on the human side. "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." It is sinful to doubt Christ's willingness or ability. Martha said, "Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died." If she had only believed it, Jesus was there all the while. Christ putting the divine "yet" beside her "if" said, "Yet shall he live."

Oh, glorious Yet! Bridging the gulf between the mortal and the immortal. Job understood this thought when he cried, "If he slay me, yet will I trust in him." Habakkuk also wrote, "If the fig tree shall not blossom, yet will I rejoice in the Lord." David thrilled the world when he wrote, "If I walk through the valley and the shadow of death, yet I will fear no evil." Paul echoed the same, "If our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed." The Syro-Phœnician woman, pushing aside all ifs, cried out in faith, "Yet the dogs eat the crumbs that fall from the Master's table." If you are the chief of sinners, yet the blood of Jesus Christ will cleanse you from all sin. We are not straitened in God by "ifs," for all God's attributes and goodness are on the right side of the "yet."
E. W. C.

Joshua on Meditating

THIS book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success. Turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

Sympathy for Mankind

WE HAVE frequently had occasion to remark on the ability of President Wilson as a speaker. Few men in public life today make a better impression on the platform, or possess in the same high degree the gift of logical and persuasive address. In his recent speeches before the Daughters of the Revolution in Washington, and at the Associated Press luncheon in New York—both events within a week of each other—he was in his best philosophic vein. On the first of these occasions he skilfully gave a new turn to an old thought—that of the “melting-pot,” in which we compound “the metal of nationality,” and whose crucible tests in a double sense the metal and the mettle which go to compose this nation. In both addresses he emphasized self-possession, equipoise, the power to resist excitement and to think calmly as the ultimate test of American character. Discussing neutrality, he defined it as neither indifference nor self-interest; but as something which has for its basis sympathy for mankind.

Many will regret that the President did not see fit, in either address, to refer to the trade in arms and ammunition. It would have been regarded as the most natural thing in the world for him to be outspoken on the subject, since it is one that is uppermost in the public mind, and concerning which there are many different opinions. True, it is not a pleasant topic. If, in the long process of international amalgamation, we have grown to be a compound of the older peoples and are therefore able to understand all nations, as President Wilson believes we do, is it conceivable that the great body of Americans can view with approval our traffic in arms, which is prolonging the war? If the basis of neutrality be sympathy with mankind, as the President has explained, may not that avowal in itself be regarded as logically a condemnation of our participation in supplying arms to keep up the slaughter? Here was a favorable opportunity to deal with the arms question; yet it did not come to the surface, not because it did not belong there, but doubtless for the reason that this was one of those occasions when, as the President himself frankly explained, he could not speak with freedom. Yet the unspoken thoughts are often the greatest. Without some illumination on the subject, it is difficult to understand how the beautiful theory of a neutrality which means “sympathy for mankind” harmonizes with the actual facts.

There have been many times these last six months when thousands of good, loyal Americans have lifted their gaze across the sea and sent their sympathies afar. In their souls they have been troubled, knowing conditions in Europe, and having the consciousness that as a people we are directly or indirectly contributing to the sorrow and the suffering. They are now asking their own hearts whether, while keeping out of trouble ourselves, we have not brought it very heavily upon others. By these good folks the President's address will be read with mingled feelings of gratification and disappointment. With the highest appreciation of his ability, and his setting forth of American ideals, they will look in the speech in vain for a single word that reveals his real thought concerning the long line of American foundries and forges that are keeping their furnaces roaring night and day, turning out the material to keep up this terrible war. Indorsing loyally all he has said, they are still in the dark and unable to see how the national conscience can square itself under the circumstances, or how we can be made to feel as men who, in God's sight, are exemplifying by our conduct toward other men a true and real sympathy for mankind.

Unexpected Testimonies

A YOUNG wife, busy about the morning household tasks and talking friendly common-places to the woman helping her, happened to think of the strange and baffling mysteries of death. She spoke her thoughts. “How strange death seems!” she said. “How hard it is to realize that we all must die! I dread to think of it.” “I like to think of it,” the other woman replied. She had had many sorrows. Life had been, so far, more than ordinarily hard. Hard work, no advantages, early marriage, one happy year, then four years of helping her young husband to fight tuberculosis. Then defeat, and her husband's death. Now poverty, loneliness and work.

“I like to think of death,” she said. “I like to think of that land where there will not be any trouble. I like to think of that home that cannot be spoiled.”

A young man, impatient at the slowness of a newsboy to hand him a morning paper as the train came in, let slip some outrageous oaths. A friend behind him was thoroughly surprised and greatly grieved. Talking the matter over a little later and trying to make the young man see how much harm such habits do, his friend said: “Some people and places are called ‘godless’; others ‘godly.’ You may not believe in God, but even if that is so, you do not want to help make people and places godless.” “But I do believe in him,” said the young man earnestly. He had done a lot of reading and studying of agnostic and even atheistic literature.

“I do believe in him,” he said, looking wistfully and honestly and earnestly into his friend's eyes.

The young man's friend was talking that same evening with an amazingly well-read Jew. He spends his time on the train and his other spare hours reading Kant and Lotze and Hegel and Spencer and Darwin, and the latter-day scientists, not even fearing Ingersoll and Paine and Voltaire. Probably not one man in fifty thousand is so well read as he, perhaps not one in a hundred thousand. He has read medicine and knows the last word in science. His friend asked him: “Does your scientific reading at all unsettle your belief in God?” His face lit up. “Oh, no!” he exclaimed. “It strengthens it.” He felt that science reveals and interprets God.

The next morning this same friend was walking along a city street with another Jewish gentleman. This second Jew is also a daring thinker. He has broken away from many of the Jewish traditions. His friend has often thought that he has gone too far away. This morning as they crossed Fifth Avenue in company with another friend, their attention and their steps were arrested by a glory of magnolia blooms. The men gazed over the iron fence at this sudden miracle of spring in the city.

“Just think,” said the Jew, “two weeks ago a snowstorm, a blizzard. And now this!” They stood awed before the wonder, the fragrance, the suddenness of that burst of bloom.

“See what God can do in two weeks,” said the Jew.

A humble workwoman, a swearing boy, a scholar and a restless-minded Jew, just in these ordinary day events and day talks had added their testimony to the truth of God. So does the universal thought and aspiration and conviction of mankind come back to the church's great word: “I believe.”

More Light on the Bible

FROM time to time, through the explorations of archeologists, new light continues to be shed on the Bible, causing the hostile critics to modify their attitude to a pronounced degree. Professor Camden Coburn, who lately returned from a long tour of exploration in Palestine, has just given to the public the result of some interesting discoveries which have a bearing on the authenticity of the Scriptures. He had the opportunity of reading fragments of the New Testament, which had belonged to Christians of the first century—a time when many were thrown to the lions for accepting the new religion. Some of those pieces were papyrus, while others were of parchment or pottery. On one large piece of pottery, taken from an ancient dwelling, he found passages from the New Testament inscribed, which he declares were “line for line and letter for letter” identical with the same passages as they are rendered in our translations today. Skeptics have claimed that much of the New Testament writings were the product of men who lived in a later century, and this the professor holds to be thoroughly disproved by his discovery. Further, he states, the four evangelists, in their writings, used the vernacular or common language of the time and place (the Aramaic), whereas it used to be held by many eminent scholars that the New Testament writings were originally in Greek. The mass of papyri unearthed during the last twenty years has disproved this. It was the common language of the people, written in the current phraseology and with many of the common expressions, yet always written with simple reverence. The professor has been enabled to catalogue thirty-eight different sets of New Testament writings, which, added to those already catalogued in the world's museums, make sixty sets of fragments of ancient New Testament, coming mostly from the third to the sixth century now available for the use of scholars. This means, he declares, “that every doctrine, faith and fact known to us today, connected with the Bible, was known to those early Christians.”

Modern travelers through the Sinaitic Peninsula have written interesting accounts of their experiences in tracing the wanderings of the Israelites, who spent forty years in the wilderness. Professor Coburn explored the peninsula. He found that the Israelites, on leaving Egypt, might have reached Palestine in twelve days by taking the northern route; but they found themselves barred by fortified fortifications, the ruins of which have been found by excavators. The Israelites were therefore compelled to take a southerly course. The miracle of the passage of the Red Sea, which has long been a bone of contention to critics and skeptics, explained by Dr. Coburn, who learned that a peculiar phenomenon has been known to occur at long intervals when, with the wind blowing from a certain quarter, a portion of the sea-bed has been left almost bare. In the story of the Passage in Ex. 14: 21, we are told that “the Lord caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea land dry.” Other travelers have written concerning traditions of the same phenomenon, and this latest confirmation by a careful and painstaking investigator is an additional refutation of the objections that have been raised by a certain class of writers to this part of the Bible story. It was a miracle in line with the force of nature, which, obedient to the divine will, worked together in a marvelous way to open a path of escape for the Israelitish host.

Religion in Politics

THAT outspoken Catholic weekly, the Watchman, in its issue of April 8, called the attention of its readers to the rest of the injection of the religious question into the last election, particularly in St. Louis and Chicago, and pointedly asked: “Was the rebuff offered the Democrats intended for the Catholics of these cities?” It seems that in both places the battle was waged to a considerable extent on the religious issue. “Protestants,” says the Watchman, “were elected by an average vote against whom Catholic opposition had centered.” But while affecting to regard this as of comparatively slight importance, the paper takes it as an opportune occasion to give some very candid advice to its own people in these words:

We fondly hope and pray that whenever and wherever the church enters politics, Catholics may go down in defeat. We want no Catholic party. We want no “Center” in the United States. In this country for some years there has been persistent agitation to form a “Catholic Center” in the United States. Catholics are stronger in this country than they are in Germany; and why should they not strive to make their power felt here as there? Catholics are numerically stronger than all the other religious denominations combined. Why should they refuse to fight under the Catholic banner? We have a confederation of Catholic Societies in this country, composed largely of Germans, and from the beginning it has been a political body. It has busied itself largely with questions of national and international, and state and municipal politics, and its vigilance committees cover the whole land. We named it “the Big Drum,” and have often prayed that the stalwart Teuton would run his big boot through it. It is responsible for the Catholic agitation in favor of an American intervention in Mexican affairs, and the hierarchy of that country can thank it alone for their present hopeless plight.

Whenever Catholics go into politics as Catholics we hope they may go down in defeat. The place of the Catholic in politics is always in the opposition. The church is strongest politically where she holds the balance of power. She need not hope for supremacy, for she cannot have it. The powers of the world are arrayed against her. But the house of Beelzebub is internally divided against itself, and the church can rule while best fight among themselves.

It is not on record that any other church or any religious body outside of the Catholics has ever committed the folly of attempting to gain power and influence through the ballot box. No one ever has of Methodists, Presbyterians, Lutherans, or Baptists running a political ticket or making nominations or attempting to carry a municipality or a state. If they ever did try such foolish tactics, we should be to see them defeated.

It would be well for the Catholic Church to take a leaf from Father Phelan's book and drop politics and stick to its proper sphere. But the old lure of temporal power, no matter on how limited a scale, seems too strong to be resisted.

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

CHARLES W. MACCORD, professor emeritus of mechanical drawing and designing in Stevens Institute of Technology, died recently at his home in Hoboken, N. J., in his sixtieth year. He was chief draftsman for Captain John Ericsson, and made the working drawings for the ironclad Monitor, famous for her fight with the Merrimac in Hampton Roads. The Confederates had sent the Merrimac into Chesapeake Bay to destroy the United States ships there. She was defeated by sinking the Cumberland and capturing and setting fire to the Congress. The next day she was destroyed by her work of destruction, but her officers were much surprised to see close by the Minnesota in Hampton Roads a queer-looking warship like "a cheese-box mounted on a raft." This had been invented for coast defense by Captain John Ericsson, a noted Swede, living in this country. It consisted of a small iron hull, the lower part being a large oval raia, covered with sheet iron, and crowned by a revolving turret some nine feet above the deck, containing two guns. The eight guns of the Merrimac had no effect on the Monitor, and she was compelled to withdraw. This naval engagement shook the continent, and echoed around the world. It ended the wooden ship as an engine of war, and introduced the day of the ironclad. MacCord, who was a graduate of Princeton University, remained with Ericsson until the death of the great inventor. Later he went to the professorship of mechanical drawing and engineering in Stevens Institute, caring to mind one of a similar calling at the beginning of the race: "And Zillah, she bore also Tubal-cain, an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron." (Gen. 4: 22.)

SECRETARY OF WAR
GARRISON, at the recent Jefferson Day dinner, paid a tribute to Thomas Jefferson.
Among other things, he said:
"One hundred and seventy-two years ago Jefferson was born. Eighty-nine years ago he died. Between these dates our nation was passed successfully through its early perils and had grown comely and strong. Then was born the idea of democracy, that lifeline and opportunity and hope: the heritage of each and all; equally; that where men gathered in human societies and founded governments, justice must be the foundation, and cornerstone, and the pillars, and the roof." Besides his inestimable service as one of the founders of the republic of which Secretary Garrison spoke, Jefferson has laid the nation under an everlasting obligation to him for the purchase of the Northwest Territory, which cherishes one of the most beautiful and powerful civilizations the world has ever known. Liberty through truth and justice, which Jefferson voiced, and to which the secretary referred, is thus taught by the One who was all truth and all justice: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 2.)

A SIXTEEN-YEAR-OLD GIRL, the daughter of a fruit dealer, lately perpetrated the daring feat of passing herself off as one of the daughters of the Russian Emperor, even to inspecting a hospital, where she was received with royal honors. Yekaterina Romanoff, as she calls herself, bears a striking facial resemblance to one of the grand duchesses. When she attired herself as a sister of mercy the deception was complete. She arrived in the dress at the Tsarkoe-Selo railway station.

is full of precious memories; its spiritual treasures had an important part in producing the enlightenment and virtue of the community today. The Good Book likens the search for salvation to the hunt for hidden treasure: "If thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures, then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God." (Prov. 2: 4, 5.)

NINE of the ten largest missionary societies of the United States, representing seven million church workers, made their reports for the year ending April 1. The statistics compiled in connection with the financial reports show that the American people, through their churches, contributed $55,000,000 to home missions and $18,000,000 to foreign missions, in both amounts surpassing England and Scotland together, the two large missionary-supporting countries for Protestants, and France, the missionary-supporting country for Catholics. It cost last year to maintain all churches in this country, including these mission funds, $410,000,000. And in this amount America leads all other countries. There is here obedience to this express command: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." (Mark 16: 15.)

THE corner-stone laying of the new Y. M. C. A. at Rochester, N. Y., the other day was a memorable affair. John R. Mott, LL.D., associate general secretary of the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, laid the corner-stone of the new building with a silver trowel. Among other things, Mr. Mott said: "This building is the first of a chain that will girdle the city. There has never been a more highly multiplying offering made in the great cities of America than this." Three presidents have praised its special work in the army and navy, in the Canal Zone and on irrigation territories. The business men of the nation have invested $90,000,000 for buildings and equipments for the Young Men's Christian Associations. The associations in Rochester and through the al, mental, moral and spiritual en are factors in answering thy kingdom come, thy will be s in heaven." (Matt 6: 10.)

AT THE Red Cross auction in London the other day two silver potato rings were sold which had a pathetic history. This item figured in the catalogue: "An Irish potato ring, with trellis work and circular panels of scroll foliage, by Richard William Dublin, 1774." The next lot contained a similar article. These two potato rings (circular stands for holding potato dishes) belonged to Samuel Pepys Cockerell, of the Royal Flying Corps. He met his death in Egypt in the service of his country, and his parents in loving memory presented these relics to the cause of relieving the suffering. Lord Newlands bid 500 guineas for each ring. The auctioneer said: "Lord Newlands intends to restore these rings to the father and mother of Lieutenant Cockerell, and he also wishes to pay a tribute to the worth of Lieutenant Cockerell." These pathetic impulses recall what was said of a captain in the Roman army to induce Christ to cure his servant: "For he loveth our nation." (Luke 7: 5.)

ON APRIL 15, there was dedicated a monument to Isador and Ida Straus in the Straus Park, corner Broadway and One Hundred and Sixth Street, New York City. The monument is in the form of a fountain. Reclining on a base of granite, looking toward a pool of water, is a bronze figure representing Memory. Behind the figure is a large granite bench, on the back of which is the inscription: "In memory of Isador and Ida Straus, who lost their lives in the Titanic disaster, April 15, 1912." Mayor Mitchel, Judge Greenbaum, Park Commissioner Ward and ex-Mayor Seth Low made timely addresses. There was appropriate vocal and instrumental music. The monument cost about $20,000. Mr. Straus, one of the leading business men of the nation, helped women and children into the lifeboat, accepting certain death for himself. And when the final choice had to be made whether to live without her husband or to die with him, Mrs. Straus deliberately got out of the lifeboat, and standing close beside her husband and looking into his face, decided that death should not divide them. Standing hand in hand they calmly waited for the slowly rising water to engulf them. This monument with its fountain of life expressing undying conjugal fidelity and heroic sacrifice will be a lesson of trust and love to the living for generations to come. This inscription was on the monument: "They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided." (II Sam. 1, 23) story of deceit. To our Western world, with its democratic ideas, it makes not a particle of difference whether the girl were the daughter of the fruit dealer or the Czar. There is royal blood that is good, and then there is royal blood that is very poor. Real royalty does not consist in the red current that runs in the physical veins, but in greatness of thought, purity of sentiment and nobility of action. The apostle announces the genuine democracy, the genuine brotherhood, in these words: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." (Acts 17: 26.)

HENRY M. LESTER, president of the Huguenot Association of New Rochelle, N. Y., is having the estate of Miss Eliza Moulton dug up in a search for the foundation of the first Huguenot church, which was built in 1688. Under the chancel, history says, the bodies of three pastors of the church, Revs. Daniel Boudet, Pierre Stoupe and Michael Houden, were buried. There is also a tradition that some of the residents of the town buried money and plate under the church during the Revolutionary War, and that it was never recovered. Hiding money and other treasure in the earth was a custom in olden times. The old church

THE WAR IN EUROPE *

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

THE indications are that the East is now regarded by the Germans and their allies as the important field of action, and that for some time their strength will be thrown there, and a defensive attitude will be adopted to a large degree in the West. In fact it very possibly is the Teutonic view that a series of successes in the eastern field would be more productive of Austro-German forces will be henceforth devoted to the eastern campaign, with the double object of holding the Russians back on the northern and eastern fronts and breaking through in the south to join Turkey. If this surmise is correct and the movement is successful the political effect on Italy will be most interesting.

Lloyd-George made some interesting statements

Tarnow, on the Dunajec, near its confluence with the Biala, captured several months ago from the Austrians, has been evacuated by the Russians, it was reported on Wednesday, on account of the Russian incapacity to stand the fire of the Austrian artillery.

While the evacuation of this West Galician town is not of very great importance in itself, it de-decisive results than an equal series on the French and Belgian lines.

THEIRS NOT TO MAKE REPLY; THEIRS NOT TO REASON WHY; THEIRS BUT TO DO AND DIE. FORWARD!

Neuve Chapelle, St. Eloi and the French offensive in Champagne and around Verdun seem to emphasize the fact that the German positions in the western field are so strong that any advance of importance gained therein by the Allies can only be gained at a very great cost in lives, and that for the purpose of holding the ground now in their possession the German troops now on that front suffice, or would suffice with comparatively small reinforcements.

Whereas on the other fronts there are the possibilities of greater and more important gains than on the western. Hence, it is very likely that the campaign against Serbia will again begin in a short time, because through Serbia lies the road which would, if won, enable the Germans to reach Turkey by possibly more ways than one, at the same time having a decided political effect on Rumania.

Turkey is, of course, but a station on the road to Egypt. This road is a long one and full of difficulties, but it would not be at all surprising to see the attempt made to travel it.

More than one hundred years ago the greatest soldier of modern times perceived and appreciated the vital value of Egypt to the British Empire, and made an effort, in the face of greater difficulties than exist today, to gain possession thereof, but failed, largely because the smaller men at home in power—Napoleon was not at that time the master of France—failed to realize the importance of the plan of their youthful general.

Dr. Rohrbach says in the 1911 edition of his well-known book: "England can be attacked and mortally wounded by land from Europe only in one place—Egypt." The news of Von der Goltz's appointment as commander-in-chief of the first Turkish army, announced during the week, points to the speedy unfolding of the real Turkish plan of campaign, and it will be rather surprising if that is not directed against this vulnerable point.

There recently has been significant French and British activity along the coast of Palestine and to the north of the Suez Canal. There are also strong indications that real activity near the Dardanelles is about to begin. This clearly would be the best counter-attack to the possible Turkish attack on Egypt. In all probability before many days are past we shall have very exciting and interesting news from both quarters.

So probably the bulk of the strength of the in the House of Commons during the week, one of which clears up a matter which has been obscure for some time—the strength of the British army on the continent. This has been variously stated at from one million to a million and a half. Lloyd-George tells us that it is thirty-six divisions or 540,000 men. The chancellor of the exchequer further said that in the three-day battle of Neuve Chapelle more ammunition was used than in the entire Boer War, which lasted two years and nine months.

It appears that the report that the German warship Dresden, which was sunk off Robinson Crusoe's Island (Juan Fernandez) some time ago, was really attacked inside the three-mile limit, as Great Britain has formally apologized to Chile for having violated her territorial waters.

Fighting is going on in the Carpathians, but owing to the melting snow, which has made the ground in the higher mountains almost impossible over control of the railroad running southerly therefrom and insures the crossing of the Biala river without great difficulty by the Austrian column advancing to the southeastwardly, which column, at last reports was between the Dunajec and Biala Rivers, whose courses separate more and more as they near the Carpathians.

This Austrian outflanking movement is also making further progress north of the Carpathians, moving in an easterly direction from Tarnow. Late in the week this column had driven the Russians as far to the westward as Gorlice on the Schowa, around which desperate fighting was taking place. This advance places this column squarely behind the Russian forces on the Carpathian passes, and would seem to make the Russian position precarious to a degree.

The Polish and West Russian campaigns are in an almost complete state of coma. This is explained by the presence everywhere of mud, not ordinary mud, but the deep, black, gassy mud peculiar to that count of bogs and marshes, in which a man will sink to his knees.

Another raid was made during the week on Indian territory from Afghanistan. It was again repulsed, but it is admitted that these raids, which are growing more frequent, are a result of the holy war started by Turkey. Very possibly we shall hear more from this quarter, as the Afghanistan fanatics once they get started, the movement will become one of some importance.

The most important fighting of the week on the western line has taken place in and around Hill No. 60, two miles east of Lillebeke, a place about the same distance east of Ypres. The British began their attack on this hill on the evening of April 17 by blowing up the German position, which they had previously mined, following this by infantry charges which put them in possession of the hill. The next day a counter attack took place but was beaten off, but since then the Germans have renewed the attack several times, and on one occasion secured a footing, which they subsequently lost.

The fight is still going on, the casualties on each side now being stated at from five to six thousand. The reason so much effort is being expended on this one hill is because of its important strategic position, commanding the approaches to Lille.

The Germans are stated to have thrown large reinforcements into Lille, and to have turned the whole line between Lille and the Belgian frontier into a gigantic fortress. It looks as though there is going to be some very heavy fighting in this vicinity.

AN AUSTRIAN MOUNTAIN TOPPER, THE BIG SKODA GUN

to fight over, it is confined to the lower ranges of the chain and the Galician plains. The Uszok Pass still remains completely in the hands of the Austrians, and if general indications count for anything the Russians will not be able to take it until they are heavily reinforced. Petrograd informs us late in the week that some six hundred thousand fresh troops were about to be thrown into Galicia. In the plains the battle is not progressing favorably to Russian arms.

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

COUNTERFEIT NOTES ON TOWELS. One of the strangest and largest counterfeits ever brought to the attention of the Treasury Department was found by Secret Service men in Washington a few days ago. The counterfeits, according to a statement in the New York Tribune, were Turkish towels, four feet long by two feet wide, and were astonishingly perfect copies of five-dollar silver certificates and of the ten-dollar gold certificate. Every detail of the genuine notes seemed to be woven into the towel on a greatly enlarged scale. Steps were taken to prevent the weaving of any more towels of this class, although it may be difficult to do this, if, as is believed, they were woven abroad. The law against counterfeits does not take into consideration the question of the harmfulness or immorality of the act; it is simply mandatory, and declares that such imitations must not be made. The towel-notes were probably intended as ornamental curios and fine specimens of weavers' handiwork. It would be difficult to imagine any other purpose to which they could have been put.

VERY LONG-DISTANCE ORATORY. While it is not a novelty to communicate over long distances by telephone, there was such a flavor of uniqueness about the dinner of the pushers in New York on April 22, that it is worth recording. When the stranded guests sat down to dine, they were surprised to find alongside each plate a telephone earpiece. Being requested by the toastmaster to put them to their ears, the assembled diners heard a cornet solo very clearly and sweetly played. A few minutes later, they were asked again to listen and all heard very distinctly the voice of Mayor James Rolph of San Francisco, who was talking to them from the other side of the continent, across 3,000 miles of wire, the speaker who preceded him having rendered his solo over the same distance. It was a startling yet pleasant surprise. The mayor greeted them cordially and told them of the wonders of the great exposition, after which the mayor of New York replied to Mayor Rolph's greetings over the 'phone. To point of this arrangement, 250 men kept the wires open from end to end of the continent, and $2,000,000 worth of telephone equipment was tied up while the conversation over the wires lasted. The long-distance wire crossed thirteen states, and the whole incident was a fair-weather one, with the exception of a certain spot in the Rockies where a storm caused a temporary disturbance, which fortunately did not interfere materially with the enjoyment of the occasion.

THE WATCH FOR TYPHUS. Port officials are under strict orders to be on the watch against the entrance of immigrants and others from typhus-infected parts of Europe, and among these orders 86 Greeks were removed from a ship at New York on April 21 to be disinfected and kept under observation.

DEATH AND DESTRUCTION BY STORM. A veritable cyclone struck the state of Texas on April 22 and touched the eastern part of Oklahoma, destroying in its path property estimated at over a million dollars, killing, it is thought, at least 500 persons, twelve in the capital, Austin. Streams everywhere were tremendously swollen, oil tanks were set on fire by lightning, buildings were overthrown and train and telegraph poles were for a time at a standstill.

MAILED TO RAISE THE F-4. The great depth at which the submarine F-4 was lost off Honolulu makes the work of the divers too dangerous to continue the efforts to lift the vessel from where she lies. One diver almost lost his life at 220 feet beneath the surface, but was reached and brought to the surface after being under water four hours. It is hoped that the craft could be towed to shallow waters. The Navy Department is unable to determine as yet the cause of the accident, but believes the craft died as the result of some sort of an internal explosion.

ENGLAND ENLISTS AMERICA IN HER WAR ON ALCOHOL. Evangelist Sunday is contemplating a visit to England, having been invited to lend a hand in downing King Alcohol in that country. He wishes to be assured that King George induces the invitation; but whether the latter does so or not, the evangelist is quite likely to defy the mines and the submarines at sea, sail at the close of his Paterson campaign. Should he do he will have a lively rod in pickle for the brewers and distillers as well as for the parliamentary contingent who are personally interested in the liquor traffic, and for the ministers generally whose attitude towards the prohibition program he regards as one of godless apathy if not open antagonism. Meanwhile, the British Weekly and a number of other leading journals have come out openly in favor of absolute prohibition of the drink traffic during the war. They stoutly oppose temperance measures as merely "tinkering with the evil," and hold that the wholesome examples set by Russia, France and Germany should be followed by England, and the whole traffic put strictly under the ban. Appearances indicate that the British Government may not, after all, have recourse to actual prohibition. In the House of Commons on April 22, Premier Asquith announced that Chancellor David Lloyd-George would shortly bring forward proposals for "dealing with the limiting of facilities for drinking." This is interpreted as meaning that the selling hours of public-houses would be shortened throughout the whole country.

IF PROPHETS WERE AUTOCRATS—THINGS WOULD BE DIFFERENT. Opening the second Anti-Saloon League campaign for a saloonless nation, in Boston, when Congressman Richard P. Hobson declared that liquor causes 100,000 deaths in the United States yearly, former governor of Tennessee Malcolm R. Patterson predicted that national prohibition will come within five years. Evangelist Sunday declares that "the dove of prohibition will build her nest in the dome of the Capitol within ten years." A news despatch from Washington says that so much territory has gone "dry," the commissioner of internal revenue is about to cut down severely the number of government gaugers now assigned to the distilleries.

UPPER END OF THE DALLES-CELILO CANAL

THE DALLES-CELILO CANAL COMPLETED. The eight-mile canal begun in October, 1905, to circumvent the obstinacy of a particularly difficult stretch of water on the Columbia River, Oregon, has been completed at the cost of about six million dollars, giving the Oregon country a clear lane for steamers between Lewiston on the Snake River and Astoria on the coast; and a special celebration by the communities benefited is arranged to take place May 3-8. This short stretch of artificial waterway has five locks, and will carry vessels to sea-level from a height of eighty-two feet at low water, sixty feet at high, the distance being traversed in three hours. The depth of the canal is about eight feet, and it is one of the greatest improvements in that section of country first explored in its primitive wildness by Lewis and Clark. There are now fifty-two canals for large vessels in the United States, six of them being still under construction, with a total length of nearly 2,000 miles, and representing a total cost of over $200,000,000.

ANOTHER INDUSTRY BENEFITED BY THE WAR. American makers of wooden legs are receiving urgent calls from northern France through the American Relief Clearing House of Paris, for artificial limbs, in order that a large number of soldiers wounded in the early stages of the war may now be able to find employment.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF "IF" ONCE MORE APPARENT. Our contemporary, the Review of Reviews, in its April issue, has these observations on the export of war munitions from this country to Europe: "It is not a business that humane Americans are proud of. . . . If at the very beginning of the war before such a decision could have had an unneutral bearing—our government had placed an embargo upon arms and war supplies, we might have had good reason ever afterwards to congratulate ourselves. But it does not seem feasible to forbid the private manufacture and sale of guns as articles of commerce, at a time when such a prohibition would benefit one side exclusively." We fear that such a conclusion will hardly stand the test. It is a great moral question, not a commercial one, and we believe a very large majority of the American people, deep down in their hearts, are ashamed of the whole business.

REVELATIONS OF A THEOLOGICAL DIAGNOSIS. A religious census of the senior class of the Yale University discloses the fact that there are in the class 82 Episcopalians, 53 Presbyterians, 39 Congregationalists, 25 Catholics, 19 Baptists, 1 Hebrew, 12 Methodists, 5 Dutch Reformed, 4 Lutherans, 2 Reformed Presbyterians and one student who avows himself a heathen and another an atheist.

A HALT BETWEEN CHINA AND JAPAN. It is learned from Peking that the negotiations between Japan and China regarding the Japanese demands have been halted, temporarily at least, while the Tokyo Government is discussing its policy in a gathering of the cabinet members and Elder Statesmen. There is an impression, in the absence of any official information on the subject, that the attitude of our own government and that of England has been conveyed to Japan, with the result that the excessive demands made on China may now be greatly modified and the "open door" preserved.

BOMB THROWERS REAL VILLAINS. The two Italians, Abarno and Carbone, who were detected some weeks ago by the New York police in a plot to destroy St. Patrick's Cathedral and afterward wage a bomb war on capital in general, and who at the time were half suspected by a skeptical public of being part of some sort of unique publicity, have turned out to be the genuine article, and upon trial and conviction have been sentenced to Sing Sing Prison for from six to twelve years.

TRAVELS OF A FAMOUS PICTURE. One of the great Rubens canvases, "The Adoration of the Magi," brought the highest price of the season at an auction in New York on April 22, at which 81 paintings, all more or less meritorious, were sold. The "Adoration" was knocked down for the sum of $13,000. It was painted originally for the Church of St. Martin in Bergues, French Flanders, but was sold by the church authorities in 1766 to raise money for the repair of the building. After passing through many different hands, it was sold in New York in 1853 for $6,000. Now, in all probability, it will return to France, whence it came.

NATION'S PET RELIC TO BE SHOWN TO THE WORLD. The Philadelphia Common Councils on April 15 voted to permit the Liberty Bell to be exhibited at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, this action being taken in response to appeals from many quarters, and some time after July 4 this priceless relic will start on what most probably will be the first stage of its last journey.

OUR NEUTRALITY DEFINED. Secretary Bryan for the administration has replied to the memorandum addressed by the German ambassador, Count von Bernstorff, to the United States Government complaining of our seeming acceptance of England's interpretation of international law and of the failure of the government to stop the shipment of arms abroad. Instead of taking umbrage at that memorandum, as some expected the administration to do, the President returns what some characterize as the soft answer that turneth away wrath. The opinion of others is that the note is an evasion of the point at issue. The ambassador is politely but firmly rebuked for the tone of his memorandum, and is reminded that in complaining that the American Government seemed to accept England's treatment of neutral shipping with equanimity he forgot this country's attempt to obtain from Germany and Great Britain mutual concessions in regard to the naval war zone. In the matter of the shipment of arms, the American note lays down the principle that any change in our laws of neutrality during the progress of a war, which would affect unequally the relations of the United States with the nations at war, would be an unjustifiable departure from strict neutrality; and adds that "the placing of an embargo on the trade in arms at the present time would constitute such a change and be a direct violation of the neutrality of the United States." But in announcing this doctrine no direct reply is made to the German ambassador's reference to the embargo placed by the administration on the trade in arms with Mexico. The note is regarded as of the first importance because of its definite and positive announcement that the government does not regard the traffic in war materials as unneutral.

A LONE CANADIAN LYRIST'S LOVE SONG. Many poems on the war have come to us, but few of them have the brevity and sweetness of this little verse, from G. A. A., a reader in Cairo, Canada:

"When Love is king, the swords will go,
Because the world will know no foe—
No one to raise the tyrants' hands,
Nor lay on others cruel commands;
But all will live as God designed
And sweet eternal pleasure find."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer; Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE. For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE. It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION. The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

WHAT has brought this about? As already indicated, money to spend was the primal cause; then a desire to enjoy what the auto would his neighbors. Within twenty minutes there were four automobiles filled with men on the ground, these coming from one to two miles and arriving before some of the nearby neighbors. They saved three buildings. Had they been obliged to depend on horseflesh, all they could have done was to have sympathized.

EDWARD VAN ALSTYNE

Mrs. Jennie L. Fogg; Mrs. N. J. Gerber; C. Swadlow; Friend, Paynes Depot, Ky.; Mrs. Wm. MacCallister; Anna Gilby Barker; Mrs. J. T. Jilcott; S. L. Allen; Mrs. H. N. Hill; A Missionary's Widow Shalehen, Pa.; M. W. Beaver, Okla.; Mr. & Mrs. M. Young; Florence Wilson; E. L. H., South Hill; J. Louney; Sam A. Thompson; Mrs. B. H. Lerch; John R. Ham; H. Schellenger, Chas. J. Schofield; Newton; Miss R. L. Schellenger, Chas. J. Schofield; Mrs. W. Storm Lake, Iowa; Grace B. Smith; Erickson; Henry S. Hoag; J. D. Lynde; W. D. Terrell; J. J. Jones; Mrs. Chas. Weeks; B. & J. E. Jane W. Northrup; A Friend, Melrose, Mass. Sharp; In His Name, Md.; Miriam C. Conover; Ella McDonald; O. C. Smith; Virginia Page; Whinnel Lake, Ind.; Mrs. W. Wood; Uniontown, Pa.; Mrs. B. F. Ford; Dun; Clarence V. Jackson; Elsie C. Jackson; W. Eddy; Mrs. Hull; Hester A. Farrior; W. Kittel; Mrs. E. J. Davis; Mrs. Hargrave; Mrs. Scholes; Sympathizing Sister, Teotone, Friend, Lake Bluff, Ill.; Mrs. Mary Knaft; Y. Mrs. Jennie Gustus; Mrs. Etta Knott; Subscriber, Georgetown, N. Y.; Mrs. Minnie Butler; A Friend, Norwich, Conn.; G. C. Wilcox; Marshall; Mrs. Harriet E. Morse.

Mrs. M. R. F., Newark, N. J.; Mrs. Thos. Shields; L. P. Allentown, N. J.; Emma D. Whiteley; S. Wagoner, Ill.; Mrs. E. Bailey; Wichita, Kan. C. H. Alley Stream, L. Y.; Miss Josephine Scheer; Mrs. Albert F. Friend," Atlantic, Iowa; An Interested Reader, risburg, Pa.; Mrs. Laura Jones; Grace S. Friend; M. J. Turley; A Friend, Los Angeles, Cal.; D. H. K. Millville, N. J.; Idaho; Mrs. L. B. Clark; W. H. Rowe; Friend, Mo.; Mrs. Thurum Clark; Mrs. Sam Anderson; Outwater; Mrs. J. P. Reynolds; M. A. Taylor; Golden; Mrs. Lizzie Miller; Mrs. S. J. W., Canaan, Ohio; M. M. Hillhouse; Helen Ward; Allen F. A Friend, Jacksonville, Ill.; A Subscriber Bedford, Mass.; Mrs. H. Raymond; C. Weaver Clayton, N. Y.; L. R. Hartley; Alton, Me.; George Kelly; Mrs. J. M. Field; Mrs. E. P.; Mrs. J. C. Dawson; Rachel C. Joan Fisher; Julia H. O'Neal; Mrs. C. E. Taylor; Mrs. J. A. Taylor; Mrs. Carrie Porter; Ma Thornton; A Friend, Los Gatos, Calif.; Mrs. Ha Ross; L. J. Harrison; A Sister, Barre, Vt.; Friend, Springfield, Ohio; E. F. Lowndes; W. L. Thompson; Mrs. T. Barwick; A Friend, China; Mrs. J. W. MacCormack; C. F. G. N. Y.; Sarah Ward; Mrs. E. M. Sherwood.

Additional contributions to be acknowledged later.

The receipts to April 22, $139,346.42, not all acknowledged in the Christian Herald as yet. Acknowledgments will continue each week.

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. Attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

M. C., Louisiana. Do you think it is possible under the present conditions of society to obey Christ's injunction not to be anxious for one's life, food and raiment? How is it that so many of our aged preachers who have given their time in preaching the Gospel and have not given enough attention to the accumulation of this world's goods to sustain them and their wives in their old age are now, some of them (and some other Christian workers as well), reduced to actual want and suffering for each of the bare necessities of life? How do you reconcile such conditions with such Scripture passages as Ps. 37: 3, 4; Matt. 6: 19, 25, 26, 30, 31, 34; Phil. 4: 6? These questions have troubled me no little. I hope to understand them thoroughly. Wish I could obey these injunctions, as I believe they ought to be obeyed and not have the nightmare of a destitute old age for myself and dear wife stare me in the face.

Merely to state such a question as you ask at the beginning of your letter is to answer it. Of course it is possible to obey Christ's injunctions. I were not, he would not be, as he is, the Word of God, the author of life. His philosophy of life is a philosophy that can be lived, or it can be valued at all. Just in passing, that is the trouble with "Christian" Europe now. It is saying that Christ's principles are not practicable in real life—and the result is a carnival of death. Christ simply asserts that God will take care of those who trust him. But he also said, at other times, that some of his followers will be killed because they follow him. Yet the fact that a Christian is killed because of his Christianity does not mean that God's not taking care of him. Paul jubilantly puts death, together with distress and persecution and pain, as among the things that cannot separate the trusting soul from the love of God. He declared, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." Read again the wonderful eleventh chapter of Hebrews, which names so many Old Testament saints and heroes who trusted God through suffering and death. The long list of Christian martyrs shows how gloriously Christ sustained those who were called upon to suffer and die. So to that part of your question there is but one answer. It is possible to trust Christ, no matter what outward circumstances befell yourself and loved ones may be. But your letter touches a point in which the churches are only at fault. They surely ought to guarantee adequate provision for the preachers and their wives who have given their lives to the work of the Gospel. The various denominations are making vigorous efforts to provide for their widows, and every year shows an advance. The churches cannot be too strongly urged to do their duty in this matter. It is surely a great reproach that so many aged ministers and their wives are in actual want.

The following letter received from Mr. C. R. Brewster, of Mirror, Alberta, is so thoughtful and so well expressed that we print it entire. In answer to Mr. Brewster's question is that political economists differ so widely on the subject of remedies for unsatisfactory and unjust social conditions and that the problems involved are also difficult that the Christian Herald cannot set its way clear to adopt specifically any one of them. Many social theories, such as Social Tax, Socialism, Communism, etc., contain some truth, but until the Christian Herald is clearly that some suggested course is the right one, which gives good promise of ameliorating social conditions, we cannot espouse it. Our mission as a guide and teacher of religious and moral thought is to uphold the person and the teachings of Christ. When we see clearly that one of these plans or any other is really an application of Christ's teachings to the problem of society, we shall endorse it:

In nearly every paper or journal issued we see discussions of our social problems, labor conditions, philanthropic foundations, alienation of working classes from the church and how to win them back, the unequal distribution of wealth, etc., ad infinitum. While I am only a common farmer, I claim that my moral perception may be just as acute as the brainiest of public men, and in all my reading I have seen nothing that seemed to touch any true section of the trouble except the Bible and the words of Henry George, whose works are based on the Golden Rule and the teachings of Christ. I have read his works, not as a partisan but as a student, seeking the truth, and I can find no flaw in his logic or reasoning. His premises and conclusions seem to conform to the moral senses.

For my part I can see no serious difficulty in putting his theories into practice. What I wish to know is why, if he is right, do not papers like the Christian Herald, and men of influence, who seem to have the good of the race at heart, talk up and work up these theories until they are put into practice? Or, if he is wrong please point out wherein he is wrong.

"I was driven from my native land by two hundred-dollar farm land, and the future generations will be driven to the Arctic Circle or into the slavery of the day laborer. Our home here is spoiled by speculator's holdings. Schools, churches and social life are all handicapped by this, and the young men of this neighborhood are going two and three hundred miles north of Edmonton to secure homesteads beyond all conveniences and home influence, with thousands of acres of the best of land lying idle all about us. As Mr. George says, it is like a man swimming a river to get a drink of water."

Reader. In Dr. Gray's sermon in the Christian Herald for March 31, he makes a distinction between "the righteousness" and "a righteousness." Is not "a" righteousness the righteousness of Christ the same as "the" righteousness?

From one point of view, it is proper to answer this question affirmatively; but Dr. Gray used the definite and indefinite articles to distinguish between the "righteousness" which God is in his own essential nature, and that "legal righteousness" which he bestows, through grace, on the believer in Jesus Christ, and which makes that believer a justified person in his sight.

O. H. S., Susquehanna, Pa., writes: "I was perfectly astonished on reading your article on the Pineys of New Jersey. Such a state could not be duplicated in darkest Africa. Yet there it is, within a few miles of New York and Philadelphia. What have the state authorities been doing all this time, let alone the churches, that such a scandalous state of things should exist?" Fortunately, there is now an opportunity to begin a reformatory work in the Pineys. It is encouraging to note that the governor of the state is taking an active hand in the investigation. Let us hope, now that the Christian Herald has thrown light on the situation, that the good people of New Jersey will take the matter in hand and give Governor Fielder and Pastor Bostwick all the aid they need.

H. L., Chandler, Ind. 1. Although the books of Samuel, as they now appear in our Bible, are divided, the work in the Hebrew MSS. is one and not in two separate parts. The present division was first made in the Septuagint and was afterwards presented in the same form in the Vulgate. In the Talmud (which speaks of Samuel's authorship) the "book" is designated in the singular number. After the invention of printing, the whole of Samuel was published as one book in the first edition of the complete Bible issued in 1488, and also in the Polyglot Bible printed at Alcalá, 1502-1517. It was not until 1518 that it appeared divided into two books, in the Bible printed by the Bombergers at Venice. They are really to be regarded as one book. 2. Ps. 119 was probably written to celebrate the completion of the Jewish canon by Ezra the Scribe and his body of distinguished co-laborers. It is devoted to the praise of the law and of God's Word, exhortation to its perusal, injunctions to reverent attention, prayers for its spiritual influence and warnings to the wicked for despising it. It has been observed, by careful commentators, that there are only two verses in the entire psalm (122, 132) which do not contain some reference descriptive of God's Word. This celebrated psalm does not appear to have been designed for use on any special occasion, but rather "as a manual of religious thoughts, especially for the instruction of youth and with a view to a form of expression which would be easily remembered."

H. K. M., Dayton, Ohio. Please explain as fully as possible how we may know God's will and begin the Christian life by obeying his will.

Your question implies that you have been misled into thinking that it is necessary to do certain specific things for God before one can begin the Christian life. This is the old heresy of salvation by works—the idea that we can win salvation by doing certain things. But spiritual life does not come by sacrifice, by effort, by obedience to law, either the old Mosaic law or any modern law, or even the law of our unenlightened conscience. When the Jews came out to Jesus asking: "What shall we do that we might work the works of God?" he startled them by saying: "This is the work of God, that ye believe." The essence of the religious life is to love God, and this power comes as a special divine gift in answer to our faith. It is impossible and unwise for us to undertake to tell God before we come to love him what we will try to do for him after we have come to love him. He must tell us what he wishes us to do; he must guide us, and we cannot receive and understand his messages until our hearts have been quickened by his love. We are not saved by our promises to him but by his promises to us. Don't think you must buy salvation by doing some hard and disagreeable thing for God. "Jesus paid it all." Let him bless your heart richly and then your joyous, eager question will be: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" As to guidance after conversion, a safe rule is to wait till the inward leading coincides with the written Word and with the counsel of one's most spiritual friends. When these agree, circumstances will usually open to make possible the task we are impelled to undertake.

Reader, Fairfield, Me. It is the duty of a Christian in times of sickness to apply the remedies which God has placed at our disposal, and which the experience of men of science and skill have shown to be helpful, and then to ask God's blessing on the means taken to effect a cure. This is a simple duty. You may remember that Naaman was told to bathe seven times in Jordan, and Jesus himself mixed clay with spittle when he anointed the eyes of the blind. God's hand is not shortened that he cannot save, and the same divine power that cured with a word or a touch is still potent; but we are expected to use the means within our reach, and to ask God to bless it and to give him all the praise for whatever may be accomplished. In cases where there are no means of human help available, we have a right to go to him in faith and ask him to do all that is needful in our behalf.

Miscellaneous

Reader, Weldon Springs, Mo. From your experience as you state it, we think you were quite justified in acting as you did.

The Record Hen. We are informed by Miss Elsie Dobbins of Caldwell, N. J., that the Plymouth Rock hen referred to in a Bible and Newspaper item some weeks ago was really a black Minorca, fifteen years old, and the hen is considered a "200-eggs-a-year bird."

Mrs. G. L. T., Robinson, Ill. If you will send the books to the chaplain of the nearest army post he will undoubtedly find a good use for them. You can ascertain this either through your local paper or by writing to the War Office Information Bureau at Washington. Freight should be prepaid in such cases.

Reader, West Peru, Me. 1. We believe you acted from the best of motives in telling your discovery to your wife. A mother's influence would naturally be a great aid in bringing about a reformation in such a case. 2. The young man, if born in this country and living here, is an American citizen, even though his father, an alien, was never naturalized.

Reader, Spring Center, Kan. The Scriptural prohibitions concerning marriage are treated in Lev. 18th chapter, and these have been supplemented by various church councils at different times, the marriage of first cousins being among the prohibited degrees. These prohibitions were based on moral and physiological grounds, which even today are generally conceded to be sound.

Mrs. George H. B., of Adamsville, R. I. Soldiers taken prisoners in the war in Europe are, as a rule, put in concentration camps and required to do useful work for the benefit of their captors, but are not under any circumstances required to fight in the ranks. They may till the soil or cut firewood from the forests or reap the crops or do one of many other useful things, and as a rule have enough to eat and good clothing and shelter.

Mrs. M. E., Rossville, Kan. 1. It is not possible for any one to speak with authority concerning the messages said to have been transmitted by Professor James from the other world. 2. As stated recently in the Christian Herald, the ancient custom in India of suttee, or widow-burning on the funeral biers of dead husbands, has been abolished by law, and we believe the throwing away of children also. The Jugger-naut festival, with its accompanying immolations, has also been abolished.

S. C. H., Mackay, Ky. Your questions are unanswerable. At this time, when a whole world is agitated over the great war, the only course to pursue is to be patient and to believe that God in his own good time will bring order out of chaos. To conclude otherwise would be to admit that divine sovereignty had ceased. We cannot fathom the reasons that are involved in this struggle, but depend upon it He understands them all, and right and justice will ultimately triumph.

R. L., Honolulu, Hawaii, writes: "Allow me to thank you for your editorial of March 24 opposing the spirit of war. How the church papers have crammed the minds of our young people with the Jewish aspect of God during the last few months in Sunday school lessons!" R. L. adds that he is sorry to see Jewish warriors held up as models for Christians. He encloses the announcement of the representative people of Honolulu in favor of the World's Peace Congress, in which the hope is expressed of the realization of a world dwelling in unity and peace. What a striking illustration of the civilizing power of the Gospel from a land which only a few generations ago was savage and heathen!

Economy

One of the most valuable lessons that experience holds for age, and that age can give to youth, is the true understanding of economy.

The economy that means paying out the least possible money—and also the economy that means getting the most and best for the money paid.

From both points of view, grandma knows it is substantial economy in cooking to use Crisco in place of either butter or lard.

Crisco costs but half what butter does—and food cooked with it is as digestible and as appetizing as if prepared with butter.

Crisco costs less than the better grades of lard and it neither taxes the digestion nor becomes rancid in keeping, as do animal fats.

To prove for yourself that with Crisco you get greater satisfaction for the money you spend, try using it in the following simple recipe:

Crisco Sponge Cake

3 eggs	2 teaspoonfuls
1 cupful sugar	baking powder
1/2 cupful Crisco	1/2 teaspoonful
1/2 teaspoonful salt	orange extract
1/4 cupfuls flour	1/2 cupful cold water

(Use level measurements)

Cream Crisco; add salt, yolks of eggs well beaten, and sugar, and beat for five minutes, add orange extract and cold water. Beat up whites of eggs to a stiff froth and add alternately with the flour sifted with the baking powder. Divide into Criscoed and floured gem pans and bake in a moderate oven for fifteen minutes. This will be sufficient for twelve cakes.

If you want to know more about Crisco and the conditions under which it is prepared, send for the "Calendar of Dinners". This cloth-bound, gold-stamped book contains, besides the story of Crisco, a different dinner menu for every day of the year and 615 recipes gathered and tested by the well-known cooking authority, Marion Harris Neil. Address your request to Department S-5, The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, enclosing five 2-cent stamps. A paper-bound edition, without the "Calendar of Dinners" and with 250 recipes will be sent free on request.

Things Kept New Last Their Full Life

When you put the new screens into your house; when you bought the new swing; when the grape trellis and lawn mower and the front fence were new—you felt a pride in them. If you do not feel the same pride now, isn't it because they have grown a bit dilapidated from neglect?

Most of the accessories around a house go to pieces before you get their full value in service unless they are kept in condition.

ACME QUALITY Paints and Finishes are just the kind of paints, enamels, stains or varnishes you will find most useful for just such articles.

A can of Acme Quality Household Paint will do numberless odd jobs. Acme Quality Screen Enamel will make new screens out of weather-worn ones.

Write us a postal to-day and we will send you our books, "Home Decorating" and "Acme Quality Painting Guide." These will tell you just the Acme Quality Finish you want for any surface. They are easy to use and give lasting, beautiful results. With them we will send the name of the nearest Acme dealer.

Acme White Lead and Color Works
Dept. O, Detroit, Michigan

Boston	Nashville	Spokane
Chicago	Birmingham	Portland
Minneapolis	Fort Worth	San Francisco
St. Louis	Dallas	Los Angeles
Pittsburgh	Topeka	San Diego
Cincinnati	Lincoln
Toledo	Salt Lake City

Have an "Acme Quality Shelf"

Keep always on hand at least a can each of Acme Quality Varnish, a varnish for floors, woodwork and furniture; Acme Quality White Enamel for iron bedsteads, furniture, woodwork and all similar surfaces; Acme Black Iron Enamel for ranges, stovepipes and other metal or wood surface. These will cover many of the "touching-up" jobs. Put up in containers of 1-pint and up, with friction-top, replaceable covers which are easy to open and close and keep the contents in usable condition.

THREE ROADS WHERE CAME WAR

Continued from page 472
cash for meal delivered to the German army.

We continued in the motor. I saw a trooper's grave—his lance upright in the snow, the black and white Prussian pennon snapping in the wind. We passed a frozen pond where Russian prisoners were breaking the ice to fill their canteens. We stooped at a great wooden cross, on which an officer's rosary hung; and then I saw the birds.

They were gray-bellied birds with black wings and heads. They were waddling birds that marched grotesquely across the snow, pecking as they went. They were fluttering-winged birds that one thought of as being too heavy to fly strong. And as I saw one near the road, I saw that his gray breast bulged plumply; he seemed to have eaten well.

Further on in the field—in the same field where waddled the birds—I saw a shapeless heap of men; then another heap, and another, until I had counted six. And I saw a bristle of barbed entanglements trampled in the snow and just behind them a trench, a deep, long grave that days before the living had dug for themselves—a pit filled with clay and snow and men. I had never seen such men before. They were men postured like jumping-jacks, only their legs and arms were still. They were men who seemed standing on their heads, their feet over the trench top, turned soles up to the sky. Somehow they gave you the impression of being all legs and arms—stiff, grotesque legs; stiff, grotesque arms. They all seemed lumpy; all but one, and he was standing up, his grayish face turned in the direction the clean-up squad would come; and he was standing because the piled dead braced him so that he could not fall. . . . And as we crossed the Jezioro Netzko into Augustowo, I told myself "I have seen war." But that was before days later I rode the road to Pillkallen.

The Road to Pillkallen

MOTORING north from Stallupoenen, which was a pretty East Prussian town until Russian loot and arson wiped it out, we followed the road to Pillkallen.

"One part of the movement that you saw at Augustowo," explained the rittmeister, "began at Pillkallen. There was fighting along this road. We shall see. Do you wish?"

Having traveled the road to Augustowo, which was fresh with war, I thought that the way to Pillkallen would be stale. More than a week had passed since it had shuffled to the Russian rout; but the rittmeister seemed to think the trip so essential that we had not the heart to say no. And because I had been under fire by day and by night, and had watched the artillery duel from a steeple spire, and had heard the wounded groaning as they fell, I, who because of traveling the road to Russia and to Augustowo thought I knew war, was prepared to be bored.

We drove through the villages of Barikchkelshmen, Drusken and Wilpischen, which were like a hundred other prosperous East Prussian hamlets until the Russians swung the torch. And then once more I saw the birds—the gray-bellied, black-winged birds that grow fat upon war; and I saw two big cats stop tearing at something in a field and spit as we went past, braver now in these days of war; but why should they fear the living, they who had become so contemptuous of the dead?

And then we came up the highway to Pillkallen. Snow-white, rolling farm land, dug with bloody trenches, the avenue of trees scarred with shrapnel and shell, the wayside strewn with soldiers' frozen clothing, splintered rifle butts, abandoned cannon, all the frightful debris of war. Six days ago the Russians have fled down this road, on their heels the Germans, breaking through at Pillkallen for their drive into the land of the Czar. A vital chapter in the history of this war began along this road. . . . But I shall not remember it as such.

Rather I shall always think of East Prussia a frozen road down which tired women are dragging their steps. Since leaving Stallupoenen I have counted seventeen broad-hipped and healthy farmer women, some with scrub-faced girls, of the braided pigtail age, their dresses yet to fall below the tops of their shoes—the kind you see every afternoon coming out of our grammar schools. You think the fear of God is in the hearts of these women, honest folk, a sturdy, self-reliant peasantry. But as our motor rushes by, they seem not to want to look at us, hanging their heads or turning wearily to gaze across the empty, snowy fields; and the little girls with the pigtails seem not to understand—some of them—but others are crying. In groups of threes and fours we overtake them, all dragging along, all seeming as though some awful calamity had overtaken them, as though for them life had suddenly become futile and grim. "It is the war," I thought.

We drove into Pillkallen, whose houses are now gaunt, silent wrecks, the sky showing through the shell-holes as through the eyeless sockets of a row of skulls. Home after home, cannonaded, pillaged or burned—what must have been a pretty German town, chaos. But it is not that which will cling to my memory. Always I shall see the little town hall and the huddle of women outside—the same kind of women I had seen on the road, the same hanging heads, the same good faces, but emptied now of all the beautiful things of life; the same little girls with the hair down their backs, and the looks that seemed not to understand. Twenty-seven—they must be waiting for someone to leave the hall.

"The war," I thought again. "They are refugees, coming here for food." And I remembered the women on the high-road and thought how hunger must also be bringing them and their children to Pillkallen.

We left our automobile. I stood across the street speculating on these things. Tzschirner smiled—a little grimly as I recall it now. The next moment a little black-shawled woman, pulling a rosy-faced girl by the hand, crossed the street. She looked about in a bewildered way, and then as if in her distraction she must pour it out to someone, she rushed up to me and sobbed:

"I kissed the Cossack's hand. I fell on my knees before him. But Minna—" and choking out her horror she turned to the girl, who seemed too dazed to speak.

Captain Tzschirner tried to comfort her. I caught in their speech the word "krank" . . . And there were twenty-seven women waiting by the town hall; and there was the highway to Pillkallen filled with the women and young girls from all the countryside. And then I understood. They were victims—these bewildered wanderers, these honest-faced mothers, these little girls—victims of Russian rape. And the woman of the black shawl trudged away, likewise the rosy-cheeked girl, her eyes never once rising from the ground. And I saw that Tzschirner, who has seen the reddest horrors of the war, was aghast.

And then—merciful God!—I learned more. I learned that practically all of them were already stricken with that black plague which science sometimes—only sometimes—can cure. . . .

And I have my symbol of the war—the war of the East that Germany is fighting against these inroading Slavish hordes—and it is a symbol in which there is no martial thing—only dragging feet and dragging hearts and women's eyes.

A Time for National Repentance

I like the stand you take in regard to this terrible war. Our nation must repent of sin, or we may share the same punishment that is coming on the nations of Europe today. Sin is the cause of it all.
Danville, Calif. REV. JOHN A. AINSLIE.

These sample strips, cut from regular stock, color and wood just as shingles look on house. "Weatherbest" Stained Shingles are made from the finest grades of Red and White Cedar Shingle stock. There is no more durable wood known. "Weatherbest" Stain is a scientific combination of wood-preserving elements with mineral and chemical colors. Under our process every shingle is treated with stain, not partly, as is the custom, but the whole shingle from tip to butt. This insures the longest possible wear whether for roofing or siding shingles.

Ask us today for your free samples.
Transfer Stained Shingle Co.
151 Main Street North Tonawanda, N. Y.
Makers also of the superior quality
"Transfer Brand" Red Cedar Shingles
Demanded by knowing builders and sold by progressive lumber dealers everywhere

A LONG-NEEDED BOOK

THE HEART OF BLACKSTONE

By NANETTE B. PAUL,
Lecturer on Law at Washington University.

"An interpretation in plain and simple language of the underlying principles of the common law. This book has been greatly needed and is sure to find a cordial welcome."—BOOK-TABLE TALK.

"The author's rare power of condensation, or dexter division of the subjects treated, and their logical development, give special value to this work as a succinct yet comprehensive view of the leading principles and maxims of the common law."

JUSTICE THOMAS H. ANDERSON, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia Small crown 8vo. Cloth. Net, $1.00, postpaid.

AT THE BETTER BOOK SHOPS

THE ABINGDON PRESS

NEW YORK	CINCINNATI	CHICAGO
BOSTON	PITTSBURGH	DETROIT
KANSAS CITY	SAN FRANCISCO

Cleans Stair Carpets

Yes, and also gets ALL the dirt from rug, carpets, matings, mattresses, furniture, at corners, in a way impossible with ordinary vacuum sweepers.

THE Reeves Vacuum Cleaner

because of exclusive patented features is entirely different from any other vacuum cleaner you may have seen. Sold on money-back agreement, and fully guaranteed. Send for booklet. Demonstrators wanted.

THE REEVES VACUUM CLEANER CO.
133 Broad Street
Milford, Conn.

Lunch With Nature

Take this basket—Pack the most dainty luncheon bottles and all, in a Hawkeye Refrigerator Basket. Take the family for a spin in the car or launch, away from the city's heat to a shaded nook—enjoy the refreshment which is kept deliciously cool and appetizing.

"A Rest and a Hawkeye"

Refrigerator Basket

Add Zest to the Trip!

A small piece of ice in a sanitary, non-rusting, nickel-plated compartment, away from dust, germs and insects, is the secret. Does not drip. Write for folder "L" describing baskets priced as low as $4. Dealers, write for Special Proposition.

Burlington Basket Mfg. Co.
Burlington, S. E., Iowa

MONUMENTS

White Bronze is more enduring than stone and less expensive. Over $200,000 worth sold through Christian Herald alone. Write for free Booklet, handsomely illustrated. We will send selected designs if you state approximate size or price.

Reliable Representatives Wanted
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
3551 Howard Ave. Bridgeport, Conn.

INITIALS FOR STAMPING 270 of your own initial letters for stamping personal and household linens. Sent postpaid for 12c. The Ullman Manufacturing Co., 342 East 59th St., N. Y.

The Imperial Low Burns Kerosene

10 Days
Free Trial

Something you have long wanted—an Iron that safely and successfully heats itself with Kerosene. It is the Improved

Imperial Self-Heating Iron

The safest, most efficient and practical self-heating iron in the world for housewives, mothers and seamstresses.

Clean and odorless. More economical and convenient than electric or gas irons. No cords or wires to bother. Iron indoors or out. Real ironing comfort.
Save steps. Burns ordinary kerosene or gasoline 10 hours for one cent. Liberal guarantee —low price.

Test the Imperial in your own home and see the saving in labor, time and money. Write for particulars of 10 Day FREE Trial Offer, and FREE Booklet,
"Ironing Comfort."

Dealers and Agents Wanted
IMPERIAL BRASS MFG. CO.
Dept. 865
1210 W. Harrison St., Chicago

SAFETY FIRST

MUNICIPAL BONDS

The Municipal Bonds we offer are the same that the U.S.
Government accepts as security for its Postal Savings Deposits, and yield from

5% TO 6%

These Bonds are supported by taxes levied against thrifty, growing towns and communities, and are prior in lien to all voluntary debts, such as Mortgages, Judgments, etc. Free from Government Income Tax; no certificate of Ownership required. We have old these securities from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Canadian border to the Mexican Zone to the shrewdest and most intelligent investors in the Country, and WHY not you? Denominations $500.00 and $1,000.00.
WRITE OR CALL FOR LIST No. 30.

CONTINENTAL TRUST CO.,

46 Fourth Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

30 Days' Free Trial

Direct to you at factory prices.
Beautiful, sanitary. Enameled snowy-white inside and out;
revolving shelves, cork cushioned doors and covers; porcelain drinking water reservoir and cooling coil—attachable to city water system if desired.

White Frost SANITARY Refrigerator

Guaranteed 25 years; lasts a lifetime. Adopted and used by U.S. Government. Easy payment plan.
Freight prepaid. Write today for handsome free catalog.
WHITE FROST REFRIGERATOR
CO., Dept. C, Jackson, Michigan

Don't expose your family to draughts, cold and dampness

Open or close your shutters from inside

The Mallory Shutter Worker enables you to open, close or lock your shutters at any angle, by turning a knob on the inside of the window sash.
Simple and easy to install—yourself, or any carpenter can put them in place on old or new houses, whether in frame or stone.

Write today for further information
MALLORY MANUFACTURING CO.,
31 Moore Street, Flemington, N. J.

Genuine All Hand-Woven
Unlocked PANAMA
Can be worn in this condition by Men, Women and Children. Easily blocked in any style. Light Weight.
Durable. All head-sizes.
Brims from 2 1/2 to 6 inches.
Sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00. Money back if not satisfactory. Write for Catalog.

Panamas from $1.00 to $100.00
PAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City

"AMERICA FIRST"

Extracts from President Wilson's Speech on Neutrality, delivered before the Associated Press in New York, April 20

I AM deeply gratified by the generous reception you have accorded me. . . . I want to talk to you as to my fellow citizens of the United States. For there are serious things, which as fellow citizens we ought to consider. The times behind us, gentlemen, have been difficult, because whatever may be said about the present condition of the world's affairs, it is clear that they are drawing rapidly to a climax, and at the climax the test will come, not only of the nations engaged in the present colossal struggle—it will come for them, of course—but the test will come to us particularly.

"Do you realize that, roughly speaking, we are the only great nation at present disengaged? I am not speaking, of course, with disparagement of the greater of those nations in Europe which are not parties to the present war, but I am thinking how their lives much more than ours touch the very heart and stuff of the business, whereas we have rolling between us and those bitter days across the water 3,000 miles of cool and silent ocean. Our atmosphere is not yet charged with those disturbing elements which must be felt and must permeate every nation of Europe. Therefore, is it not likely that the nations of the world will some day turn to us for the cooler assessment of the elements engaged?
I am not now thinking so preposterous a thought as that we should sit in judgment upon them.

"NO NATION is fit to sit in judgment upon any other nation, but we shall some day have to assist in reconstructing the processes of peace.
Our resources are untouched; we are more and more becoming by the force of circumstances the mediating nation of the world in respect of its finances. We must make up our minds what are the best things to do and what are the best ways to do them.
We must put our money, our energy, our enthusiasm, our sympathy into these things, and we must have our judgments prepared and our spirit chastened against the coming of that day. So that I am not speaking in a selfish spirit when I say that our whole duty for the present, at any rate, is summed up in this motto: 'America first.' Let us think of America before we think of Europe, in order that America may be fit to be Europe's friend when the day of tested friendship comes. The test of friendship is not now sympathy with the one side or the other, but getting ready to help both sides when the struggle is over.

"The basis of neutrality, gentlemen, is not indifference; it is not self-interest. The basis of neutrality is sympathy for mankind. It is fairness, it is good will at bottom. It is impartiality of spirit and judgment. I wish that all of our fellow citizens could realize that. There is in some quarters a disposition to create distempers in this body politic. Men are even uttering slanders against the United States, as if to excite her. Men are saying that if we should go to war upon either side there will be a divided America—an abominable libel of ignorance. America is not all of it vocal just now. It is vocal in spots. But I, for one, have a complete and abiding faith in that great silent body of Americans who are not standing up and shouting and expressing their opinions just now, but are waiting to find out and support the duty of America. I am just as sure of their solidity and of their loyalty and of their unanimity as I am that the history of this country has at every crisis and turning point illustrated this great lesson.

"We are the mediating nation of the world. I do not mean that we undertake not to mind our own business and to mediate where other people are quarreling. I mean the word in a broader sense. We are compounded of the nations of the world. We mediate their blood, we mediate their traditions, we mediate their sentiments, their tastes, their passions; we are ourselves compounded of those things.

We are, therefore, able to understand all nations; we are able to understand them in the compound, not separately as partisans, but unitedly, as knowing and comprehending and embodying them all. It is in that sense that I mean that America is a mediating nation. The opinion of America, the action of America, is ready to turn and free to turn in any direction. . . .
The United States has no racial momentum. It has no history back of it which makes it run all its energies and all its ambitions in one particular direction; and America is particularly free in this, that she has no hampering ambitions as a world power. . . .

"My interest in the neutrality of the United States is not the petty desire to keep out of trouble. I have never looked for it, but I have always found it. I do not want to walk around trouble. If any man wants a scrap that is an interesting scrap and worth while, I am his man. I warn him that he is not going to draw me into the scrap for his advertisement, but if he is looking for trouble that is the trouble of men in general and I can help a little, why, then I am in for it.

"Now, I covet for America this splendid courage of reserve moral force, and I wanted to point out to you gentlemen simply this: There is news and news. There is what is called news from Turtle Bay that turns out to be falsehood, at any rate in what it is said to signify, and which, if you could get the nation to believe it true, might disturb our equilibrium and our self-possession. We ought not to deal in stuff of that kind. We ought not to permit things of that sort to use up the electrical energy of the wires, because its energy is malign, its energy is not of the truth, its energy is of mischief. It is possible to sift truth. . . .

"We cannot afford to let the rumors of irresponsible persons and origins get into the atmosphere of the United States. We are trustees for what, I venture to say, is the greatest heritage that any nation ever had, the love of justice and righteousness and human liberty. For, fundamentally, those are the things to which America is addicted, and to which she is devoted.
There are groups of selfish men in the United States, there are coteries where sinister things are proposed, but the great heart of the American people is just as sound and true as it ever was.
And it is a single heart; it is a heart of America. It is not a heart made up of sections selected out of countries.

"So that what I try to remind myself of every day when I am almost overcome by perplexities, what I try to remember, is what the people at home are thinking about. I try to put myself in the place of the man who does not know all the things that I know, and ask myself what he would like the policy of this country to be.
Not the talkative man, not the partisan man, not the man that remembers first that he is a Republican or Democrat, or that his parents are Germans or English, but who remembers first that the whole destiny of modern affairs centers largely upon his being an American first of all.

"If I permitted myself to be a partisan in this present struggle I would be unworthy to represent you. If I permitted myself to forget the people who are not partisans I would be unworthy to represent you. I am not saying that I am worthy to represent you, but I do claim this degree of worthiness, that, before everything else, I love America."

As if Dinners Grew on Bushes

That's what Van Camp's means in summer — meals ready to pick. And hearty meals which everybody likes.

Meals cooked by a chef who is master in this line.

A new-style dish which alters all conceptions of Baked Beans.

You will serve Van Camp's five times as often as old-style Pork and Beans. And it always will be welcome. It is mealy, zestful, easy to digest.

And meat meals costing thrice as much are not so nourishing.

VAN CAMP'S PORK & BEANS

BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE

Also Baked Without the Sauce
10, 15 and 20 Cents Per Can

Cease to think of Baked Beans as a homely dish—as hard to digest—as crisp, hard or mushy.

Van Camp's is a delicacy.
Every bean is whole and mellow. And the sauce we bake in adds a wondrous tang.

Van Camp's are baked for hours at 245 degrees. They are baked in small parcels, baked by steam under pressure. This leads to easy digestion.

This is a new dish, unlike any other. It's the dish that hotels, clubs and lunch-rooms
—thousands of them—buy to serve to men.

This ready-cooked meal will save many an hour in the kitchen. It will save many a dollar. It will delight the folks you serve.

Find out how far it differs from the beans you know.

Buy a can of Van Camp's Beans to try. If you do not find them the best you ever ate, your grocer will refund your money.

(376)

DESSERTS

Jellies, puddings, frozen desserts and salads—with or without fresh or canned fruits—are most popular when made with

KNOX SPARKLING GELATINE

(It's Granulated)

LEMON JELLY (Like Above)

Soak 1 envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine in 1 cup cold water 10 minutes and dissolve with 2 cups (1 pint) boiling water; add 3/4 cup sugar and stir until dissolved and cooled; then add 1/2 cup lemon juice and strain through a cheese cloth into mold. Add fresh or canned fruit or fruit juices as desired. Serve with or without whipped cream.

They are appetizing and economical. A package of Knox Gelatine makes two quarts (1/2 gallon) of jelly.

The contents of both packages are alike, except that the Acidulated package contains an extra envelope of lemon flavoring, saving the cost of lemons.

Send for FREE Recipe Book

It contains many economical Dessert, Jelly, Salad, Pudding and Candy Recipes. It is free for your grocer's name. Print sample for 2-cent stamp and your grocer's name.

Yellow Package

Blue Package

Chas. B. Knox Co., 356 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N. Y.

Delivered to you FREE on Approval and 30 days Trial

SEND NO MONEY but write today for our big 1915 catalog of "Ranger" Bicycles, Tires and Sundries at prices so low they will astonish you. Also particulars of our great new offer to deliver you a Ranger Bicycle on one month's free trial without a cent expense to you.

BOYS you can make money taking orders for bicycles, tires, lamps, sundries, etc. from our big hand-some catalog. It's free. It contains "combination offers" for re-fitting your old bicycle like new at very low cost. Also much useful bicycle information. Send for it.

LOW FACTORY PRICES direct to you. No one else can offer such values and such terms. You cannot afford to buy a bicycle, tires or sundries without first learning what we can offer you. Write now. MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. D-71, CHICAGO, ILL.

Whitcomb's "Flexsole" Shoe

Most comfortable shoe made for Women. Soft, perfect fitting, and handsome. No seams—no laces—no lining. Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded. Send outline sole of foot and state size usually worn. Postpaid—Lace $3.00 Oxford $2.50 Button $3.25 EASTERN SHOE COMPANY 14 Broadway Beverly, Mass.

DAVID SPARES SAUL

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MAY 16. I SAM. 26

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.D.

"Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you." Luke 6: 27.

This command is impossible to us, unless we have become infilled with the Spirit of God's love; and the very difficulty of obedience is intended to drive us back on the Source of all that is right in action and lovely in disposition. Understand that you were apprehended for this, and you must ever set your face towards apprehending that for which you were apprehended. Christian living means this or it is the baseless fabric of a vision. Dr. Abbot has said that he remembers, when he was a boy, sitting by the fireside of a little country inn in Maine, and hearing some men discuss the Sermon on the Mount. They were rough fellows, and one of them, scoffing at Christianity, said: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor—non-sense! It is not in human nature." Exactly; such love is not in human nature. Men love those who love them, and salute their brethren, and stop there. But it was in Christ's nature, and it is in the divine nature to be imparted through Christ to those who will claim it.

It is recorded of a certain Chinese emperor, that, on starting to subdue an insurrection in a distant province, he said to his officers: "Come, follow me, and we shall quickly destroy them." On his arrival the rebels submitted to him, and all expected that he would take signal vengeance on them. But, instead of this, the rebels were treated with the utmost humanity. "How!" cried his first minister of state; "is this the manner in which your promise is fulfilled? Your royal word was given that your enemies should be destroyed, and lo, you have pardoned them all, and some of them you have caressed." "I promised," said the emperor, "to destroy my enemies. I have fulfilled my word; for, see, I have made friends of them." Surely, though unconsciously, he must have drunk deep draughts of God's love.

"We Don't Have to Come Back"

By Amos R. Wells

DAVID dared to go, with only a single companion, into the midst of the army that Saul had brought into the wilderness to capture and kill him. A daring feat? Yes, indeed; but not more daring than thousands of the followers of "great David's greater Son" have been accomplishing all through the centuries.

For instance, take the story of the chief of a Korean clan, who became a Christian. He boldly proclaimed his new faith, and the clan heard him with fierce indignation. He offered to resign his position and property if they would elect another chief, but they held that no one else could form the necessary link in the chain of ancestor worship. In the bitter discussion some one struck him in the face. At once the passions of the clan broke loose, they sprang upon him, beat him, and left him terribly injured. The missionary doctor told him his hemorrhages would not allow him to live long, whereupon he exclaimed, "Then what is left of life shall be given to the Lord." With a heroism like David's he went back into the midst of his enemies, and spent the last three years of his life teaching them about Jesus. When a sudden hemorrhage carried him off he had founded eleven Christian churches!

Ahimelech did not dare go with David, but David's nephew Abishai gladly accompanied his leader. It was an event like the storm off Diamond Shoals, with a ship foundering in the great waves. Captain Pat Etheridge got the lifeboat ready, but the crew hesitated in face of the fearful peril. "Captain Pat," said one, "it's no use with that wind. We can launch the boat, and we can reach the ship, but we can never come back." "Boys," said the old hero, "we don't have to come back." They launched the boat, reached the wreck, took off the survivors, and after nine hours of terrific work got back to the station. I think I can hear David saying to Ahimelech and Abishai, "We don't have to come back."

Abishai had the ordinary thought of revenge. As the two young men stood by the side of the slumbering, unconscious Saul, he was for killing the king without compunction. But David, who also was himself the Lord's anointed, refused to allow the slaying of the Lord's anointed. Well did the wise young leader understand that such deeds are likely to return upon the head of the doer.

This happened in the case of the Bishop of Verdun in France, who advised King Louis XI to have an iron cage constructed, for confining prisoners. It was a cruel contrivance. In it the poor prisoner could not stand upright nor lie at full length. He must remain bent over, day after day and night after night. But it happened that the bishop offended the king and was himself the first to be shut up in the horrible cage, where he was kept for fourteen years.

David understood that, as Bacon said, "in taking revenge a man is but even with his enemy; but in passing it over he is superior, for it is a prince's part to pardon."

There is a story that Mohammed, sleeping under a tree, suddenly woke to find his bitterest enemy, Durher, bent over him with a sword in his hand. "Who now will save you?" Durher hissed. "Allah," calmly answered the prophet; "Allah, the Lord of life and death." The scimitar fell to the ground, and Durher bent at the feet of Mohammed. Swiftly the prophet snatched up the weapon and flourished it. "Who now shall save you, Durher?" and then, as Durher remained silent, Mohammed continued, "Your shield is Allah, who blesses the merciful." So Durher became Mohammed's faithful follower. That was the style of David's revenge.

David did well to rebuke Abner roundly for his lax discipline. The Chinese know how to deal with men like Abner, and hold officers strictly to their responsibility. In a certain town two gamblers quarreled at two o'clock in the morning, and one of them stabbed the other and killed him. The head man of the ward was in bed and asleep, and knew nothing of the matter, but that fact did not weigh with his superiors. "I did not know what was going on," he protested. "But you should have known." "How could I?" "That is your business; you are responsible for the ward." So he was given a severe whipping with bamboos.

Well, Saul was made ashamed by David's magnanimity, as he should have been. He confessed his wrong attitude, but he had done that before. He went away without harming David, but he had done that before. He made no real reparation, and he was never to see David again.

Love's Conquest Over Hate

By Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell

AMANDA SMITH, the colored evangelist, once said to me that the most difficult act of her early Christian life was to become willing to pray for the imprisoned men who hung negroes to lampposts and set fire to the asylums for the people of her race during the awful riots in New York City in 1863, but she exclaimed, "I have gotten the victory! I could now go to those vile men and pray for and bless those who have persecuted me and mine. I could exclaim with Jesus, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,' or with Stephen, 'Lord, lay not this sin to their charge.'" This is the way the Christian tries to overcome evil with good. If his enemy hungers, he feeds him.

WIZARD 50¢ Polish Mop

Our Newest Model

A sensational success. This low-price, high-quality WIZARD Triangle MOP is backed by the WIZARD guarantee. Strong. Durable. Adjustable handle. Mop treated with famous WIZARD polish. Gives floors a beautiful, hard, dr. lustre. WIZARD mops sell for 50c 75c, $1.00, $1.25.

WIZARD Polish

Preserves the newness and beauty of furniture, pianos, automobiles, etc. All sizes 25c to $2.50. Write for FREE sample. All WIZARD Products are Guaranteed. Your dealer has them.

Wizard Products Co., Inc. 1459 W. 37th St. Chicago, Ill. 19

You, too, can look young

Six to ten minutes a day of pleasant exercise for face—in your own room—bring a quick and marvellously youthful expression. Susanna Cocroft's Phys Culture for the Face is as effective as her exercises the body have proven to be in more than 70,000 cases. Course includes care of hair, eyes, hands and feet, relieves such age-aiding blemishes as pouches under eyes, wrinkles, flabby, thin neck; double chin, etc. feet, tired eyes, sagging facial muscles, pimples; dry, oily hair; tender, inflamed feet; rough hands, and other beauty-destroying ailments.

Write for FREE booklet today.

Learn what prompt and gratifying results you can see, and how you can look as young and happy as you should.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course, 624 S. Michigan Ave., Dept. 9, CHICAGO

From Us to You, at Factory Price

You SAVE nearly as much as the instrument costs. By payments, select your terms.

Cornish Pianos and Organs are guaranteed for 25 years. Famous more than half a century for their unexcelled quality, perfect action and durability. Send for particulars of our immensely popular One Year's Free offer, the most liberal made; also, handsome Illustrated Catalog, showing many styles to choose from. Please mention Dept. "C. H." and write today; a postcard will do.

Cornish Co. Washington, N. D.

I Am Making A Special Factory Price 10,000 Rapid Cookers

Big bargain to introduce cooker into new neighborhoods quick. Write before price advances.

30 Days' Free Trial. Cooker is aluminum lined of course. Complete on aluminum utensils free. Write for Free Book with 150 recipes and Bargain Prices direct from factory.

Wm. Campbell Co., Dept. 1, Detroit, Mich.

Sani-Steel Kitchen & Bath Cabinets

No wood, bugs or dirt. Cleaner and cheaper than old style wood. Sent on approval. Illustrated Catalogue CH. free on request.

Columbia School Supply Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

YOU CAN AFFORD

Familiar Songs of the Gospel (No. 1 or 2) Round or shape notes. 83 songs, words and music per hundred; samples, 5c each.

E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

David loved Saul, not only because he was God's chosen ruler, but he was the father of Jonathan and of his own wife. His love for Saul was so great that he sought to save him from selfishness, wilfulness and jealousy. More than this, he manifested that patient, trusting, waiting spirit, willing to abide God's time. He knew he was to succeed Saul when the supreme providential hour arrived.

David's expectation was from God and he was not disappointed. In the possession of love that casts out fear, he did not tremble when enemies full of malice and treachery endangered his life. On the harp of his soul he made music that has filled the world with melody. He was pervaded with the peace of God. No feeling of animosity, no lust for blood throbbed in the royal heart of the young prince. He judged his enemies, but left all in the hands of the judge of all the earth. A present providence, like an atmosphere, enveloping the soul, is the armor of light, the strong defense of the child of the Highest, who always sings:

Know that we two shall win in the end—
Jesus and I.

Saul's repentance was only skin deep, for he soon repeated his efforts to overthrow one who had only done him good. It might be said of Saul, as was written on the monument to Edgar Allan Poe, "He was great in genius, unhappy in life, wretched in his death, but in his fame he is immortal." David possessed more than an immortality of genius; his was the greatness of goodness, the richness of character, the wisdom of a hallowed influence and the beauty of a heart made whiter than snow.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson says: "Jesus made no mistake in relying upon the passive virtues as the purifiers of society. A bullet fired from a distance of fifty yards will not penetrate a wall of snow six feet thick; whereas the same bullet passes through dense earthworks and shatters trees when discharged from a much greater distance. The trick of the snow is all its own. It greets the murderous missile with disarming courtesy, lulls it with a caress, kills it with a kiss. So gentle goodness overcomes evil in all its pride and wrath."

Hehold the value of David's experience during the seven years of his exile. He learned of human weakness and the strength of divine help. He found that it is always best to trust God under trials; he became acquainted with the grievances of the people against the king; he studied the art of government and of war, acquiring a knowledge of the country and of the enemies of Israel. He learned how to express the depths of the sorrows of his own soul, for the comfort and help of all future generations.

Echoes from the Holy Land

By Rev. Franklin E. Hoskins, D.D.

Member of Syria Mission

THOSE who have visited Bethlehem and Hebron cannot forget the bare and desolate hill country which lies eastward between these towns and the Dead Sea, 3,000 feet below. This sloping stretch of barren hills torn by rocky ravines and waterless valleys was known as Jeshimon or the Wilderness of Judea. Ziph and the hill of Hachilah lie southeast of Hebron, where the wilderness slopes toward the Dead Sea, the most desolate piece of country in all the Holy Land. I have hunted partridges and wild pigeons over these same ridges, and know the fatigue and toil and thirst of these barren hills. Into this country angry Saul, crazed with base suspicion, pursued David.

"Sleeping within the trench." The Revised Version "the place of the wagons" following the Septuagint "chariot" must be a mistaken translation. That never could have been a country for "wagons" and no traces of wagon roads exist.

"Spear stuck in the ground." This custom holds to the present hour among the Arabs dwelling in the same vicinity. The tent of the sheikh is always distinguished from the other tents by the upright spear. It also serves another purpose. No spear means no sheikh at home and male visitors not expected.

"Cruse of water." Travelers from Western lands are always amused at the custom in these Oriental lands of having a small jar of water at hand on all occasions, journeying or resting, night and day, and the skill displayed by a circle of people in drinking by holding the small porous vessel high above the head, and pouring the water straight down the throat without ever touching the vessel to the lips. The custom is as old as the making of pottery.

"Not smite him the second time." The Arabs count as a mighty hero the man whose arm is strong enough to cut off a man's head at a single blow of a sword. In recent tribal wars east of Damascus I have heard men tell of this as actual fact and there was every reason to accept the story in certain well known instances.

The cutting taunts from the top of the hill where David's voice could be heard and he perfectly safe beyond the reach of his enemies is a striking picture of what is seen and heard in this land of rugged hills and almost impassable valleys.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS' ROUND TABLE

Conducted by FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

Can you send me information as to the history of the Sunday school movement? Our school is to observe a "Parents' Day," and I am to speak upon the Sunday school as a topic. —J. V.

The History of the Sunday School Movement by Manana C. Brown, or Yale Lectures on a Sunday School, the latter by Trumbull, are good. These you can get through any Sunday school supply house. The reports of the International Sunday School Association and the world's Sunday School Association will give the latest facts about the marvelous Sunday school growth of recent years.

What special Bible courses would you suggest for men's classes? —R. P.

A good book to start with for a short course of twelve studies is Fosdick's The Manhood of the Master, 50 cents.

The Will of God and a Man's Life Work, by H. Wright, 50 cents, involves twenty-five weeks of study relating to knowing and doing God will as interpreted by Jesus and the disciples.

Men and Teachings of the Earlier Prophets, by J. H. Smith, costs 40 cents, and is a study of the social message and work of the Earlier Hebrew prophets. Fourteen weeks. The Light of the World, by Robert E. Speer, 25 cents, is a study of comparative religions by an outstanding leader. Social Aspects of Foreign Missions, by W. H. P. Faunce, will deeply interest men who are thinking toward the social reconstruction of the world. The Social Significance of the Teachings of Jesus, by Jeremiah Jenks, is widely used, 50 cents.

For those interested especially in America there are: Immigrant Forces, by W. P. Shriver, 25 cents; The Challenge of the Country, by George W. Fiske, 50 cents; The Challenge of the City, Strong; Negro Life in the South, W. D. Vatherford, Ph.D., 50 cents; Christianity and Popular Amusements, R. H. Edwards, 50 cents; Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem, Harry S. Warner, 35 cents. Additional courses on social work are: Introducing Men to Christ, by W. D. Weatherford, 50 cents; Taking Men Alive, by Charles G. Trumbull; Fishin' for Men, Joseph Clark, D.D.

Other Bible courses may be obtained by writing Student Y. M. C. A., 124 East Twenty-eighth Street, New York City.

There is agreement that courses for men's classes should be short and varied, and especially pointed to applying the Bible to life and work.

Q. How can I as a pastor interest my members in Sunday school work? —H. B. M.

A. Do as the Methodist General Conference has now authorized all its pastors to do, namely, assign every member of the church to some department or class of the Sunday school as teacher or member. Many Methodist pastors are now doing this. Of course you will be at the service yourself and, if you have strength for it, lead a Bible class of your adult members. One very successful pastor, Rev. P. H. Welsheimer of Canton, Ohio, who is also the Sunday school superintendent, has a class of over 1,000 church members as a part of his Sunday school attendance. Then the combination church and Sunday school service, referred to in another of these Round Table answers, has solved for many a pastor the problem of the attendance of his church members upon the Bible teaching service. If the pastor will carry about Sunday school cards with him in his home visitation it will not be difficult for him to secure the membership of the home for some one of the school departments.

Q. What do you consider the best method of securing Sunday school teachers? —C. B.

A. A teacher-training class of young people, 16 to 18 years of age, studying during the Sunday school hour any one of the excellent denominational or general teacher-training books. I have experimented with this for over twenty-five years, and this is the only method that will give you enough teachers and at the right age for service. It holds your young people and they are usually glad to be put at work if they know how to do the work.

Write it on the film—
at the time.

Make your Kodak story of the children doubly valuable, by dating every negative, by making brief notes that will help, in after years, to recall happily to memory the incident that led to the taking of the picture.

Dressed for her first party. The first school day. Bob's first skates. Mary's fourth birthday.—A thousand such important events should be titled on the negatives and at leisure copied into the Kodak album. It's a simple and almost instantaneous process with an

Autographic Kodak

Autographic Kodaks from $6.00 up. Autographic films at the same price as other Kodak films. Kodak catalogue free at your dealer's, or by mail.

EASTMAN KODAK CO., ROCHESTER, N. Y., The Kodak City.

CLOSE-TO-NATURE OPEN AIR TENT HOUSE

Designed for Sleeping and Living in the Open Air. A Fresh Air Retreat on your lawn. Lets the Air IN but keeps the Insects OUT. For camping, etc. Quickly assembled or collapsed without the removal of a bolt or the use of a tool. The canvas, except cover, permanently attached to the frame. For tuberculosis, nervous troubles, ill health, sleep in the open air. Made in 8 sizes from 6 by 11-2 to 12 by 24 feet.

CLOSE-TO-NATURE CO., 340 Front St., Colfax, Iowa.

AUTHORIZED BY U. S. GOVERNMENT

6% FARM BONDS BEST 6%

Under the new Federal law we can now offer farm bonds. We offer you choice farm bonds at 6%. Clip this now, write for full list, etc.

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK, DEPT. A, Richmond, Va.
Resources over $9,000,000.00

SALESMEN WANTED to handle SKAT Soap as a side line. Write for full particulars as to present occupation, territory wanted, time you can give and references. THE SKAT COMPANY, HARTFORD, CONN.

Serve Junket

Children enjoy Junket—a pure food dessert, made with milk. Nourishing and tasty. Good for anybody—liked by everybody.

At Druggists and Grocers—

10 Junket Tablets 10¢

$39.00 BUYS THIS SIMPLEX WATER WORKS SYSTEM

guaranteed to do your work. Sixty days free trial. Other sizes as cheap. Pumps, motors and engines. Write for our New Way Selling Plan No. 39. Do It Now.

The Baltimore Co., Baltimore, Md.

It will be of advantage to the daughter of William Brooks, who died and was buried at the Soldiers' Home Dayton, Ohio, if her uncle, G. A. Brooks, Box 14, Mound City, Kansas, is given her present address.

Going to Build?

A Home, Church, School, Hospital, Hotel, Office Building? Before you settle your plans you should know about the wonderful color-tone effects which builders are obtaining through the use of

Greendale Rug Brick

(The only patented face brick in America)

Specified by leading architects for high-grade buildings. Their distinctive texture causes each brick to cast its own lights and shadows. They give your exterior walls a rich, rug-like appearance obtainable in no other way.

Ask your architect or write us for color prints or samples.

HOCKING VALLEY PRODUCTS COMPANY

187 S. High Street
D. E. Reagan, President

Columbus, Ohio
C. C. Walters, Sales Mgr.

Absolutely Pure and Delicious

An ideal beverage, of high grade and great nutritive value

WALTER BAKER & CO.
LIMITED
DORCHESTER, MASS.
ESTABLISHED
1780

BECOME A NURSE

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—245 pages with actual experiences, 48 illustrated lesson pages free. There is a Chautauqua nurse in your vicinity. Ask her about our training. Her address upon request.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St. Fourteenth Year Jamestown, N. Y.

Wrinkles

Thousands have successfully used this formula to remove traces of age, illness or worry: 1 oz. of pure

Powdered SAXOLITE

dissolved in 1/2 pt. witch hazel; use as a face wash. The effect is almost magical. Deepest wrinkles, crow's feet, as well as finest lines, completely and quickly vanish. Face becomes firm, smooth, fresh, and you look years younger. No harm to tenderest skin. Get genuine Saxolite (powdered) at any drug store.

MONITOR SELF HEATING IRON

Makes Ironing a Pleasure
Pronounced the "World's Best" by over 600,000 satisfied customers. No hot stove—heat regulated instantly. Clothes ironed better, easier, in half the time. Satisfaction guaranteed.

AGENTS MEN AND WOMEN EARN GOOD MONEY

No experience necessary—sells itself. Absolutely lowest priced. Fastest selling iron made. Every home a prospect. New terms. Exclusive territory. Sample free to workers. Write today. The Monitor Self Heating Iron Co. 609 Wayne St., Big Prairie, O.

THE WOMEN'S INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

I GLANCED hastily up the wide stairway to a mass of color that seemed, somehow, to give out fragrance and vague music. I saw a thousand slowly walking figures—a thousand hesitating figures that lingered in front of booths. I sighed. My conscience was heavy—I was late—how late I refused to imagine, and the Advertising Lady is always on time. I wondered whether she had gone home and left me, whether she had found someone else to wander through the brilliant hall with her. With eyes grown anxious, I searched the ever-changing throng for a brown coat, a brown hat with a touch of blue half-hidden on it.

I have had girls write to me that they are lonely—somewhere off in the country, with only a view for companionship. I have had other girls, writing from a strange state, long for the old familiar scenes; but, friends of mine, the loneliest thing in the world is a huge crowd of men and women without one familiar face, only a murmur of strange voices all talking to someone else.

I was thinking these very thoughts, when something caused me to glance up the stairway. There, above, with perplexed eyes wandering over the sea of faces, stood the Advertising Lady. Tomboyishly I ran up the stairs; happily I clutched her arm.

"I'm late!" I told her brilliantly. The Advertising Lady detached her eyes regretfully, perhaps, from the panorama that swirled about us.

"So I noticed," she said a bit caustically; "come on—we'll walk around."

I have been to other expositions this winter. You, my long-suffering but ever-kind readers, can testify to the truth of this statement. But never before had I seen such a number of fascinating booths, such a blending of color. The flower show? Oh, well, flower shows are expected to be brightly colored; but industrial expositions come as something of a surprise when they remind one of a page from a brightly illustrated copy of Arabian Nights.

Near the door was a booth labeled "Japanese Perfumery." Two ladies (who were not Japanese), dressed in hand-embroidered, dark blue silk kimonos, sold bottles of different flower essences for ten cents (a few drops) or a dollar and a half an ounce. I sniffed eagerly as I went past, and still sniffing, ran full into a yellow decorated booth. "Votes for Women" was the legend that the yellow decorations spelled. They gave us many pamphlets at that booth.

From there we went on to a small, rather somber stall, with a man and a little boy in charge. The man was a commonplace-looking man with remarkable talking ability. He told us that he was starting a campaign for the "right kind" of moving pictures—pictures that could be shown in churches. He asked us if we would sign slips advocating them. I was rather at a loss as to what I should say, but the Advertising Lady is seldom at a loss. She grasped a pencil in her hand.

"We stand for everything that is right," she said magnificently, and signed with a grand flourish. Meekly, as Mary's little lamb would have done it, I followed suit.

It has been my custom at expositions to wander aimlessly around the hall, stopping at various points that caught my interest, ignoring various points that were far away from my ideals. I started to wonder as soon as I signed my paper, but the Advertising Lady grasped my arm. A spark of efficiency shone from her eyes.

"We will walk down one aisle and up the next," said the Advertising Lady; "then we shall see everything!"

We saw everything! With buzzing head, and aching eyes, and tired feet, I freely admit that we saw everything. It was very colorful, very exciting, perhaps a trifle over-stimulating afternoon, but from a haze of impressions one or two ideas stand out darkly, vividly, against the ever-moving, gaily colored background.

All at once, rounding a corner, I had a queer feeling, the feeling that I was walking through the advertising columns of a certain well-known magazine (no names mentioned). How often had I seen just such pictures of Yuban coffee, and "So-eze-mops," and Welch's grape juice, and floor polish, and many other things crowding my stories down to a mere column and a half, when I wanted to write three whole columns! I felt less resentful, however, when softly moving ladies, who looked like the familiar pictures, gave me coffee in tiny cups and talked to me pleasantly over highly polished counters.

FOR several minutes we paused fascinated at a counter where a man was doing wonders in carving up vegetables with three queer knives; he made them come out in waffle shapes, and squares, stars and wonderful fluted circles. He peeled potatoes marvelously, and cut cabbage into narrow shreds with no apparent trouble. We bought sets, the Advertising Lady and I, and clutching them tightly, wandered on. (When I reached home I murdered two young and innocent potatoes experimenting with them.)

Near the doorway a young girl with big eyes and roguish dimples was walking gracefully between mirrors in a small booth, decorated futurist-fashion. She was slipping wonderful wraps over her slender little shoulders, to tempt possible purchasers, and as I watched her I thought back a million years to the first woman who probably wove coats out of flowers and leaves, and walked just as gracefully before some long, quiet pool.

An art class grouped around a square table worked quietly, deliberately and almost emotionlessly at their drawings. All around the wall were wonderfully colored posters; original fashions, sketched boldly in India ink; cover designs for famous magazines. With a start I realized that the girls were all young, so young that most of them had their hair braided down their backs.

"That," said the Advertising Lady to me, "would make any girl take up art as a life work!"

I could fully understand it, and looking into a series of mind pictures I saw how many girls, drawn by the glamour of the swiftly growing figures, might sacrifice money and ideals and years of life to satisfy the wrong ambition.

The hours were flying almost too swiftly, and I had a queer tingling sensation that grew in my brain until it reached huge proportions. I sighed as I tried to pigeonhole each booth in a corner of my mind. There were all sorts of things to eat, from biscuits to pie and salt; and there was furniture from a child's chair to a player piano. There were toy booths and Bible booths, shower baths and lecture rooms and jewelry. I sighed again.

The Advertising Lady glanced in my direction. Her face had a white strained look about it, and her eyes were wistful.

"Tired?" she questioned feebly. I laughed, but the laugh was half-hearted. "I'm so tired," I told her, "that I shall never be rested again!"

The Advertising Lady looked over her shoulder at the brilliant room. I followed her glance and swayed dizzily on my feet. There was too much of everything, but oh, it was beautiful!

A sudden thought struck the Advertising Lady. Her hand shot out and clutched my arm as a drowning man clutches at a straw.

"Let's-go-home!" she said.

Quickly, albeit wearily, we hurried for the door.

TO EVERY MAN EVERYWHERE YOU CAN DRESS ALWAYS

72 SAMPLES AND BOOK FREE

Good Clothes Always $10

Sounds impossible, doesn't it—smacks of exaggerated advertising—looks like imagination run riot but IT ISN'T.

We are the largest manufacturers of men's clothing in the world, doing business DIRECT with wearer. The entire out-put of our factory—suits, overcoats and top-coats—is sold by mail from our six stores. Price always $10. We specialize—make clothes at one price only. Everything going into them—the pure wool cloth—the canvas—linings—hair cloth—all are of a standard quality bought in immense quantities, sell thousands of garments, instead of hundreds—make hundreds of a model, instead of a few, all of which reduces the cost on each item and makes possible, always $10.

Big Business Men Wear 'Em—The Men Who Wear these suits. They know Richman Clothes are worth more than $10. They prefer several clean and one shabby one. In Cleveland, home of our factory and great store for 35 years, EVERY SIXTH MAN of its 650 inhabitants BUYS A SUIT OR OVERCOAT of us once. Men in every walk of life are wearing them—they are clothes for YOU—wherever you are, wherever you are. A TEN-DOLLAR BILL and postage will win you Richman clothes right to your door—parcel-post. Satisfaction guaranteed or money back.

STYLE BOOK FREE—Write for spring catalog of latest styles—and 75 newest fabrics.

THE RICHMAN BROS. CO.

Dept. 38 Cleveland, Ohio

Milwaukee, Wis. Cincinnati, Ohio

St. Paul, Minn. Minneapolis, Minn. Duluth, Minn.

$250.00 MON REPAIRING TIRES

Automobile business grows fast. Enormous field for tire repairing. Each Auto Sold Means More Tires to Mend. Punctures and blowouts are common. You need retreading and vulcanizing. Sometimes going wrong all the time. Thousands forego buying new tires because they get old ones. Think of the old bikes days, repair shops on corners making money. Autos are same proposition—only a times bigger. Better. User of Haywood Tire Repair Plants are making money. A man bought a plant September, 1911, writes here cleared over $3,000. Be the first to start a profitable business. You learn quick. Sixty follow directions. Business comes fast and easy.

Repair Tires at Home—young men—repair tires—get the money he garage man. Get the neighbors' work. Auto owners repair your own tires—money—have outlets for home. Anyhow investigate. Send today catalog explaining wonderful making possibilities in this field.

HAYWOOD TIRE & EQUIPMENT
662 Capitol Ave., Indianapolis.

SAVE HALF Your Paint Bills

By using INGERSOLL PAINTS—proved best by 66 years' use. It pleases you.

Only paint endorsed by the "Grange". Made in all colors—for all purposes. DELIVERED FREE

From the Mill Direct to You at Factory Prices. INGERSOLL PAINT BOOK—FREE. Tells all about Paint and Painting for Durability, to avoid trouble and expense caused by paints fading, chalking and peeling. Valuable information free to you with Sample Color Cards. Write me. DO IT NOW. I can save you money.

O. W. Ingersoll, 253 Plymouth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

FOOT COMFORT GUARANTEED

In Simon's EZ WEAR Shoes

For Men, Women, Children. Soft, Stylish, Flexible model. Unlined, live rubber heels. Need no breaking in. Like an old shoe the minute you put them on.

It's Free—EZ Wear styles and measurement blanks. Write today. The K. Simon Shoe, 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn.

$3.00 POSTPAID

TYPEWRITERS

Prices $15.00 up. SOLD or RENTED anywhere at 1/4 to 1/2 MANUFACTURER'S PRICES, allowing RENTAL TO ALL ON PRICE. Free Trial. Installment payments if desired. Write for catalog. TYPEWRITER EMPORIUM, 34-38 W. Lake St., Chicago.

SNAP-ON CURTAIN RODS

are self-adjusting—require no nails, screws or fixtures. Instantly adjusted or removed. A big improvement. Last a lifetime. Slightly and sensibly. Fit any window. Price, 2 for 25c, postpaid. Agents wanted.

UTILITY MFG. CO., 425 Tuttle Bldg., Chicago.

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can—I know you can.
I have reduced 32,000 pounds and have built up that

You Can Be So Well!

—if you only knew how well!
I build up your vitality—at the same time I strengthen your heart action; teach you how to breathe, to stand, walk and relieve such ailments as

Nervousness, Torpid Liver, Constipation, Indigestion, Etc.

One pupil writes: "I weigh 53 pounds less, and I have gained wonderfully in strength."
Another says: "Last May I weighed 100 pounds, this May
I weigh 126, and oh! I feel SO WELL."
Won't you sit down and write now for my interesting booklet? You are welcome to it.
It is FREE. Don't wait, you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience and I should like to tell you about it.

Susanna Cocroft

De. 18, 624 Michigan Boulevard, Chicago
Miss Cocroft is a college bred woman. She is the recognized authority in the scientific care of the health and figure of women.

GLACIER Seamless-Porcelain-Lined REFRIGERATORS are constructed that the most delicate fastenings are lined in food kept in their clean, wholesome, satisfying food-chambers.

ECONOMY
FOOD CLEANLINESS
PRESERVATION OF PURITY
SCIENTIFIC REFRIGERATION

Our catalog will tell you how to care for your refrigerator and will show you the 60 styles from $15 up.

If a dealer doesn't happen to have a GLACIER fridge, we will ship you one direct and prepay freight as far as the Ohio or Mississippi Rivers

NORTHERN REFRIGERATOR CO.
771 Crofton Avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich.

"Winter Climate in Summer Time"

This Girl Could Not Walk or Stand

—at the age of four

Pi Vosburg, daughter of Mrs. Sula Vosburg, Bedford, Ia. Mrs. Vosburg brought her daughter to this Sanitarium January, 1911, for treatment of Infantile Paralysis.
The child could neither walk nor stand alone but could only crawl on hands and knees. She was eight months; now walks to school and gets about splendidly. Mrs. Vosburg will affirm the above.
This is not a selected case,
nor are the results unusual.

Th L. C. McLain Orthopedic Sanitarium is a roughly equipped private sanitarium devoted exclusively to the treatment of crippled and deformed conditions, such as Club Feet, Infantile Paralysis, Hip Disease, spinal Diseases and Deformities, Wry Neck, Bow Legs, Knee-locks.

Let us advise you regarding any crippled, paralyzed or deformed child or person whom you may be interested.
It costs you nothing, and in view of over 25 years' experience in this work, our advice should be valuable. Our Pamphlets and Book of References will be sent postpaid and free of all charge, on request.

The McLain Orthopedic Sanitarium
922 Albert Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Keeping Sunday in Korea

ALTHOUGH much good missionary work has been done in Korea, much still remains to do. Dr. R. M. Wilson, an American medical missionary, with seven years' experience in Korea, writes of that country: "She is the Switzerland of the Far East, but her forests are cut short and even the ground is raked clean of leaves and pine needles that should furnish soil for the young trees that spring up.
The mission homes at Kwangju are located on the side of one of the old hills, which was barren but now has grown up into a beautiful little pine grove. On top of this hill is the lone grave of Dr. C. C. Owen, who gave his life for the Koreans. From this spot you can look over the city of Kwangju below, with its little winding streets and crowded alleys, where the houses are clustered together like grapes.
And in every direction from this hill can be seen little villages, tucked in under the protection of some small hill or bamboo thicket. At one place near us I counted one day thirty-two villages. What I have long felt the need of is a large church bell, to place on this hill and ring every Sabbath morning, to tell to the thousands of people below that the Lord's day has come.
The Koreans have, instead of Sunday,
what they call the Changnal—market or fair day—which comes every fifth day, regardless of our Sabbath. Many of them never know when Sunday comes. Others have learned from the Japanese to call it the 'Big Play Day.'
I know of no one material thing that would spread the glad tidings every Sabbath as much as a bell, which would say, as I used as a boy to think the church bell said: 'Come to church.'
"The Sunday school work at Kwangju is most interesting, and it grew in six years from an attendance of forty to eight hundred. The Koreans do not depend on paid singers, but every one has his own song-book and tries to sing. If he cannot sing, he reads out loud. It is a joy to see a large congregation swaying to and fro, with mouths wide open, singing songs of praise. An organ in the church would mean a great deal to all and would probably attract others who are not in the habit of attending."

"Shall I Drink"

UNDER the above caption there has just been published a most informing and instructive book on the temperance question, written by Rev.
J. H. Crooker of Boston. It is invaluable to every pastor or teacher in the public or Sunday schools. It ought to be on the desk of every pastor during these days when the temperance question is to the fore. No better book could be placed in public libraries, and every Sunday school ought to have it in its library. Eighteen plates are printed, showing the effects of alcohol in every department of life.
It is an arsenal of ammunition for all who are fighting intemperance. Published by the Pilgrim Press. Price, $1.

When the Clouds Are Rolling

WHEN the clouds are rolling darkly
Overhead along the skies,
And the orb of day is hidden
From our watching, anxious eyes,
Ere the storm shall break around us,
God in heaven, thee we pray,
God in heaven, give us shelter
Underneath thy wings today.

When the birds of prey are circling,
Hovering threatening all the day,
Waiting for that careless moment
When from loving eyes we stray,
Ere their fearful talons clutch us,
God in heaven, thee we pray,
God in heaven, give us shelter
Underneath thy wings today.

When our sins seem overwhelming
Round about us everywhere,
Ever raging to devour us
While we tremble in despair,
Ere their fangs shall find us faithless,
God in heaven, thee we pray,
God in heaven, give us shelter
Underneath thy wings today.

N. D. ANDERSON.

"100 MILES for 10 cents"

Something
New

Price Only $125
Weight Only 110 lbs.

YOU CAN SOON SAVE more than the cost of a Miami Motor Bicycle in the amount of time and travel expense it will save you. The pleasure and satisfaction you get from owning and riding your own motor vehicle costs you practically nothing.

Imagine a self-propelling machine much stronger than a pedal-driven bicycle and almost as easy to operate; much lighter than a motorcycle and without its mechanical complications; as safe to run as a bicycle, but without the exertion required to run either kind of machine—then you have a good idea of

THE MIAMI MOTOR BICYCLE SAFE · SILENT · CLEAN
WEIGHS 110 LBS. COSTS $125.00

Except for high speed, it will do everything that a motorcycle can do—and it costs only a fraction as much. It will take you across country, up and down the hills, and to and from school or work at from four to twenty-five miles an hour—fast enough for business or pleasure—with safety.

If you can afford to pay carfare, or know how to manage a bicycle, you cannot afford to be without a Miami Motor Bicycle.

Write us for Free Booklet telling all about the Miami Motor Bicycle.
You can buy one from your Dealer, or direct from our factory.

THE MIAMI CYCLE & MFG. COMPANY
"America's Greatest Cycle Makers"

550 Mobile Avenue

Middletown, Ohio

The BEST LIGHT

Positively the cheapest and strongest light on earth.
Used in every country on the globe. Makes and burns its own gas. Casts no shadows. Clean and odorless. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 100 to 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

WEDDING

Write for Book of latest styles,
prices on Engraved Invitations, Announcements, Cards, etc. With each order we will make free HANDSOME CARD RE-CEIVER from copper plate they are engraved from

VIRGINIA STATIONERY CO., 915-F Main St., Richmond, Va.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES

For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for (Inhalation)

ASTHMA
All Druggists, or by mail, 35c.
STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES $18 TO $60

Look at these bargains! Typewriters Rebuilt in our own Factories. Every machine is guaranteed for one year.

Remingtons $20 to $55 Smiths $18 to $40
Underwoods $35 to $60 Royals $25 to $45
L. C. Smiths $30 to $50 Oliviers $20 to $35

We have others. Send for catalog describing them, and address of nearest branch office.

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO., Inc., 345 Broadway, N. Y.

BLMYER BCHURCH BELLS

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay

Advice and Books FREE
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Makes Dusting Dustless — Cleans as It Polishes

Housework becomes easy where O-Cedar Polish is used, and homes become visibly brighter and cheerier. Pianos, furniture, woodwork and floors all smile back at you. Over 2,000,000 home-makers now use it; why not you? At all dealers—25c up. Send for liberal Free Sample.

CHANNELL CHEMICAL COMPANY, Chicago — Toronto — London — Berlin

REGAL

Making It Easy

When in doubt about YOUR car—when choosing seems so difficult and the merits of one make-after-another is over shadowed by the features that don't appeal to you—just remember there are THREE REGALS supplying pretty nearly every known motor-need.

No matter which one you select, it will have all those sturdy, enduring Regal qualities which have been developed in our eight years of car-building.

Sort of simplifies things, doesn't it? Here they are:

A LIGHT "FOUR" 106 inch wheel base	$ 650
A STANDARD "FOUR"	1085
A "V" TYPE "EIGHT"	1250

All models are 5 passenger capacity—fully equipped, including electric lights and starter—have crown fenders, demountable rims and one-man top. Send for literature and name of nearest dealer.

Regal Motor Car Co.

665 Piquette Ave.
DETROIT, MICH.

Light Four $650

This and 199 more designs to select from Iron Fence for Residences, Churches, Cemeteries. Send for catalog and special prices. We can positively save you money.
Iron Fence Cheaper Than Wood
CINCINNATI IRON FENCE CO.
Dept. H, Box 724, Cincinnati, Ohio

The "REAL" Keens Them All
Fitted with Grain Leather Strop. Specially treated for sharpening Gillette, Durham Duplex, Ever Ready, Gem Star and other Safety Razor Blades, as well as all old-style Jack Razors.
AGENTS! DEMONSTRATORS! 100% profit in this for you. Write quick for prices and territory. Send $1.00 for sample. Money back if you want it.
CANTON RAZOR STROP CO.
706 Cook Street Canton, Ohio

LADIES! Ease Your Feet
Send for free catalog telling all about our Neat, Unconcerned, Flexible, Comfortable, unlined Vic Kid O'Sullivanized PILLOW SHOE. New shoes easy as old ones. No breaking in required. Fit and feel like a kid glove. O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on all styles.
$3.00 Postpaid
PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept. 3
184 Summer St., BOSTON, MASS.

6% NET
For 36 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up, which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 709.
$25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving investors
PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans.

WATERPROOF SHEETING ("White-No-Rubber") Cribsheet $1. Maternity sheet $2. Postpaid.
QUINCY TUCKER, 43 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

ELOCUTION
Would you like to study Elocution? I will give you LESSONS by MAIL and teach you the art of Public Speaking, Dramatic Reading and Entertaining. Elocution will make you popular and earn you money. With my lessons mothers can teach their children to recite. Only the best literature taught. If you cannot go away to school, this is your opportunity. Send 4 cent stamp for Sample Illustrated Recitation.
THE MERRILL SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION, Inc.
Box 42A, North End Station, - Detroit, Mich.

GRAY MOTORS AND BOATS
Boat Builders Catalog, the result of the co-operation of 50 leading Boat Builders with the Gray Motor Co. is yours for the asking. Tells where you can find any kind of a boat from a $125 fishing launch to a $2500 mahogany finished express launch, powered with 6 cylinder self starting 4 cycle Gray Motor. This Book is Free. Write for it today. Also Big Gray Marine Engine Book showing complete line 2 and 4 cycle marine motors $85 upwards, 1 to 6 cylinders.
GRAY MOTOR CO., 536 Gray Motor Building, Detroit, Mich.

AGENTS--200% Profit
Foot Scraper and Cleaner—Needed on every porch and outside door-step. Right now is the time to sell it—A winner. C. P. Draper, Mass., first order for 200. C. A. Johnson sold 40 in 1 1/2 days. W. W. Harpster Pa., sold 27 in 4 evenings, spare time work. Write quick for terms of free sample. A postal will do.
Thomas Co. 292 1/2 West St. Dayton, O.

WANTED in every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl to represent The Christian Herald. This is an opportunity to build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address:
Agency Dept., THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York City

THE PRAYER LEAGUE

League Scripture for May: "God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him." 107: 3

A GAIN the acknowledgments of answered prayer show a wide variety of needs met by the blessing of God. An unusual number of our correspondents this week characterize the answers as "wonderful" or "abundant." Sight strengthened, mind strengthened, powerful habits overcome, communities blessed, dear ones healed and saved—thus God is doing "exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think."

J. S. McC. writes from Altapas, N. C., acknowledging remarkable answer to prayer for a revival and the opening of a Sunday school. M. E. M. writes to express gratitude for increased attendance and great improvement in Sunday school at Centerville, N. M. M. E. H. reports that God is pouring out great blessings upon the city of Middletown, N. Y., in answer to prayer. Over seven hundred have accepted Christ. H. J. writes to thank God for the success of local option in the counties of Michigan, also for answer to another prayer. Miss L. M. D. writes: "I wrote four months ago requesting prayers for help in financial trouble and that a brother be saved from the drink habit. Almost immediately help came, and my brother has been resisting his old temptation."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

M. S. F., Conn. (for financial help, which came wonderfully); F. E. T., Canisteo, N. Y. (for guidance and deliverance in time of trouble); Miss H., Mo. (for the lifting of a financial burden); E. J. K., Grand Bay, Ala. (for prayers answered in a wonderful manner); Miss E. McK., Wilmington, N. Y. (for direct answer to prayer for employment and restoration of mother's health); Mrs. L. A. D., Ceres, Va. (for wonderful answers in regard to matters large and small); M. K., Pa. (for help in financial matters); L. E. B., Santa Cruz, Calif.; Mrs. S. A. P., Cleveland, Miss.; Mrs. G. W. H., Chambersburg, Pa. (for healing of daughter and the lifting of a burden); Mrs. A. C., Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. T. W. P., Philadelphia; Mrs. R. E. D., Knoxville, Tenn.; Mrs. E. McD., Maryville, Mo.; A Friend, Cambridge, Mass. (for improvement in a friend's sight); E. M. S., Lockland, Ohio; I. S., Shawnee, Okla.; Mrs. M. F. R., Mechanicsburg, Pa.; Mrs. C. D. L., Paris, Ark.; C. E. C., Warren, Ind.; Mrs. C. E. M., Saugerties, N. Y. (for restoration to health and relief from a great burden); Mrs. C. V. B., Athens, Pa. (for three direct answers to prayer); Mrs. E. V. H. (that prayer concerning a critical financial matter has been answered abundantly); Mrs. M. H. C., Elyria, Ohio; Miss N. S., Lorettsville, Va.; Mrs. K. H., Charleston, S. C.; "Reader," S. C.

A. B. C. asks special prayer that God will open the way for him to return to his native state of Georgia and that some Baptist church or churches in that state may be led to call him as pastor. Mrs. S. R. B. asks prayer that her son who is ill at a hospital for the insane may be healed in every way. E. J. K. asks special prayer that a skeptic who is a man of influence may be led to the light of Christ's Gospel. A young man whose mother and father are both victims of the liquor habit asks prayer for God's guidance.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at Muskegon, Mich.; a church at Birmingham, Ala.; West Asheville, N. C.; Oshana, Ont.; Swanton, Vt.; Bourbon, Ill.; Old Fort, N. C.; Presbyterian Church at Grassy Creek, N. C.; Middletown, N. Y.; Fort Collins, Colo.; Emmett, Tenn.; outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the salvation of souls during special meetings in Baptist Church, East Lincoln, Neb.; Cambridge, Mass.; Altamont, Kan.; M. T. I. asks prayer for a revival throughout northern New York, especially in a little village of worldly people where saloons abound and for two churches of different denominations who do not show a friendly spirit; F. W. M. repeats the request for prayer that more of the unsaved attend the Gospel meetings held at Abington Square, N. Y.; "Reader," Sharp Corners, Ont., requests prayer for prohibition throughout Canada; M. B. urges prayer for a great revival throughout the United States.

A Reader suggests that prayers be made for all "shut-ins," also that special prayer be made for the Mormons. A Pennsylvania reader asks that prayer be made that the government authorities prevent the shipping of arms and ammunition to the nations at war in Europe, which are prolonging the bloody strife, and that world-wide peace may soon dawn.

We shall print a special message next week from Mrs. J. A. Harc, the mother of the Prayer League, suggesting renewed earnestness in prayer for a world-wide revival. Other readers are sending every week suggestions that our faith reach out for the answer to this great prayer.

Mrs. E. M. A. asks prayer that her son's mind may be restored; Mrs. S., her husband's; Mrs. D. W. S. and Mrs. J. J. Y., their mother's; E. N. her sister's; C. C., a grandson's. Ten friends ask prayer for the mental restoration or strengthening of their friends or for themselves.

Mrs. A. C. T. and Mrs. L. V. ask prayer that sight may be restored. Five other friends ask prayer for restoration or strengthening of sight for other friends or for themselves.

Mrs. M. S. asks prayer that her husband and sons may be saved from the liquor habit. Mrs. M. E. H., Subscriber and Mrs. U. S., that their husbands may be saved from drink. Mrs. W. J. H., a Subscriber and Mrs. H. C., their sons; J. S., his mother and father; Mrs. O. D. B., Miss L. D. and Mrs. M. T., their brothers. Mrs. L. D., her son-in-law; J. W., a relative; Mrs. L. J. McL., a number of young men.

Two friends ask prayer that they may be cured of the drug habit, one that a brother may be cured, another a son-in-law.

Fifty-six friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance, forgiveness or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Thirty parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons, including five mothers each of whom asks prayer that three sons may be converted.

Seventeen wives ask prayer for the conversion of their husbands.

Forty-eight friends ask prayer for the conversion of other relative and friends, including one that two others may be saved, another that three brothers may be saved, another that eleven young men may be saved, another that two daughters may be saved, another that wife may be saved, another that an old lady may be saved, and another, a soldier at the front.

Nineteen readers ask prayer for spiritual blessing for relative or friends.

Two husbands ask prayer for the healing of their wives; thirteen wives for the healing of their husbands, including one that husband may regain the use of limbs and arms; five parents ask prayer for the healing of daughters; ten for the healing of sons; twenty-three for the healing of themselves, including two friends who ask prayers for regaining the use of their limbs; thirty-four friends ask prayer for the healing of other relatives and friends.

Fifteen friends ask prayer for the healing of hearing for themselves or other friends.

Thirty-seven friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Forty-five friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including one that a great burden may be lifted; another that a great trouble may be removed; another that her husband will forgive one who wronged them, another that a threatened calamity may be prevented; two that they may be reconciled to their friends; another that a lost love one may be restored; another that a friend and son may become reconciled; also that son may secure employment and that trouble may be removed; another that husband may return home and trouble be removed; another that daughter and husband may become reconciled; another that love a friend may be regained; another that peace may come to her home.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

Believe in Christian Endeavor
Christian Endeavor Topic for May 16.
Union meeting
at the Juniors)

- 1) Because I believe in Christ. I believe that Christ is now in the world, still blessing and helping sinners and still "causing them triumph."
- 2) Because I believe in endeavor. Endeavor means effort. And I believe in making an effort for all good things. Of course, for the cause of Christ which is the greatest cause in the world.
- 3) Because I believe in the power of youth—in the power, and especially in the opportunities, of young people to get things done.
- 4) Because I believe in union. Christian Endeavor means the union of young people of the different denominations in the work of Christ.
- 5) Because I believe in organization and system. Christian Endeavor is the most complete and systematic organization in the world.
- 6) Because I believe in people. Christian Endeavor exists for the purpose of helping people, and I believe that people, all kinds of people, everywhere, are capable of being helped.

lieve that people, all kinds of people, everywhere, are capable of being helped. The business of Christian Endeavor is primarily to train young people for a church life that shall be aggressively, effectively, spiritually, practically helpful to others.

(7) Because I believe in reform. Christian Endeavor stands for temperance, for civic righteousness, for moral uplift. I believe in its slogan, "A Saloonless Nation in 1920." I believe in that, not only as a slogan that can be followed, but as a thing that can actually be done.

The Bible the World's Supreme Book
B. Y. P. U. Topic for May 16. Deut.
6: 1-9

SEE discussion of this subject in the Christian Herald of April 14 in notes on the Christian Endeavor topic.

Epworth League Anniversary
Epworth League Topic for May 16
SEND to league headquarters, 1020
Wabash Avenue, Chicago, for official literature and programs.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

Answers to List No. 3

1. Asia. 1 Cor. 16: 19; Ephesus, 16: 8.
2. Aila and Priscilla. 1 Cor. 16: 19. (c) 1: 18, 19.
3. Members of Chloe's household, 1 Cor. 16: 19.
4. (a) Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaia. 1 Cor. 16: 17. (c) Timothy 4: 17.
5. Divisions, factions, contentions, 1: 11.
6. (a) Paul, Apollos, Cephas, Christ, 1: 12. (c) 18: 27, 28; 19: 1, Apollos.
7. (a) No, 1: 21; 2: 14. (b) No, 1: 27.
8. Jesus Christ and him crucified, 2: 2. (c) I have power of God, 2: 5.
9. They were yet carnal, 3: 3 also 3: 1.
10. "There neither is he that planneth anything, neither he that saith watereth; but God that maketh the increase," 3: 7.
11. G'd to law before the unjust, 6: 1; 6: 7.

IN A SHADOW

a Drinker Feared Paralysis.

Steady use of either tea or coffee often produces alarming symptoms, as the caffeine contained in these beverages acts with more potency in nervous persons than in others. "I am never a coffee drinker," writes a woman, "but a tea drinker. I am very nervous, had frequent spells of headache and heart trouble, and was subject at times to severe attacks of bilious colic. "Tired of sleepless nights—would not sleep at night when my right leg would get numb and tingle like thousands of needles were pricking my flesh. At times I could hardly put my tongue out of my mouth and my right ear would be affected. "The doctors told me to quit using tea, but I thought I could not live without it—that it was my only stay. I had been a tea drinker for twenty-five years; under the doctor's care for fifteen. "At six months ago, I finally quit tea and commenced to drink Postum. "I have never had one spell of sickness since and only one light attack of bilious colic. Have quit having those numb spells at night, sleep well and my heart is getting stronger all the time." "Nae given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Well-being" in pkgs. Postum comes in two forms: Postum Cereal—the original form—made well boiled. 15c and 25c packages. Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, add cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c packages. Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup. "There's a Reason" for Postum. —sold by Grocers.

Honor Roll
 Madeline Apple, Mrs. O. W. Armagost, Hattie P. Antell, Miss Ethel Barber, Mrs. Earle Barrett, Mrs. Charles Bartholme, Mrs. John B. Burt, Mrs. A. D. Biles, Ruth I. Bogue, Rose Bonard, Mrs. C. C. Brown, H. C. Bullfinch, Mrs. John Burgoine, Miss M. E. Campbell, Thora Canasbell, Fanny B. Clouson, Mrs. Lettie Cobb, Mrs. M. E. Cole, Mrs. Isaac T. Coppock, Miss Susan J. Cutler, C. H. Dealey, Annie Deminger, Helen E. Dewey, A. C. Drumm, Mrs. Arthur Dugless, Mrs. B. L. Dullais, Mrs. George E. Eaton, Mrs. Wallace Eaton, Elizabeth Esmond, Miss Anna Evenson, Martha Fagerli, Mrs. J. A. Ferguson, Mrs. J. W. Floyd, Mary French, Miss Sarah E. Gibson, Mrs. Susan A. Glover, Mrs. R. S. Graham, Mrs. Mary Groom, Miss L. V. Guppy, Delia M. D. Harris, Mrs. Charles Van S. Harrison, Florence Hamkins, Fannie G. Hedges, Miss P. E. Hemingway, Jessie C. Hill, George L. Hills, Mrs. J. R. Hissen, Inez Hopkins, Mrs. Mary E. Howell, Lois L. Hoyt, Mrs. Garret Hulst, Lucy N. Hutchins, Alma Isbell, Dornica A. Jackson, Miss Elsie A. Johnson, Allen H. Johnston, Mrs. Peter Larson, Mrs. Asa Leas, W. E. Light, Julia A. McConkey, Mrs. M. McLaughlin, Miss Annie M. McLellan, Mrs. W. A. McManigal, M. E. Mahaffy, Eva Mann, Ethel Maple, Mrs. B. Marek, Miss D. Millard, Mrs. E. W. Minns, Mrs. Lizzie Morse, Mrs. John Muncaster, Mrs. A. F. Newman, Miss W. Nicholson, J. N. Ogle, Anna M. Olofson, Mrs. Frank G. Ordway, Ella W. Page, Esther E. Palmer, Mrs. Mabel E. Peeler, Mrs. W. M. Powell, Sister Lena Rasch, Miss Maggie Redfern, Miss Etta Rippel, Miss Effie L. Ritcey, Mrs. F. H. E. Ross, Mrs. G. E. Ross, Miss Maria Scott, Mrs. Mary Q. Smith, Mrs. G. L. Snyder, Annie G. Stine, Mrs. Anna Stockmon, Mrs. M. A. Taft, Miss Ida S. Templin, Mrs. M. R. Tucker, Grace B. Tuthill, Mrs. Charles T. Tuxford, Mrs. E. P. Van Deventer, Mrs. Edwin D. Ward, Verna Wean, Mrs. Virgil C. Welch, Miss Hunter Wells, Miss Mary Willet, Mrs. Helen R. Wilson, Eva A. Wolcott, Mrs. James Young. There is also one unsigned correct list.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—THE FORTY-SECOND ANNUAL MEETING of the National Conference of Charities and Correction will take place in Baltimore, May 12-19, 1915. This is a notable yearly gathering in America of public officials, volunteer workers and employees of charitable agencies. The president is Mrs. John M. Glenn, New York, and Wm. T. Cross, Chicago, is general secretary. —E. GEORGE ERRAHAKAM, a native of India, writes from Kunamakulam: "I was a wicked Hindu living on the River Ganges. I was worshipping idols. One day I happened to hear the preachings of some Christians. At that time I was mocking at them. After some days, I began to think about Christ Jesus. I thought it was of no use to worship idols; they will not answer prayers. So I became a Christian. I am not a Hindu now, as you can judge. I am a Christian of twenty-four."

Known for 72 Years

Ask About the "Extras"

when you consider a motor car. Prices are not always what they seem.

If the CASE Car were equipped only as other cars its price would be much different. But we furnish as regular equipment the extras you must have—extra casing with tube on rim with cover, Weed non-skid tire chains and 8-day clock. Of course, there's the usual equipment, too. So the CASE Car, even at $1350—certainly if you partake of the 5 per cent. discount for cash—is cheaper by far than any other car in its class.

As for maintenance, you and your family know how CASE builds. For over seventy years CASE machinery has been the standard by which others have been judged. So with CASE Cars. They are built to do honor to a famous name. Our reputation is in every one. Can you ask more?

Write today for our beautiful new booklet describing the CASE Car. Contrast this car with others and it will prove its superiorities.

J. I. CASE T. M. COMPANY, Inc.

Founded 1842

561 Liberty St., Racine, Wis.

The Name Behind the Goods

HE WHO USES CYPRESS BUILDS BUT ONCE

CYPRESS

"THE WOOD ETERNAL"

SO MANY PEOPLE KNOW
so little about woods
(and their relative values — How is it with you?)

SO MANY PEOPLE THINK that "LUMBER IS LUMBER" — (How often do YOU specify the kind of wood you want used by your builder?)

SO MANY PEOPLE BELIEVE that frequent Repair Bills are "Necessary Evils"—that we believe we are doing a public service in informing you and other intelligent people on

CYPRESS
(THE WOOD ETERNAL)

HERE IS CYPRESS VS. AN IRON PLUG:

About 110 years ago, when Louisiana was a French Province, the Water Mains of New Orleans were CYPRESS logs, 18 feet long by 22 inches diameter, with a 5-inch hole bored lengthwise. These were joined by short iron tubes, tapered at both ends. A few years ago these were replaced by the most modern system. Below is a photograph of a section of one of the CYPRESS mains just as it was dug up, as sound as ever after 110 years' contact with the earth.

Below is a photograph of one of the iron connections just as dug up, most of them rusted past all usefulness.

HERE IS CYPRESS VS. WEATHER

A photograph of a CYPRESS SHINGLE from the Austen Homestead, Staten Island, N. Y., built in 1710, and at last accounts still occupied by descendants of its original builders, with the original CYPRESS roof practically intact.

"He who uses CYPRESS builds but once."

CYPRESS is in truth "the wood eternal". If you are putting up a palace or a pasture-fence, and want to build it "FOR KEEPS"—USE CYPRESS—"of course."

There is a liberal education (and a wonderful INVESTMENT value for you) in this CYPRESS advertising—and in the detailed information and reliable counsel to be had promptly WITHOUT COST, if you will WRITE US YOUR OWN NEEDS (big or little), and ASK YOUR OWN QUESTIONS of the "ALL-ROUND HELPS DEPARTMENT" of the Southern Cypress Manufacturers' Assn.

 1226 Hibernia Bank Building, New Orleans, La., and 1226 Heard Nat'l Bank Building, Jacksonville, Fla.
 Probably your lumber man sells CYPRESS; if not, WRITE US, and we will tell you the dealer handiest to you.

Tint Your Rooms

In these beautiful Colors

Be an artist with your home this year. It requires not a big money outlay, but rather the "know how," the knowledge of just what wall colors will best harmonize with and set off your furniture, rugs, etc. And of all tinting materials, choose Alabastine, because it is first rate in quality and produces charming effects.

Alabastine

The Beautiful Wall Tint — Made in U. S. A.

Sold by dealers everywhere, in 5 lb. packages of dry powder. By combining and intermixing the standard Alabastine Tints and Strong Colors, any hue, tint or shade desired can be obtained. Alabastine is easily mixed with hot or cold water and is applied with a regular wall brush. It will not rub off, chip nor peel when applied according to directions on package.

Alabastine is specially recommended for homes, schools, hospitals, churches, etc., because it is sanitary. Durable. Economical.

Buy your Alabastine in packages only. Look for the circle and cross in red. Insist that the workman bring Alabastine to his job in packages. Thus only will you insure Alabastine results. LET US MAKE SPECIAL COLOR PLANS for your home, church, school, etc. No charge. Write for particulars.

ALABASTINE CO., 340 Grandville Rd., Grand Rapids, Mich.

FREE—Book of Color Plans of Rooms

One or more of these plans may just suit that bedroom or dining room. Book tells how to get beautiful stencils free. Other valuable information. Write for it today.

"BILLY SUNDAY

The Man and His Message"

Authorized by MR. SUNDAY

MANY have criticized the unconventional methods of Billy Sunday, but the sobering fact remains that he has led over 300,000 men and women to a profession of Christianity.

Serious men and women the country over are asking, "What manner of man is this?" This book, written by Wm. T. Ellis, LL.D., provides the answer. It not only tells the story of Sunday's eventful life, gives a keen analysis of his manner and methods, traces his remarkable success as the most conspicuous Christian leader in America, but it also contains the heart of his message arranged by subjects and published by special agreement with Mr. Sunday for the use of copyright material and photographs which could be used only with his permission.

Preaches Religion in Homely Phrases

"I never preach a sermon until I have soaked it in prayer."—BILLY SUNDAY

Mr. Sunday is tremendously in earnest. His utterances are vivid. His epigrams, like his stories, are of the homely Lincoln sort that people remember. He bars the truth and makes it enter and stick. The crowds follow him. They come to hear a man preach a strong Gospel, which can meet the real need of the human heart.

"Billy Sunday, the Man and His Message," is an intensely interesting book because it deals with a subject of the greatest human concern in a new way.

Bound in cloth. 496 pages. 32 chapters. Illustrated.

HOW TO OBTAIN THIS REMARKABLE BOOK

We will send you a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," and The Christian Herald for one year, for..... $2.00

OR, We will send to old subscribers a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," as a reward for sending a NEW eight months' subscription, accompanied by..... $1.10

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, N. Y.

TEST YOUR SEEDS

THE Department of Agriculture conducts seed-testing laboratories in different sections of the country, and stands ready to make tests free of charge for any one who will forward samples. The activities of the department in testing seed and the making public of the names of the vendors of impure seed, and spreading the information broadcast, has reduced materially the activities of unscrupulous dealers who in the past have reaped a harvest through selling the seeds of weeds for the seed of clover, red top, Kentucky blue grass and many other varieties of seed.

Government seed laboratories have been established in connection with the Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station at Baton Rouge, La.; at the California Agricultural Experiment Station, Berkeley, Cal.; at the Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Ore.; the Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station, Columbia, Mo.; and Purdue University, LaFayette, Ind. These laboratories are established and maintained for the purpose of furnishing information as to the quality of agricultural seeds. Samples may also be submitted to the seed laboratory, Bureau of Plant Industry, Department of Agriculture, Washington.

These tests require considerable time and can be made only by experts. The facilities of the seed laboratories will permit not more than five such tests to be made for any one firm or individual in any one calendar month. The tests will be made and reports sent as promptly as possible, and in the order in which received.

The Department of Agriculture has also evolved a helpful system of farm cost which will be furnished on request.

The farmer wishes to know how much he is making or losing on his business each year, how much he is making or losing on each crop or class of animals, and how he can improve his business so as to make more money. These are some of the things which the system evolved by the department's experts aims to show many farmers are desirous of keeping accounts of this sort, but do not know how to start. Many are deterred from starting because they believe that they do not know enough bookkeeping and because they have in mind no definite method of procedure. To any such men who desire to keep accounts and who have not worked out a system for themselves, it is believed that the system outlined will be helpful. Those who are already keeping accounts but are not satisfied with the results obtained may find some suggestions of value.

The department estimates that about five minutes daily will keep a set of accounts with additional time at the end of the month and the year. Of course the time will vary with the type of farming, the complexity of the business and the degree of accuracy and completeness with which the accounts have been kept. The department officials say that under the system adopted no bookkeeping knowledge is necessary, and that it is not necessary to know the difference between a day book and a journal to get a trial balance in order to keep good farm costs account. The system adopted by the department is not a theoretical one, but one that was worked out by practical demonstrations on farms with many types of farming, and it will be furnished by the department without cost.

THOMAS O. M. K.

THE "KAI KWAI" OR "CHICKEN DEVIL"

ONE can never fully realize the depth of superstition and ignorance of China. Demon worship is common to all Chinese tribes inhabiting Kwangsi and Kwongtung, and especially here in Lungchow and vicinity, where there are most peculiar forms of devil worship.

One of the most gruesome superstitions, which terrifies the natives, and from which they would run miles to escape, is their belief in the "kai kwai," or the "chicken devil." According to the belief of the natives here, the "chicken devils" are issues from the body of a monster who in high antiquity lived in this country and was killed by two brothers. They inflict terrible diseases upon man. Sometimes it is a form of typhoid fever, and when the person becomes delirious he is said to be afflicted by the "chicken devil."

The afflicted one is almost an outcast and is looked upon with shame, and if he has children no one wants to marry them. It is their duty to appease the "chicken devils," and they are easily mollified by offering them two live chickens. These chickens are put into a small-mouthed jar alive, from which they cannot possibly escape, and later, when looking into the jar, only the feathers are found. They believe the "chicken devil" has taken the chickens alive, leaving only the feathers; but of course some one has had a feast.

About six o'clock one afternoon we were returning home after a walk, when a woman and girl came running toward us, their faces white with terror. We thought it very strange, for women in China seldom run. But not far behind came an excited mob at the head of which were two men fairly dragging a young married girl along. She was so weak that she could hardly walk, and several times staggered and almost fell. On they rushed the poor girl. From the crowds along the streets we learned that she was afflicted by this fearful disease and was just being led home again, after they had chased the "chicken devil" out of her into its original home. As we passed the house we found a large crowd gathered there, and people were speaking in hushed whispers of the affair.

So terrified are the natives about the "kai kwai" that they will even speak of it after dark. The milky where the "chicken devil" is supposed to have originally lived suffl all kinds of persecution from the milky of the sick man. Sometimes they are chased out of the village. If they do not go, however, they must mollify the "chicken devil" by monthly contributions of two chickens, and the descendants must do so forever after. People will not marry any member of the family unless they are too poor to marry others. STELLA M. R. Y.

Wuchow, South China.

The Sweet Singer

By Walt Mason

A FLOOD of music rushes from robins and from thrushes from nightingale and wren, high vocal triumphs tackling—but I prefer the cackling of my old Leghorn hen. All trills and warbles scorning, she wakes in the morning, and does it all year, and evermore her singing to me, fresh joy is bringing—I know an egg is near. The nightingale and robin have voices sweet and throbbin', but that is you get; while my old hen, whose vocal emerges from a barrel, provides an omelet. My phonograph, on which good music will keep grinding, as sweet as that of urens; it reproduces voices in which the world rejoices—but won't lay eggs like hens. My Leghorn hen is raising a set of humble phrasing, that Melba'd ever dare; and shortly I will wander it to the stable yonder, and find some hen-fruit there. The skylark is a singer, the robin, as a singer, high rector; begs; but my old Leghorn's trill, my breast with rapture's filling, because it means more eggs.

Maxwell

38,000 owners have given the "acid test" to 38,000 Maxwells in the last 18 months

Every car made in the gigantic Maxwell factories is just as finely finished, just as handsome an automobile as if it were especially made to be exhibited at the New York Automobile Show, or in some dealer's fancy showrooms.

BUT—and here is a great big BUT—38,000 of these Maxwell Cars have actually been turned out and have actually been driven thousands of miles by 38,000 Maxwell owners.

These owners have driven their Maxwells up hill and down hill—over all kinds of country roads and over city streets, at high speed and at low speed, everywhere that four wheels will go.

Most of these 38,000 Maxwells have been rained on, snowed on, and put to every kind of rough and tumble test that time and use can give a car—and that's what we mean by the "acid test."

If you have any neighbors among these 38,000 happy owners, ask them to tell you all about their experience with their Maxwells.

But don't forget this—every "1915" Maxwell is an exact duplicate of these 38,000 tried and true Maxwells that have stood the rough and tumble "acid test."

The Maxwell Company's Guarantee of Service to Maxwell Owners

No other automobile is backed by a more reliable service than that guaranteed every Maxwell owner. More than 2,000 Maxwell dealers—located in every part of this country and Canada, and 54 District Managers' Offices, are always ready to give expert advice, make adjustments, and supply or secure new parts at reasonable prices.

And this splendid dealer service organization is perfected and completed by Sixteen great Maxwell Service Stations which are so located throughout the country that a Maxwell dealer can get, within a few hours, any part that he has not in stock.

Order a Maxwell now, and when you want it delivered, you will get your car—not an excuse on delivery day.

Maxwell Five-Passenger Touring Car, $695, f. o. b. Detroit.	In Canada, $ 925.
Maxwell Roadster, - - - - - 670, f. o. b. Detroit.	In Canada, 900.
Maxwell Cabriolet, - - - - - 840, f. o. b. Detroit.	In Canada, 1,105.
Any model equipped with electric self-starter, $55 extra.	In Canada, $70 extra.

Write for beautiful 1915 Maxwell Catalogue Address, Department A.

MAXWELL MOTOR COMPANY, Inc.

Detroit, Michigan

The Maxwell is exhibited at the Panama-Pacific Exposition

"Every Road is a Maxwell Road"

ARBUCKLES' COFFEE

Better than ever

By far the most popular Coffee in America

Save the Signatures
Good for Premiums

GROUND

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER YEAR
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MAY 12, 1915

VOL. 38—NO. 19. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Photograph by Clarence Purchase

*While in the countries far away the farmers leave their toil
To fight against their fellow men with weapons dripping red,
Our farmers walk behind the plow and till God's peaceful soil,*

Before you pay more find a FOUR that gives more at $985

And before you pay less—give a second thought to QUALITY. This is the car that Studebaker built to live up to its IDEAL of a Four. And it is only when you come to study it side by side with other Fours that you begin to appreciate how much you can buy in this FOUR at $985 “—because it’s a Studebaker”—and how needless it is to pay more.

But judge it, not on its price, but on the qualities that YOU yourself want in a car.

Raise the hood and study that Studebaker Motor with its marvelously simplified design. Note how high the carburetor is—how easily the valve mechanism can be reached—how perfectly get-at-able the pump, oilers and electric units are.

Observe, too, that Studebaker uses the reliable-at-any-speed Battery system of ignition that most of the leading cars have substituted for the magneto. Note the lightest, simplest, surest electric starter ever put in a car.

Note, for example, that the beautiful CROWN fenders are enameled, NOT painted—the durability of the finish literally baked into the steel. Why be satisfied with old-style flat fenders when Studebaker gives you crown fenders?

Note the built-in windshield—light, rigid, graceful in design—storm-proof, ventilating, rain-vision.

And then observe that the doors are wide and easy-opening—front and back and both sides—plenty of space for passage into the car with no lever to climb over. Hinges and catches are hidden. No latches left to tear even the fluffiest of summer dresses.

Get up into the car and see how roomy it is. Here is one car where there is plenty of room in the front seat for the driver.

And lots of room, too, in the tonneau—plenty of room for three full-grown people.

Note, too, that the running-boards are clear—not a thing left on them to mar the graceful lines of the car.

And when you sink down into the restful cushions, enjoy their cosy depth—feel the glove-soft quality of the genuine buffed leather.

And then, note the finish of this FOUR—satiny and attractive. Goes through 20 color and varnish operations. It’s a STAY-NEW finish.

One-man type top, too—goes up in a jiffy if a thundershower happens to catch you unawares—and it keeps you dry and cosy in any weather, winter or summer.

And then, the Studebaker FULL-floating Rear Axle! Not the heavy malleable cast affair, but a splendid piece of axle construction—the kind you find on the Studebaker SIX and on the higher-priced Sixes—beautifully simple and accessible. Not an ounce of weight on the axle shafts.

And then, study the design of the Chassis itself. See how marvelously Studebaker engineers have simplified it and distributed its weight—balanced it to drive straight as an arrow and ride easy as an ocean line. Studebaker drives through radius rods and NOT through the springs. Note the OVER-size brakes and the brake-equalizer.

Four - $985

STUDEBAKER DIFFERENCES

FULL floating Rear Axle. Drive thro' TWO radius rods and Torque arm. TRIPLE life, double-shackle Springs.—NEVER-failing Battery Ignition.—OVER-size brakes and Brake Equalizer.—13 Timken Bearings. Finish that takes 20 operations and 60 days in shops.

STUDEBAKER PRICES

Studebaker ROADSTER,	$ 985
Studebaker LIGHT SIX,	1385
Studebaker SIX 7-passenger,	1450
F. O. B. Detroit

— because it's a
Studebaker

Go over the whole car, point by point. Then, ride in it and drive it. Test its power on any hills you like. And then, when you remember that this is a FOUR that has made good for 100,000 owners—ask yourself: “Must I pay more than $985 for a FOUR?” and would it be wise to pay less?

STUDEBAKER — — — DETROIT
Canadian Plants: Walkerville, Ont.

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

THE MODERN PONTE ROTTO (BROKEN BRIDGE), ONE OF THE ELEVEN BRIDGES, MOST OF THEM OF ANCIENT ORIGIN, OVER THE TIBER

ROME IN PAUL'S TIME AND TODAY

A CONTINUATION OF THE NEW TRAVEL SERIES IN THE GREAT APOSTLE'S FOOTSTEPS

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

[HAVE just returned from a long walk in the city of St. Paul's martyrdom. How different the sights of Rome which greet the traveler's eye today, from those which nearly nineteen hundred years ago were seen by the little cavalcade of prisoners and their guards, who toilsomely made their journey along the Appian Way and through the Capuan Gate into the marvelous capital of the world!

Today, as I walked through the busy streets of modern Rome, my ears were deafened with the clang of the electric car and the shriek of the automobile horn. I passed through a tunnel under the Quirinal Hill, brilliantly lighted with arc lights, effected from the ten thousand white glazed tiles with which the tunnel is lined and roofed. Everything reminded me of a prosperous, bustling, modern city, for, within the last fifty years, and largely within the last quarter of a century, Rome has been made over from the musty, medieval city of the Popes into the lately capital of one of the great powers of the twentieth century.

And yet, even in the most modern parts of modern Rome, far from the ruins of the Forum and the palaces of the Cæsars, the mute monuments of Rome's greatest glories, one still sees reminders of the fact that he is not in Paris, or London, or New York, but in a country which, even amid ceaseless military activity, still maintains some features of the ancient life which Paul and his companions must have seen.

In the tunnel to which I have already alluded I met great white oxen, with enormous spread of horns, plodding along with heavy loads, as though electricity had never been discovered, or motor trucks invented. Men, and women too, with bulging baskets of vegetables and fruits upon their heads, striding along with erect carriage and rapid footsteps, apparently unconscious of the load which they bore. Now and then a gaily-dressed peasant from the country enlivened the more somber throng of men and women in modern garb. Looking upon this mingling of the ancient and modern, contrasting the slow-paced oxen with the whizzing automobile, I could realize that, in spite of its modernity, I was, after all, in the city which St. Paul so longed to see, concerning which the Lord had said to him in a vision of the night, while he was a prisoner in the castle at Jerusalem: "Be of good cheer, for as thou hast testified concerning me at Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome"; the city concerning which also he wrote to his Roman converts that he had "a great desire these many years to come unto them."

The apostle's journey from Puteoli to the imperial city of Rome must have been a long and tedious one, in spite of the splendid roadway he Capua. Its breadth is such that two chariots may meet upon it and pass each other without interruption, and its magnificence surpasses that of all other roads." Procopius goes on to tell us that Appius, who gave his name to the road, caused the material for it to be brought from a great distance, "so as to have all the stones hard, and of the nature of mill-stones." Then he had the stones smoothed and polished, and cut in corresponding angles, "so as to bite together in jointures without the intervention of copper or any other material to bind them, and in this manner they were so firmly united that on looking at them we would say they had not been put together by art, but had grown so upon the spot."

Such was the long road over which Paul, his disciples and his Roman guards made their slow way from Capua to Appian Forum, the "Three Taverns" and Rome. And yet this journey, hard and tedious as it must have been, and made doubly so for Paul from the chain which bound him always to his soldier guard, was not altogether without its joyous features; for, in addition to the friends who had been with him on his perilous voyage—Luke and Timothy, probably, and his Macedonian disciples—when the Appian Forum was reached his eyes were gladdened by the sight of fellow disciples who had come out to meet and cheer him on his way.

This forum, or market place, of Appian was at the end nearest Rome of the canal which crossed the Pontine Marshes. Scarcely had he recovered from the joy and surprise of meeting those friends so far from his destination, before another party of Christians greeted him some ten miles further on, at a place called "the Three Taverns." No wonder we are told by Luke that when Paul saw the brethren he "thanked God and took courage."

"On nearing Rome, the road must have assumed its most imposing form and dimensions," writes Dr. Macduff. "Where now for miles along this regal approach we have only the fragments of grim weather-stained sepulchers, wreathed with acanthus and ivy, and interspersed here and there with the

ST. SEBASTIANO GATEWAY, APPIAN WAY, THROUGH WHICH PAUL MUST HAVE PASSED

traversed, which was considered one of the marvels of antiquity, the best of all the Roman roads, sometimes called "the Queenly Way." An interesting description of this road is given by Procopius, the secretary of Belisarius, in the fifth century. "To traverse the Appian Way," he says, "is a five days' journey for a good walker. It leads from Rome to remains of medieval fortresses and masses of unshapely ruins, there must have stretched before the apostle's eyes one long, magnificent street, lined with monuments to illustrious dead, a vast colonnade of tombs, with no vault but the blue sky, forming, if we may venture on the comparison, the Westminster Abbey of the Imperial City, while the present waste, treeless Campagna, which girdles the modern Rome as with a zone of death, was studded with patrician villas and palatial residences."

Since these words were written, some fifty years ago, great changes have taken place. Much of the Campagna has been drained and made habitable. The pestilential mosquito, which brought malaria and death to the inhabitants and made it dangerous for a traveler even to cross it in the evening, has been largely banished. Yet still the modern traveler approaches Rome through a vast, desolate prairie, fertile to be sure, and beautiful in the springtime with grass and flowers, but how different from the magnificent spectacle that greeted the eyes of Paul and his companions, when practically a continuous and glorious city stretched from the banks of the Tiber, clear across the broad Campagna, and climbed the sides of the Alban Hills on the other side!

Modern Rome is a far grander city than that which was for so many centuries misgoverned by the Popes, and is growing in beauty and importance every year; but as compared with the city of St. Paul's time it is still small and provincial, and its noblest palaces are dwarfed by the ruins of the palaces and the Colosseum and the mighty aqueducts of ancient Rome.

Two houses of St. Paul are pointed out, and it is not difficult to believe that he may have had, during his long stay, at least two residences in the Eternal City. The first, which it is thought he occupied for only a short time after his arrival from Puteoli, is in the Corso, now covered by the church of Santa Maria Via Lata. This church, which was not built until 800 years after the death of Paul, and has been rebuilt more than once, is on the site of one of the government buildings of the Cæsars where the assemblies gathered and votes were taken for certain officers. It is argued, with a good deal of plausibility, that to one of the smaller rooms of this government building, Paul, as a prisoner favored by Julius the centurion and Burrhus the Roman magistrate, might have been taken on his arrival. At least it is interesting to know that millions of pilgrims have here renewed their faith at a shrine they believed to be connected with the apostle, and have looked upon the iron chain which is here suspended from a marble pillar in a subterranean chamber of the church as a symbol of the apostle's imprisonment. The motto in this chamber at least is Pauline, "Sed verbum Dei non est allegatum." (But the word of God is not bound.)

Another church, which is more likely to have covered the home of St. Paul, is that of "S. Paolo o Paolino allo Regola." This is a small church, seldom visited by tourists; but here many archeologists have considered that Paul lived for many months at least of the two years he spent in Rome. At the right of the altar is a doorway, over which an inscription in Latin tells us that this was the a retired site. We know, at least, that somewhere in this vicinity he abode two whole years in his hired dwelling, and received all that went in him, preaching the kingdom of God and teaching the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ with all boldness, none forbidding him."

Two other churches in the heart of ancient Rome are peculiarly interesting because they are built on the probable sites of the homes of two of Paul's dearest friends, Clement and Pudens. The Church of St. Clement is on the side of the Coelian Hill, not far from the Colosseum. Clement was one of the Roman nobility and is said to have built an oratory in his own palace where the young Christians were instructed in the faith of the new religion. He afterwards became a bishop of Rome; but his chief distinction is that he was a fellow laborer of Paul, and that very likely in this house of his Paul was an honored guest and teacher. He is immortalized by the great apostle in the fourth chapter of Philemonians.

"Eubulus saluteth thee, and Pudens and Linus and Claudia, and all the brethren," writes Paul in his very last message to Timothy, which was doubtless penned shortly before his martyrdom. And here are two names that are particularly interesting to us while we are visiting Rome. Pudens was apparently the son of a Roman senator, and he was sent by the Emperor Claudius to be the governor of a southern province in England. While there he fell in love with the daughter of a British king, and, on his return to Rome, induced the Emperor Claudius to adopt her as his daughter, and to give her his own name, Claudia. Claudia had already become a Christian, perhaps through her influence, Pudens, her husband, also embraced the new faith. So devoted were they to the apostle that they seem to have visited him in his last imprisonment, when such a visit might have meant death or imprisonment, and while there, as we read, they sent their greetings of fellowship to Paul's beloved son in the faith, Timothy.

Pudens and Claudia had two daughters, Pudentiana and Praxedes, and now the church named after the elder daughter, St. Pudentiana, stands on the site of the house of Pudens, on the Viminal Hill, close to the palace of Italy's king.

WHERE IN ST. PAUL'S DAY STOOD THE ROMAN FORUM

house and school of Paul, and on the stucco walls of the room are inscribed verses from the Acts and Romans, two of which I have already quoted. An old volume tells us that those whom Paul converted to Christ came here to be catechized because it was

THE NAVY ON DRESS PARADE

THE American people can thrill with pride, thinking what their navy might do in case of need. There is not quite so much electricity in such thrills, however, as in those sent through our nerves by reports of battles on the high seas, in which one American cruiser sinks two enemy dreadnoughts and puts five or six others to flight. If we were so unfortunate as to be at war with the other big nations of the world, our naval engagements would have to come out about that way, as a matter of fact, for our fleet bears about that proportion to the united fleets of Europe and Japan. But the Administration is so confident of being wholly excused from participation in the present war that we shall have to be content to thrill solely with pride in the imagined potency of our war vessels to lick the world.

There are some well-informed patriots who protest that we couldn't do it. It is not the present purpose to discuss that point, but rather to take a look at our not insignificant fleet of war vessels, as they present themselves at Hampton Roads, at New York, through the Canal and inside the Golden Horn. And that being the purpose, the proper thing to do is to range ourselves alongside the secretary of the navy, Josephus Daniels, and let him point out the best features in his department.

It must be owned that the average man is somewhat disappointed as respects the war in Europe. When we were boys and consequently insensible to the spiritual horror of accidents, we used to say you will remember, that while we did not want a factory to be blown up by an explosion, yet it were to be we would like to be around at the time to see it; or—making it painfully clear that the farthest thing from our minds was a wish that Snyder would get run over by a freight train someday—if it was bound to happen we wouldn't mind seeing it. This prehistoric instinct of savagery comes to the surface even yet, now that we are grown up, and while, of course, the farthest thing from our thoughts is a wish that we should occur, since it is going, we repress with difficulty the wish that some of the wonderful dreadnoughts about which so much has been written and for which so many millions of dollars have been spent might come together broadsides on in battle that would be worth reading about. But we were in vain for a such thrilling spectacle in the present war. These fighting machines

OUR NEWEST DREADNOUGHT, THE ARIZONA (SISTER TO THE PENNSYLVANIA), TO BE LAUNCHED JUNE 19 (FROM A DRAWING)

sed to scurry to cover as soon as war was announced, and expecting in a few instances have stood there safe and sound ever since.

Despite this comparative inactivity of the ships of the line as they used to call the main fighting craft, the navy is still called the nation's good right arm, an arm that can reach out sternly point a long hollow steel finger at any spot of the globe where that nation's interests are in danger. The United States Bureau of Ordnance has given Uncle Sam's right arm a number of such fingers having a 14-inch caliber and capable of shooting farther and straighter and hitting harder than any other gun now in use or known to be designed by a foreign country, according to Secretary Daniels. Our newest battleship, the Arizona, which is scheduled to be launched on June 19, carries twelve 14-inch rifles installed in our gun turrets, 22 5-inch rail-fire guns, and four submerged torpedo tubes for 21-inch torpedoes. This great vessel, the sister of the Pennsylvania, will require 1,040 men, officers and crew, to direct her 31,400 tons. The Arizona will cost $13,500,000, and is expected to develop a speed of twenty-one knots in a heavy sea. She will have taken to the water when another great dreadnought, the California, will be launched.

Other dreadnoughts, 23 destroyers, 38 submarines, and seven auxiliaries are also either under construction or authorized. Two years ago a total of 11 vessels were under way for the navy as against a total of 77 at the present time, including the three named above.

The completion of these new boats will give us about 350 vessels of all characters in active service, and a reserve fleet of 100 vessels, which can be taken over by the government for war purposes in case of need to serve as auxiliary cruisers, transport and in various other capacities.

This fair-sized sea force is now in a sense on parade for the edification of the country. If, as a course they will not, the vessels in active commission were to assemble at one place and pass in review before the President and his cabinet, approximately 27 dreadnoughts, 10 armored cruisers, 20 older-type battleships, 5 unarmored cruisers, 12 auxiliary cruisers and over 30 cruisers of lesser types, about the same number of gunboats, 9 monitors, over 90 destroyers, 20 torpedo boats, 100 submarines and a considerable number of colliers and minor vessels would be in the line. A flotilla of airships, the exact number of which is not available at the moment, would gracefully accompany the water craft as an adjunct of the navy; and three boats would trail along as the mine-laying and mine-sweeping contingent. Fifty-three thousand one hundred and seventy-one enlisted men and 4,355 officers would be aboard the vessels, the maximum strength allowed the navy by our Federal laws. This number, according to the secretary, is 5,824 men more than were enlisted on March 1, 1914.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS, SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

A significant and not uninteresting fact to be noted in connection with this review of the fleet is that all these vessels are supplied with munitions of war, as are also those in reserve. The total quantity of ammunition and torpedoes, mines and other implements of naval warfare has been greatly increased during the last two years. Secretary Daniels states that the number of mines on hand and in process of manufacture is 244 per cent. increase of former quantities, and the number of torpedoes has increased 90 per cent. The government is more and more monopolizing the manufacture of its war materials, and the naval powder factory is in a fair way to doubling its former capacity for output. The torpedo works of the government are being enlarged, and a plant equipped for the construction of mines. And all this is pointed to as in the interests of economy and also of ample and uninterrupted supply in time of war.

The secretary of the navy is bound to point out to us, as the ships pass by, that a large percentage of them, including some submarines, are well equipped for wireless communication. He will want you to appreciate that besides that vast improvement of the fleet, the present administration has authorized seventy million dollars to be spent on the chief fighting force of the navy, as against twenty-six million during the last two years of the administration before. Our submarine flotilla includes the three largest sea-going submarines ever authorized by any country, and 23 submarines of the same size and type which have done such fearful execution in the present war (these words are the secretary's). This group of 26 boats authorized by the present administration will cost nearly $17,000,000, as against 12 submarines at a cost of $8,000,000 during the preceding administration. The biggest submarine problem at present is to find a battery and engine which will prolong the period of submergence and the speed of these indispensable fighters.

Portions of the Atlantic fleet have been at spring maneuvers off the Cuban coast, and the vessels are now to rendezvous in Hampton Roads. Between May 8 and 18 they will assemble in the East River, New York, for review. An elaborate program for the entertainment of the men of the fleet has been arranged, and after these proud ten days have passed a large proportion of the fleet will sail for San Francisco to pay its respects to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, proceeding by way of the Panama Canal.

Much of the brief information given above is taken from a recent letter written by the secretary of the navy to Mr. Harry A. Garfield, son of ex-President Garfield, in reply to an inquiry as to the present status of the navy equipment of the United States. The letter was published in full in the press, and is Mr. Daniels' vindication of the department, which has been under criticism. The secretary declares that the last two years have been epoch-making in the navy, and assures the public that in 1915 the navy is larger, better equipped, and in better condition than in any previous year, and is becoming more efficient in every passing month.

It has recently been suggested that our land coast defense, augmented by harbor mines and air craft, render any hostile attack upon our ports futile, without the added defense of first-class battleships. The vast extent of coast line of the United States has perhaps thirty fortified harbors, and there are several hundred unfortified.

The great assemblage of the fleet at New York asks us as a people to gaze upon it with confidence in its sufficiency to protect the country from foreign invasion. The last Congress created the office of Chief of Naval Operations, to be responsible for preparing and maintaining the fleet for war. President Wilson has selected Captain William Shepherd Benson for this important office. Great and beautiful as our navy is, it ranks only third in point of size among the navies of the world, and its rank in point of efficiency is a question which we trust will never be put to the test of war.

THE FLORIDA'S BIG GUNS ON GOOD BEHAVIOR

THE NAVY NEEDS MORE HOSPITAL SHIPS LIKE THE SOLACE

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

GOSPEL NOTES FROM MANY POINTS

—O HUNDRED AND THIRTY-TWO members were added to the Fort Washington Presbyterian Church during the past year, making a total of five hundred thirty-six in the two years since this church was organized under the leadership of Dr. Daniel H. Martin. This remarkable growth puts the youngest church of the New York Presbytery in the lead of all the thirty-one churches of that body.

—LEAST SIXTEEN THOUSAND delegates are expected to attend the Fifth World's and Twelfth International Christian Endeavor Conventions to be held in Chicago, July 7 to 17. President Woodrow Wilson and Secretary of State William J. Bryan have agreed to speak at the opening of the convention and provide affairs of state will permit their absence from Washington. The convention committee has adopted as the convention motto the following: "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I will."

—ONE WHO ATTENDED the supper and reunion of delegates to the Silver Bay Conference of the Missionary Education Movement in Pilgrim Hall of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, Thursday evening, April 15th, sat at tables named after many striking points of interest at Silver Bay and on Lake George. The speakers' table was significantly called "Inspiration Point," the name of a cliff at Silver Bay, which overlooks Lake George. Other tables were named "Sunrise Mountain," "The Boathouse," "Paradise Bay," "The Butternut Tree," and "The Stone Steps." The attendance was, approximately, two hundred and fifty persons, from New York and vicinity.

—REV. T. CRAUFURD, of Trinity Manse, Kirkwood, Kelso, Scotland, a well-known Presbyterian pastor, writes to the Christian Herald: "Though working on the Scottish border I am privileged to be a regular reader of your admirable Christian Herald. After I have read it, I never destroy it, but take it on my pastoral visitation and hand it to those who can appreciate it and who lend to others until it is well worn. Your war critic, Mr. Arnoux, has a difficult task. His more recent articles I quite agree with. I have traveled in all the warring lands and know them well.

AT THE RECENT CELEBRATION of Founder's Day at Northfield, Bishop Hamilton of Massachusetts made a notable address. Among other things he said: "Mr. Moody to me was a different man in appearance from what he was to any other friend. And he was not the same man to me at one time that he was at another. He had so many diversities done up in himself that he was one thing today and another tomorrow and both equally interesting and influential for good. He grew to his task, a law unto himself. But the natural explanation of his career is the supernatural one. For the effectiveness of his preaching he depended upon four things: first, the preparation from his Bible. His second dependence was prayer, he literally prayed without ceasing. Third, he was a master-magician in the use of tact. Lastly, he had the perseverance of the saints, and more of it than any of the saints I ever knew."

GIVE me, at the end of the day's long toil, the old family Bible. Give me, then, its comforting cheer and its message, for I am weary and worn beneath the day's tasks.

Give me the old family Bible! Let me take it upon my knee and read from its familiar pages, in the dim light of the day, as did my fathers before me.

Give me the old family Bible! Let me feel again its worn back; let me feel again its thumbed pages and dirty edges!

Give me the old family Bible! Let me have it now, as the light fast fades out of the sky. Let me read from its pages its message of comfort, to speed me on my way, for the light is dim and the night is fast coming! Give me the old family Bible!

CHESLA C. SHERLOCK.

GOD'S HAND IN THE REVIVAL

AN EVANGELISTIC SERMON BY REV. L. W. MUNHALL*

Text: "Wilt thou not revive us again: that thy people may rejoice in thee?" Ps. 85: 6

DR. ADAM CLARK'S comment on this verse is as follows: "We have long had the sentence of death in ourselves, and have feared an utter extinction. Let our nation live before thee! Let us become once more numerous, pious and powerful; and thy people shall rejoice in thee, as the source of all our mercies, and give thee the glory due thy name." Poor Israel was in great distress. She had been unfaithful to Jehovah and gone after false gods. Her enemies had triumphed over and very grievously afflicted and oppressed her; and in the hour of her sore need she cried unto the Lord: "Wilt thou not revive us: that thy people may rejoice in thee?"

The counterpart of all this is seen in the condition and need of the church the past twenty-five or thirty years, and in the fact that many who love her and are conscious of her condition and supreme need have been asking for help from on high, as did the psalmist.

During these years increasing unspiritual conditions have been noticeable in the church, producing anxiety, humiliation and alarm. The causes for these conditions are numerous. Among them we may notice the following:

First, denying the infallibility of the Bible and challenging its authority by ministers and teachers in orthodox churches, in violation of their ordination vows and solemn obligations, causing widespread unbelief with accompanying evil results—all of which, without doubt, has grieved the Holy Spirit; and his presence, place and power are not in evidence as in former times. Along with this, the doctrines of sin, hell, redemption, repentance, regeneration and sanctification have had little place in the preaching of many ministers, while some have wholly ignored them or spoken lightly of them; the while they have had much to say about culture, twentieth-century religion, new evangelism, sane evangelism, etc., and have not fed the flock with the "sincere milk of the Word."

The Lure of Worldly Success

Second, temporal prosperity. When the Bible is not to the believer the only infallible rule of faith and conduct he will soon forget, if he ever knew, that his "citizenship is in heaven" (Phil. 3: 20); and that he is commanded because of that fact to "love not the world" (I John 2: 15-17); and to set his "affection on things above, not on things on the earth" (Col. 3: 2); for "the cares of the world, and the deceitfulness of riches choke the Word" (Matt. 13: 22). Therefore the Master said: "A rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 19: 23). I have known a few rich men who were spiritual; but they are the exception. The love of money, with ambition to possess it, and the inexorable demands of business laws and methods in these strenuous times make it most difficult for one to succeed and be spiritually minded. The church never was so prosperous in temporal things, and she never was so unspiritual. In their prosperity they forgot God.

Of course, it is true that a comparatively small percentage of church members are really rich; but the percentage of those who are in comfortable circumstances is quite large, and many of those who are not rich are influenced to indulge in excesses that are unspiritualizing and to live beyond their means by the bad example of the rich.

Third, worldly pleasures. The mad rush for pleasure in these days has never been exceeded. The world, with brazen effrontery, has intruded itself into the Church of God, defiled her altars and wounded her sore. Wealth tends to sensuousness and self-indulgence. The world's people are united in social and club life, and the Christian must live and do according to their rules or be denied their favors. Many yield to the pressure and, forgetting their obligations to God and the church, conform to the world, with the certain loss of spiritual life, if they ever had any.

Fourth, formality. "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof" (II Tim. 3: 5). "Worshipping the creature more than the Creator" (Rom. 1: 25). Instead of remembering "that God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4: 24), they give most thought to ceremonialism and emphasize the spectacular in the services of the church, and are thereby brought into "bondage under the elements of the world" (Gal. 4: 3).

Fifth, perversion. The church has been secularized, to an alarming extent. Many think it should devote itself chiefly to political, social and humanitarian enterprises, and be a sort of clearing-house for all the fads and foolishness of some well-meaning but impracticable people. Concerts, shows, entertainments, "eats"—almost anything to catch the crowd and fill the pews and the treasury. I know of a church that can get out from 300 to 600 persons almost any night if it is known there will be something to eat; but which could not, under the most favorable circumstances, get fifty to attend the mid-week prayer meeting; and there are many such. The late Dr. A. J. Gordon called it "the cook-stove apostasy."

Sixth, Sabbath desecration. The law of the Sabbath (see Isa. 58: 13, 14) is disregarded or flagrantly violated by many members of our churches, who do their own pleasure on God's holy day, and thereby fail to receive the spiritual benefits its proper observance would surely impart.

The Church's Cry to God

Because of these and other reasons the church in recent years has measurably failed to accomplish its real mission, i.e., the salvation of the lost from the ruin and consequences of sin, and the sanctification of believers. What is said by preachers and teachers in church schools by way of criticism of the Bible gets into the newspapers. What is said favorably of the Bible does not get into the newspapers. The people read the newspapers and many think the Bible has been discredited; and desiring a truce with their own conscience, on grounds of their own choosing, are glad to have it so. Then, when they contemplate the rule and selfishness of many of the rich in the church and the prevailing worldliness, formalism and secularities so conspicuously in evidence, they are confirmed in their conclusions, and the church fails to command their respect and confidence. We are in reproach. Our empty pews and deserted altars cry out against us; and heartache and tears become us who love the church and are loyal to her mission and commission. There are many such, and they have been crying to the Lord for a reviving; and he is answering in a wonderful manner, as he always does when his people comply with the conditions he imposes upon them, for the gates of hell cannot prevail against the church.

A revival in this age is for the church, as in olden time it was for God's ancient people; for those who once were "vived"—alive, lively, vivacious, forcible—but who are now backslidden, lukewarm, inert, "having a form of godliness but without the power." If such can be induced to repent and do their first works, a revival is the inevitable and immediate result. When the church is revived the problems of how we can win the unsaved to Jesus for salvation and care for them afterwards are all easy of solution.

The psalmist looked heavenward for help. The source of all life and blessing is the infinite Creator; he alone can impart life. It comes through "our Saviour Christ Jesus, who abolished death and brought life and incorruption to light through the Gospel" (II Tim. 1: 10), and is imparted to believers by the quickening energy of the Holy Spirit. "It is the Holy Spirit that quickeneth" (John 6: 63).

Certain things are required of us.

First, repentance. We must face the situation honestly, not palliate our shortcomings, nor condone our offenses. When we do this, remembering God's goodness to us, so sure as we love him and his people, sorrow will fill our hearts and lead us to resolve to turn and do our first works—which is repentance.

Second, confession. "If we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (I John 1: 8). "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me" (Ps. 66: 18). "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (I John 1: 9). "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy" (Prov. 28: 13). "I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin" (Ps. 32: 5). Thoroughly since and genuinely contrite.

Third, reparation. If we have wronged anyone we must right it to the extent of our ability (Ex. 22: 1; Luke 19: 8); and have a forgiving towards those who have wronged us, according to what is required of us in the case (See Luke 3, 4). Our repentance and confession are genuine as long as we have an unforgiving toward those who have wronged us (See Mt. 6: 14, 15).

Fourth, submission. There must be wholehearted surrender and submission unto God. "Yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God" (Rom. 6: 13). "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Rom. 12: 1). "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (I Sam. 15: 22).

Fifth, prayer. When we have met these conditions, we are exhorted to "come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need" (Heb. 4: 16); for "God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 4: 19). The prayer must be to the Father through the Son (John 14: 6; 16: 23); by the Holy Spirit (Eph. 6: 18; Jude 20; Rom. 8: 26, 27).

The Answer in the Revival

Sixth, faith. "Let him ask in faith, nothing doubting; for he that doubteth is like the surge of the sea driven by the wind and tossed. For let not man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord" (James 1: 6, 7). "Without faith it is impossible to please him, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. 11: 6).

Seventh, consecration. "Faith, if it has not works, is dead in itself" (James 2: 17, 18). "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2: 10). When or complies with these conditions he has free access to the throne of grace and unhindered fellowship with the Source of all life and blessing—"Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ" (I John 1: 3)—and knows experientially what is "the joy of the Lord, and rejoices with joy unspeakable and full of glory" (I Peter 1: 8). Whenever a church has any considerable number of its members thus revived and rejoicing, will throb with spiritual life, and its altars will be crowded with inquiring souls; for in such case that church has come to its own.

The prayers of the faithful are being answered in a very wonderful manner. Scores of evangelists, to whose leadership pastors and churches are rallying, like the prophets of old are calling upon the people of God to put away their idols and come up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty." In trumpet tones they are warning sinners of peril and pointing them to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." These evangelists all believe the Bible is the Word of God, and have no sympathy whatever with anything that challenges its authority. A tidal wave of revival influence is sweeping through the land, being especially noticeable in Ohio and Indiana, and conspicuously so in Pennsylvania, in which state more than a quarter of a million souls have been converted to God during the past year. The Bible is circulating and being read, preached, studied, believed and honored as never before in this land of ours. The people are flocking to the churches; altars are crowded; Sunday schools are overflowing; men's Bible classes are increasing in number and enthusiasm; prayer meetings have become popular and are full of life and spiritual profit. The fire on home altars is being rekindled. Humanitarian and reformatory projects are prompted and righteousness is much in evidence.

Our pastors are rejoicing in seeing the fruits of their toil, their self-denial and their prayers. The church is being delivered from reproach, and is "looking forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." "Rejoice in the Lord alway, and again I say, rejoice."

* Dr. Munhall has seen over forty years of service in the evangelistic field. He began (as a Methodist) in 1874.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON S. COOPER

The Cooling Shadow

SUNDAY, May 16. Psalm 91: 1. "He shall hide under the shadow of the Almighty." That is the all-sufficient safeguard against the perils of feverishness. In "the shadow of the Almighty" we are sheltered from all destructive heat—the heat of burning fear, the heat of temper, the heat of fretfulness, and every other form of unholiness which so often destroys the delicate treasures of the soul. The shadow of the Almighty will keep us cool and collected, and all our powers will do their work in quietness. Every day we encounter friction in some mode or another, and friction always tends to engender a dangerous heat. Sometimes the friction is occasioned by the encounter of unwelcome circumstances, perhaps a rough piece of duty, or perhaps the unwise obstinacy of friend or fellow worker, or again it may be the merest trifle, like a grain of dust inflaming the eye. The friction may come in a thousand ways, and the spiritual peril is in the heat which accompanies it.

Now, in all these inflammatory perils our safety is found in "the shadow of the Almighty." And we must do it consciously. It is not a long and tedious journey. It is even a shorter step than passing from the hot streets of Ludgate Hill into the deep and restful shadows of St. Paul's. Nay, just a prayer and our soul is in the shade! The Lord breathes "through the pulses of desire" "his coolness and his balm." In that gracious coolness we can rest and collect ourselves when the hot breezes are blowing over our lives. The shadow of the Almighty is purposed for all who are in peril of the destruction that wasteth at noonday. Let such pilgrims turn to that secret place, and they will find the blessed Lord within the shadow, and he will be host unto the weary soul, imparting his own quietness and peace. J. H. J.

The Day of Idolatry's Downfall

MONDAY, May 17. Isaiah 31: 1-9. "In that day they shall cast away every man his idols, which his own hands have made." Every man, apart from God's grace, has his idol. He secretly makes for himself a defense or refuge against evils, real or imaginary, of which he will avail himself in the evil day. If you seek to wrest a man's idol from him, he will turn and rend you. It is his life, his life! What then shall lead a man to fling his idol away? "In that day" they shall voluntarily and of their own free will cast their idols away. What day? The day when the fears of death and desolation have vanished like a specter before God's great deliverance.

The foe was at the gate! Some counseled the seeking of Egyptian help, but, as Isaiah pointed out, it was absurd to barter God for them. The Egyptians were but men. Others sought the aid of sorcerers; whilst others sought after the gods of the heathen, and set up idol-factories. But all these would repent bitterly of their folly. When Jerusalem had experienced the sheltering wing of God like the interposition of the bird's wing between her nestlings and the hawk, when they had seen their enemy broken, as the deer beneath the sprig of the lion—then, in a rush of profound gratitude and overflowing love, they would cast away every man his idols.

Turn back to God from whom you have deeply revolted. Remember how much better it was in the old days than now. Consider the mighty deliverances that he has wrought. Conquer over his promises. And as your feet are directed unto the love of God and the patience of Jesus, you will abandon your substitutes for faith in the living God, and cry with Israel: What have I to do any more with idols? F. B. M.

Seeking to Know the Mind of Christ

TUESDAY, May 18. Philippians 2: 5. "Have this mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus." Aristotle, in his talk with Alexander of Macedon, the night before the great Greek general was going to his Eastern wars, said: "I have been your tutor in the shades of the Lyceum, and I want to give you a word of parting advice. Whithersoever your victories lead you, never forget that you are a Greek, and everywhere draw hard and fast the line that separates the Greek from the barbarian." The young commander of two and twenty answered his famous teacher thus: "No. I will pursue another policy. I will make them all Hellenes."

The answer of Alexander was translated by a Greek writer two centuries later as meaning, "I will give to all men a Greek mind; I will make them all look at life from a Greek point of view."

Likewise it would seem that Paul conceived the necessity of all those who would be Christians to possess the mind of Christ. But this discovery and attaining of the mind of Christ is not always an easy task. It is a different thing from learning precepts about particular details of life. It is a greater thing than committing to memory the Ten Commandments. To achieve the mind of Christ, to obtain the point of view from which he would look at human problems, is a larger thing than getting a code of rules; it is rather the achievement of a ruling spirit which possesses and actuates all one says and does and is. In another place the apostle tells us, "For me to live is Christ."

To find out what Christianity is and how it is to be fitted to our modern life, or to one's individual career, it is necessary to study the life and the work of Jesus as a whole. We must find the fundamental system of thought and attitude which entered into the ordering of that matchless life of the Son of man and the Son of God. We must catch his spirit, his way of looking at things, his eternal standard of righteousness and love. We must become so saturated with his thought and purpose that we can say naturally, as he said, "I do always those things that please Him."

Then we have possessed ourselves of the Christian point of view; we have found a principle from which we may look out with clear and sure eyes toward every new changing scene of our daily life. In this effort to get the mind of Christ we can depend upon God's steady co-operation. C. S. C.

Our Spiritual Hindrances Are in Our Own Hearts

WEDNESDAY, May 19. John 7: 19-36. "Where I am, there ye cannot come." To judge by people's talk, you would suppose that God could take every one to heaven if he liked. Of course, if that were so, men might with every reason denounce a Being that did not freely use his prerogative. But the hindrance to heavenly bliss hereafter is not in God, but in man. There is a moral and spiritual incompatibility between the carnal man and heaven. He can no more go to heaven than a lump of lead can float upwards.

Every soul finds its own level, its environment, its associates, and goes to its own place. If you love the things that Christ loves, and live for the objects he lived for, he will say to you, as afterwards to Peter, "Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now, but thou shalt follow me afterwards." "Where I am, there shall my servant be." But if, on the contrary, you love what he hates and live for what he abhors, it is an absurd expectation that death can place you in his holy presence. If it did, it would be the worst torment of all.

We have no right to expect that death will effect a radical change in ourselves and our surroundings, and make a break in the chain of continuity. We create our world, our character, our heaven, or our hell. "He who created thee without thyself cannot save thee apart from thyself." A man does not change as he takes off his overcoat, or passes from one room to another. Here we have material bodies in a material world; there ethereal bodies in an ethereal world, but we shall be the same in either. If we would be with Jesus yonder, we must begin to live in him, with him, for him here! F. B. M.

Diligence the Christian's Duty

THURSDAY, May 20. Proverbs 24: 30. "I went by the field of the sluggard, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding." The picture of the man of God which the writer of the Proverbs delights to portray is one filled with activity; it is a picture of the man who works. Wesley said, "I have come to the conclusion that leisure and I must part company for ever." Thomas Carlyle gathered up a vital part of his own secret of genius in the remarkable words with which he once addressed Mr. Henry Inglis: "Diligence, unwearied, steadfast endeavor; like the stars unceasing, un-resting! this is the scepter with which man rules his destiny; and though fragile as a reed, removes mountains, spiritual as well as physical."

The latter-day picture of Christ as the Worker, not merely the Sufferer, is taking possession, more and more, of our modern minds. Jesus is immortal, not simply because of his character of perfection, but also because he laid down, by his own example as well as his teaching, the principle of serving and doing, the ceaseless activity of a loving and self-denying impulse. He packed the deeds of a lifetime into three years. He spared himself not at all. He worked often to utter weariness.

Christ advocated also faithfulness in the daily task. The parable of the talents is a constant rebuke to the man who would postpone his Christianity to another world or be inclined to forget that in the proper utilization of his talents and abilities in everyday business life, the real Christian is revealed. One of the most remarkable utterances of Jesus was, "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do." He had kept with all faithfulness the vineyard of his life.

Kipling wrote his poems a long time after the words of the Book of Proverbs were written, but the spirit with which the words were addressed to Tomlinson at heaven's gate are peculiarly similar:

Stand up, stand up now, Tomlinson, and answer loud and high
The good that ye did for the sake of men or ever ye came to die—
The good that ye did for the sake of men in little earth so lone!

By the worth of the body that once ye had, give answer—what hast ye done?

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven."

C. S. C.

Jesus' Presence in the Heart and the Life

FRIDAY, May 21. Philippians 4: 1-10. "The Lord is at hand." Whilst inditing this paragraph the apostle's soul became suddenly irradiated by the consciousness that the Lord Jesus Christ was literally present in his hired room, nearer to him than the sentry to whom he was bound, nearer than Epaphroditus, nearer than Timothy, his beloved son; and he burst out with this exclamation, which his amanuensis quickly wove into the fabric of the epistle: "The Lord is near!"

The Greek word does not lend itself to a reference to the Second Advent, but signifies the real presence of the Saviour in Paul's happy recognition and consciousness. "The Lord is with me in my room here at Rome, and he is with you in Philippi; and we are all included and encircled in the golden fence of his presence." There is a similar instance in Psalm 119, where the inspired author stops in the mighty sweep of his discourse to cry: "Thou art near, O God!"

We all know times like that. We have been walking through a lovely bit of scenery, or have been worshipping in the house of God, or have been meditating quietly in our own chamber, when there has been borne in on us the consciousness of a spiritual presence. We have felt a breath on our faces and a thrill through our hearts, and behold! we have realized that the ancient promise was fulfilled: "There am I in the midst." Oh, to live not as in the presence of a noble man, or a holy woman, of a saintly memory, or a peerless angel, but in the presence of the Lord Jesus himself, saying to ourselves: "The Lord is near, he is here; what can separate me from the love of Christ?" F. B. M.

The Joy of the "Overcomer"

SATURDAY, May 22. John 16: 33. "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Let not your heart be troubled or fearful; man may kill the body, but you are under the wings of the Almighty where no man or devil can reach or harm you. Here fellowship divine imparts safety, security, tranquillity and rest in Jesus. The Almighty Overcomer insures our victory. His perfect love in the soul casteth out fear of enemies, poverty, illness, trial, death, devils and judgment. We may be of good cheer; though our feet may walk the dangerous ways of earth, our happy hearts live beyond the stars.

In the soil of love, joy springs out of anguish, light out of darkness, glory out of gloom. Are you the Lord's? Then all his riches are yours and nothing shall be able to separate you from him. The Lover of your soul hath loved you with an everlasting love. He will keep you, comfort, protect and bring you to his nearer home, in his own good time. E. W. C.

THE most striking single event of the week ending April 29 was the sinking of the French armored cruiser Leon Gambetta by an Austrian submarine near the entrance to the Otranto Canal on Wednesday, April 28. Of the ship's crew of about 725 only 135, approximately, were saved, the cruiser sinking a few minutes after she was hit by the torpedo. The cruiser was a comparatively old one, dating from 1902, and the loss of the ship is therefore of comparatively slight importance compared with that of the nearly 600 lives thus suddenly ended.

Otranto is about 400 miles south from Pola, the nearest Austrian naval base, and this is the first time the Austrian submarines have been heard of so far away from their base. It is also the first time a man-of-war has been sunk by a submarine since the Formidable met this fate on the first day of the year.

In Galicia, towards the end of last week, the Russians fell back some twenty-five miles to the east of Tarnow, which they had evacuated as far as Gorlice before the Austro-German forces advancing from the Donajec. Gorlice has considerable importance in that it is the beginning of the Galician oil district, and in the event that this advance is carried a little farther eastward the Teutonic allies will have a chance to replenish their supplies of petroleum, which would no doubt be welcome.

In addition, an advance much farther eastward would put the Russian army operating in the Carpathians in a rather precarious position, particularly if the Austrian flanking movement from the eastward makes equivalent progress. The head of this advance moving from the east is about 170 miles away from the head of the Austrian column moving from the west.

Petrograd considers this a last desperate effort to break the chain, and asserts that the 600,000 new troops now being sent to the Carpathians will more than replace the losses suffered by the Russian army operating in those mountains, and will also strengthen the western front. This statement by Petrograd amounts to what would be called in the common law a confession and avoidance, the confession being in the flatfooted admission of losses in the Carpathians, which will take an appreciable part of the 600,000 fresh troops to replace—thus verifying her enemy's statement that the Russian losses in the Carpathians have been enormous and that the Russian generals have been very wasteful of their men, two things which a little while ago Petrograd denied. The avoidance is in the effect which these new troops will have, but this yet remains to be proved.

On the Carpathian front itself heavy fighting took place during the latter part of the week around the northern end of the Uzsok Pass, the possession of which has now been for several weeks the object of the Russian strategy. In spite of this fighting, however, it may be questioned whether there has been any very great change in the relative positions of the contending forces. In this terrain both sides are still greatly handicapped by the soft condition of the ground, and the resultant difficulties of transportation not only of supplies but of artillery and men.

Another difficulty the Russians have had to contend with up to the present time has been their inability to make any very great use of the railways in that portion of Galicia which they hold. This has arisen not so much from the damage done to them by the Austrians when they saw that they would be obliged to retreat, but a difference in gauge. The Austrian railroads are like our own, constructed on what is known as standard gauge, whereas the Russian railroads are constructed on a gauge five feet wide, and all their rolling stock is naturally constructed to fit this gauge, and is, therefore, several inches wider than rolling stock constructed to fit standard gauge. The Austrians, knowing this, when they retired from the territory which the Russians now hold, were careful to send away or to destroy all their own rolling stock, with the result that when the Russians took possession they were unable to make much use of the railroads.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

In the intervening time the Russians have had rolling stock to fit the Austrian gauge constructed, and now are, they say, able to make full use of the Galician railroads, a fact which they expect will have considerable influence on the future fortunes of their campaign.

The Austrians, towards the last of the week,

FRENCH SHARPSHOOTERS WAITING THEIR CHANCE

gained a considerable advantage on the eastern frontier of Bukowina, taking the key of the Russian positions, Bojana, by storm, and forcing a general Russian retreat to the east in consequence.

The fighting in Poland has been comparatively slight during this past week. South of the Vistula, in fact, it has amounted to no more than an occasional artillery duel, and once in a great while an infantry skirmish.

North of the Vistula, near Przasnysz, the Ger-armies in this field of operations, with a view to taking the offensive when the country disposition sufficiently to permit the movement of troops.

The mystery as to why Great Britain has lost certain of her harbors on the east coast of England, and as to why all communication has been cut off for the present with Holland, both of which measures were announced late last week, is not as yet been explained. Mr. Churchill, we now know, was in consultation in Paris very recently with the French minister of marine, and returned to England the early part of this week. This visit was very possibly not unconnected with the action above stated.

One result of the action was the holding up for a couple of days in the Channel of the American delegates to the Women's Peace Congress at The Hague, with consequent protests by these delegates to the American and British Governments. Finally the latter gave permission for the vessel to proceed, which of course reached Holland unharmed.

The question as to whether or not Italy is going to intervene in the war, and on which side she will go, still remains undecided. The French are commencing to show some impatience at the length of time it takes her to make up her mind, and some of their papers are indulging in sarcastic comments on her inaction. Probably we shall have no definite news until the Italian Parliament meets again on May 1. On the whole, the present indications are that Italy will decide to preserve her neutrality for several reasons, not the least important of which is that her finances are none too prosperous.

Great Britain is threatened with a general strike of her post office employees of all classes; the reasons for their discontentment are, however, very clearly appear. The government has not as yet made public its proposed prohibition legislation, and the opposition to any drastic measures seems to be growing stronger, particularly among the so-called working classes. Discussion regarding the adoption of obligatory universal military service is becoming more acute. On Wednesday of this week Lord Derby, in a public address, stated that he had good reasons for thinking that before very long the government would be obliged to legislate to this end. As Lord Derby is closely connected with the present government, his remarks would appear to be entitled to some weight.

Speaking in Parliament during the week Lord Kitchener made some startling allegations regarding the German treatment of British prisoners of war. This is probably one of the results of the controversy between England and Germany over the manner in which the captured crews of German submarines shall be treated.

Outside of Europe we hear of considerable fighting, particularly in Africa, where, considering the number of combatants, the fighting has been peculiarly fierce in the combats resulting from the British invasion of the German colonies in East and Southwest Africa. The casualty list is practically howsoever, the only detail given, and it is impossible to get any very clear idea of the results accomplished.

The attitude of Greece, Bulgaria and Rumania contribute but little to the week's news. In Greece the struggle between the king and his prime minister, Vangelos, seems to be growing more acute, while Rumania and Bulgaria preserve an attitude of watchful waiting, seeing which way the cat is going to jump, apparently.

The epidemic of typhus in Serbia does not seem to have been as yet controlled, and the deaths therefrom are stated to be very numerous. In fact, the impression one gains by reading the reports

Continued on page 8

GERMAN SOLDIERS MAKE THEMSELVES COMFORTABLE IN A TRENCH

FAMED PEOPLE PLEAD FOR POLAND

A FULL realization of the condition of Poland is not to be conveyed in mere words, at least I have no words to describe it," exclaimed Ignace Paderewski, the famous pianist when asked to give some idea of the misery which has fallen upon his native land.

Mr. Paderewski has lately arrived in this country to assist in the formation of an American committee for raising funds for the starving people of Poland. He said:

"I have received many letters from friends in Poland, and I have talked to many refugees. Each of these letters and stories is but a detail exposing the most tremendous picture of human misery that ever has been painted. The very dimensions of the misery is appalling. It is too great for the imagination. There is literally so much of it that it has become commonplace.

There is a place in Poland called Pitek, which, in Polish, means Friday. Some towns there have been used for the days of the week and only of these felt the hand of warfare. One poor woman whose husband was fighting in the army was left with her five children, and during the bombardment hid in the cellar, practically all that was left of their house. She was alone with her five children. They had no food, and during a lull in the bombardment she went away to a nearby place to see what could be had for them. When she returned later, the cellar was gone. Shells had struck it, obliterating it completely. She will never see her children again. She had placed them, each, in their own grave.

"I know of a lady who came from Lodz to Poland. She had several children and wished to find them. In the meantime, two grown daughters who had taken refuge in a cellar were buried under the debris when the place was blown to pieces by shells. Her father operated a factory. He also had been taking refuge in a cellar. However, he thought it well to visit the factory. He opened the door, passed the wife, and at that moment a shell struck the place and he was buried in its ruins.

Women and children of Sochazew were holding their regular Christmas celebration. Their religious festivities were interrupted by a rain of shells. They ran from the place and tried to make their way to Warsaw. There were many of them and they traveled along a route above which the shells were arching. I suppose in the distance they were mistaken for troops. At any rate they came within the line of fire and many of them—God knows how many—were killed.

"The special tragedy of Poland consists in the fact that brother is forced to fight against brother; father against son. Poland is partly in possession of Russia, partly in possession of Germany, and partly in possession of Austria. Many families who have lived all their lives in certain districts have found themselves divided and subject to the government of different nations, simply because the newer frontier line happened to be drawn between their homes. But when the war broke out the men who were living under the domination of Russia had to enter the Russian army; those who were living in the German territory had to fight for Germany; and those under Austria for Austria. There are cases where members of the same family were fighting for the three different nations. And, whether by accident or design, the Poles seem always to be placed in the front rank.

"During a battle near Lwow, it was noticed on both sides that the firing had ceased long enough for the doctors to attend to the wounded who covered the ground between the conflicting armies. Doctors walked out from both sides and began their work of succoring the wounded. When they had finished two doctors from the opposing battle lines saluted and exchanged cards. Both cards bore Polish names.

IGNACE PADEREWSKI

MME. MARCELLA SEMBRICH

HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ

"It is the custom to provide the soldiers fighting in Poland with badges or medals containing their names, their regiments, etc. This is for purposes of identification in case they are killed. After another series of battles, a physician of high rank, under whose observation was passed the collection of these identifications, found that the names of over 14,000 dead men were Polish.

"What more can one say of the misery of Poland? It is too great for words."

MME. MARCELLA SEMBRICH, the famous soprano, is also a native of Poland, and is devoting all of picture of misery: 'In the farming district of Starlicz were found fourteen people in the cellar of a half demolished barn. They were subsisting on frozen turnips which they managed to dig from the ground with iron bars. Five of their number had died, and one woman had given birth to a baby on the day previous. We helped them to build a better shelter, and left them sufficient warm clothing and a month's supply of food.

"Women were eagerly gathering the tins left by the commissary department, when the soldiers departed, as our relief party reached Osalwich. These tins were empty—had been empty for days. Some had contained condensed milk; others had contained meats and vegetables. The women were heating water and pouring it into these discarded and rusted tin cans, seeking what little nourishment they could get for their little ones."

"Here is another from my representative at Radom in Russian Poland. It reads as follows: 'We reached what stroyed by fire from the bombardment. There had been five deaths in that room, aged people who had died of starvation, and it was a miracle that any survived.'

"Here is a letter received by Jean de Reszke, the famous tenor, from his brother Edouard: 'The war broke out with such suddenness that it was impossible to escape. I was forced to remain here in Garnesk. This part of Poland has been reduced to worse than a desert. All is desolate, and every one is suffering. My beautiful estate has met the common fate and has been reduced to ashes. I am now living in a cellar with scanty covering. If a shell should drop in it would afford me no protection. So fierce has been the fighting here that there have been days when I could not venture forth. We have been between two fires. All Poland needs relief.

"I have no coal, oil, coffee, and only a handful of grain left. Through the cold and the rain I have had but poor shelter, but my lot is the same as that of my fellow countrymen here. Every one is in want; every one is suffering. Many are dead, and many more will die unless aid reaches them soon."

"Another report just received states that at least one-third of the population of Poland is facing sure death unless immediate and considerable relief is afforded. Not only food but drugs are needed, for in addition to typhus, the epidemics of typhoid fever, smallpox, dysentery, measles, scarlet fever and others are spreading.

"Are not these descriptions received directly from the land of misery sufficient to convince any one that never in the history of the world was misery so wretched and charity so much deserved?"

HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ, who is the author of Quo Vadis, and who has formed a general committee for the relief of the victims of the war in Poland, also appeals in the name of humanity for the people of Poland.

NEW COMMITTEE FORMED: $10,000 REMITTED

THE State Department in Washington yesterday received news by cable from Ambassador Penfield in Vienna of the formation of a new committee, the Christian Herald Galician Committee for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War, with headquarters in that city. William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State, telegraphed to the Christian Herald, forwarding the ambassador's despatch, which was as follows:

"Vienna, April 26.

"Your committee fully organized. Ready for work. Galician needs urgent. Penfield."

Arrangements have been under way for several weeks with a view to the relief of the multitudes of refugees from Galicia, regardless of race or creed, who, driven out by the Russian invasion, have sought the shelter of the Austrian capital.

In response to the above, $10,000 [netting kronen 64,000 at prevailing rate of exchange] was transmitted for the use of the committee.

This is the seventh relief committee now disbursing Christian Herald funds in Europe and the first for the relief of suffering Galicians, although arrangements have been under way some time looking to the appointment of a committee with headquarters at Lodz, which is located in a section of the country where the suffering is very great.

her time and talents to a tremendous campaign for the relief of the poor suffering people of her native land. Mme. Sembrich is president of the Polish Relief Society and has given concert after concert, the proceeds of which are devoted to Polish relief. When asked to give some idea of the condition of Poland at the present time, she replied:

"What better can I do than read you letters we have just received from my suffering country? Here is one written in Lyck. It is a vivid pen had once been the town of Bruisk, with more than 200 inhabitants. Of that number many had been killed by shells. They were all civilians. The others, with the exception of about 60, had fled. These 60 were living in the schoolhouse, a log building of one room. They had been making a sort of soup from the tender inner bark of fir trees, and this, with now and then a stray rabbit they managed to snare, had been their only food for weeks. Three babies had been born in this one room. Every other building had been de-

Such spokesmen for Poland, individuals whose names are household words in America, must carry compelling conviction. A land that can produce artists such as these, whose hearts now are torn with anguish, deserves the warm and vast sympathy of all right-thinking people.

We have been fortunate in securing the co-operation of men eminent in public life in Vienna who, as a relief committee for Galicia, will administer all funds sent for use among the refugees from that portion of Poland. Immediately upon receipt of the telegram from Secretary of State Bryan, advising us of the completion of a Galician committee, we placed ten thousand dollars at the disposal of that committee, that sum at the prevailing rate of exchange buying 64,000 kronen. This is a large sum to be expended in relief work at one time and will relieve a great amount of suffering.

It is a matter of much satisfaction that Christian Herald readers have been the first to get a relief fund at work among the sufferers of that territory. If we are soon successful in organizing a committee to administer relief directly in Poland, it is possible that your gifts will be among the first from the outside world to reach that stricken people also.

Please address all gifts to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York. The total of the fund amounted to $142,081.51 on April 29.

Bethlehem!

BUT thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall come forth unto me he that is to be ruler of Israel."

"But thou, Bethlehem of Pennsylvania, though thou be but little among the cities of America, yet out of thee shall come the engines of destruction that are to send to death the thousands of Europe."

Is it not one of the strangest facts of history that the town in the New World to which was given the name of the birthplace of the Prince of Peace should be the town which takes the lead in manufacturing and shipping the ghastly implements which are helping to fill the air of Europe with hate and to drench its fields with blood? Not only that—but as the whole financial life of America takes on a new vigor, it is found that at the root of it is that same name—Bethlehem, not Bethlehem of Judea, but Bethlehem of America. In little more than two weeks stock of the Bethlehem Steel Company rose from $46.25 a share to $155. The rise of Bethlehem Steel and United States Steel boomed the whole money market.

Christian America growing rich by making and selling weapons and ammunition to kill the men of Europe! And the heart of all this ghastly tangle of steel and gold and blood—Bethlehem, the New-world echo of the name of the birthplace of Jesus!

What word of denunciatory wrath is adequate to characterize the civilization and the society that is guilty of such monstrous, atrocious and stultifying inconsistencies? Must we not begin all over again? Why not frankly acknowledge that the present régime is so hideously wrong that nothing can redeem it? Let us begin again, as Paul and his friends began, to "turn the world upside down." Let us begin again to try to turn it back to Bethlehem of Judea, even if in the process all that Bethlehem of Pennsylvania stands for may have to go down to hopeless ruin.

The March of the Years

WELCOME and refreshing as spring showers and full of spiritual encouragement are the letters the Christian Herald frequently receives from friends who have for many years been members of our Family Circle.

Some time ago a reader in Colorado, who has been a member of the Family Circle since 1880, expressed a desire that we should ascertain if there were any others who had welcomed the Christian Herald's visits for a like period. We printed this request, and the letters came in a shower from everywhere, almost, proving that there were many even older in membership than our Colorado friend. Mr. John Williams, of Hallettsville, Texas, writes: "I consider myself the oldest reader and subscriber of the Christian Herald. On a visit to Wales in 1876, I obtained a copy of the English Christian Herald, and on my return some time afterward I subscribed to the American Christian Herald, published in New York, and have ever since been its fast friend and have helped in its circulation. I have witnessed its changes and the various organizations and benevolences it has set in motion. I know of no publication better adapted for the home and for the promotion of the Master's kingdom. I am verging on seventy-eight. May God continue to bless all your efforts."

It is evident from this letter that the writer must have been one of the very earliest subscribers, the Christian Herald having been started in the month of October, 1878. Miss M. E. Miller, Worcester, Mass., is another friend who joined our circle in the first year of the paper's publication. She writes us: "I shall take the Herald as long as I live. I thought Dr. Klopsch's place could never be filled; but the great, good work is still going on, and better too, I think, all the time." Mrs. A. Y. Birdsall, Millbrook, N. Y., who also has been a subscriber since the beginning, writes: "I like the paper better and better as the years go by, and I want to take it as long as I live, for I enjoy the beautiful Meditations and the Sermons." Albert T. Smith, Hampton Falls, Mass., another original member, writes: "I have not missed a single number, to the best of my knowledge." Benjamin Wilhelm, Terre Haute, Ind., subscribed in 1879, and has two copies of that year to prove it. William Kirby, Hillsdale, Mich., has been a member of our circle since 1881, and F. M. Sloan, of Latrobe, Pa., has taken it since the beginning of Dr. Talmage's connection in 1889. "Ever since," he writes, "we have received much comfort and encouragement from it and cannot be without it." S. J.

Skinner, Philadelphia, has been with us since the beginning, and the same is true of D. T. Horrill, Cochran, Ga., and a number of others. S. W. Hoffman, Artesian, N. M., has been in the Circle since the first year; L. E. Edmonds, Creston, Ohio, and E. F. Mauser, Tarrytown, N. Y., since 1880; N. H. Flower, Yonkers, N. Y., since 1885; Mrs. Sarah Weaver, Fort Wayne, Ind., since 1879, and Mrs. Sarah S. Aldrich, Rutland, Vt., since 1887, the last-named adding in her letter: "It is dearer than ever. I don't think I could get along without it." James W. Patterson, Charleston, S. C., is one of the original Circle and "loves it more and more every year."

One of the very earliest pioneers in the Circle was Rev. A. W. Scheuberger, Enid, Okla., who gives this grateful assurance: "It has helped me many times and comforted me in my ministerial life. It has brought many a blessing. I am now going down the shores of time, and according to nature don't expect to be here very long, having reached the seventy-ninth milestone of my physical life and the forty-sixth of my spiritual life."

It has been a great pleasure for us to read these letters from our old friends, and there are many more of the same tenor. This world of ours has witnessed many changes since the Family Circle was first organized. The circle has grown to hundreds of thousands, and has become a great army for spreading the Gospel by the active methods of applied Christianity. These years have been rich in blessing, and the prayers and the labors of our faithful old friends have borne a wonderful harvest. Their united testimony, which is more precious to us than we can express, shows that the Christian Herald, amid all the changes, has continued to be a faithful expositor of the old Gospel and a humble but efficient helper to Christian living. Such is its real mission—the object for which it was first started and the goal it has always held in view.

House-Cleaning

SPRING cleaning is an ancient and honored institution. It is a time of dismay for the men folks, of delight for the children—unless they are asked too pointedly to assist in the direct project in hand—and a time of excitement, consternation and furious zeal on the part of housewives.

Lately a new twist has been given to this ancient institution by the celebration of "Clean-up Week" in various cities and towns. This festival has to do not so much with the internals of house-cleaning as with the clearing away of rubbish from yards, streets, alleys and gutters, and the united effort on the part of all the townspeople to make their community beautiful.

But may we not consider another kind of spring clean-up? Just as rubbish has a way of accumulating in garret, cellar, closet, pantry, desk, bureau and yard, so rubbish is almost sure to accumulate in our minds and in our souls. And spring, with its new life and brighter light and pleasanter air, is a good time to sift out rubbish from our lives as well as from our houses and our gardens.

So we should go over the whole list of our motives, our interests, our thoughts, our hopes, our pleasures, our habits, our indulgences, and see if we cannot find some unclean or at least unnecessary rubbish that should be disposed of.

"Is thine heart right?" That is the test question, the main issue. Can we meet that challenge, presented to those who would stand in God's presence: "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul to vanity nor sworn deceitfully"? Are we qualifying ourselves for the contract: "With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful; with the upright man thou wilt show thyself upright; with the pure thou wilt show thyself pure"? Have we entered into the present splendor of Christ's amazing promise: "The pure in heart shall see God"?

It takes time to clean house. The accumulation of months cannot be removed in a moment. So with our souls. From day to day we are too busy to take heed about those unsuspected things which are hindering. We must "take time to be holy." We must set apart an unhurried time to talk with God about these matters. We must give him time to answer our prayer: "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me."

It takes courage to clean house. There must be a definite determination of the will to go through with this business. We must settle the matter before we begin that we are going through to the end; that we are not going to wince when God points out as rubbish or defilement something which we had considered precious. Nothing is so good as to get that heart-cleanness which demands and promises.

Yet, after all, the wonder of this matter of soul-cleansing is that it is something which God himself will do for us. It is the thing he has been longing to do for us every day. He still waits to fulfill his plain promise to each one of us, a promise which seems so reasonable, so fitting, so pleasant, so seasonable just now, "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean."

Still Searching for Eden

MAN still hesitates between a heaven and an earthly paradise. He is still searching for Eden. Dr. W. C. Farabee, the leader of the Amazon Expedition of the University of Pennsylvania, who lately returned to Philadelphia, gives a very interesting account of his travels among the wild tribes of Brazil and the Guianas. He found among them one tribe which had a well-preserved traditional account of the creation of the world. In many respects it bore a strong resemblance to the Bible narrative. The people were wholly uncivilized and had never seen white men before. He was told also of a tree in that region, which they claimed to have been the "Tree of life," but which is now only a petrified stump. These people, living remote from the rest of the world, seem to have inherited a tradition of Eden in common with many other races widely apart. There have been such traditions among the peoples of Armenia, of the Caspian Sea, Cush, Turkestan, Caspian, Ceylon, Lebanon, India and even some parts of Africa. Eden means "delight," and its equivalents in whatsoever language convey the same idea. While it is not easy to identify the names of places and rivers after the lapse of all the centuries since the Bible was written, the Eden narrative in Genesis leaves us no reason to suppose that the appellations in Scripture are to be understood in any other than the ordinary sense; yet learned men throughout all ages have debated concerning the site of the glorious, vanished garden which "the Lord God planted eastward in Eden," and to recover which the race of man will never grow weary of searching.

Many Religions—Little Religion

THE recently published report prepared by Dr. H. K. Carroll, and issued by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, shows that there are 169 religious bodies in the United States. The Independent, commenting upon this report, and adopting the colloquialism which makes "religions" a synonym for "denominations," publishes an editorial with the title "Too Many Religions," and voicing a strong plea for Christian unity.

We should like to add a thought to the Independent's caption. Too Many Religions—Too Little Religion! More religion would make fewer "religions." In our insistence upon specific rituals of faith or practice, in efforts to build up theological denominational church with which we are affiliated, in seeking to raise and spread the fame of our denomination, we lose sight of the main issue of our church life—which is to get people into touch with God and to labor unitedly for the winning of the world for Christ.

That was a good old phrase, "getting religion." The spiritual life was a thing to be seized upon, found, to be possessed. And when people got it, they knew it. They knew they had something not possessed before. People nowadays "join the church." That is a different matter from "getting religion."

To have religion and to keep it, to testify to its blessings and win others to its joys, to demonstrate this inward possession by the outward acts and mentions in his famous description of religion pure and undefiled, "to try as much as in us lies to turn the world toward God and his ways—this is what it ought to mean to be a member of the church."

Just now the American church is rejoicing in many localities, in showers of blessing. People are getting religion in the old-fashioned way. They are having their religious experience deepened, refreshed, strengthened. All this should lead to unity, for as people draw nearer to God they draw nearer to one another. This will mean power for the church and new triumphs for the Cross of Christ.

The BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

War Fleet Through Canal

THE Atlantic Fleet will pass through the Panama Canal on July 4. This was decided at a cabinet meeting on April 23, and announced by Mr. Daniels, secretary of the navy. It is a surprise to the navy and apparently to the War Department as well. The fleet was scheduled to go through the canal in March, but the physical difficulties then made the abandonment of the plan necessary. General Goethals is reported as saying that the danger of slides is so great as to make another postponement possible; but the journey will be attempted. The fleet will go all the way through the canal and will continue up the Pacific coast. It is thought that a division of the fleet will touch at Hawaii, and probably be retained in the Pacific to strengthen the Pacific fleet. It will have a part in the exposition. The fleet will rendezvous in Hampton Roads after the May maneuvers for the voyage to the east. The program is for the fleet to reach New York on May 8 and remain for the review by President Wilson on May 17 and 18, then go to Narragansett Bay for maneuvers and return to Hampton Roads for an overhauling. Our generation, which to some degree recognizes the magnitude and value of the canal enterprise, can have only a faint conception of the untold benefits of a commercial, moral and religious character which our country and the world will receive from it in the generations to come. The passing of the fleet through the canal, it is to be hoped, will have a better fortune than Paul's ship which fell "into a place where treasuries met." (Acts 27: 41.)

Frederick W. Seward Dead

ON APRIL 25 F. W. Seward, one of the great war secretaries William H. Seward, died at Montrose N. Y., in his 85th year. He cared the warning from his father to Lincoln, which changed Lincoln's route to the inauguration and saved his life. He fought the assassin that stabbed the great secretary the night that Lincoln was killed, and suffered a fracture of the skull in the contest. He remained assistant secretary of state under President Johnson, when he retired to his lovely home at Montrose-on-Hudson where he sought rest and respite from the damage the assassin had inflicted. Under the father the younger Seward assisted in procuring the Burlingame Treaty, in which China accepted the principles of international law. He was sent with Admiral Porter to negotiate West India treaties, and subsequently aided in the purchase of Alaska. Returning to Auburn, he aided Thilo Weed in writing his recollections, edited his father's "Tivels Around the World," and wrote an autobiography, to be published after his death. F. W. Seward had the best of blood, was a man of splendid character, as well as ability, and was gathered to his fathers full of years and honor. He fulfilled this prophecy: "Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season." (Job 5: 26.)

Mysteries of the Firmament

ONE of the arches of the San Francisco Exposition appears this inscription: "The Universe: an Infinite Sphere, the Center Everywhere, the Circumference Nowhere," and scientists are indulging in speculation as to the real meaning of the inscription, as to the vastness and mystery of the universe. The strongest telescopes have discovered, and photographed, about 100,000,000 suns, and astronomers think there is evidence of several billion more suns like those discovered. How great and good our God to make and sustain all these worlds! The inscription at the exposition suggests this verse: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork." (Ps. 19: 1.)

Human Sacrifice Among Indians

MRS. MATILDA COXE STEVENSON, who for thirty years was an expert on Indian affairs for the Bureau of Ethnology, has reported to the Smithsonian Institution that women and babies are sacrificed as a part of the religious ceremonies of the Tewa tribe of Pueblo Indians in the Rio Grande Valley. She says human sacrifices are made to propitiate rattlesnakes, which the Indians of the Tewa tribe believe are among the magic gods. For the sacrifice, either the youngest female child in the village or an unmarried woman is chosen.

BLACK DIAMOND'S BUFFALO OFFSPRING

IN THE bison paddock of the Zoological Garden at Central Park, New York, there was born recently a calf to Junie, one of the prize buffaloes of the herd. It was streaked by and milk colored, and weighed one hundred pounds. It has the distinction of being Black Diamond's father. He is today the finest bison in captivity. His weight is 2,500 pounds. He is so imposing and patriarchal in his appearance that the United States Government used him as a model for the buffalo image reproduced on its ten-dollar gold certificates. Nineteen years ago Black Diamond was born in the present bison paddock, so that the new calf has come into the same family and the same physical home that its ancestor had. The American buffalo is about gone, and a few specimens of the noble animal only will be left in the zoological parks to tell of the countless herds that roamed the plains. It is said there are only two small herds left, one in Yellowstone Park, numbering twenty-five, the other in Lost Park, Colorado. The proposition is seriously considered of auctioning off Black Diamond to some one who will be able finally to get $1,000 for his head. We trust the park authorities will recognize his life-long service to the park, and vote him an old-age pension, and eventually give him a best and honorable exit, and preserve his head as a memorial of the animal now about extinct in this country. Some commentators claim that the buffalo of Palestine, which differs in some particulars, belongs to the same family as the American bison and is referred to as the behemoth, while a larger number say the unicorn is the Oriental buffalo. Job thus refers to this wild animal: "Wilt thou scorn him by calling to thee, or abide by thy crib?" (Job 39: 9.)

At the tewa, the ceremonial house, the high priest designate the victim and the war priests summon the woman, or order the mother to bring her child. The priest administers a fatal poison to the victim, and her flesh is thrown to the rattlesnakes that are brought into the temple for the service. If Mrs. Stevenson is correct in her report the criminal observance ought to be punished and stopped at once. Cato Sells, commissioner of Indian affairs, has begun investigation. We have here the primitive sense of sin and the mistaken groping after the spotless sacrifice and the only God who can pardon. The apostle says that redemption comes not by silver or gold, "but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish." (I Peter 1: 19.)

Embezzled $100,000; Died Pauper

A PROMINENT lawyer and private banker of Chicago, who fled that city in 1911, after having embezzled $100,000 from clients and depositors, which he declared he had lost in gambling, died a charity patient in the tuberculosis ward of the county hospital in Chicago recently. Just before he died, he revealed his identity to a nurse, and said: "Tell my old friends I paid for my folly with my life. Gambling did it all." The report did not indicate the methods of gambling he employed. It is likely he lost in "speculation" in grain "futures" on 'change, or in "watered" stocks, skilfully "laundered," or maybe at poker at the gentleman's club, or at the wheel and chips of the gilded gamblers' hell. It makes no difference where or how, the vice is the same, the attempt to get something for nothing, which is stealing. Men in high life who commit such crimes do not usually wait for so tardy a process of physical destruction as slowly wasting consumption; they often wickedly use the drug, the bullet, the knife, the stream, to hurry them out of life. We hope the man found Christ's forgiveness and salvation. His death-bed warning, which is worth heeding, voices this fearful fact, that "the wages of sin is death." (Rom. 6: 23.)

"Stop the Car!"

HARRY PORTER, a motorman on a street car in New Orleans, La., was suddenly seized with heart trouble, and thinking of the safety of his passengers, tried hard to throw off the power, but was too weak. He fell to the floor, and with his dying breath called to the conductor to "stop the car!" Frank Munch, the conductor, seeing the fall, and hearing the voice, rushed forward and turned off the power. Porter, his life ebbing, supported himself on his elbow until he felt the car stop. Then with a smile on his face he passed away. This is another one of the thousands of instances of heroism in practical everyday life. Trolley car and railroad trainmen take their lives in their hands every time they make a trip. Porter's anxiety for the safety of the passengers is a good sample of the heroism of the average railroad man who will take danger to protect his passengers from it, who will welcome death if need be to save the lives of those committed to his care. The recognition of responsibility by the motorman in the very moment of death suggests the great fact: "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." (Rom. 14: 7.)

Police Medals Awarded

APRIL 24 New York was treated to what was pronounced the finest police parade the city ever had. Mayor Mitchel reviewed the parade and then awarded medals of honor to six members of the force for conspicuous bravery in the face of danger during 1914. The department medal of honor was presented to Lieutenant George Haerle, who, after his partner had been shot and killed, went into a dark room for his murderer, whom he killed in exchange of shots in the dark. Patrolman E. F. W. Seyler, who though shot in the thigh pursued a man till he finally fell unconscious, received the Rhinelander medal. Patrick Gilshinan was given the Bell medal for jumping into the river one cold morning and making a rescue. Daniel F. Stack received the Brooklyn Citizen medal for fighting three burglars he had surprised, and capturing them all. Joseph Gross received the medal of the Automobile Club of America for the rescue of an unconscious man from a burning building, and T. F. Smith was awarded a medal for putting out a bomb about to explode. These 7,000 men, guarding the lives and property of others with true heroism, suggest the spirit which ought to characterize every Christian called to safeguard the souls of others by this injunction: "Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." (II Tim. 2: 3.)

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

Photo by Earle Harrison, Special Staff Photographer
WARTIME CROWDS IN HAGUE STREETS

WOMEN MEET IN WORLD PEACE CONGRESS. It was a courageous thing that the Women's Congress did in assembling at The Hague at a time when almost all the European countries are fighting in the biggest war in history. After several days of detention in England, the American delegates were allowed to proceed to Holland, and the congress was fairly opened on April 27. Some of the delegates declared it was not a peace congress, but rather an effort to unite the women of all lands on a plan to render future wars impossible.

Miss Jane Addams of Chicago was unanimously chosen permanent chairwoman. There were only a few English women in attendance, as the British Government had refused passports to the majority of the British delegates on the ground that any large gathering of English women might be a source of danger and that important military secrets might leak out. A leading Italian member, Rosa Genoli, made a passionate plea, taking the ground that the war would speedily be brought to a close if the women of all the countries would only demand that the nations "get together." It did not seem to strike the congress favorably, however, and it was observed that most of Mme. Genoli's Italian fellow delegates were absent. A German delegate, Dr. Anita Auspurg, made a speech which greatly impressed the congress. She believed the efforts of the women would succeed because international feeling for humanity was above all other considerations. Miss Kate Courtney, leader of the British delegates, urged mutual work by the women, as women of all countries are sisters, and feel and suffer equally when their sons and husbands go to war. Mrs. Fanny

HER RETURN TRIP NOT YET SCHEDULED. The converted German cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm, which, in her game of hide and seek with cruisers of the Allies, dashed into Newport News harbor, was interned on April 25 by her captain, Paul Thierfelder, acting, it is understood, under orders received by way of the German embassy in Washington and much against his personal preferences, and the vessel will now doubtless join her sister ship, the Prinz Eitel Friedrich, at Norfolk. The Wilhelm, a converted North German Lloyd liner, sped away from Hoboken at night August 3 and, it is stated, did not touch another port until her arrival at Newport News, 255 days later, and she is said to have sunk 14 merchant ships in that period.

MORE MASSACRES IN ARMENIA. For centuries Armenia has been the football of the Turk. Some thirty years ago the world was shocked by the news of Armenian massacres, and again in 1896 the Kurds, or irregulars, devastated a large part of Anatolia from the Mediterranean to the Black Sea, killing thousands of peaceful and defenseless Armenians. The head of the Armenian church at Etchmiadzin recently cabled to President Wilson appealing for American sympathy, his message having been sent after being advised of massacres at Erzerum, Berjan and Zeitun. It is reported that the villages of Urza, Salmas, and Haftevan have been similarly visited. The Armenians are not a militant people, and have no part in the present war; but they are made the prey of the Kurds at every opportunity. Persia has been powerless to help them and thousands of them have fled towards the Russian border. It is said that from 20,000 to 30,000 Armenians and Nestorians are now refugees from their homes, and many have crossed the Russian border at Julfa. A number of women, maddened by their sufferings, have flung their children into rivers and pools to end their misery. Dr. W. S. Vanneman, head of the Presbyterian Mission at Tabriz, writes of massacres of Nestorians and Armenians. Eight hundred perished in Urumiah alone. The American Mission in Urumiah, Dr. Vanneman states, is reported to have been forced to pay a ransom of $40,000 to save the lives of refugees who were in deadly peril. Unless the persecution is checked, it will practically mean the extermination of the Nestorians.

SURVIVAL OF THE WEEKLY BATH IDEA. With the advent of cleanliness, the race took to bathing at the end of each week so as to start fresh and clean on Sundays. Once a year seems about right for cities, and the annual municipal bath is now at full tide. Boston begins its clean-up week with a big parade; the cities of Maine are called upon by the governor in an official proclamation to pitch in and make everything spick and span; and all New England is stimulated to get right into the tub and use plenty of soap and water, by the offer of a prize cup for the town making the best showing. New York is hard at it also, and in fact the whole nation is scrubbing its civic self these first weeks in May to remove the year's stains. Like the individual's bath, the city clean-upping will probably leave such a nice feeling that presently the thing will happen a great deal oftener—as it should.

THE SOUTH TO PUT UP A FIGHT. The fourth annual convention of the Southern Sociological Congress at Houston, May 8-11, announced in advance a long list of distinguished speakers to discuss the general theme: "The Conservation of Health," a definite crusade for a healthier nation being contemplated, beginning with the southland.

REMAKING A STATE'S CONSTITUTION. The Constitutional Convention to draft what will amount to a new constitution for the state of New York is in session, ex-United States Senator Elihu Root presiding as president. A multitude of reforms are being proposed, one of the most drastic being almost subject to further discussion before final action. They register woman's protest against war, especially in its effects upon their sex and the coming generations. They emphasize woman's responsibility for initiating a better world order, pledge woman's support to a peaceful solution of international problems, and to the promotion of international good feeling and peace education in the school and home, and insist upon the democratic control of foreign policies. The resolutions introduced (but not acted upon up to the close of the second day's session) providing for world-wide arbitration of all international disputes; for an international arbitration force empowered to carry into effect the decrees of an international arbitration court; for both sexes being equally represented in the adoption of foreign policies, and "that no territory should change owners without the consent of both the men and women inhabitants."

Photo by Earle Harrison, Special Staff Photographer
WAR CLOSES THE GREAT PEACE PALACE

DELEGATION OF AMERICAN WOMEN

Fern Andrews, of Boston, declared that every woman in America sympathized with the objects of the congress.

The gathering is notable for the reason that it is the first occasion on record when the women of so many different countries have united for an international purpose. There are 886 Dutch delegates, 29 Germans, 51 Americans, 22 Austro-Hungarians, 9 Danes, 5 Belgians (who received special permission from the German military authorities to attend), 75 Swedes, 16 Norwegians, 31 Irish, and one each from Chile, Italy, Canada and Armenia. Altogether there were over one thousand delegates in the congress.

The speeches being in various languages necessitated the labors of interpreters. Resolutions were provisionally adopted, and they register woman's protest against war, especially in its effects upon their sex and the coming generations. They emphasize woman's responsibility for initiating a better world order, pledge woman's support to a peaceful solution of international problems, and to the promotion of international good feeling and peace education in the school and home, and insist upon the democratic control of foreign policies. The resolutions introduced (but not acted upon up to the close of the second day's session) providing for world-wide arbitration of all international disputes; for an international arbitration force empowered to carry into effect the decrees of an international arbitration court; for both sexes being equally represented in the adoption of foreign policies, and "that no territory should change owners without the consent of both the men and women inhabitants."

W A R

WAR is hell, no matter what
The fire within that makes it hot!
Masters, by their devious ways,
Light the red, destructive blaze!
Talk of God and righteousness;
What are they in this distress?
Talk about the soldier's fame;
Talk about the glory game;
Tell us it is good to die
That a flag may float on high;
Tell us lofty sentiments
Grow from blood and pestilence;
Tell us corpses, strewn around,
Change the soil to hallowed ground;
Tell us burning houses light
Straying patriots towards the right;
Tell us there is cause for cheers
In the women's bitter tears;
Tell us starving children wail
Only when their armies fail;
Tell us how great victories bless
The widows and the fatherless;
Tell us that the men who died
Are their country's joy and pride;
Tell us—
What you please to tell
The simple truth is War is hell!

W. J. Lampton

complete home rule for cities. The delegates are not all of one mind on these matters, and the sessions hold promise of becoming interesting.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

SCHOLARS ESTRANGED BY WAR POEM. Expressly the hope "that no German will again be found to accept a post of exchange professor at Harvard," Professor Kuno Meyer of the University of Berlin resigns as a candidate for that post, a highly regarded international scholastic honor, because a sarcastic verse aimed at the German Government was awarded a prize by two Harvard professors and was widely published as a "Harvard prize poem." Professor Meyer, who stands high in the scholastic world, bitterly assails Harvard and its president, Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, for what he calls a "gratuitous and shameless insult to a friendly nation that called forth a word of disapproval from any of the authorities of the institution."

WAR'S MARK ON THE RACE. The estimate that early 3,000,000 cripples will be produced by the war has been made by actuaries; a red scar on the body politic of Europe that will long remind those lands of the hideous months through which they now are passing.

ENTRENCHING AGAINST AN ARMY OF CRICKETS. Farmers of the state of Washington have been fighting an invasion of crickets estimated in the millions, several acres of wheat having been destroyed before trenches a mile could be plowed to check the advance of the pest. A military assault is reported from Palestine, where locusts are said to have ruined fifty per cent. of the standing crops and vineyard.

FEARS INTemperance REVOLUTION. On April 28 the lower house of the Convocation of York (Church of England), resolved against the total prohibition of alcoholic liquors in the fear that prohibition would mean a revolution in public life with the ultimate result of an excess of intemperance.

VICTORIOUS DEFEATS IN MEXICO. According to press despatches Generals Carranza and Villa have defeated each other in a decisive battle in which thousands of troops were engaged, leaving the main issue still unsettled. In addition to encouraging news comes word that an American newspaper correspondent, who is visiting his family in this country, has been condemned to be shot as a spy by Carranza and is awaiting his fate in a Mexican dungeon. Lack of space prevents our giving other equally dependable news from our sister republic.

FOR SOUTH AMERICAN UNITY. A far-reaching policy of inter-relations between the republics of South America, pointing to an alliance for united action in all matters of a common interest, may result from a series of visits to those countries begun the last of April by the Brazilian minister for foreign affairs, Dr. Lauro Muller. The present effect of the visit upon South American commerce, and the certainty of an attempt on the part of the victorious nations to seek some rehabilitation of their fortunes after the war at the commercial expense of the Latin republics, are conditions to be met only by a broad international policy, according to those who claim to know the situation.

CHINA'S GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND. The tension between China and Japan has been increased by a Japanese demand on the part of Japan and renewed insistence on China's acceptance of the entire list, but hope of finding another way than war to solve the situation is found in the attitude of the American Government, the administration apparently being determined to insist on our well-established rights in the preservation of China's integrity. The Japanese ambassador Viscount Chinda and Secretary of State Bryan have recently been in close conference, and though all negotiations thus far have been conducted in secrecy the impression prevails that Japan will modify her policy.

THE WOMAN WORTH WHILE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

"IN PHILADELPHIA," said Miss Susanna Cocroft, and there was a note of laughter in her voice, "they said that I was too fat to sit in an ordinary chair." She looked down complacently over the well-fitting darkness of her dress. "In Washington they said that I was 'a fake.' In Boston they said that I simply didn't exist, and when I mentioned coming to New York, they laughed and told me: 'Oh, you mustn't go there. Every New York woman has a distinct impression of you. Think of the ideals that you will break!'" Miss Cocroft paused and a ripple of applause grew over the audience. "He! I shattered your ideals?" she questioned.

The applause died away to a mere whisper of clapping hands, and I brought my gaze back to the singular graceful figure that stood on the little raised platform. She wore a cluser of violets at her belt, and a talcose of American beauties beside her headed in with the crimson of the hangings. Something of the sweetness of the flowers seemed to have caught her voice as she went on.

"My lecture here today," she said slowly, "is on the subject of The Woman Worth While." On thinking it over, however, it seems to me that I could call it The Woman Most Worth While. Every woman who does something for somebody is worth while—the woman who does the most for people is the most worth while!"

There was a faint rustling over the audience as heavily perfumed, silken-clad women sank back in their seats as prepared to be amused. As I gazed out at the sea of hats—for I wain the back of the room and could scarcely distinguish faces) I wondered how many of the listeners were "women most worth while." I wondered how many women were even "worth while."

I think that perhaps the same thought struck Miss Susanna Cocroft. At any rate her next words voiced my thought emphatically—startlingly.

"Nothing is ever accomplished unless you work for it," she told us. Suddenly she leaned forward and her eyes seemed to touch the eyes of every one in the audience. "If every woman in this room," she said, "exerted herself a little, there would be no slums in New York City!"

TOWARD the front of the room there rose another small whirlpool of applause, and women, startled for another moment out of their habitual ease, again settled back in their chairs. Miss Cocroft watched them with a bit of a smile on her face.

"In our grandmothers' day," she observed, "women had a different kind of occupations. There was spinning and cooking and keeping the house and the children in order. In the days it is rather different. The vacuum cleaner does the cleaning. The spinning wheel is silent. The modern women have fewer ideals and purposes. Their work in life is to buy clothes and show them. Women used to say, 'I am a body, I have a soul.' Now they say, 'I am a soul, I have a body!'"

It seemed to me that some of the obviously clothes-showing women should have fidgeted in their chairs. But no—they smiled—indulgently!

"I think," went on the charming voice from the platform, "I think that people catch disease from being tired. It is the eternal whirl that wears you down, that brings disease. But people never hesitate. They wait until Nature calls a halt. Relaxation is more needed than anything else by modern women!"

The enemies to a woman's health," she said gently, "are many. Worry, fear, jealousy, anger and hatred are all enemies. In this war it will take hundreds of years to wipe out the effects of the hatred and worry that has swept through the old countries.

The men? The men are at the front, in the midst of excitement, temporarily crazy, perhaps; but too busy to think. The women are at home worrying."

Miss Cocroft paused and I thought that she sighed.

"We should keep our thoughts right," she went on after a minute, "for if we think unwholesome things it will get to be just like a river. You can't stop the current of them any more than you can stop the current of the water."

I THOUGHT of states of mind that I had been in, and I shuddered. I looked at the figure that stood before me and wondered if her state of mind ever had dents in it.

"Beauty," she was saying, "beauty is not vanity—it is use! We can't all be beautiful, but we can all, every one of us, show our beauty of soul, and we can all show to the utmost the beauty of the house we live in. Be like a picture that people will enjoy and take pleasure in looking at."

"You mothers—be careful of this debutante slouch that the girls are affecting—it's a bad habit. We do it because we feel that we must make our figure over to fit the gowns—gowns made by men. Let them create gowns to fit our figures when we stand like women!"

"Make the most of life. Don't let yourself get melancholy. Life was given to us a great big beautiful thing. It's morally wrong to get into that kind of an attitude. 'It's a libel on the Creator to be depressed!'"

I gasped. It was rather new—this idea of libeling the Creator. I had never thought of it in that light exactly. I had always rather imagined that some spells of temper were excusable, some fits of blueness perfectly legitimate.

"I saw a picture a few days ago," Miss Cocroft was saying. "It was the picture of a tiny girl walking beside a larger girl on a sandy beach. She had a bundle of fagots on her head—a small bundle. The larger girl had a big bundle. The tiny girl looked up into her companion's face with a whining expression, but the older one was saying as she looked down, a smile touching her tired mouth:

"'Quit yer kiddin'; look what we all got ter carry!'"

"Look what we all got ter carry!" The words rang hollowly, almost, in my brain. I thought of the women that toil all day in the sweatshops and the factories; I thought of the unloved rich women who were sad in a golden world of their own building; of the women who loved babies and yet were lonely in their great houses. I thought of girls, friendless, penniless, hopeless, in the great cities, and as I thought, I was glad I was alive and well, that I had friends and relatives to love me; that the world was beautiful. I thought of the girl babies wailing through the summer heat, and of my own sometimes needless sense of trouble. I thought of the cruel mills—the wraiths of children. . . .

"Look what we all got to carry!"

Miss Susanna Cocroft was finishing her lecture. One more sentence crept softly into my brain and nestled there.

"Wind is air in motion," she said. "You would be unconscious of air if it were not wind. Thoughts are mind in motion."

Suddenly, almost, she finished. There was a soft rustle all over the room. The smiling statues looked down on the silk-clad, wonderfully hatted crowds of women, going back to their moods and their worries, their buying and wearing of clothes.

BUT I—as I went out I thought of the giver of advice in her slim dark dress, with her flower voice, and her personality that flowed like a river, softly and yet insistently, through the body and the heart and the soul. My mind was in motion.

Try this on your family

You'll find it makes a hit.
And a lasting hit, too. In fact you'll be surprised at the staying qualities of

Campbell's Tomato Soup

It tones and strengthens the appetite. It nourishes the body. And it is good either for a dainty dinner-course or as a light meal in itself, because you can prepare it as light or as hearty as you choose.

Try it on your tired bread-winners when they come home fagged out with the day's work. Try it on your hungry youngsters and yourself for the midday meal—instead of a heavy meat meal that calls for a roasting fire.

Perhaps you know how good it is from past experience. But try it again today, and see if it doesn't taste better than ever.

21 kinds 10c a can

Asparagus	Clam Chowder	Pea
Beef	Consommé	Pepper Pot
Bouillon	Julienne	Printanier
Celery	Mock Turtle	Tomato
Chicken	Mulligatawny	Tomato-Okra
Chicken-Gumbo (Okra)	Mutton	Vegetable
Clam Bouillon	Ox Tail	Vermicelli-Tomato

Campbell's SOUPS

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

"Kayser" Silk Gloves

2-clasp regul-lar 50c quality 39c
Elbow-length, sold elsewhere for 75c 59c
and $1.00... 59c

Out prices on genuine Kayser's silk gloves, with guaranteed
double tipped to wear best of glove
a pair FREE
everywhere
their rich, superior quality, you can see and beautifully. Perfectly made, perfect-fitting and finished with perfectly completed seams. In white or black, sizes 12 to 15. (Kayser's guarantee in each pair.) The best known, most widely advertised silk gloves in the world at astonishing cut prices:

NM50M—2-clasp Kayser's Silk Gloves, sold everywhere for 50c. Postpaid... 39c

NM75M—Elbow length Kayser's Silk Gloves, sold everywhere for 75c and $1.00... 59c
Postpaid...

$1.12 Worth of Notions for 69c Postpaid

J569M—Greatest notion bargain ever offered. Items listed below all superior quality and the cotton is the genuine
Clark's 6-cord O.N.T., size 30 and 36. Sold only in lots as listed and no more than two lots sent to one customer. Fully $1.12 worth, postpaid in the U.S. 69c

CONSISTS OF:

	Regular Price	Our Price
1 Ass't Hair-Pin Cabinet	.10	.06
6 Doz White Hooks and Eyes	.12	.09
100 Ass't 18K Gold Eye Needles	.25	.15
1 Doz Oakville Safety Pins	.05	.03
12 Spools Cotton	.60	.36

Clark's Cord O.N.T. 69c

Total Value, $1.12
Our Price, Postpaid, 69c

JUST OUT!
See this New, Record-Breaking
"Standard" Summer
Bulletin

Write for your free bulletin today. You're just in time for the very first copies of the season's best money-saving and style bulletin. You'll also be delighted with the handsome, entirely new clothes for men, women and children. Send us a postal for it at once. The Bulletins are FREE

Best $1.00
Waist Value
Postpaid for 79c

NW79M—A charming summer waist, stylishly bloused and attractively made of beautifully Embroidered Voile. A dainty finish is provided in the veiling at yoke, in cuffs and in the becoming telescoping collar that gives a very noble, smart effect.
Tiny revers, edged
with pretty lace.
Front closing. A splendid, washable quality and a lovely waist of very chic design. Best $1.00 value;
special, postpaid 79c
in the U. S.

Lovely Embroidery
Dress 79c

2NR79—Dainty, beautiful dress for little girls 2 to 6 years. The embroidery is worked in row, very pretty patterns and is charmingly employed in bodice in becoming cape effect. Back is nicely tucked and lace closing off a tasteful finish. Full pleated skirt. A bargain at $1.00
special, postpaid 79c
in the U. S.

Standard Mail Order Co.
Dept. 426, New York City

OUR CENTER OF POPULATION

IT WAS officially announced by the Census Bureau that the population of the United States would reach the 100,000,000 mark at precisely four o'clock on the afternoon of April 2. This important date in our history was fixed by careful calculations, based upon the natural rate of increase in population. In the decade between 1890 and 1900 some 13,000,000 were added to the population by birth and immigration, while during the period from 1900 to 1910 the increase was over 16,000,000. It is expected that our population will be doubled in less than fifty years.

For more than a century a careful calculation has been made every ten years to fix the exact center of population. When the census was taken in 1790 the center of population was found to be near Annapolis, Md., well east of Chesapeake Bay. A decade later the center had moved to a point just above the city of Washington. Throughout the history of the country the population center has moved steadily westward at the rate of about 100 miles every ten years. The center of population of our 100,000,000 lies in Illinois near its western boundary. In another decade it will probably cross the Mississippi River.

The center of population has moved steadily westward for more than a hundred years without being deflected either to the north or south. It might be expected that the development of some section of the country would have drawn the mystical point far from the horizontal, but such has not been the case. The wonderful regularity of the movement of the line westward indicates at a glance the steady movement of the population.

A careful estimate has been made recently of the proportion of citizens of foreign birth and descent throughout the United States which proves of especial interest at the present time. According to Professor Albert B. Faust of Cornell University, who has made a special study of the subject, the country contained in 1910, 32,243,382 people of foreign birth, or 35 per cent. of the entire white population. Of this number 13,345,545 were foreign born, 12,916,311 had been born in America of foreign-born parents, and 5,981,526 had one such parent.

According to the statistics a large proportion of the foreign-born population, or at least those of foreign birth, are of German origin. There are 8,282,618 Germans and some 4,504,360 of Irish descent and 3,231,952 classified as English, Scotch and Welsh. Canada contributed 2,754,615 to the so-called foreign population; Austria-Hungary, 2,701,886; Russia, 2,541,649; Italy, 2,098,360, and the Scandinavian group, including Sweden, Norway and Denmark, 1,743,378. All the other countries totaling some 1,177,092.

When the first center of population was calculated in 1790 the United States contained 3,173,000. The negro population was not included in this total. At the time the English, Scotch and Irish largely predominated, contributing together some 1,500,000. There were in all 600,000 Germans, including the Dutch, and about the same number of Irish, both Protestant and Catholic. The Latin, Slav and Scandinavian countries together had contributed 472,000. In the century which followed those of English descent multiplied very rapidly, while the immigration of German and Irish, which was large and continuous, partially reduced the predominance of those of English descent.

The same authority had calculated that in 1910 the English stock or those generally descended from English ancestry numbered 24,314,000; that Germany had contributed 20,976,000, and Ireland 14,934,000. It is much more difficult to calculate the several elements of our population than might be imagined. There is, for example, a large return population to be taken into account and a considerable proportion have so complicated an ancestry that it is difficult to classify them. The blood of the original settlers has become broadly diffused in more than a century.

The population which may be classified as of English descent comprises about thirty per cent. of the whole, while those of German descent are estimated to form about twenty-four per cent., with the Irish eighteen per cent. To summarize, then, we find that the North and West European stocks form 83.6 per cent. and the South and East European 14 per cent. of the whole.

F. A. COLLINS.

DRUNKENNESS AND HOME

FOR some reason the impression is common that in his own house a man has a right to be as drunk as he pleases. Every man is a king in his own castle, and if he chooses to be drunk, it is nobody's business but his own—so most people think.

But the complacency of shy soakers who are in the habit of enjoying in seclusion the comfort that a bottle grants is shaken by a decision given by the full bench of the Massachusetts Supreme Court. A woman, drunk, but quietly sleeping on a couch at her home, was complained against, arrested and convicted of being drunk. The court instructed the jury that "if they were satisfied upon all the evidence that the defendant, when found in the room, was drunk by the voluntary use of intoxicating liquor, she might be convicted under the complaint." Appeal was taken to the Superior Court and to the Supreme Court, but both sustained the conviction. The offense made punishable by the Massachusetts statutes, according to the interpretation by the Supreme Court, is "drunkenness by the voluntary use of intoxicating liquor," and "the place where the offense is committed, whether public or private, is not an element to be considered in determining whether an accused person is guilty under the law."

And why not? If it is a crime to get drunk, why is it not as much a crime in one place as another?

Who would think of deeming murder, for instance, any the less murder and any the less punishable, because committed in the privacy of a man's home, and the members of his own family the only victims?

Drunkenness is different from murder, of course. But there is a decided connection between them. Scarcely a single day's news fails to report the murder of innocent members of his family by some man who asserted his "right" to be drunk in his own house.

Almost every day we read of murderers throwing themselves on the mercy of the court with the one plea: "I was drunk and didn't know what I was doing."

These countless fellows who have murdered while drunk, and who ought to know, don't tell us there is no connection between drunkenness and murder, do they? No, no. In their pleas, the connection is direct, definite and irresistible.

Then shall this condition of befuddled and inflaming mind, which induces four-fifths of all murders, be tolerated in the homes? Haven't the wives and children and aged parents as much right to protection as has the public on the streets?

Not every drunk ends in murder. Of course not. Not every lighted match applied to a building burns it. But, nevertheless, the law will not permit any man to apply lighted matches to his own home.

There's a great difference in men. But in the long run there isn't much difference in booze and what it does to them. CHARLES GRANT MILLER.

Silky, Soft and Light Weight

The Holeproofs of today are superior in every way to those of a few years ago.

Six pairs of the cotton are guaranteed to wear six months without holes. Three pairs of the silk are guaranteed three months. If any of the pairs fail in that time we will replace them with new hose absolutely free.

We use Egyptian and Sea Island cotton yarns, costing an average of 71c per lb. Common yarns sell at 29c. Our silk hose are made from pure Japanese thread silk.

Yet these hose cost you no more than common kinds.

Holeproof Hosiery

Ask for dealers' names. We ship direct where no dealer is near, charges prepaid, on receipt of remittance. Men's, 25c per pair and up; women's, 35c per pair and up; children's, 35c per pair. Write for free book that tells all about these hose. Reg. U. S. Pat. Office, 1906

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY CO.
Milwaukee, Wis.
Holeproof Hosiery Co. of Canada, Ltd.
London, Canada (656)

"The Navajo" READY CUT $412

LEWIS-BUILT HOME

The "Navajo," shown above, the "San Palo," below, are still examples of saving by the Lewis Method. We supply any house complete without your bothering vexatious building problems, getting bids or letting contractors.

THE LEWIS-BUILT READY CUT METHOD means preparing the house at the mills, saw and working the lumber to fit, marking it plan detailing full directions for erection, and shipping direct to you, with only one small profit to you. Saves time, expense, labor, waste and worry. Insures best grade of lumber; includes accurate plans, hardware, paint, glass, varnish, plaster, nails—everything. Send for free book—"Lewis-Built Homes"—bungalows, cottages and houses from $248

LEWIS MFG. COMPANY Bay City, M.

San Palo $485

FREE "Linene" COLLAR

State size on postal and whether you want collar like cut or low turnover style. REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO. Dept. T. Boston, Mass.

Bake Better

with the BOSS
REGISTERED U.S. PATENT OFFICE

GLASS DOOR OVEN

It's a pleasure to bake or roast in the Boss Oven. Baking is constantly in sight—no need of guesswork or worry. The glass door remains clear while baking. This prevents chilling of delicate pastries.

No experience or skill is required to obtain excellent results. Through the glass door you can watch your biscuits, bread, cakes, pies, muffins, etc., brown just right without danger of burning.

Use it on your Oil,
Gas or Gasoline Stove

The Boss Oven saves fuel, heats quickly, bakes uniformly. The full asbestos lining maintains an even dependable heat and keeps the kitchen cool.

The glass door is guaranteed not to steam up or break from the heat. Over 830,000 in use. Order from your dealer today. Your money back if not satisfactory. Genuine stamped "Boss."

Sold by dealers everywhere

ALWAYS BOSS AHEAD
REGISTERED U.S. PATENT OFFICE

OIL-AIR STOVE

Saves 99.66% Air.—You could not want a more efficient and efficient stove in your kitchen than the BOSS "Oil-Air" Cook Stove—it proves the economy and safety of kerosene as a fuel. Burning such a large percentage of air requires less oil or Air is cheap.

Absolutely safe.—A child can operate it without danger—nothing to get out of order or confuse the user. The flame can be regulated instantly to be high, low, or medium. Glass oil tank shows when to refill.

Saves money daily.—The Boss "Oil-Air" Stove is designed to save oil—not merely to burn it. While it may cost a few cents more, the continuous saving in oil will many times cover the small additional outlay. Furthermore—

Cooks quicker.—The Boss "Oil-Air" Stove cooks much faster than the ordinary oil stove. Its wonderful clear blue flame strikes and spreads over the entire bottom of your cooking vessels, giving an intensely hot, uniform heat.

Is guaranteed.—"Oil" dealers seldom recommend the Boss "Oil-Air" Stove—it uses so little oil. We guarantee it to do just what we claim or your money refunded without argument. You are thrifty. Made with 2, 3, or 4 burners—with or without high shelf.

We for free booklets.—We will gladly send them to you with name of nearest dealer upon request.

STOVEN 604 OVEN N 750
and this coupon today—

To: Huenefeld Co., 25 Grove Ave., Cincinnati, O.
Send Free Boss Booklet marked "X" below.
☐ Boss Ovens. ☐ BOSS Oil-Air Stoves

A ROOM REBORN

TWICE within a few days have I seen a transformation. Two rooms that have taken a new lease of life after the spring renovating; that have not merely been scoured and scrubbed till they are spick and span, but have been made attractive as well; that are not only comfortable but cheerful in color and restful in their very simplicity. Is there anything more refreshing than to come into such a room?

One is a living-room in an old-fashioned house. The furniture, "too good to give away," was still too shabby or too ugly to live with in peace. No wonder that this spring my friend grew weary of housecleaning the same old things in the same old way with no better reward than the satisfaction of knowing that "cleanliness is next to godliness." No, she would not "go through another summer" with that cheerless room; and this was the outcome of her good resolve: when the carpet of many and faded hues came up to be cleaned it went to a factory instead of into the back yard and there was re-dyed and remade into a soft olive green rug with a self-toned border. This left on all sides a wide margin of the old wood floor, which was then painted and varnished a dark oak, after quantities of putty had been wedged into the gaping cracks.

Next a plain golden yellow "oatmeal" paper, at thirty cents a roll, and a few quarts of cream white paint and enamel made the walls and woodwork ninety per cent. more cheerful and attractive than they had ever been before. The stuffy curtains that hung at one doorway were sent to the attic "for the summer," but I fear they will never return to their accustomed place, for the soft yellow-brown canvas portières, with only a broad band of darker canvas stitched above the hem for decoration, have proven a great success.

Replacing the clumsy coarse lace curtains at the windows are little sash curtains of fine cheesecloth with a hand-drawn hem, and over these, pushed back at the sides and left to fall straight down to the window sill, are narrow hangings of cretonne, each cut from a half width of material.

Six dollars bought enough of a pretty flowered pattern at twenty cents a yard to make these curtains and slip covers for every piece of upholstered furniture in the room. This, you see, happily solved the problem of the chairs that were too good to part with and too bad to keep. And slip covers nowadays are so much prettier and so much easier to make than they used to be! You have only to cut a paper pattern to fit over the seat, back and sides of a chair, then "try on" the bas*ed cover of cretonne, or whatever it may be, to make sure it is right before you stitch. Ordinary French seams are all that is necessary, but leave the four corners around the legs open wide enough so that you can take the cover on and off—then for a finish add a box-pleated or shirred flounce made to hang all around the seat and down to within an inch of the floor.

The other room was a bed-room. Let us waste no words on what it used to be; it is now an altogether fascinating retreat in blue and white; and all improvements home-made except the new rugs! Even the walls were painted a pale gray-blue by the girl to whom it belongs. With her own hands she also made her pretty white woodwork and painted and varnished the floor, for which she bought at very small cost three rag runners of a dark blue and white weave. The ceiling, which had a sixteen-inch drop, was given a fresh coat of white paint, and then above the narrow molding where it met the walls, the young decorator applied a simple stencil frieze in blue, darker than the tone of the wall paint. A kitchen pine table was then converted into a dressing table by painting and enameling the top white and making a curtain of blue denim to hang around three sides. For decoration, a white stenciled border of quaint design, like that on the walls, was put on above the hem, and a shirtwaist box that had also been covered with the denim, and a denim portière, were stenciled to match. At the windows were only sash curtains of dotted swiss, finished with a narrow ruffle down the sides. The bed was of white enameled iron, so needed no remaking, but the other furniture did. An oak chiffonier and two old black painted Windsor chairs were scraped and sandpapered, and finally emerged from the process immaculate in white. A new willow lounging-chair, costing five dollars, with a blue denim upholstered seat, and a bedside table fashioned from an orange box which was set on end, covered, curtained with denim and stenciled to match the toilet table, completed the furnishing of this charming room.

But, you protest, everybody cannot paint walls and make stencil decorations. Any one who is physically fit can do all that this girl did and more if he or she will take as much trouble poring over catalogues and guide-books and other instructive literature that may be had for the asking from the big paint houses, and then, when plans are decided upon, follow instructions. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing, and it is much better to spend a few postage stamps and a little time to find out the one best way for your particular case, than to guess at it and learn by experience. Let others pay the price, and be glad that you live in an age when inexpensive cotton prints and the paint brush offer such possibilities for the homemaker, however limited her means.

VIRGINIA EARLE.

A "BUSH TRIP" IN HEATHEN AFRICA

SAMUEL McKEOWN, a mission worker at Monrovia, Liberia, West Africa, sends the Christian Herald an account of a "bush trip" in that section of Africa. He writes: "Every year I take a bush trip, and this year's travel in the interior was of unusual interest. At the close of one of my meetings, thirty-nine took a stand for Christ. One of the first native towns on the path is one where Christians are forbidden to preach. On entering the town, I went straight to the king's house, and, almost before I realized what was happening, I was preaching. The house soon filled with people. They gave good attention until the services were finished and then the 'palaver' began. Upon inquiring into the matter I found that the trouble was that they considered God to be much more generous to other people than to them. They wanted God to 'dash' (pay) them before starting a church in their town. We marched away and left them still talking. One night we reached a large native town called Cetar, wet, tired, foot-sore and hungry. I gave up the idea of preaching that night; but the natives still insisted upon hearing 'God palaver.' I went to an open place and found four or five hundred people eager to hear the Word, and we had a blessed meeting; but I did not ask for a single person to take a stand for Christ, as there was no one to leave here to look after them. I could not even send them a native preacher. I preached in this town about a year ago, and they did most everything but run me out of town. Truly, a wonderful change has taken place!"

Missionary A. P. Stirrett writes from Wushishi, Northern Nigeria, West Africa, that at a recent service at that place, 99 knelt in prayer and confessed Christ in baptism. On another day, 112 confessed Christ as Saviour, making a total of 211.

What You Save

when you let Fels-Naptha Soap do the hard part of your washing for you.

Fuel—

No necessity for a hot fire, because the clothes don't need to be boiled.

Clothes—

Your clothes last twice as long when washed with Fels-Naptha because they are not weakened by boiling, nor worn out by hard rubbing.

Doctor's Bills—

You don't need to waste your strength, strain your back, fill your lungs full of steam, or get a cold by going out into the air when you are overheated from working near a hot fire.

Time—

The Fels-Naptha way of washing takes less than half as long as the old wash-boiler way.

Labor—

Fels-Naptha takes half of the work and all of the drudgery out of washday.

Aren't these savings worth while? Just buy Fels-Naptha and do your next wash and soap and water cleaning with its help. Follow the directions—they lead to ease and pleasure.

Fels & Co., Philadelphia

Resinol Soap

makes healthy skins
and clear complexions

THERE are three excellent reasons why Resinol Soap appeals so strongly to the woman who wishes to preserve or restore the fresh, youthful charm of her complexion, or to protect her baby's delicate skin—

It gives a free, creamy and unusually cleansing lather, in either hard or soft water.

Its ingredients are pure and utterly wholesome, with no trace of free alkali—that harsh, drying chemical which many soap-makers find too difficult and expensive to remove.

And best of all, it contains the soothing Resinol medication that physicians have prescribed for years, in Resinol Ointment for skin affections—just enough of it to keep the skin soft, the complexion clear, and to make baby's bath an insurance against annoying chafings and eruptions.

If the skin already is in bad condition through neglect, or the complexion injured by the unwise use of cosmetics, a little Resinol Ointment should at first be used to help the Resinol Soap restore their natural health and beauty. Resinol Soap is sold by all druggists and dealers in toilet goods. For guest-room size trial cake, write to Dept. 31-G, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

Continued from page 500
received from that country is that the situation could hardly be worse.

The great attack so long prepared for on the Dardanelles has begun. On Tuesday of this week the Allies landed troops on both sides of the entrance in an endeavor to attack the forts by land while the fleet attacked from the sea. It is as yet extremely difficult to say what success this movement has met with, as the reports are diametrically opposed. The British were landed on the northern or European side of the strait at Sedd El Bahr. The British Admiralty report at the end of the week that this landing, though strenuously opposed, was successfully carried out, and that the British troops succeeded in establishing themselves on a line beginning at a point a little to the east of Eski-Hissarlik, on the Dardanelles, and crossing the peninsula to the sea on the north, where they now are.

The Turks admit that the landing was made, but claim that after it was made the invaders were attacked by the Turkish troops, and that all were either captured or driven into the sea, whence they were rescued by the boats from their ships. In addition, the Turks allege one transport was sunk by their artillery.

On the other side of the entrance to the straits, at Kum Kale, a French force was landed, and from allied sources we have up to the present time had no further information as to what cessation some of the heaviest fighting since the war began, and the villages and hamlets within the area described have changed hands time and again. The final result seems to be that at a very great cost in lives the Germans have gained a few square miles of ground.

This fighting at this writing is still going on, hence the definite result cannot yet be told. The losses on both sides are simply enormous in proportion to the numbers of troops engaged and the Canadian contingent of the British army seem to have been the heaviest sufferers on the side of the Allies. The whole fight greatly resembles that of Neuve Chapelle in that to whichever side victory finally inclines the price paid would seem to be entirely out of proportion to the result.

Personally, I believe this German attack is only a feint, and that the attack in the effort to hew a road to the French coast towns, Dunkirk and Calais, will eventually be made by the French military authorities seem to have some such idea, as the cables tell us that they have suspended all ordinary railroad traffic of troops in order to strengthen their defenses at Armentières, La Bassée, etc.

On the rest of the line, the fighting has been intermittent. In the center practically nothing has occurred, and this is also largely true in the Argonne forest, incredible as it may seem, in thereafter happened. The Turkish war office says that those troops were forced by the Turkish troops to flee to their boats with a loss of four hundred killed, besides over a thousand captured, and further claims that during the fighting the Moslem troops (Algerians, etc.) fighting with the French deserted to the Turks.

Copyright, Brown & Daw

POST OFFICE IN THE SOLDIER-CITY OF THE ARGONNE FOREST

If this latter statement is true, it is important as showing that the Moslem troops of the Allies will not fight their co-religionists. This is the first time in the war this has been put to the test, by the way.

The allied warships, while these things have been going on on land, have been busily bombarding the defenses of the straits by sea. What the results of this bombardment have been we do not know, as here again the reports are in such direct conflict as to render impossible at the present writing to say which side has gained the advantage.

One point to be borne in mind which, owing to lack of knowledge of the Turks, Americans are apt to forget in judging the possibilities of this fighting, is that the Turkish infantry, when they are properly led, are very good fighters.

The severe fighting in the Western zone has been largely concentrated on a line about eight miles long, to the east of Ypres, the center of which line would be about three miles northeasterly of that town. Along this line during the week has raged almost without that part of the line the fighting has been almost steady for the last eight months. Between the Meuse and the Moselle, however, there has been considerable activity, particularly on the Les Eparges ridge, and the hosts seem to have been equally divided. At one point the Germans have won a few feet of trench and at another the French, and the result, though costing many lives, has been practically a tie, if any, lasting advantage to either.

There has also been much fighting in La Prêtre forest and along the line running between St. Mihiel and P. à-Mousson. Farther east, Hartmann's weiler Kopf in the Vosges has been a great bone of contention, and has changed hands not less than ten times during the last week. The importance of this mountain top is that it commands an almost unobstructed view of the plains of Alsace to the east, a prospect which both for military and for sentimental reasons the French are fond of gazing on.

Excepting for the torpedoing of the French cruiser, practically no submarine activity has taken place during the week. Several air raids have taken place, but with little results as far as we know.

The longer the war lasts the more certain it is becoming that the only practical value of aircraft in warfare lies in scouting and the obtaining of information concerning the enemy's movements. As an offensive weapon of warfare their value is slight.

BIG SAVING

30 Days Free

EASY PAYMENT PLAN
50 Music Lessons FREE

Starck Piano

Send no money. Will you accept a beautiful, matchless STARCK Piano, for thirty days' FREE trial in your home, under our From-Factory-to-You Special Introductory Offer—without any obligation on your part—payments arranged to suit your convenience. Guaranteed 25 years—write quick for big, new illustrated book telling all about Pianos—no obligation.

P.A. Starck Piano Co. 65 Starck Bldg. CHICAGO, ILL.

NO EUROPE THIS YEAR! VISIT FOREIGN AMERICA

12 DAY All Expense $ 60.00
Northern Cruise UP
Visiting Foreign America

equal in interest, novelty, and healthfulness to a European cruise. Visiting HALIFAX, Nova Scotia, the land of Evangeline, and ST. JOHN'S, Newfoundland, the Norway of America, via the

RED CROSS LINE

New tourist steamships, STEPHANO and FLORENCE, fitted with every convenience and safety device. Cost of trip includes every essential expense—7 days at sea and 5 in port. Splendid cuisine, orchestra, sea sports. Ships your fare for the entire trip. Reduced rates for superior accommodations—May and June. Write today for illustrated booklet 44.

BOWRING & COMPANY, 17 Battery Pl., N. Y.

Curtains

Direct from the Manufacturer
Our new line of "Qualibest" Novelty Curtains contains hundreds of beautiful designs at one-half retail prices.

No. 104. Mince of good quality, hem-stitched with Pico edge, 2 1/2 yards long. White or Arabe; state color desired. Reduced exceptional value, postpaid 75¢. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Send for Free Illustrated Catalog.

French Curtain Mfg. Co., Dept. C, 31 E. 27 St. N. Y.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.

THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO. Box 150 LIMA, OHIO.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.

DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54, Greenville, Ill.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44 THE C. S. BELL CO. 134 18th Hillside, Ohio

DO YOU READ MAGAZINES?

Our Big Money-Saving Club Catalog FREE. Write TODAY. AGENTS WANTED. Write for full particulars J. M. Hanson-Bennett Magazine Agency, 223 West Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ill.

THAT DREAM

of yours, about enjoying life in "The Land of Sunshine, Fruit and Flowers"—California—will come true, just as soon as you desire, if you will let me tell you just where you can get good land, in large or small tracts, at reasonable prices and on easy terms.

Write plainly your name and address on this ad., and send it to me TODAY.

Name
Address

R. A. Smith, Colonization & Industrial Agent, Union Pacific R. R. Co., Room 4265 Union Pacific Bldg., Omaha, Neb.

TEMCO SHOCK ABSORBERS for FORD Cars

No Other Ford Shock Absorber
Combines These Advantages
Temcos have a telescoping
lust-cap.

Even when telescoped,
Temcos are as tall as others.
When extended (normal position), Temcos are the tallest shock absorbers made for Ford Cars.

So we use longer springs and,
not content with greater length, we also make them stronger and more flexible by using two Genuine
Crucible Vanadium Helical
Steel Springs in each shock absorber.

Radius Links hold Temcos vertical, preventing side-sway—minimizing skidding.

Unlimited Guarantee

Temco Shock Absorbers will fail.
However, and consequently automatically you may not be able to replace them and get your money back.

Complete Set of Four

Their installation is perfectly simple—no holes to drill—any one can put them on.

$15

Write for descriptive matter. Get them of your dealer or from us direct.

The Temco Electric Motor Co.
415 Sugar St., Leipsic, Ohio

Sent On Approval

WE TRUST YOU Highest quality hose—made from imported, fine
Sea Island cotton, mercer-ized—extra heavy garter top—high spliced el double sole—direct from mills to you—g saving. Write for catalog.

Lawrence "Flexible" Hosiery 2 Pairs
$1.00
and at once for two pairs for examination—no money down—we trust you. In ordering, state size and color wanted. Also send names of friends who might be interested. Write today.

Lawrence Knitting Co., 4 Charles St., Methuen, Mass.
Agents Wanted, elaborate outfit furnished showing 84
styles.

Get the INSIDE Price
Send at once for White Frost
Refrigerator, and see how much better it is than the others you can buy. It is built from the finest materials—all steel, all welded in your favor.
Write for catalog.

White Frost SANITARY Refrigerator

Beautiful, economical SAVES
15% PRICE IN COST OF ICE
Rural metal body, anodized white. No rust, no corrosion. Refrigerates 12 cubic feet. Automatic defrosting. Temperature control easy. Nickel trimmings. 20 guaranteed. Shipped to U. S.
Coast. Write today for free catalog.

White
Frost
Refrigerator
Co., Dep. C. 2,
Jackson, Mich.

30 Days
Free Trial—
Right Paid

WATERPROOF SHEETING (White-No.
Rubber) 51. Materially sheet $2. Postpaid.
QUINCY TUCKER, 43 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

The Children in Our Town: Are They Getting a Fair Chance (Physically, Mentally, Morally)?

Epworth League Topic for May 23.
Gen. 42: 22

DO NOT sin against the child.
So Reuben had attempted to save Joseph from his brothers who wanted to kill him. And this plea may well come to us if we are not in desperate earnestness to save the children of our place and time from physical, mental and moral harm.

Child labor is one of the worst stain on civilization. Fortunately some steps have been taken toward righting this wrong in our nation's life, but much remains to be done. The recent splendid victory in the House of Representatives, in forbidding, by a vote of 233 to 43, the interstate transportation of child labor products, was undone by the Senate, which, on the last day of the session, tabled the resolution. New York State has been witnessing a shameful struggle in which the proprietors of the canneries have been trying to lengthen the hours of possible employment of children, but at this writing their schemes seem to be certain of defeat.

The establishment of a Child Welfare Bureau at Washington, under the direction of Miss Julia C. Lathrop, has been a great gain to the nation's childhood, and Child Labor and Child Welfare Commissions, as well as such organizations as the Playground Association, are working earnestly to protect the children. Compulsory education has also elevated childhood.

But the question is about your locality. How are the children off there?
Are there neglected children? Are evil influences at work which the community is ignorant of? How are things at school? Are all the children in Sunday school? Just as the school authorities and the truant officer have a census of all the children, so should the religious and welfare leaders of the community. Each child ought to be known personally to some representative of the spiritual side of the community life.

But do not leave it to the officials.
Do something yourself. Try to discover some forgotten child and make life sweeter and brighter and purer for him. If there is a child in your community whom you can help and whom you are not helping, the plea of Joseph's big brother should ring clearly in your ears and move your heart, not losing but gaining in strength because so many centuries have passed since it was first uttered and because in the meantime Jesus, the children's Friend, has lived and died and risen again: "Do not sin against the child."

Religious Reading: What and Why?

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U.
Topic for May 23. Ps. 119: 122-136

YOU ought to read:

1. The Bible and Bible study books.
2. The religious classics, such as "Pilgrim's Progress," "The Schoenberg Cotta Family," "Stepping Heavensward," "The Imitation of Christ."
3. Missionary literature, such as is provided by the Missionary Education Movement, New York. No one realizes until he begins to test it how extraordinarily interesting the stories of mission truly are.
4. Modern and present-day devotional literature, such as the books of Drummond, Jowett, Meyer, S. D. Gordon, Speer, Mott.
5. Church history and biographies.
6. Religious fiction, such as the stories of Ralph Connor, Charles M. Sheldon, Caroline Atwater Mason, Elizabeth Miller.
7. Religious periodicals, which are necessary to keep one in touch with the denominational evangelistic, missionary and welfare enterprises of the church.
8. Special technical studies in methods of church and mission work.

NO STOPPING—NO HONING

The Gillette at the Fair

SAID a man just back from the Panama-Pacific Exposition: "Some of the biggest things at the Fair are the little things."

The Gillette Safety Razor,
for instance—a little thing,
made in America, that has encircled the globe. The most universal men's specialty in the world. Whether the visitor be an American citizen, a Russian Nobleman or an Indian Maharajah, the Gillette—no stopping, no honing—is a home friend among a wilderness of strangers.

By all means, call at the Gillette Booth when you visit the Fair—located in the Varied Industries Building.

On your way to San Francisco the Gillette will make things easier for you. Get one and take it with you. Dealers everywhere.

Gillette Safety Razors, $5 to $50. Blades, 50c. and $1 a packet.

GILLETTE SAFETY RAZOR COMPANY
BOSTON, MASS.

$35 FOR THIS KENYON HOUSE

THOUSANDS of families will spend the summer in Kenyon Houses, rent free. As quickly and easily put up and taken down as a tent, yet a real house—dry, cool and weather-proof.
On your back lawn, it will provide a shady, airy refuge from the summer sun, an ideal outdoor sleeping house and play house for the children. When vacation time comes, take this house with you to your favorite camping spot by lake, river or in the woods and enjoy all the fun and health of camping out without any of the discomforts of roughing it. Twenty other sizes, $16 to $320.

Write for beautiful illustrated catalog.

The R. L. Kenyon Company
412 Albert St., WAUKESHA, WIS.

THROW AWAY YOUR UNSANITARY
DUSTER

Begin today to dust the easy, sanitary way with a 3-in-One Dustless Dusting Cloth. Sprinkle
3-in-One on a yard of black cheese-cloth.
Let it stand a little while so the oil can permeate all parts of the cloth. Then you have,
for a few pennies, a perfect Dusting Cloth.
Make yours right now and see!

3-in-One will positively collect on the cloth every atom of dust. But a feather duster scatters dust all over the house. 3-in-
One is entirely free from grease; nothing to rub off on your clothes; no acid nor alkali—just clear, pure Dusting Oil that keeps everything clean and sweet.

FREE OIL FOR YOU. Write today for a generous free bottle and the free Dictionary that explains the hundreds of uses of this great oil that lubricates, cleans and polishes and prevents rust, besides dusting.

At all good stores in 3 size bottles, 10c (1 oz.), 25c (1/2 oz.), 50c (1/4 oz.). Also in new patented Handy Oil Cans—1/2 oz., 1 oz., 2 oz., 4 oz.,
8 oz. with every bottle.

3-IN-ONE OIL CO.
42 CM. Broadway New York City

No Money In Advance

This Marvelous CAMERA On FREE Trial!

Only 10,000 of these marvelous, instantaneous picture-taking and making cameras to be sent out absolutely on approval without a penny in advance just to prove that it is the most wonderful invention—the camera sensation of the age. So you must send for it quick! Just think of it—the new Mandel-ette

TAKES AND MAKES Finished Pictures Instantly

You press the button, drop card in developer and in one minute take out a perfect, finished post card photo 2 1/2 x 3 1/2 inches in size. Camera, itself, is about 4 x 5 1/2 inches. Loads in daylight 16 to 50 post cards at one time.

No Films—No Plates—No Dark Room

Not a bit of the mess and bother of the ordinary camera. It is instantaneous photography. Universal focus lens produces sharp pictures at all distances. Pictures develop and print automatically. Can't over-develop; results simply amazing.

We Trust You

No difference who you are, where you live or what your age, we will send you the complete Mandel-ette outfit absolutely on approval and give you 10 days to test it. If not satisfactory return at our expense. But when you see what elegant pictures it takes—so quick, so easy, with no trouble at all—if you wish to keep it you simply send us $1 per month until our special price of only $5 is paid.

Easy Payments—No References

No red tape of any kind. Monthly payments so small you'll not notice them. Lots of fun and big profits.

No Experience Required

Plain instructions and everything complete with outfit so you can begin taking pictures the moment it arrives. We guarantee that even a child can operate it. Mail coupon right now. No risk or obligation to keep camera.

The Chicago Ferrottype Co.,
Desk 36, Ferrottype Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Send me at once one complete model Mandel-ette camera outfit including supply of post cards and instructions. I agree to examine and test it thoroughly and if satisfied keep it and pay you $1 a month until your special price of $5 is paid. Otherwise I will return it, at the end of 10 days, at your expense.

Name.....

St. and No.....

Town.....State.....

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER—30 days

free trial on this finest of bicycles—the "Ranger." We will ship it to you on approval, freight prepaid—without a cent deposit in advance. This offer absolutely genuine.

WRITE TODAY for our big catalog showing our full line of bicycles for men and women, boys and girls at prices never before equalled for like quality. It is a cyclopedia of bicycles, sundries and useful bicycle information. It's free.

TIRES, COASTER-BRAKE rear wheels, inner tubes, lamps, cyclometers, equipment and parts for all bicycles at half usual prices. A limited number of second-hand bicycles taken in trade will be closed out at once, at $3 to $6 each.

RIDER AGENTS wanted in each town to ride and exhibit a sample 1915 model Ranger furnished by us.

It Costs You Nothing to learn what we offer and how we can do it. You will be astonished and convinced. Do not buy a bicycle, tires or sundries until you get our catalog and new special offers. Write today.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. D-71, CHICAGO, ILL.

Great Introductory Offer!

Blankes Famous Sanitary Drip Coffee Pot, complete, only $1 with a 50c pound of World's Renowned FAIRBANK'S COFFEE absolutely FREE. This surprising offer starts you right using FAIRBANK'S COFFEE. Goes twice as far as any ground coffee. Send $1 and grocer's name for pot and coffee. Charges paid east of Denver.

Write today.
C.F. BLANKE
Tea & Coffee Co.
Dept. E
St. Louis, Mo.

$1

DAVID KING OVER JUDAH AND ISRAEL

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MAY 23.

II SAM. 2: 1-7

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.D.

"Jehovah is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped." Ps. 28: 7.

About the time when David wrote these words, he had awoke to the divine purpose, which was running through his life, and linking its separate beads on a golden thread. "And David perceived that the Lord had established him king over Israel, and had exalted his kingdom for his people Israel's sake." The help of God could therefore be more readily claimed because of the great purpose that awaited fulfillment. It makes all the difference in claiming God's help, whether you do so for your own plans, or because you desire to help him in the fulfillment of some great program in which you take the humble position of instrument or agent. Where the latter is the case your power of claiming help is multiplied a thousandfold. The great contractor who has undertaken to construct a line of railway knows the necessity of providing for the thousands of laborers engaged with pick and spade. If they are to do their work so as not to disgrace him, he at least must guarantee their health and well-being. Is it likely, then, that God will be less careful and thoughtful for his own children, who are called into fellowship and partnership with himself? Is he unrighteous to expect all and give nothing? But we must trust him. Trust or faith is the only possible way of obtaining his special help. We must touch the garment's hem, if the healing virtue is to flow. When we are in this attitude, let us dare to say "I am helped." Let us live in the present tense. Let us reckon that we are helped, even though we do not for the moment feel it. Never make your sensations or emotions the test of God's faithfulness to his promise. Affirm! "I am helped."

Where David Disappoints

By Arthur H. Howland

THE chapters between our last lesson and this contain some things that are very disappointing. We are sorry to find David, during his exile among the Philistines, leading murderous raids against the Amalekites, exterminating whole communities, so none would be left to report his deeds to Achish, the Philistine king, who supposed that David was busy fighting against the Jews and their allies. We are grieved to see him not only recapturing the goods taken from his own town, Ziklag, but despoiling his enemies completely and sharing the booty with his friends among the Jews. We are dismayed to hear him order the execution of the soldier who brought him news of Saul's death, because at the king's order he had slain him to shorten his death agony. Scholars, however, assure us that it was the custom of sovereigns to slay those who assassinated their predecessors, even when that deed brought them to the throne, and we have already seen David's intense conviction of the sacredness of royalty.

After David had been crowned king of Judah at Hebron, Abner, Saul's former chief general, arranged to have Ishbosheth, a son of Saul, crowned at Mahanaim, king of Israel, Gilead and the Ashurites. Joab, David's general, led out an army against Abner's. They arranged a horrible contest of twelve of Joab's men against twelve of Abner's. All were slain. Then followed the battle in which Ishbosheth's men were defeated and David's force victorious. The war lasted several years, during which Abner, professing allegiance to David, was assassinated by Joab. Finally two officers of Ishbosheth murdered him and brought his head to David. David condemned the murderer to death as he had the slayer of King Saul.

So through these rivers of blood David came at last to the throne of Israel, which a little later, through more blood, was removed to Jerusalem. Fortunately scholars are able to say that the terrible implications of the narrative immediately following, as stated in the Authorized Version, are removed by critical study of the original text. The narrative appears to state that David hated the blind and lame and made a special effort to destroy them in capturing the city. The actual facts are that the Jebusites were so confident of being able to defend the high cliffs of their city that they had sent out the taunt that these heights would be impregnable even if defended only by the lame and the blind. This taunt, of course, was hateful to David's pride, and he made a special appeal to his men to take the city.

In all the bewildering horror of these bloody scenes we get now and then glimpses of that deeper heart of David where shone, even in those crude and dark and savage times, the light of a real affection for God, whose real purposes he so little understood, an almost unparalleled love for a man friend, and forgiving, loyal love for his afflicted and defeated king, and toward others signs of a gentle, forgiving, helpful spirit. We can understand something of the charm David seemed to have over others. Friend, wife, neighbor, soldier, subjects, they loved him—this eager, daring, restless chieftain, who was to found a kingdom and a capital which were at length to enlighten and bless the world.

His song of grief for Saul and Jonathan is noble and beautiful. "How are the mighty fallen!" "I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan; very pleasant hast thou been unto me. Thy love for me was wonderful." So the soul of the poet rose above the soul of the red-handed soldier-king, as at other times the soul of the worshiper rose to the still sublimer heights of his songs of praise and trust.

The Unhurried Needlework

By Amos R. Wells

TWO little girls walking through a field were afraid of a cow. Said one of them, "Let's go right on and act as if we were not afraid at all." "But wouldn't that be deceiving the cow?" the other little girl expostulated.

We smile at this bit of conscientiousness, but we love the little girl for it. She would be uneasy in regard to David's deception of the Philistines, and most of us wish that like Moses he had gone down into the Sinai country, rather than place himself in a position where he had to act a lie.

While a writer was passing a New England schoolhouse a boy came out and began pulling down the flag—a strange proceeding, since it was not storming nor was it time for the school to be dismissed. The writer was curious and entered the schoolhouse to inquire the reason. The teacher pointed to a boy who was trying to hide behind his desk, and said, "Charley, there, has told a lie, and the flag has to come down, for Old Glory stands for truth, and must not wave over a school with a liar in it." Well would it have been for David if he had kept the flag of truth ever flying over his life.

Another still more regrettable act was Saul's consulting with the witch of Endor, one of the very class which he had outlawed in the beginning of his reign. But let us not find fault with Saul unless we ourselves are free from superstition. Are we undisturbed when we spill the salt, walk under a ladder, see the new moon over our left shoulder, start on a journey on Friday or sit thirteen at a table? We also may have our Endors. Not long ago a librarian of the British Museum was a secret devotee of astrology, and

The use of Gold Dust is second nature in millions of homes

The small quantity of Gold Dust required is at once taken up by hot or cold water forming the perfect cleaning solution. In this is the secret of the fact that really works for you.

GOLD DUST

It dissolves dirt and grease and you rinse it away without scratching, marring or harming any surface.

Clean and brighten everything with Gold Dust—the only washing and cleaning powder any home needs.

5c and larger packages sold everywhere

THE FAIRBANK COMPANY MAKERS

"Let the GOLD DUST TWINS do your work"

FIND OUT

The Kind of Food that will Keep You Well.

The true way is to find out what is best to eat and drink, and then cultivate a taste for those things instead of poisoning ourselves with indigestible food, etc.

A conservative Mass. woman writes: "I have used Grape-Nuts 5 years for the young and for the aged; in sickness and in health; at first following directions carefully, later in a variety of ways as my taste and judgment suggested."

"But its most special, personal benefit has been as a substitute for eat and served dry with cream when automatic troubles made it important for me to change diet."

"Served in this way with the addition of a cup of hot Postum and a little fruit it has been used at my morning meal for six months, during which time my health has much improved, nerves have grown steadier, and a gradual decrease in my excessive weight adds greatly to my comfort."

Name given by Postum Co., Little Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

"Don't-Snor"

U. S., Canada and British Patents

Stops Snoring and Mouth Breathing. Refunded if it Don't. Keeps the nostrils open for normal breathing by reinforcing the muscles of the nose which relax while asleep. Made of Gold. So comfortable the wearer is unconscious of its presence. Sent under plain cover. Booklet—

Thos. B. Morton Co., Inc., 712 Starks Bldg., Louis 8, Mo.

Fish Bite better, if you bait with Magic-Fish-Bite. Best fish bait ever discovered. Write day and get a box to help introduce it. Wanted. J. F. Gregory, K-127, St. Louis, Mo.

stramen and business men regularly obtained from him advice based on the positions of the planets and stars! The chief of Saul's many sins was his suicide. A year and a half ago a man in New Jersey reached the age of one hundred. Professor Fisher of Yale wrote and asked her to tell him to what habits she ascribed her longevity. "How foolish he is!" the old lady exclaimed. "I'm not responsible for living so long. It is God who has made me live so long." The old lady was right in her loving trust, and yet she was wrong in her implication that she had nothing to do with the matter. God may have designed one hundred years for Saul, but Saul was responsible for not giving God a chance. Every bad habit we form is a step toward suicide. Every noble thought or deed is a step toward longevity.

David's progress toward full sovereignty in Israel is most instructive. "God reaches us good things with our own hands," says the proverb; but God directs our reaching and grasping; for it is futile. Flavel once wrote that "Providence is like a curious piece of edgewood, made up of a thousand shingles, which, singly, we know not what to make of, but put together in order, they represent a beautiful history to the eye." Such had been the course of providence with David to this point. He began to see the design of the needlework, but not clearly enough to venture upon taking up the needle himself. It he had done so, he would have gone up to Jerusalem at once. He inquired of the Lord, and was directed to Hebron. The needlework had not yet reached the place for Jerusalem.

We do not wonder that David approved of the act of the men of Jabesh-gilead in burying the body of Saul, who had rescued them from their terrible plight so many years before. Doubtless his followers expected David to punish this act of homage to his enemy, but it was exactly the kind of deed which David himself would have been glad to perform. Gratitude goes always with greatness. Beecher describes this beautiful virtue with a beautiful simile: "As flowers carry dewdrops, trembling on the edges of the petals and ready to fall at the first waft of wind or brush of bird, so the heart should carry its beaded words of thanksgiving; and at the first breath of heavenly favor let down the shower, perfumed with the heart's gratitude."

So we see David, the shepherd boy, become at last king of Israel. "The reward of good works," says the Talmud, "is like dates, sweet and ripening late." David was getting his reward, and it was all the sweeter that he had not hurried it, but had bided God's time.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING CLASS

Conducted by FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

Hear the pennies dropping,
Listen while they fall;
Every one for Jesus,
He will get them all.

Principle of Giving.

Scholars should early be trained to give from right motives, from love of Christ and others, and not for value received in some material things. The plan of running Sunday school fairs and affairs for the current expenses of the school and to impose tickets for these things upon the homes and teachers of the neighborhood is vicious in principle. It is wrong education for the children. It brings upon the church well-merited criticism from those who may not be in sympathy with such plans of church and Sunday school support. Personal sacrifice in giving will bring its own reward of joy, and giving for Christ's sake is that which will give value and effect to the gifts.

Special Offerings.

Causes which call for a special offering should be carefully explained, that the giving may be intelligent, and special envelopes should be distributed on the Sunday previous to the date of the offering. The school's annual days, such as Easter, Children's Day, Rally Day and Christmas, each has usually its special offering for a special object.

Missionary Offering.

A principle in such giving is that scholars should give to missionary and other benevolences as least as much as to the school support. This should be done as a weekly pledge by the scholars, although it may be further trained in through the class offering only monthly or quarterly or even annually on Easter day. Programs to stimulate such giving may be obtained at the Missionary Education Movement, 155 Broadway, New York, or of the denominational headquarters.

The scholars, too, should realize that as their money represents the results of bodily toil, so the offering for missions should represent the investment abroad of just that much of their life.

Another important factor is to train them to pray, as well as to pay, for the missionary cause, and for the particular object to which the money may be designated.

A last factor is to encourage the offering of the life as the best gift to missions by life stories of heroic missionary souls, by circulating books and distributing leaflets, by praying publicly that young people may go forth from the particular school for missionary service, and by seeking for probable material for such service in the school.

AMONG THE WORKERS

ONE OF THE MOST notable revivals ever held in Wisconsin is being conducted by Evangelist Hart and Margaret of Madison in conjunction with the seventeen Protestant churches of the city of Racine. Over one thousand conversions are claimed.

BISHOP J. C. HARTZELL, head of the Methodist Missions in Africa, writes to the Christian Herald from Lourenço Marquez, under date of February 23: "I spent a month along the Mozambique, with our missions among the Mohammedans. Returning to England, I sailed for South Africa December 5, reaching Cape Town the 23d of the same month. Since then I have had two months of very strenuous work, travel and conference-holding in the Belgian Congo, Rhodesia and Portuguese East Africa. Tomorrow I sail for Loanda, on the west coast, and spend nearly a month in the interior of Angola. From there I will sail for Madeira, London and New York, hoping to reach home early in May. I have been in the midst of the martial law in France, North Africa and nearly everywhere south of the equator. I have found the work of God moving forward in all our mission centers and have been kept in excellent health."

"I Sing in my Kitchen!"

"Some of my happiest hours are there. The drudgery and weariness are gone since my Hoosier Cabinet came. It has cut my work in two."

You're bound to buy a kitchen cabinet before long. Buy a Hoosier.

Its sturdier construction makes its first cost your only cost. One Hoosier lasts a lifetime.

Don't risk buying a kitchen cabinet—a life-long labor-saving machine—until you have seen the Hoosier.

The low price is backed by this broad guarantee—"Your money back unless you are delighted with any Hoosier you buy." Nearly a million women have bought on that guarantee.

This is "White Beauty"

HOOISIER KITCHEN CABINET

Sit Down at Your Work—Save Miles of Steps

The pure aluminum table slides out sixteen inches beyond the base—and only aluminum is good enough for this table which we back with this Hoosier guarantee—though this one feature costs us $100,000 extra every year.

Around you are your salt, sugar, flour and supplies, at fingers' ends—and forty labor-saving features—seventeen of which we control. You can store four hundred articles in the Hoosier—all in instant reach.

And Only One Dollar Now Brings All This Hoosier Convenience to You

The balance of the low cash price is payable in a few weekly dues of a single dollar—no interest; no fees of any kind. One dollar now brings all this convenience to your own home. Don't let such a little stand in the way of so much. Take steps now to get your Hoosier on this easy plan.

5 Hoosiers each a remarkable value at its price. One fits your need and purse.

FREE! Write today for "You and Your Kitchen." Learn all about the Hoosier—how women everywhere have freed themselves from long kitchen hours and drudgery. Over 150,000 women have already asked for this book.

Your copy, with name of nearest dealer, will be sent postpaid if you merely send us a postcard.

THE HOOISIER MANUFACTURING COMPANY

155 Wallace Street, New Castle, Ind.

Branch, Pacific Building, San Francisco

4500 Agents in United States and Canada

Christian Health Movement

led by W. Earl Flynn, America's great Christian Health lecturer and teacher. Brightens intellect; renews ambition; lengthens life; adds beauty to face and form. Information FREE, together with simple health means for child and household.

W. EARL FLYNN, Dept. 6, Lincoln, Neb.

AMAZING PROFITS

IN MUSHROOMS. Anybody can make big income, in spare time, entire year growing mushrooms in cellars, sheds, barns, lofts, etc. Tells how to do it. High cost prices. Free illustrated instruction booklet. HIRAM BARTON, 326 W. 48th St., N. Y.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Many facturers want Owen patents. Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I get patent or no fee. Manufacturing facilities. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

"BILLY SUNDAY

The Man and His Message"

Authorized by MR. SUNDAY

MANY have criticized the unconventional methods of Billy Sunday, but the sobering fact remains that he has led over 300,000 men and women to a profession of Christianity.

"Billy Sunday, the Man and His Message," is an intensely interesting book because it deals with a subject of the greatest human concern in a new way. Bound in cloth. 496 pages. 32 chapters. Illustrated.

—HOW TO OBTAIN THIS REMARKABLE BOOK—

We will send you a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," and The Christian Herald for one year, for..... $200
OR, We will send to old subscribers a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," as a reward for sending a NEW eight months' subscription, accompanied by..... $1 10

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, N. Y.

DODGE BROTHERS MOTOR CAR

Full of life and snap

It seems so eager for the road that you are unmindful of distances. It gets away instantaneously. It skims the road silently and smoothly, without motor vibration or side-sway at high speed. Its flow of power is so abundant—its steadiness and comfort so pronounced—and its cost of operation is so low, that its use is both a satisfaction and an economy.

The motor is 30-35 horsepower

The price of the car complete is $785 (f.o.b. Detroit)

Canadian price, $1,100 (add freight from Detroit)

DODGE BROTHERS, DETROIT

Have you a Flag for Memorial Day?

Our 1915 Flag (6 feet long by 4 feet wide) is made by the Dunkards of Pennsylvania, within sight of Valley Forge, where Washington and the Patriots once struggled for liberty.

Here is your chance to own one of these large American Flags, the same as those shown in the picture below. Not a little flag, but a large-sized "Old Glory," 6 feet long by 4 feet wide—bigger than the top of your dining-room table—real red, white and blue, with stripes double-stitched together, and guaranteed not to fade, run or shrink, no matter what the weather.

Here is an opportunity to keep faith with your patriotism. You will not only have use for a flag on every holiday for years to come, but you can also use it constantly for decorative purposes in public and private sociables, in the club-house, in the church and in the home. Memorial Day is almost here. You will be able to celebrate it properly with this flag.

HOW TO SECURE ONE OF THESE FLAGS

We will send the large American Flag described above and The Christian Herald for one year, all for only $2

Or, you may secure the Flag FREE. To any old subscriber who will send us one new eight-months' subscription to The Christian Herald (remitting $1.00 with order) we will send one of these large American Flags FREE

ACT NOW

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

ORPHANS IN CHRISTIAN TRAINING

ONE of the great pleasures of keeping up an active personal touch with home and foreign missions is to see the work prospering and developing. Many readers of this journal who have helped, by their gifts and their prayers, in carrying on the great work of rescue and education among the orphans of China, are now seeing the fruit of their years of labor and self-denial in the substantial progress their protégés are making. Hundreds of these children, once outcast and destitute, are growing up to a splendid Christian manhood and womanhood, and are already becoming a factor in the evangelization of China.

Rev. E. F. Knickerbocker, superintendent of the American Presbyterian Mission at Ningpo, writes about a number of Christian Herald orphan boys at his mission who are in training for service as ministers, evangelists, and teachers. One promising youth, Dzin Veng Piao, is being equipped for the ministry by the generosity of one of our readers. Five others, Tsiu S-Moh, Wong Ho Seng, Wong Ping Yin, Chang Jing Ching and Liu Ping

WASH DAY AT COMPASSION ORPHANAGE

Chi, are all at Kashing Academy and give promise of brilliant careers. Their example stimulates the other boys who are still in the orphanage. There are seventy children in the care of the Compassion Orphanage, fifty of whom are supported by Christian Herald readers. Native Chinese have begun to appreciate the value of this religious and educational work and are now contributing towards its support. Ten of the orphans at Compassion were received into church membership during the past year and also the head farmer and head carpenter. Mr. Knickerbocker closes his encouraging letter with these words: "If I were able to send a message to the patrons of the Compassion Orphanage, it would be one of more than simply sincere thanks for the help they have given in the past; and that means that I would remind them of the whole situation as one of the great opportunities that God continually puts before his people. In such work as is being done in his and like institutions some of us behold the opportunity to render service unto Christ. Who doubts that Christ accepts this service?"

SIMON TSU, SUPERINTENDENT OF COMPASSION ORPHANAGE; HIS MOTHER, WIFE AND FIVE CHILDREN

AMANDA SMITH

AMANDA SMITH, the colored evangelist, who died recently at Sebring, Fla., left behind her many friends and many delightful memories of bright and cheerful and powerful testimony to the abounding grace of God. She was particularly loved at Ocean Grove, where her song and testimony have been an inspiration and blessing to multitudes. An interesting communication reaches the Christian Herald from Miss Mary Barton Cookman, also for many years a friend and supporter of the work at Ocean Grove. She writes:

"In a letter received from Mrs. Hester Ward, sister of Mrs. Amanda Smith, dated February 24, Sebring, Fla., she says: 'Ere this reaches you my sister, Amanda Smith, will have reached the landing. It was victory all the way.' What a blessed testimony to the power of vital religion! Amanda Smith has been failing slowly for several months, living in her own house, given to her by a friend. Her sister was with her in the last hours, ministering to her, and closing her eyes in death. In her life story we read how wonderfully God led her and supplied all her need. She founded and maintained, by faith, the Colored Children's Home near Chicago, and only failing health obliged her to give it over to others. She used to sing at Ocean Grove camp meetings, 'A Little More Faith in Jesus.' We can see that tall figure, with arms outstretched, pouring out in sacred song her own faith, which has never wavered, in her dear Lord. She never murmured but always triumphed, and believed, when she did not know where the next morsel of food would come from or the money to buy it. The struggle of life is over, and dear Amanda Smith has reached her heavenly home. She has many stars in her crown—glories whom she led to Jesus. Let us rejoice and be glad."

They Wait for You

LOOK not, O friend, with unavailing tears
Into the Past—look to the brave young years!
Look to the Future: all is there in wait,
All that you fought for by the broken gate—
The faith that faltered and the hope that fell;
The song that died into a lonely kille.
It is all there—the love that went astray
With bitter cries in that remembered day;
The joys that were so needed by the heart,
And all the tender dreams you would depart.
Nothing is lost forever that the soul
Cried out for: all is waiting at the goal.
—From Edward Markham's Third Book of Verse—"The Shoes of Happiness and Other Poems," Doubleday, Page & Co.

Made to Stand Hill-climbing Strains

Develop Spark Plugs to with-stand the terrific force of "hill-climbing" explosions by testing them under just such conditions, in a duplicate of the motor they are intended to serve. For instance—

Champion

TOLEDO MADE FOR THE WHOLE WORLD'S TRADE

Regular 18 For Maxwell CARS

Developed by repeated test—Champion Spark Plugs which were subjected to conceivable speed and load strain.

Ford—Overland—Studebaker—Maxwell—Metz and over 60 other cars are equipped by their builders with Champions similarly developed for them.

The builders of over 75% of all American-made automobile stationary and traction gasoline motors deliver them new, equipped with Champion Spark Plugs.

Insist on Champions when you replace your plugs.

To accept a substitute is to disregard this most definite expression of scientifically determined expert opinion.

The Champion Guarantee

Complete satisfaction to the user—free repair, replacement or money back. See your dealer or write direct to us.

Champion Spark Plug Co.
33 Avondale Ave., Toledo, Ohio

'Since 1883

has constantly used your dentifrice, and is justly proud of my bright teeth."
(Name on request.)

Sozodont

for the teeth

With grandparent of dentifrices—born 1846. It is responsible for the remarkably sound and bright teeth of many people of advanced years.

Sozodont Liquid is for morning use, to wash out the hard-to-reach crevices. Sozodont Paste is for evening use, to brighten and whiten the teeth.

60 weeks' trial of Liquid and Powder Paste for 4c in stamps and our special offer which you cannot resist. Address

MAI & RUCKEL New York

Never Wring A Mop!

Essential dry in just a second with this Squeeze-Mop-Press

Simple. One motion presses water out of the mop, saves mops, saves water. Use any old rag for mop. As you wring and twist mops as to rags, save the hands; you could wear a whole mop and never soil them. Time saving ease for a dollar! Money back! We're willing to part with it and we'll return it. Send $1 today for the Squeeze-Mop-Press. Post, prepaid. Test it yourself.

1000 West 10th, Dept. 10, Los Angeles, N.Y.

Send $1 today for our remarkable, record-breaking mop. Territory being snapped up fast.

OF GOLD New Gospel Song Book. Sample 10c. Lillenas, Music Pub., Olivet, Ill.

Memorial to Mrs. Wilson

AS a testimony to the efforts which Mrs. Woodrow Wilson put forth during her life in the White House, to rid Washington of its slum alleys, a block of model homes for the poor is to be erected. One of the last bills to receive the President's signature March 4 was that for the incorporation of the Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes.

Philanthropic and civic bodies had been endeavoring for many years to pass through Congress a bill converting all habitable alleys into minor streets, and doing away with the bad conditions prevailing. When to Mrs. Wilson was made the suggestion that, should members of Congress see the conditions for themselves, legislation might be hastened, she said with a smile, "I'll take them through the alleys myself, for I suppose they will not refuse my invitation."

So, in May and June, 1913, she took groups of prominent men through those many miles of squalor. Thus was created congressional sentiment against the alleys, and hence the quick passage of the Alley Bill in response to Mrs. Wilson's dying request.

The question ever advanced has been, "Where will these 12,000 people from twenty-three alleys go to find cheap homes?" The best answer is found in these proposed plans. In the one hundred and twenty-five tiny homes which will constitute this block two hundred and fifty families are provided for, or about one thousand people. Rentals will be from $7.50 to $17.50 a month, according to number of rooms, yard space and location.

The accepted plans provide an arcade entrance to the main or administration building, with a large day nursery on one side, and the community laundry on the other. In the day nursery it is proposed to take charge of children living in the block while their parents are away at work. The privileges of the laundry, a room 24 by 28 feet, with thirty-two sets of tubs, sixteen ironing boards and a steam drying room adjoining, will be rented at three cents an hour.

Passing through this arcade one will see a playground and clothes-drying areas on either side, and a little library building fronting him. On the second floor of this administration building will be an emergency hospital, with two wards of four beds each, and an assembly hall for lectures or entertainments; on the third floor, two good-sized club rooms and a suite of rooms for the superintendent of the plant.

Because in this section of the city there are few sanitary shops, the plans provide for drug, grocery and market shops. The plant throughout is to be equipped with plenty of bathrooms and toilets, with best sanitary plumbing. Experts say the block will be a model for similar work everywhere.

Signs of Spring

WHEN Nature casts her coat of brown
Aside to don her emerald gown;
When crocuses their leaves unfold
To show their calyxes of gold;
When country youths and village belles
Go promenading through the dells
Where birds of every clime and grade
Greet them with joyous serenade;

When tulips open up their bills
To show their dainty satin frills,
And hyacinths burst through the cone,
Then we may know that winter's gone.
When violets open up their eyes,
To gaze into the sunny skies;
When lilac blossoms scent the air,
Then we may know that spring is near.

When robin redbreast calls his mate,
And hops across the lawn in state,
When farmers sow the golden grain,
Then we may know it's spring again.
When frogs have left their gloomy bunks,
And greet us with their harsh ker-chunks,
Their greeting may not charm our ear,
But we are glad that spring is here.

WILHELMINA BEAMER.

"The Sunshine Soda"
Breaks evenly in the center

THE only crisp, flaky soda biscuit that can be eaten with pleasure any time, anywhere, without the usual mussiness of crumbs.

Sunshine Biscuits

Send for Our Sunshine "Surprise Box" Your name and address and the name of your grocer on a post card bring it FREE. Don't delay. Write at once.

LOOSE-WILES BISCUIT COMPANY 758 Thomson Ave., L.I.C. New York
Bakers of Sunshine Biscuits

5 Cents

When San Francisco was swept by flames

the loss-paying ability of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company was put to the supreme test of paying losses amounting to Ten Million Dollars. Even though the local office of the company, with its records, had been swept away, the task of adjusting and paying claims was immediately taken up. The Hartford's indebtedness to 6,000 policy-holders was promptly paid—100 cents on the dollar.

Never before had fire insurance undergone such a test. No fire insurance company ever paid so vast a sum in a single year to restore what the flames destroyed. For more than a century the Hartford Fire Insurance Company has met every honest obligation fairly and promptly.

This record is worth remembering when you renew your policy or take out new insurance. There is a Hartford agent near you whose name we will be glad to send.

The Hartford Fire Insurance Co., Hartford, Conn.

Gentlemen:—
Send me "Fire Insurance and Fire Prevention," your booklet suggesting ways of preventing fires.

Name _____
Address _____
City _____

Nobody wants a fire. We have a booklet that tells how to prevent it. Send for a free copy. Use the coupon.

PAIGE

Design

THAT is the value-test—in all motor cars. It means quality. In Paige Cars it means even more. It means Paige Character. It means distinctiveness, comfort, vast power and flexibility, reliability, wealth of highest grade features and amazing value. Paige Character means the high ideals, the financial strength and the liberal policies of the Company that manufactures Paige Cars. Paige Design, in its demonstrated soundness and years of popular endorsement, means Economy—Economy in Purchase Price, Economy in Maintenance, Economy in Operation.

A Paige Car is always, everywhere an asset.

The supreme dollar-for-dollar value of Paige Cars is established by comparing them, feature for feature, with any and all other motor cars of lower, equal or higher price.
PAIGE DETROIT MOTOR CAR CO.
1205 McKinstry Ave., Detroit

FOUR 38-11075

"DON'T SHOUT"

Anyone can adjust it. Write for booklet and testimonials.
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Bldg., Phila.

SAVE HALF Your Paint Bills

By using INGERSOLL PAINT—proved best by 66 years' use. It will please you. Only paint endorsed by the "Grange." Made in all colors—for all purposes.

DELIVERED FREE
From the Mill Direct to You at Factory Prices.
INGERSOLL PAINT BOOK—FREE
Tells all about Paint and Painting for Durability. How to avoid trouble and expense caused by paints fading, chalking and peeling. Valuable information free to you, with Sample Color Cards. Write me. DO IT NOW. I can save you money.

O. W. Ingersoll, 253 Plymouth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

My "Ideal" is to Cut Cooking Costs

And to make your food taste better. 25 years' experience tells me mine is a good "IDEAL"—high in quality and results, but low in price. Makes your food more appetizing, more delicious, more nourishing. Cooks the flavor and values in and not out of the food. Requires no attention—works while you sleep or go about other duties. Saves time and work, trouble and bother. Tests prove it actually saves 80% of fuel. Thus in a short time, it will pay for itself. To cut cooking costs and enjoy better meals get an

IDEAL Roasts, Bakes, Steams, Stews and Boils Perfectly

Five sizes. All have strong cabinet-built outer case of special "vulcanized" solid oak. Separate cover for each compartment. Insulation packed in by hand. Patented Water Seal top—automatic Heat Control valve with in-built Condenser. Seamless cooking compartments and utensils. "IDEAL" brand, made by us, of extra heavy pure aluminum, guaranteeing long life. Triplicate pairs and half round sets permit cooking two or three articles in one compartment at the same time. My Big Free Book explains the whole of fireless cooking. Write for it and name of nearest reliable Dealer today. Address: C. E. SWARTZBAUGH, President, The Toledo Cooker Company, 1357 West Bancroft St. Toledo, Ohio. Also Mfrs. of "IDEAL" Aluminum Cooking Utensils. Ask your dealer. Catalog free.

THE PRAYER LEAGUE

League Scripture for May: "God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him."

AS PROMISED last week we present the suggestion from Mrs. J. A. Hardy, the "Mother" of the Prayer League, that a call be made to all the members of the league to unite in special prayer for a world-wide revival. She writes:

There are so many unsaved souls in the world that the thought comes to me to ask if you think it would be a good plan to ask all the members of the Prayer League and the Christian Herald Family and Christians everywhere to unite in earnest prayer to God for an outpouring of his Holy Spirit "upon all flesh" and in every individual heart; that there may be a world-wide revival of the old-time Pentecostal religion, to arouse the consciences, stir the hearts, and awaken the souls of the unsaved to a realization of their need of Christ. Also, would it not be a good plan to ask all the members of the Christian Herald Family if they will not read the New Testament through, commencing at the first chapter and trying to read one or more chapters daily and commit some of the precious promises to memory.

We are sure that many will be inspired by "Mother" Hardy's appeal to a fresh zeal and larger faith in praying definitely and expectantly for a great world-wide revival; also that many will be led to renewed faithfulness and regularity in reading the Word of God. With all the members of the Prayer League searching the Scriptures with a renewed eagerness, appropriating and committing to memory the most wonderful promises, there would undoubtedly be a great far-reaching forward impulse throughout the church toward its final victory.

It is necessary just here to give a bit of practical direction to our correspondents. Many write, addressing their letters personally to Mrs. Hardy. This woman of God is called the "Mother of the Prayer League" because it was through her suggestion that the league was founded. But Mrs. Hardy is not officially connected with the Christian Herald staff and should not be burdened with correspondence except in very special cases. Her home is in Virginia, but all the Prayer League letters should be addressed to the Christian Herald Prayer League, care of the Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

We must also plead again with our subscribers to make their letters very short. The correspondence of the Prayer League is so large that it is almost physically impossible to read through the long letters. Almost any difficulty or situation can be explained fully enough in the space of one or two paragraphs. Our readers will greatly facilitate the office work of the Prayer League if they will remember this request.

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have been received from:

A Subscriber, Cooksburg, N. Y.; Mrs. G. H. F., Chicago; A Reader (for answer to prayer in time of financial stress); Mrs. E. H., Brooklyn, N. Y.; Reader; E. R., Little Hocking, Ohio; Mrs. E. K. L., Fulton, Ohio; Mrs. H. R. C., Hyattsville, Md.; Mrs. J. L. S., Dietrich, Idaho; A Friend, Aurora, Neb.; Mrs. D. L. Pawtucket, R. 1; A. P. N., Tampa, Fla.; A Subscriber, Greenfield, Iowa; Mrs. H. S. P., Livermore, Pa.; Mrs. M. M. A., Pontiac, Ill.; Mrs. E. A. R., Wellsville, N. Y.; J. G. G., New York; A Friend, Lynchburg, Va.; Mrs. R. C. D., Whitsett, N. C.; An Ohio Reader; Mrs. T. C. M., Nashville, Tenn.

A sad letter comes from a young Eastern woman, asking that her mother, who has not communicated with her for three years, will return to her. A distracted wife writes to ask prayer that her husband will return to their home and to renewed fidelity to her, and that her health may be restored. A Southern woman asks help and deliverance from "awful" trouble. T. L. writes to ask special prayer for help in starting a Christian mission in the town of Ellensburg, Pa.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at Guthrie, Ky.; in a church at Los Banos, Calif.; Brigham, Que.; in a church at Hope, Ark.; Jacksonville, Ark.; Bosworth, Md. A Friend, Kendall, Wis., asks prayer that a spirit of Christian love, brotherhood and unity may fall upon a community and that a deeper spiritual insight may be given its people; M. J. McK. asks for the conversion of a number of acquaintances; Mrs. M. F. N. requests prayer for a baptism of the Holy Spirit on all the people at Long Lake, Minn.

A Mother writes from Rushford, Minn., asking prayer that a minister or evangelist sent to that town who will have success in leading the young men into the Christian Church at Coalgate, Okla.; Mrs. E. J. K. asks prayer that the pastor of the Church at Coalgate, Okla., may be sent to the pastorate of the Church at Coalgate, Okla.; Mrs. E. J. K. asks prayer that a pastor may be sent to the pastorate of the Church at Coalgate, Okla.; Mrs. E. J. K. asks prayer that her husband may get into the ministry; J. F. A. asks prayer that some of wealth may be found who will aid in the debt upon a church at Weaverville, N. C.; a Louisiana pastor asks prayer for special blessing upon him in his work of saving souls and building up the church in his care.

Mrs. W. A. B. and M. A. request prayer that their husband may be restored; Mrs. M. F. N., her son's mind may be restored; Mrs. McC. and Mrs. S. L., their daughter Miss B. M. C., M. A. and J. K., their mothers'. Eight other friends ask prayer for mental restoration, strengthening for other relatives or friends or for themselves.

Mrs. S. L. requests prayer that her daughter's sight may be restored; Mrs. M. F. N., her son's sight may be restored; friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight of relatives and friends or for themselves.

Ten friends ask prayer that their relatives or friends may be saved from liquor habit.

Two friends ask prayer that their mother may be cured of the morphia habit and that nephew may be cured of drug habit.

Thirty-two friends ask prayer for deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in prayer their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Twenty-three parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons, including two mothers, each of whom asks the conversion of five sons.

Twenty-three wives ask prayer for the conversion of their husbands.

Forty-nine friends ask prayer for the conversion of other relatives or friends.

Eleven readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

One husband asks prayer for healing of his wife; seven wives, the healing of their husbands; eight parents, for the healing of their children, including one that daughter's sight may be fully restored; seven friends ask prayer for the healing of sons. Thirty-three other relatives and friends, including one that a little girl may gain power of speech, and another sister may have the use of her limbs; seventy-four friends ask prayer for the healing of themselves, including seven who ask prayer that their mothers may be restored.

Seven friends ask prayer for help in hearing for themselves or for others.

Twenty-seven friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Fifty friends ask prayer for granting of varied desires, including six who ask that their husbands be lifted; also seven who ask for reconciliation with friends or relatives; another who asks prayer that her husband may return.

Called Higher

Mrs. Eleanor Van Dyck, Albany, N. Y.; Alexander Holland, Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. Fannie J. Stiles, Plattsburg, N. Y.; Miss Emma J. Taylor, Newark, N. J., 22, 1915.

Mrs. Emma F. Parsons, Beverly, Mass., 12, 1914.

Miss Caroline E. Hicks, Hart, Conn., 3, 1915.

Mr. Kilbourn, East Litchfield, Conn., 28, 1914.

Mrs. Belle J. Alsop, Long Beach, Calif., 69, 1914.

Mrs. Margaret P. Wilson, Hedgesville, Va., March 12, 1915.

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not purely personal. Correspondents may use a pen name to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender in addition to the nom de plume. No return will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

Inquirer, Mich. Will you please tell me through the Mail-Bag what objections there are to dancing at the home of a friend with a few other friends. I would do nothing that would hinder my Christian experience or drive my thoughts from God. It means more to me than anything or person besides, but I do enjoy the dance, and it seems innocent enough to me. I have only danced a short time, so it would not be difficult for me to give it up. I was convinced it is contrary to the will of my heavenly Father.

Many letters have come to us asking advice and information on the subject of dancing, but they have shown such a spiritual, earnest spirit as we find in yours. In some cases this makes the answer more difficult. Many "dancing Christians" show such a lack of spirituality, consecration, self-sacrifice and energy that it seems easy to detect that their dancing and other worldly amusements have drawn their hearts away from serious things. But you are undoubtedly serious still, and eager to make the most of your life for God. Though dancing does not as yet seem to have hindered your spiritual life, you are uncertain and more or less troubled about it. Would it be doing the wise and safe thing, to give it up? We know as a matter of fact that many young people have been led dancing and the influences surrounding it into harmful pleasures and into sin. In the other hand, have you not known young women who, upon marrying and taking on their duties, have as a matter of course found this pastime with the instinctive feeling that in some way or other it would spoil and weaken their loyalty in the new home and their helpfulness in home, community and church? A young unmarried woman, while free to enjoy fun and recreation with companions, should keep before her the duties of wifehood and motherhood, and consider herself in training for these sacred tasks. Anything that might make you a less perfect and helpful mother or wife or that might influence your companions to surrender the highest moral ideals, should be given up for the sake of Christ, who gave up even his life for us.

Fl. P., Montesano, Wash. The language of Paul in Acts 20: 20, must be taken in connection with his characterization of his own ministry in the preceding verse, in which he tells of his humility and amid tears and trials, he carried on his work. Verse 20 contains this description. He had been more than a preacher and teacher, for he had added pastoral ministrations in private to his more public labors, and had given his people a whole Gospel, leaving back nothing that would help them in the new religious life. There is no allusion to him in the matter, nor was it a pronounced feature of Paul's ministry, although on various occasions he pleaded for liberality toward the same in need.

C. L. Please answer some perplexing problems about prayer. One prays feebly and is smiled; another prays vehemently, almost breaking his heart and perhaps ruining his mind, and is not answered. Paul prayed three times and was not answered at last not as he desired. Is it possible that a human being cannot be in earnest in a settled, fixed longing, without pain or agony? How can agony in a very humble creature bring the gift asked for from the deity? Some prayers are answered instantly; some in minutes or hours or days or years—or ages. Are some failures caused by wavering, by not waiting till the answer comes? How is it possible that struggle and agony, as in the case of Jacob, can conquer, as it were, the Almighty?

A comprehensive attempt to answer your questions would require a book rather than a paragraph. Look up such works as S. D. Gordon's Quiet Talks on Prayer (Revell), Andrew Murray's With Christ in the School of Prayer (Fell), Frost's Men Who Prayed (China Inland Mission, Philadelphia and Toronto), Brainerd's Wireless Messages (Revell). The one great fact which throws light on most of your questions is that the real value of prayer is in bringing us into harmony with the divine will—make us desire the things which our heavenly Father knows to be best for us; to bring us into such a spiritual condition that we can receive his very best gifts. Prayer is a test of character; it is a road by which we reach the place where God can and must bless us. One who prays "feebly" or waveringly does not reach this place; one who prays vehemently may go beyond it. However much we may "agonize," the mind must find a place of quiet trust before the blessing can come. Paul asked three times for something he wanted, but got something better—God's superabounding grace, and assurances of tenderest affection and care. Your suggestion about agony is perhaps correct. Some desires are so gigantic that we cannot present them without great emotion. As to the time of answering, some answers require time, just as the harvest requires time; other answers are delayed because we ourselves are not ready. Jacob's answer came not because God was unwilling to bless him at first and was made willing by his struggle, but because Jacob's consecration was not complete until he uttered the noble words: "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." That meant that he chose God's blessing rather than life itself. He met the test, as did Abraham, and was blessed. There is, however, in most cases, no need for the intense agony. It is not the agony, nor the struggle, but the trust which brings the blessing. Trust lets our life touch God's so his power can flow through us. The one supreme thing is that God's will shall be wrought in our lives; the one supreme prayer, "Thy will be done." In our hearts we should constantly be saying:

"Sweet will of God, still fold me closer Till I am wholly lost in thee."

H. M. G., Humboldt, Tenn. How long Jesus wore the crown of thorns cannot be positively stated. Mark 15: 15 relates how Jesus, whom the populace, preferring Barabbas, had refused to release, was delivered by Pilate to the soldiers to be scourged and crucified. Then began the infamous abuse to which he was subjected and the crowning with thorns. In verse 20 we are told how, when they had become tired of their terrible sport, the soldiers took off the purple robe from Jesus and restored his own garments, in readiness to set out to the mount of crucifixion. Edersheim writes: "The purple robe was torn from his wounded body, the crown of thorns from his brow; arrayed again in his own, now blood-stained, garments, he was led forth to execution. Only about two hours and a half had passed since the time he first stood before Pilate, when the melancholy procession reached Calvary." It is nowhere specifically stated in the Gospels when the crown was removed from the Saviour's brow; hence he is represented in many of the famous pictures as still wearing it on the road to Calvary, and even while he hung on the cross.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. F. A. J., Columbus, Kan. The passage in Matt. 24: 22, "except those days should be shortened," etc., has been held to imply that such a situation would be brought about by an unusual concurrence of causes, happening together in quick succession, which, if they had been prolonged, would have resulted in the whole Jewish nation perishing. In its farther meaning, the prophecy implies that the time is coming when Jerusalem shall cease to be "trodden down" of the Gentiles (which it was first by pagan and today by Mohammedan), and when this "treading" ceases, Israel shall constitute, with the believing Gentiles, one Church of God. The fulfillment of this latter prophecy is yet to come. It should not be forgotten that in his sight a day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as a day.

I. G., Antwerp, N. Y. 1. The passages in Matt. 5: 33, 34, 35 are generally accepted as a condemnation of the use of oaths and of swearing in common intercourse. Some commentators doubt whether it is meant to condemn what may be regarded as a proper use of the solemn adjuration, as when a witness in court declares in God's presence that he will tell the truth. There are several passages in the Bible in which Jehovah is said, once and again, to have sworn by himself. The whole purpose of the three verses is against the light and irreverent use of God's name, which evidently must have been common in our Lord's day. And not only this, but it was designed to condemn and discourage the custom of swearing altogether and to urge the use of simple language in ordinary conversation. 2. Send name and address, but not for publication.

Mrs. M. H. L., Bohemia, Pa. Although the great war has almost obscured every other topic, and attracted a great volume of charity from this country, it is not right to conclude that home duties have been neglected. No doubt many charities have suffered, however, and this is regrettable. The Christian Herald has repeatedly reminded its readers of the home needs, and we have the satisfaction of knowing that they have been both mindful and liberal, often giving when it required real self-denial to do so. We think you are not doing your own heart justice, however, when you say that the sufferers in Belgium, France, Poland, Austria and Serbia have brought their sufferings upon themselves. They are for the most part women and children, non-combatants, who cannot in any sense be held responsible for what has happened, and they deserve our pity and our help. The real responsibility goes much higher up among the influential and the great ones of the earth.

At This Age

Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are confections. And the young child, to make them more like sweetmeats, likes plenty of sugar and cream.

At this age Puffed Grains are ideal. They are whole grains with every granule exploded. The tenderest stomach cannot be taxed by them. And the taste is like toasted nuts.

At This Age

Hungry boys like Puffed Grains in their bowls of milk. And they carry pocketfuls with them, like peanuts, when at play.

They want foods that are all-foods, and want them delightful. These bubbles of grain delight the taste, and every atom feeds. They are perfect between-meal foods.

At This Age

Men like to mix Puffed Grains with berries. And they scatter them on ice cream. Men like blended flavors and modified zests. And these flaky, nut-like, toasted grains form a much liked combination.

Still folks of all ages like what other ages like in these steam-exploded grains.

Puffed Wheat, 12c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

CORN PUFFS
15c

At any hour, in any way, Puffed Grains meet requirements. Food must be inviting, and these are more. They are fascinating. Foods must feed, and here every granule does.

And foods should be fitted for easy digestion. Here Puffed Wheat and Rice are unique. Here for the first time—by Prof. Anderson's process—every food cell is blasted. No other process of cooking, baking or toasting ever cooked cereals like this.

Morning, noon and night this summer will bring uses for Puffed Grains. Keep them on the shelf.

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers

(880)

SAXON "SIX"

The Car You Want—a "Six" —at the Price You Like

See and Test this Car and So Be Satisfied of Its Quality

HERE is the "Six" with all the luxury—power—size, that men previously had associated only with cars of much higher price.

At the price of $785 it offers, we believe, more headline features—and a finer value—than any other touring car in the world.

And because it is light in weight and well designed throughout, it is economical. No owner of a Saxon "Six" has ever complained about upkeep expense.

Everything about the Saxon "Six" is genuinely good—the high-speed motor, giving the perfect smoothness which only a "Six" can give; the beautifully finished body; the high-grade materials used throughout; the complete equipment.

Let Saxon Specifications Tell Their Own Story

Motive power? The Saxon "Six" has, we believe, the greatest high speed, light weight motor yet produced. It develops 30-35 horse-power. It keeps cool and "sweet" under all conditions. Of course everyone recognizes the superior advantages of a six-cylinder motor in a touring car.

Comfort? Saxon uses cantilever springs of vanadium steel—the newest and best type of spring suspension; 32 x 3½-inch tires; 112-inch wheelbase; good upholstery.

Looks? One of the strongest appeals of the Saxon is its handsome, stylish appearance, as exemplified by its streamline body, crowned fenders, tapered bonnet—and its high quality body finish. Twenty-two operations are required in finishing a Saxon body. It receives 10 coats of paint and varnish—and the quality of the work is A-1.

Plenty of Room for Five

Room? No car selling below $1250 has more width of the tonneau seat than you get in the Saxon "Six." It is a five-passenger touring car of generous all-around dimensions—plenty of leg room. All passengers ride comfortably.

Sound mechanical features? Well, there's the six-cylinder motor, honeycomb radiator, Atwater-Kent ignition, Rayfield carburetor, dry plate clutch, three-speed transmission, floating rear axle with full roller bearing equipment, drop forged I-beam front axles, best type artillery wheels, big brakes—everything sound and good.

The Saxon "Six" is fully equipped and every feature is of uniformly high quality—Gray & Davis electric starting and lighting system, speedometer, dimmer attachment for headlights, double ventilating rain-vision windshield, one-man top, quick-acting curtains, electric horn, robe rail, tools, tire kit, extra demountable rim, tire carrier—everything complete.

You can now see this car at your dealer's. We urge you to inspect it. If you do not know who handles the Saxon in your territory, write us for his name. Again we say, "See and test this car for yourself and so be satisfied of its quality."

Judge This Car Yourself

Your own eye will tell you if it is beautiful.

Your own ear will tell you if it is quiet and smooth and "sweet" in operation.

Your own observation will tell you if it has power and snap and flexibility.

Your own nerves will tell you if it is comfortable to ride in under all conditions and easy and safe for the driver to handle.

Your own business judgment will tell you if there is in this car, as we claim, an all-around value that is extraordinary.

We invite the test and are sure, in advance, of your verdict.

Saxon Motor Company
Detroit, Michigan

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MAY 19, 1915

VOL. 38 - NO. 20. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Think How It Will Seem In the Future

In the Light Six you buy, the important thing is to know how it will seem next year.

All models look well, all demonstrate well. No car could be sold if it didn't. But many a fair-seeming car proves a sad disappointment. And mistakes in this line are costly.

You note that experienced motorists don't buy untried cars. They have had their fill of experiments.

New Risks This Year

This is a year of Light Sixes—a new-type car involving radical changes. Those changes bring many uncertainties unknown in the time-tried types.

Formerly the average Six weighed 4500 pounds. The Light Six, if true to its type, weighs under 3000 pounds. The weight of ten people has been taken out. Tire and fuel cost has been cut in two.

This means new materials, new principles. It requires a new-type, high-speed motor. A thousand parts have been re-designed. All that was known and tried and standard is revised in creating a true Light Six.

One can hardly say, "I will stick to the old type." The new type has come to stay. But a man this year should be pretty certain about the new type car he buys.

Looking Backward

That is why experienced motorists are buying HUDSONS by the thousands. There are 12,000 owners of HUDSON Light Sixes who look back on an excellent record. In two seasons these owners have driven, perhaps, some 30 million miles. And they have proved beyond question that the HUDSON is faultless. There are men all around you who can tell you now how the HUDSON will seem in the future. Those millions of miles of hard driving have wiped out every question, every risk.

Pride is Important

It is more than pride which leads men to buy HUDSONS. But pride is important, too. Any man likes to feel that his car is a class car. It doubles the enjoyment of motoring.

But class has come to this HUDSON model through four years of ceaseless refinement. We have had time to perfect every part and detail. We have had the designer—Howard E. Coffin—best qualified to do it. It is more than pride that sells HUDSONS. It is the appeal of a finished production.

We have a trebled output this spring over last spring. But the long waits of last summer are sure to be repeated. That is always so at this season with first-choice cars. A man is wise to decide on his new car before the winter surplus is sold.

The HUDSON, in this class, will be your first choice. Prove that in time to get one without a long delay.

7-Passenger Phaeton, $1550, f.o.b. Detroit
Four other body styles

The HUDSON Company never loses interest in the car it sells. So long as a car is in service we maintain our interest in the character of its service. That's one great reason for HUDSON reputation.

HUDSON
$1550

HUDSON MOTOR CAR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICHIGAN

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

IN THE FRONT LINE TRENCHES

BY EDWARD LYELL FOX

WHEN I think of the German trenches, I think of the bombproof behind the line at La Bassée. The English have attacked, to be beaten back. The young German officer has telephoned his report to his colonel.

They are the same at night as they are in the day, these trenches; they have the same bored men lying in the dugouts, hoping for an attack; the same tense men in the rifle pits, scanning the enemy's lines. I heard a harmonica, and afterwards, at Arras, I heard a harmonica. The dead still where they fell, the wounded were getting first aid, and I could hear the harmonica amid the scattering spatter of the shrapnel. Yes, in the trenches it was the same; they had settled down once more to the lulling secure feeling of the protection of a wall six feet high, which paradoxically ends in killing them. Only outside the night was different.

Hideous night, pierced with flame, serried with rocket's gleaming train, weird with bursting bombs that light the glistening fields a yellowish green; awful night, shaking to the booming of heavy guns, blotched with the red of splitting shells, covering insanely to a machine gun's steady beat; night of death, with the wounded turning white, waiting for the hours just before the dawn when the firing stops and their comrades may be spared to carry them back; mad night, with the field of the soaked dead; a night of lumpy things, seen bluish in the rocket's glow.

But in the trenches—all along the big ditch, from the dunes of Flanders to the foothills of the Vosges—it is the same by night and by day; and bullets whistling and harmonicas are playing. Perhaps we understand. . . .

We were lunching in a château, an hour from Arras, that belonged to some countess, and the polite Russian officer who sat opposite was telling how that white-haired aristocrat had made a prisoner of herself in an upper chamber, refusing to leave her room until "we barbarians" had left her premises.

"And there is no knowing when that may be," included the lieutenant, who was one of those wonderful exasperating Prussians who, using the Oxford accent, speak better English than you yourself. "You see," he continued, "the lines hereabouts are more or less unchangeable. We are laying siege to all France, you know, and that of a necessity means slow work. Of course we shall draw the lines tighter and tighter; and then perhaps we may have to leave the countess and find a new château further on."

As I helped myself from the platter of cheese at a soldier waiter put before me, I said:

"Then you do expect to go further in? You will not be content with merely holding this line to keep what you already have of France until the peace conference will dispose of it? You do then plan an offensive, a conquest? And you believe you can carry it through?"

"Why not?" he quietly said; "we are Prussians."

It sounds theatrical: it was not. His tone was quite commonplace and his entire manner a matter-of-fact that you began asking yourself, why not, indeed? And as I gazed the length of that long table, the staff mess of the 1st Brigade, and tried to study the faces of the officers—some mature, mostly, though, young—I thought of all the wrong impressions we get in America about the Prussian in shoulder-straps and his ways. I was thinking of the conception I had had of him only last summer—a swaggering, insolent fellow who delighted in obscene stories and intoxicants. And here was the actuality of it, sitting across the table from me, on my right, on my left; proud, reservedly polite men, who, if you but conveyed a faint understanding of their race, instantly unbent with the warmest of smiles and the most charming ways. And I looked from one healthy, clean-eyed man to another, admiring their refreshing politeness, always publicly maintained each to the other, no matter how intimate they might be. And I thought of the careless-spoken critics of these men, and wondered.

"That goulash wasn't bad, was it?" he said. "You see, our food is much better than the —th Army Corps's. We cut up nice young English girls for our goulashes, but up there they tell me the other staff can find only old women, and even a French chef cannot serve them up tender."

"You barbarians!" I laughed.

The coffee came on; and if the January air

WE REACHED THE TRENCHES IN THREE HOURS

had not been chill with rain you could have opened the tall windows and heard the grumble of the firing line not five miles away. The lieutenant was telling the mature-faced captain next to him something I had said about the German restaurants in New York, and they were laughing when Oberleutnant Herrmann touched me on the shoulder:

"Your request has been referred to the commanding officer," he said with a smile that meant good news, "and permission has been granted for you to remain the night in a schützengraben."

Three hours later I was in the German trench at La Bassée. When I had accustomed myself to the steady cracking of rifles in the firing pits, which I could not see, but which I knew must be close by; when I had nervously counted the bursting of twenty shells, all in an appallingly few minutes, yet had heard no plop of fragments burying themselves into the mud above, I began to be able to look about me. I was standing in a pit about seven feet deep and barely wide enough for two passing men to squeeze by. By turning my indispensable electric torch this way and that, I could see in the rear wall of the trench a series of caves dug in the earth, their entrances so low that a man would have to enter them on hands and knees. In some I saw the faint yellowish gutter of candles and others were pitch dark. But in the front wall of the trench there were cut, at intervals so short that the place seemed a catacomb, narrow passages that led to the shooting pits, recesses not more than five feet wide, reinforced at the level of the ground with sandbags and armor; and on either side of these approach passages I saw the holes in the earth in which men slept, and lived, and ate when they weren't in the pits, their guns toward the enemy. At the lieutenant's suggestion I went down into one of the caves.

"Later," he said, "you won't want to be moving around much. It'll get hotter then, and you'll want to remain in one place where you're sure the shelter is good."

I wondered if he meant that it would probably become so hot that I'd want to burrow as far under ground as possible, or if he meant that he would want me somewhere out of the way. They have a way of smiling with their polite suggestions, these German officers, and it often leaves you up in the air.

The next minute, on my hands and knees, I was trying to force my bulk through one of the narrow openings; and, finally succeeding after floundering around in the mud, I found myself descending into a place the first impression of which was taken by the nostrils. You breathed a sickening damp heat, to be expected in a hole in the ground, the floor of which was spread with decomposing straw, and your stomach revolted to the stench of unwashed clothing remaining long on unwashed bodies, although, flashing your lamp around the cave, you saw it was empty. The men were in the firing pits. Then the inquiring white finger of the torch pointed to a picture of the Kaiser fastened in some miraculous manner to the earthen wall, and under it you read, "Gott mit uns," and you knew that the men out there in the pits believed that God was with them, and you found yourself wondering if he was.

I saw in that hole boxes of liebesgaben, cigars, bars of chocolate, and over them was the inevitable spray of Christmas tree, which, pinned to their coats, these Christmas-loving Germans often carry into battle. That was all. A blanket on the straw, a rucksack and a pile of rags that you decided were for cleaning guns. You turned the flash lamp this way and that, having come to feel a subtle intimacy with the soldier who lived here, and having the curiosity to see the picture of some loved one; but there was none. You guessed that it lay beside the tiny Bible in the little bag that the army gives every soldier to wear around his neck.

The lieutenant was waiting for me outside. "How long," I asked him, "have those men been living in there?"

"Since early October," he replied; "except for a few fluctuations here and there, this part of the line has not changed since then. But I do not mean that those men," and he pointed to the motionless, watching figures in the firing pits, "have lived there steady all that time. They have three days in the trenches, and three out, back at a reserve

BY DAY AND NIGHT, HOPING FOR AN ATTACK, SCANNING THE ENEMY'S LINES

place several miles. There they are off duty three days and then they come back."

"And of course their relief sleeps in the same dugout?" I asked.

"I'm afraid there is not very much sleep, only an hour here and there," he smiled. "One trench must constantly watch the other. Always attacks are being made. Sometimes we take the offensive for a week, sometimes the English. It all depends upon the way the line is moving. You cannot get too far ahead or too far behind. You must always think of your supports."

A shell screamed overhead and burst with horrible din not far behind.

"When one of the granatens falls into a trench," said the lieutenant easily, "it generally means about ten men killed. But to do that requires wonderful marksmanship. Consider that they must drop the shell into a groove in the earth not three feet wide. But sometimes they do," he added, "to tell the truth."

The entrances in the rear trench wall thereafter held a keen interest for me. I was trying to figure out how quickly one could dive into a hole like that if a shell burst; and then the absurdity of thus trying to beat the flying fragment of a shell came to me and I laughed, not entirely from mirth, either. We walked perhaps a hundred meters down the main street of this underground village, a street, by the way, roughly three hundred miles long, that you could follow from Mülhausen to the English Channel without once having to expose yourself in the open. From one of the candle-lighted dugouts I heard part singing—a lively air, doubtless from some German operetta—and above us shells whined and burst, roaring in the fields. It was while we were walking thus, peering to right and left into the life of the catacombs of mud, that a stentorian cry behind us seemed to spin the lieutenant round on his heels, and I followed him, thumping heavily back down the slippery pit.

"It's an attack," he shouted over his shoulder. "Get into one of the dugouts and stay there. And if they get us, wave your passport if they find you, and yell you're an American."

Indicating one of the little passages towards the firing pits, he gave me a shove and spat-tered away to take command. Down on all fours I went. I wondered if the two soldiers in the pit saw me. Apparently not. Their shoulders were hunched to their guns. I hesitated. Of course the dugout would be the safest place; but shells had been flying over the trench for an hour now and nothing had happened; and their shriek and heavy boom no longer seemed so terrifying. But then the lieutenant had strongly hinted about my being in the way. He had told me to get into that dugout and remain there. Was I not really under his orders?

Strange things to be reasoning out with yourself—points of

DEATH'S MOWING MACHINES IN WAITING

military etiquette, with the skies raining death and the whole line of the trenches blazing with a red, repelling flame. But war is strange, and now I wonder if in the firing line cowardice and bravery do really exist; if it is not rather one man's nervous system responding to reckless hysteria quicker than another's. You forgot the lieutenant's request; and that perhaps you owed it to someone to remain where it was safe—and dull. You forgot that these were not American soldiers leveling their guns not a stride away, and that they were Englishmen who were pouring up over the trenches across that muddy field and storming towards you. I never thought of nationality; that was a creation of man's. I thought of nothing; I only felt things. Something chaotic was going on; an inchaote impulse possessed one. It was to fire a gun. If only there was something to shoot, something to throw you into the surge of this fight so you could be thrilled more! The men in front were fighting away.

PIERCED WITH FLAME, WEIRD WITH BURSTING BOMBS, BLOTCHED WITH SPLITTING SHELLS

And then came the quick banging beat of machine guns, and I ran to where they were, pulse beating with them. As I ran, stumbling down the slippery trench, there seemed to jump out of the ground a soldier with black belts of cartridges slung over his shoulder. Then another darted up from another pit, and I knew they were bringing ammunition for the gun. In an ecstasy I followed them. At the second little passage they turned, and I turned too, and found myself crouching behind an armored wall of mud above which the machine gun lay between heavy bags. I saw a man's elbow jerking round in a circle; he was firing the gun.

And above even that incessant hellish clamor I heard the crackling report of rifles, one report seeming to run upon the other as though trays of dishes were constantly being dropped downstairs; and then the heavy booming of shells would deafen to the fierce spurting of shrapnel and the slapping impact of fragments of granatens in the mud.

Then a swift rush of air, as of a mighty halation, and rockets from "our" trenches began to swish, one after the other, in short, flaming as that terminated in a burst of greenish light, turning the night into a mad radiance so that we might better see to kill. I crowded forward, wanting to peer through a slit between the bags, but a soldier pushed me back. I was in the way. I cannot convey how that makes you feel, a realization that you are indeed in the way with these men fighting their lives and you just there watching them. I felt an awful guilt and longed to atone for it by helping them.

I ran from the machine gun, ducking in at the first pit I came to; and here I saw men who without a word, their movements as regular as machines, were loading, firing . . . loading, firing. By raising a trifle on my toes I could squint along their gun barrels and see the patch of open field that their port-holes framed. I saw a confusion of color—the green unearthly hue of the rockets, then a wavering red hue of fire that had a way of rushing at you, vanishing and then appearing farther back, rushing at you again. And I saw a patch of mud, glistening like mottled tarnished silver in the rain; and once, when a white rocket burst, the air seemed to be sparkling with myriads of drops of silver and diamonds. And the rain poured down, and the guns shook the sky, and the rifles rattled on.

I began to notice then, by craning my head from left to right, that the red waving line of fire which had a way of rushing at you and vanishing to appear again farther back, was slow now in appearing after it had itself somewhere in the mud

Continued on page 539

THE CARD THAT WAS THROWN AWAY

By RUTH G. WINANT, Extension Secretary, New York Evangelistic Committee

THE hot sun beat relentlessly down upon the awnings of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City offices one day last summer—early September—when the mail was brought in. One envelope contained a card, one of our "I want to get right with God" cards.

The front of the card had been filled in undecipherable writing, then thrown away. The finder wrote on it: "No doubt you will be surprised to receive a card in such condition. I saw this in front of my door and immediately 'I want to get right with God' attracted my attention. I do want to get right with God! I am not happy and life does not seem so worth living as when I was right with him. But that is a thing of the past and to me God is a Stranger."

The follow-up worker was away, and I said, "I can't lose a day. I must get hold of this girl at once. I called and found that she lived with her sister, but was employed during the day-time. I immediately wrote, asking her to lunch with me the next day, which would be Saturday.

On Saturday I waited until two o'clock, and as I was leaving the building was handed a note from the girl in which she made this statement: "I am glad there is some one in New York City who cares whether I go to the dogs or not." Later she said: "I realize that unless some one stretches out a helping hand soon I'll be so far gone to the devil that no one can save me."

The girl refused to lunch with me, saying that she "made such a fool of herself" by crying that she did not want to come. I immediately wrote her again, and waited a week and no reply came, and on the following Sunday I called to see her. She was one of the most beautiful and charming girls I had ever seen, and only twenty years old.

WE WENT into the living room, and, sitting six feet from me, the girl gazed at the rug, saying never a word. The silence lasted perhaps ten minutes, then suddenly she flung herself from her chair and on the floor where she sat, her head buried in my lap, her shoulders shaking with sobs, while she tried to tell me the story. A country girl comes to the great city to "see life," a married man with whom she had become infatuated and all the endless deceits and heartaches. An old story, but no less pitiful for its antiquity. The girl trembled. "He wants me to go away with him," she confessed.

We threshed it all out, and I found one sweet normal strain in the girl—her love for little children—especially her love for the man's little child, whom she had seen. I appealed to her for his sake not to go away with his father, as she was planning to do. We talked to God about it all, and the girl seemed moved.

For a time she did not see him; then she relapsed, and it seemed as though it had all been in vain; then at Christmas I sent her a little cretonne box for her bureau. For a week I had no reply, and I wondered. On New Year Day I had a card from her—just a little card, but signed "with love." On January 4 came a long letter, one sentence of which read: "You will be glad to hear that since January first I have broken with all the old affections and I am now determined to live a straight, clean life." The letter went on in a familiar strain, and the girl said: "You will never know what your little cretonne box has done for me. I put it on the corner of my bureau, and every time I looked at it I remembered that one straight, pure woman cared if I was straight and pure or not. Thank you for it."

"DOES the Evangelistic Committee work twelve months in the year? That is a question which we are often asked. Our street meetings, of which we conducted 2,544, in ten languages last season, are held in shops, tents, streets and in amusement parks; the meetings run from June, sometime from May, to the middle of September the first of October. Bible classes in the homes of converts of the summer's work and the visitation of converts continue the full twelve months.

In a street where last summer there were three murders in three months, this winter we are conducting seven Bible classes each week. Five of these classes meet in the homes of converts the work of 1914.

We received recently from the city statistics giving the number of murders, suicides and divorces and separations for the year ending December 31, 1914. It has been interesting since receiving them to ask people who know the city to guess the numbers. They are almost unbelievable; they are appalling. The murders for New York City for this period of time are 299; suicides, 636, and divorces and separations, 5,032. These figures are surely a challenge to Christian people, but perhaps no more a challenge than the following, compiled since the New Year:

The city's population is, in round numbers, 5,500,000. Of that number 500,000 have no church affiliation, or Gentile, Roman Catholic or Protestant. Of the 1,326,000 boys and girls of school age, about 876,000 are without Sunday school connection.

The New York Evangelistic Committee is entering upon the eleventh year of its work in this great field. The need constitutes a call, the opportunity is a challenge, the command of the Christ who wept over the city of Jerusalem is the motive that makes the Evangelistic Committee determined not to retreat in this year of unusual financial stress and strain, but rather to press forward, saying with the little drummer-boy, whose story has become almost proverbial: "Beat a retreat? My Master never taught me to beat a retreat!"

Other Evangelistic Work

IT IS long since New York City has felt the evangelistic urge as it is feeling it today. The outdoor services, which have become a fixed feature of religious work here, and the tent and shop meetings, are being planned on a most aggressive scale by the New York Evangelistic Committee and the National Bible Institute, the two leading organizations of this kind of work in New York. The various missions are feeling the same stimulus, and the churches are seriously considering the launching of a great interchurch revival campaign.

Believing always in the divine government of spiritual forces, there are two causes apparent for the religious stirring up in New York: the war in Europe with its tremendous widespread spiritual effects, and the Billy Sunday campaigns, which have shown themselves to be storm-centers of veritable evangelistic cyclones. Conducted in a temporary wooden tabernacle in the heart of a city, these campaigns have in every case swept wide surrounding areas within their influence.

New York City felt this influence while Mr. Sunday was in Philadelphia. The determined, but unsuccessful, effort to arrange for a Sunday campaign in New York was one positive reflection of that influence; and the wish to hold a revival campaign had taken such strong hold upon the churches that strong efforts are being made to proceed without Mr. Sunday's immediate assistance.

AND NOW the tabernacle meetings being conducted by Mr. Sunday in Paterson, so much nearer to New York, serve to keep the interest of the metropolis at high pressure. The Paterson campaign is attended with many signs of success. Mr. Sunday was slow to begin the trail-hitting, waiting for the exact psychological moment, which did not come until about the tenth day of the meetings. From then onward the number coming forward to seize the evangelist's hand in token of their acceptance of Christ as their personal Saviour has steadily increased. The audiences in the afternoon have not been as large as in Philadelphia, proportionately, but in the evenings, and especially at all the Saturday and Sunday meetings, the crowds have been immense and the enthusiasm high. On May 1 Mr. Sunday preached his booze sermon to two audiences of men with such power that in each case he had all the men on their feet cheering and practically committing themselves to vote for prohibition. Hundreds at these meetings hit the trail. The evangelist has Paterson keeping step with him now, and all the surrounding suburban towns are flocking to hear him.

The dramatic moment in Mr. Sunday's sermon was reached when he called fifteen bright-looking boys to the platform, and, lining them up, seized a large American flag, leaped to a position with one foot on his chair and the other on his pulpit, and waving the flag vigorously in air shouted: "I stand between these boys and the breweries. I would not give one boy for all the distilleries and saloons this side of hell. These boys are the raw material of your country!"

The effect upon his audience was thrilling; men were seen to wipe their eyes, and it took but a word more to get every man standing and cheering for prohibition.

Throughout the country reports are coming in of strong and serious interest being taken in revival meetings. It seems beyond question that the hour is rapidly approaching, if not already at hand, when the church will have the greatest opportunity in its history to take the world for Christ.

NEW LIGHT ON THE "PRODIGAL SON"

THE ANCIENT SUMERIAN CODE, JUST DECIPHERED, SHOWS THE PARABLE TO BE BASED ON LAW

BY PROFESSOR ALBERT T. CLAY, Yale Babylonian Department

THE discovery of the ancient Sumerian laws in the Yale Babylonian collection, which was announced in a previous issue of the Christian Herald, reveals the fact that our understanding of the parable of the Prodigal Son must be very materially modified. The code which contains the oldest known laws, and which has just been completely deciphered, contains a law which shows that it is highly probable that the parable is based upon legal grounds.

The tablet containing the laws is written in the Sumerian language. The full translation of the nine laws that are preserved on the tablet will shortly appear in a volume of texts with translations, issued by the Yale University Press. The first two laws, dealing with the accidental and intentional injury of a woman, have already been referred to in these columns. The third law refers to the loss of a hired boat; the fourth legislates upon the question discussed below; the fifth relates to the repudiation of a child guilty of unfilial conduct; the sixth concerns elopement; the seventh, seduction; the eighth and ninth deal with the loss of hired animals.

The fourth law reads as follows: "If a son say into his mother and his father, (thou art) 'not my father, not my mother'; from the house, field, plantation, servants, property, animals, he shall go forth and his portion to its full amount he (the father) shall give him. His father and his mother shall say to him, 'not our son.' From the neighborhood of the house he shall go."

This law legislates with reference to a son who, desiring to venture upon a separate career, renounces his sonship, receives his wages or portion, after which he leaves his home and is thereafter legally separated from his family. In other words, a son in good standing with his family, who desired to venture upon a separate career, could ask for his portion or wages, and take his departure. This does not imply unfilial conduct; for the child may have had a family of his own, and may have wished to provide for his own house. Such separations were doubtless often suggested by the patriarchal head of the family, due to limited conditions on the estate or for other reasons. It is quite reasonable to believe that such a custom existed among primitive agrarian and nomadic peoples.

The Code of Hammurabi deals at length with the laws of inheritance. The ancient Hebrew law is also explicit with reference to the distribution of an estate after the owner's death. The relation of the portion mentioned in the Sumerian laws to the share allowed by the law of inheritance is not stated. The amount received may have depended upon the years of service, or upon the will of the parents. It is reasonable to imagine that the portion of a son, who together with his own family of grown children had faithfully served the paternal estate for years, would be greater than that of a son who had just arrived at manhood. The Ham-murabi Code, in providing for an adopted child whom the father desired to repudiate, required that "he give him of his goods one-third of the portion of a son, and he shall go. He shall not give to him of field, garden, or house." This implies that the portion which an adopted child received upon being sent away differed from that which the child would

THE SUMERIAN CODE ON SONSHIP

This photograph shows that portion of the inscribed "Sumerian Code" (a hitherto newly discovered) which gives the earliest law that has yet come to light on the subject of inheritance. Professor Clay's translation of this hitherto undeciphered script puts a wholly new aspect on the parable of "The Prodigal Son," and enables us to rightly estimate the character and actions of the dramatic personae in this familiar Gospel story, and to give the Saviour's words a new interpretation.

have received as an inheritance. Several adoption deeds are known of the same period as the Hammurabi Code (about 2000 B.C.), which contain such provisions. To quote from one: "If Itani or Nidnat-Sin say to Mar-Ishtar, their adopted son, 'Thou art not our son,' he shall receive his portion as the child of Itani and Nidnat-Sin, and go away." But these conditions only provide for the case of parents repudiating adopted children. The newly discovered Sumerian Code, bearing upon the portion or wage, refers to the action taken by the child; and there is no distinction made as to whether the child so acting was an adopted or a real child.

The law under consideration shows that the child who renounced his sonship and received his portion was legally separated by his parents. This legal banishment contained in the words of the law, "(thou art) not our son," from the neighborhood of the house he shall go," was a provision of the greatest importance. It was prudential in character; although it was also, doubtless, a source of relief in many cases. The son who took this step knew that legally he had no further claim upon the estate. This provision annulled the law which provided a share in the estate for the son after the death of the father. It also protected the parents from any further demands. If the portion was squandered, the son could not legally impose upon them. It was also a wise provision in the interests of the other children. They were really party to the division which had been made. This law protected their interests in the estate, which they and perhaps their own children were helping to build up. It was a necessary accompaniment to a law which provided for a son's patrimony, and also for his securing his portion during the lifetime of his father.

The tenacity of custom among the peoples of Western Asia, which is known in many instances to have survived for millenniums, suggests the idea that this law throws light on the parable of the Prodigal Son (Luke 15: 11). In accomplishing his purpose, the son in the parable does not make a request, but rather a demand: "Father, give me the portion of substance that falleth to me." The Greek word translated "portion" is no more definite than it is in the codes and deeds referred to above. "And he divided unto them the living"; after which it is said of the son, that "he gathered all together and took his journey into a far country." And in his dire extremity, after he had squandered his portion, knowing that he was legally dead as a son, he decided that his lot would be better if he were one of his father's hired servants. He knew he had no right to ask his father for more than this. Upon his return his brother, the sole beneficiary—who is generally unjustly condemned, who, as the parable shows, had been most economical in his efforts to build up the estate—naturally showed anxiety as to what his father intended doing. Whereupon his father reminded him that all that he had was his; but at the same time he said that it was meet to rejoice over the return of his brother, who, though legally "dead," was still his own son.

This legal aspect of the parable does not seem to have been even surmised by the commentators. It heightens the contrast between the father, who, on the one hand, complied with what the law permitted the son to demand; and on the other hand, as the forgiving father, rejoiced over his return; not as a legal heir, but as a son.

THE MEASURE OF THE ANGEL

A SERMON

BY

REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.*

An evangelistic sermon from the text: "According to the measure of a man, that is, of an angel." Rev. 21: 17

WE MEASURE form; the angel measures spirit. We measure actions; the angel measures motives. We measure externalities; the angel measures spiritualities, and so it often happens that the judgment of the outside measurement is strangely altered, if not absolutely reversed, when things are judged "according to the measure of the angel." It might, then, be helpful to us to look round about our common life, and see in what spheres the measure of the angel might seriously alter the conclusions reached by the measure of partially earthly men.

Let us ask, then, in the first place, what size is the Church of the living God? How shall we measure it? You know what kind of measure is commonly used. We measure the length of the membership rolls in any particular town or city, and then we add the totals together, and we say the result represents the magnitude of the Church of God in that particular place. Or there is another method which is sometimes used, and which may be called the measure of the newspaper press. Men are placed at the doors of the various places of worship for the purpose of counting the number of those who attend, and the result is called a religious census, and is supposed to fairly represent the strength and size of the Church of the living God. Do you think that these conclusions would be in any way modified if the estimate were made according to the measure of an angel?

Where Narrow-Mindedness Errs

If an angel were to measure the strength and size of the Church of God in this city, would the result be larger than our combined membership rolls, or less? I have faith enough, and optimism enough, to think that it would be larger. I don't think that the fault of our measurement lies in its thoughtless and excessive inclusion, so much as in its narrow and faithless exclusion. Exclusiveness is the radical weakness of our spirits, and is therefore the defect in all our judgments. I think the angel would surprise us not by the paucity, but by the wealth of his conclusions. We should be made to wonder more at what we had thoughtlessly ignored than at what we had thoughtlessly approved. If we could only see the measure of the angel, I think our spirit of exclusiveness would stand severely re-proved. Was not that just what Christ was always doing? He was forever trying to batter down the walls of narrow-mindedness, and to show the Jews that the kingdom of righteousness was much larger than they believed. "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold." He stands where our poor measurement ends, and when we think we have counted all, he always says, "Other sheep I have." I believe that the world is growing in charity and in comprehensiveness of vision, and that "the thoughts of men are widening with the process of the suns." But in many respects we have not got the angel-measure yet! We often measure no farther than our own ecclesiastical fold. Do we measure as far as the angel? Or do we make a fence, and say that beyond that there is only darkness, ignorance, damnation and death? Is our measure one of inclusiveness that fears to shut out a solitary soul, or is our measure one of ecclesiastical exclusiveness which would consign a countless host to endless perdition?

* Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

Let us look again at Jesus and his disciples. I have said that he was always seeking to break down their exclusiveness and to give them a larger measure. They came to him one day very satisfied with a little work they had been doing for him. They were eager to give him evidence of their burning zeal. "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and we forbade him, because he followed not with us." Do you see their measure? "Does he walk with us, do as we do, keep in our ways? If so, he is right! If not, down with him!"

That was their measure, and so they measured him who was toiling to rid the world of devils. Now, let us see the measure of the angel. We heard him say a little while ago, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold." We shall hear the same tones again. "Forbid him not, for he that is not against us is on our side." He breaks down the fences, and in his broad inclusiveness embraces multitudes whom the disciples would have surely shut out! The measure of the angel is always inclusive. Measured by the angel, I believe the army of the living God becomes a multitude whom no man can number, far beyond our largest thought. Measured by the angel, I believe the world is far richer than we can conceive. "As the heavens are high above the earth, so are his thoughts higher than our thoughts," but to give us that height and breadth of thought is the ministry of grace and the burden of the Gospel, in order that we too might look out upon the world with God's largeness of heart, and estimate all things "according to the measure of an angel."

Now let us look at the subject from another angle. We are seeking to discover the contrast or the difference between the measure of the angel and the measure of the world, and so far we have applied ourselves to the consideration of the size of the Church of God. Now let us turn our inquiry in quite another direction. Who are the influential people according to the measure of the world, and how do these influential people stand when measured by the angel? We know who the influential are as measured by the world. They are the wise men after the flesh, the rich and the mighty. Now the angel does not measure the power inherent in noble birth, or the might which belongs to wealth. The angel measures the spiritual essence in a man, the divine nature in him; and in proportion to this is his influence declared. Who, then, is the most influential man in this city as measured by the angel?

How Men Measure

Let us help our thinking. Let us step into the imperial city of Rome in the year 68. Who is the most influential personage in the city? Oh, of that there can be no shadow of doubt! The emperor Nero, of course! His word is law; his smile is life; his frown is death. But I should like to ask the angel to show me the most influential man in Rome, and I think that the angel would lead me away from the emperor's palace to the emperor's prison, and there he would point out to me an old man, wearing chains about his ankles and wrists, feeble now, and almost done; and this poor, forgotten prisoner the angel would salute as the most influential person in Rome! Who is he? Paul the aged; more potent than empress or emperor, destined to live and sway the lives of others when Nero and his empire have passed into dust.

Step forward across the centuries to the year 1810. Who is the most influential man of the times? Surely it is a most needless question. Napoleon has gone from victory unto victory until now he is the master of Western Europe. His person towers like a Colossus before the gaze of the world, and to his countrymen he seems like a god. There is no question as to where the influence lies. It perhaps if we were to ask the angel to point it to us the most influential personage in the world the year 1810, he might take us away to a fire off chamber in China, where sits a lonely student, Robert Morrison, laboriously compiling a dictionary of the Chinese tongue, and translating into that language the wondrous story of the Christ. He is a man filled with the Spirit of God, and gave his life to the work, and so become a "living way" in that dark and unknown land. And does any one doubt that in ages to come, when that year 1810 is finally adjudged, it will be found that the most influential man was not Napoleon, though he strode the world like a Colossus, but the obscure man in China, introducing the Bible to the unnumbered millions of that tremendous country? Measured by current standards Napoleon towered above all; measured by the angel, I think the crown would be given to the missionary of the Cross.

The Angel and You

Will you take one more instance? Step forward to the year 1850. Who was the most influential man in England? The Duke of Wellington was living, though now a very old man. Lord Palmerston was beginning to fascinate his countrymen with his peculiar genius, and John Bright and Richard Cobden were in eminence and repute. Measured by current standards, one of these would have to be chosen if we wanted the most influential of his time. I think it possible that the angel might ignore these, and in our search for the most influential might lead us to Colchester, and pick out a local preacher as the man for whom we sought. For there, in the year 1850, an unknown local preacher was earnestly telling the story of the Gospel by preaching on the text, "Look . . . and be saved." And there was a young fellow in his congregation who was so moved by the man's earnestness as to appeal that he there and then gave his heart to the Lord, and that young fellow's name was Charles Haddon Spurgeon. Looking back now to that year 1850, and thinking of all that Spurgeon has done for the world, and remembering all the countless souls whom he has pointed to God, do you think that the recording angel would omit the name of that local preacher as one of the most influential men of his time? Palmerston and the Duke of Wellington might stand out with bright conspicuousness when measured by the standards of the world, but measured by the angel I think they would have to yield to the pre-eminent glory and influence of that unknown preacher who brought Spurgeon to the feet of his Lord.

Now, who is the most influential personage in this city? Where would the angel take us? May to one of our missions, and place his hand upon one of the most obscure of our teachers; may to one of you mothers, molding your child to the captain of some host of Christian chivalry! The angel looks for spiritual essence and measures that. What is our influence, according to the measure of an angel? What are you to the angel? A cipher or a spiritual center, out of which flow rivers of living water, to gladden and refresh the world? Would the angel pass you by, or would he stop and wonder and to praise your God? Again I ask you, what are you according to the measure of the angel?

GOSPEL BREVITIES FROM MANY POINTS

—EVANGELIST ARTHUR CRANE and Gospel Singer George W. Balph have just closed a successful meeting in Portsmouth, Va., with many additions to the churches. A feature of the meetings was special outdoor services, when the evangelist addressed crowds from an automobile.

—THE SIXTEENTH ANNUAL MISSIONARY reception was given at the Union Missionary Training Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., April 8. Addresses were made by eighteen returned missionaries who represented nine denominational boards and eleven foreign countries. Mrs. Lucy Drake Osborn, founder of the institute, was present and took part both afternoon and evening. Rev. Joseph Beech, D.D. (a former student), president of Union University, West China, told of his experiences during fifteen years in China, and urged the need of united work in education as well as in evangelization.

—PROFESSOR FRENCH STROTHER, of Mexico, Mo., is one of the veteran readers of the Christian Herald. He was born in Virginia in 1825 and has been a prominent figure in Missouri educational work for over fifty years. He has been at different times schoolmaster, pioneer settler, seminarian, superintendent of public schools and college professor. The town of Strother, Mo., was named for him. He is a strict Presbyterian and believes in doing mission work with the Christian Herald, which he has sent to as many as fourteen persons in a season. In his ninetieth year he is still hale, hearty and vigorous, doing the Lord's work zealously.

—THE CENTRAL MORMON region is nearly as long as from Lake Erie to Florida, and about as wide as Ohio. Practically all the homes in this great region are visited by the workers of the Utah Gospel Mission of Cleveland in its wagon work. These workers have visited about 14,000 homes since the middle of last July, using carefully 1,550,000 pages of special Gospel literature, besides holding about 275 meetings. Some of the workers must leave in June and their places must be filled with new men. The Utah Gospel Mission headquarters are at 1854 East Eighty-first Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

—REV. F. B. MEYER, of London, has written the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago to cancel all his engagements this summer at the various Bible conferences and conventions in this country, partly on account of his return to his former pastorate of Christ Church, made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Len G. Broughton, but chiefly because of the war.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON S. COOPER

Self-Possession

SUNDAY, May 23. Luke 21: 19. "In your patience ye shall possess your souls." To possess one's soul is an infinitely grander thing than to possess some magnificent estate. There is many a man who owns thousands of broad acres who has never owned the fair realm of his soul. Ask him for an inventory of his estate, and he will produce one recording the contents of every nook and corner of his wide domain. Ask him for an inventory of his soul! Ask him what powers he has in the world within and what he has of them, and whether there is peace and harmony in that mysterious kingdom! He can account his wealth in personality: ask him what treasures he has in personality! In what measure does he possess his own soul? There is something ironical in a man owning many things and yet not owning himself. He has gained the world; he has never gained his own soul.

No the secret of self-possession is to be found in Christ. It is through him that we discover our souls. We find ourselves in finding him. Our wealth is big is unveiled to us in the measure in which we enter into the revelation of his glory. Our judgments troop out at the call of his communion. The deeper our communion the wealthier is the response. The finer the climate the more luxurious the growth. We never know how much there is until we are discovering how much there is in Christ. Our powers remain like sleeping seeds until the heavenly air is breathing round."

Who do not come into these possessions in a day. Battle-deeds may be ours in a moment. They are ours by faith in the living Christ, and they are ended to us in the moment when faith is born. Every day of faithful walking with the Lord brings us more and more into possession of our spiritual estates, as every day we have new surprises in "the unsearchable riches in Christ." Therefore "in your patience ye shall possess your souls."

J. H. J.

Our Safe Refuge in Time of Trouble

MONDAY, May 24. Isaiah 32: 1-8. "A man shall be as a covert and hiding-place imply on; the rivers of water, thirst; the shadow of a rock, fatigue and weariness. These are frequent experiences of human existence. No ordinary man meet all these needs for another. He who is all that this verse stands for must be the Son of Man, the only Man, the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. Thank God "the Man Christ Jesus" can be to all ages and to all men their fulfilment, their satisfaction, and their rest. And "it is because he loved him to be made in all points like unto his brethren," that he might be their rivers of water, and the shadow of a great rock.

The desert may be all around you with its waste and isolation. No shelter from sunbeams like swords; no trickling stream with its margin of green verdure; no relief to the eye from the monotony of broken sand. But lo! yonder stands a great rock once cleft for you, with blue dimness in its advance, moist places where the water drips on the rocks, and a deep shadow, because it intercepts itself between you and the sun or sand-orchard. Jesus is enough for us. "All our capacious souls can wish in him doth richly meet." Let us go to him for everything! Our needs will only be met when we view new and unexpected resources. Let us say to him: "Let me hide myself in thee. Fill my pitcher and let it down upon thy hand at may drink. Let us rest under thy shadow, and the blast of the terrible is as a storm against the wall."

F. B. M.

The Two-Talented Man

TUESDAY, May 25. Matthew 25: 22. "And he that received two talents came and said, 'Thou deliveredst unto me two talents: lo, I have gained other two talents.'" We may divide the parable into three divisions. There are the five-talented men, or the men of genius or of unusual wealth or unusual advantages of education and environment; there are the two-talented men who are the average men who are doing the best of the world, not despising their gifts simply because they are not the five-talented people; then there are the one-talented men who are the failures, who bury their gift and lose out entirely in the life of life.

It is the man of two talents who most concerns the majority of mankind. They are the everyday workers, the men who obey orders, who are followers more often than they are leaders; they do three-fourths of the business of life.

It takes more power sometimes to be a two-talented man, the man who follows in the prosaic and mechanical round of common duties, without the inspiration of the larger vision, than it does to lead a successful life from the point of vantage of the man of five talents. The Bible, however, gives large place to two-talented men. The disciples were such men, fisher folk and mechanics, not poets or commanders or great natural leaders.

What are the inspirations which remain for the two-talented people? First, the discovery of our special, particular gift from God. "Every man's life is a plan of God." Another inspiration for the average worker comes by realizing the common gifts of life. There is for example the talent of time, which belongs to us all, twenty-four hours a day. What shall we do with it? Keeping the eyes concentrated upon the day's task, doing it thoroughly and up to the limit of our best ability, helps to make the two-talented man a four-talented man, and one of the world's greatest workers. Live today!

Lord, for tomorrow and its needs I do not pray;
Keep me from stain of sin, just for today.

C. S. C.

The River Whose Draught is Life

WEDNESDAY, May 26. John 7: 37-53. "Rivers of living water." What music there is in these words! We are transported to the banks of a mighty river, down the bed of which waters are ever hurrying to the sea. Melting snows feed its springs, a hundred rills replenish its flow, it is oxygenated as it leaps from cataract to cataract, and everywhere it is the emblem of fertility, freshness and abundance. But this is not all; the Lord speaks of rivers. It is as though he bade us add the Missouri to the Mississippi, and to these the Amazon, and to these the Ganges and the Danube. River added to river, stream to stream, and all to set forth the fresh abundance of holy influence that should stream from each thirsty soul, who being filled with the Holy Spirit should overflow.

Do you know anything of this? Is your life comparable to a river, nay, to many rivers of holy influence? Before this is possible you must come to Jesus and drink; you must be satisfied with him; he must be your life. And, in addition, you must know what it is to be willing to pass on what you have received.

If these two conditions are fulfilled, place your fingers on these words, as the writer did on one memorable occasion, and claim that in all their breadth and depth they shall be realized in your experience. The world would soon cease to be thirsty if only each believer were to resemble the ancient river of Paradise, which was parted into four heads. "This spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive." But mind to guard against the silting-up process! Things small as sand-grains sometimes block great rivers.

F. B. M.

The Blessedness of Knowing and Doing

THURSDAY, May 27. John 13: 17. "If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them." Two problems in religion: knowing and doing. The first is comparatively easy, in the second lies the test of the Christian. "Practice," said Robert Louis Stevenson, "is a more intricate and desperate business than the toughest theorizing: to be rich in admiration and free from envy, to rejoice greatly in the good of others, to love with such generosity of heart that your love is still a dear possession in absence and unkindness—the walk, not the rumor of the walk, is what concerns righteousness."

Christ is our example of the doer of righteousness. He is the immortal and historical figure of symmetry between knowing and doing, between creed and action. His great distinction from so many prophets and religionists lay in the fact that he matched his doctrine by his life. "He went about doing good," not simply talking about it.

An eminent minister was being examined as to his theology in one of our churches a few years ago. A humble parishioner sat in the back seat, and at a certain point in the proceedings rose and asked to speak. He said substantially as follows: "I don't know much about theology, but I do know that my pastor has virtually been the only friend I have had for more than three years. When my wife and children were ill he came every day, climbing three flights of stairs to see us and bring us provisions and also new encouragement. He never asked pay for his services. He never refused any application for help as far as I know. He is today the best example I have ever seen of the Christ whom he preaches. If I could find out his brand of theology, I would accept it; it is good enough for me." That minister had succeeded in the high test, namely, in the religion of doing. "If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them."

It is well for us to examine at times our creed, to make sure that it works in kindness, in love and in service in our everyday opportunities to our fellows. There is a truth in the couplet:

So many prayers, so many creeds,
So many paths that wind and wind,
While just the art of being kind
Is all the sad world needs.

C. S. C.

All Good Things Our Father Shall Supply

FRIDAY, May 28. Philippians 4: 11-23. "My God shall fulfil every need of yours." The apostle was filled because he had received the gifts of his friends, and now God would fulfil their need. What they had done in the lower sphere for him would be repeated in a higher sphere by God. The measure with which they had meted out their stores for the supply of his wants would be returned to them brimming full, not with the supplies of physical need, but with the eternal and unsearchable riches of Christ. This is the law of God's world. Lend the Master your boat and he will return it laden to the water's edge with fish. Place your upper room at his disposal for a meal, and he will fill it with the Pentecostal Spirit. Commit to his hands your loaves and fish, and he will add twelve baskets of fragments to a full meal.

We are not told that God will fulfil all our desires, but our needs. We desire many things that our Father cannot give, except to the hurt of our best life. There is no promise that he will grant these. But every real need shall be met sooner or later, with absolute satisfaction, so that those who trust him shall be able to say, as the apostle in verse 18: "I have all and abound." But we must avail ourselves of these supplies by faith. They are there, and we must take them.

A poverty-stricken Indian once came to a Western settlement for help. A bright-colored ribbon suspended a small pouch round his neck. On being asked what it was, he said it was a charm given him years before. It proved on examination to be a regular discharge from the army, signed by George Washington himself, entitling him to a life-pension! We must ask . . . seek . . . knock . . . and reckon that we have the things we have sought! "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of."

F. B. M.

The Soul's Season of Greatest Opportunity

SATURDAY, May 29. Luke 4: 19. "To preach the acceptable year of the Lord." What if the Jewish people had fully realized that the year of the Lord had come to them? That the long-promised and prophesied Messiah was with them, beginning his ministry? No doubt many more would have accepted him. Jesus warned them when he said, "O that thou hadst known the things that belong to thy peace!" Such periods of visitation have come to many nations who have rejected the Christ and crumbled into the dust of centuries.

The acceptable year comes to individuals in hours of bereavement, monetary losses and afflictive providences. The Spirit strives, the Saviour knocks, the angels minister, but how many shut the heart's door against him who came to preach the glorious Gospel to the poor, to heal the broken-hearted, to give deliverance to the captive, sight to the blind and liberty to the bruised! It is never the year of our Lord to souls that reject him. Every year in sin belongs to the enemy.

The year of our Lord has many blessed memorial days, in which the church seeks to make Christ more real to men; but those who refuse to make it the acceptable year have no real angels' anthem of peace and good will, no Christmas celebration, no Good Friday, no Easter Sunday, no Ascension Day, no Lord's Supper, and no looking for his appearing at his second coming.

E. W. C.

THE SINKING OF THE LUSITANIA

THE giant Cunarder Lusitania, one of the finest and swiftest steamers that ever crossed the Atlantic, was sent to the bottom of the sea while within ten miles of the coast of Ireland, on the afternoon of May 7, by a torpedo attack. Of a total of 2,160 souls on board, including passengers and crew, about 700 were believed to have been saved up to noon of the following day, although there were hopes that the number of the rescued would ultimately prove larger.

It was a terrible tragedy of the war, and one which suddenly involved the great vessel when least expected. Warnings had been given from various sources before she sailed, that there would be special danger on that last trip; but while a few had shrunk from the voyage, the passengers as a whole had no thought of peril. The Lusitania was strong and so staunchly built that it was not believed that any single torpedo could do her serious injury.

While the passengers were at luncheon a little after two in the afternoon, suddenly there came a shock to the great vessel, which trembled under the impact. The engines stopped almost immediately, for the hull of the giant ship had been struck directly over the engine room. Faces blanched and people rose from the tables terror-stricken. Then came a second shot, forward, over the cargo section, which was followed by explosions apparently within the vessel. The big liner began to list. Wireless appeals were sent out for aid and the order was given by Captain Turner to launch the lifeboats. Ten were manned and quickly filled with passengers, between four and five hundred finding seats.

During this time of excitement, although many keen eyes had scanned the water about, very few had caught even a glimpse of the enemy. Yet all knew that the unseen foe was a submarine, possibly several of them, for the liner was within the radius of German submarine operations.

It is said that owing probably to the heavy list the Lusitania could not launch many of her lifeboats. Responding to the appeals for help several tugs and trawlers set out from Kinsale Head, less than ten miles distant, to the rescue, and steamers nearby, which had picked up the calls for help, also started to aid the sinking liner. A number of these succeeded in taking off several hundred passengers. The tug Stormcock took about 160, including some of the crew, and the trawlers and other boats about 300, and three torpedo boats 45. It is said that about 300 of the rescued were taken to Clonakilty, near Kinsale, and a smaller number to Kinsale. The report of First Officer Jones of the Lusitania, made shortly after the disaster, was that between five and six hundred were saved, but there were still hopes that many more would prove to have been rescued when all the facts were known.

Within twenty minutes after the first torpedo struck, the giant vessel began to sink by the head. Captain Turner, who was among the saved, said: "There was only fifteen minutes from the time she was struck until she began to go down bow foremost. It was a dreadful sight. I fear that few of the officers were saved. They acted bravely."

Other officers of the lost vessel agree that no warning was given by the attacking enemy, and no opportunity afforded to save non-combatants. The British Admiralty issued the official announcement about midnight of Friday that the attack was made in broad daylight and absolutely without warning. Some of those on board were of the opinion that seven torpedoes were discharged at the Cunarder and only two of them hit. The second torpedo to strike is believed to have exploded a large quantity of ammunition which was stored in the cargo section, and that this was followed by other internal explosions, after which the steamer began to list.

The Cunard Company gives the following as the nationality of the passengers: Saloon, British 179, Americans 106, Greek 3, Swede 1, Mexican 1, Swiss 1. Second class: British 521, Americans 65, Russian 3, Belgian 1, Holland 3, French 5, Italian 1, unknown 2. In the steerage there were about 13 Americans. There was thus a total of 184 Americans, but this figure may be increased owing to the fact that shortly before the Lusitania left her dock in New York on May 1, 163 passengers were transferred to her from the Anchor liner Cameronia, whose sailings had been canceled, that vessel having been chartered by the British Admiralty.

Submarines were known to be in the neighborhood of St. George's Channel on Friday, and were seen by persons on shore near Galihead and also by the steamer Narragansett, which was fired at and narrowly escaped being torpedoed in the neighborhood of the Lusitania wreck about two hours later.

When the news of the sinking of the big Cunarder reached England it aroused tremendous excitement. In London and Liverpool crowds surrounded the Cunard offices and white-faced men and sobbing problem which the administration must face. President Wilson was stunned when the news of the torpedoing of the big liner was received. A meeting of the cabinet was arranged for the following day at which the matter would be taken up for full discussion, with a view to determining what steps should be taken by our government. It is the most serious crisis we have yet had since the European war began. Should the American lives prove as large as is feared, it will be difficult to restrain public opinion, but the administration will do its utmost to deal with the situation in the light of international law. It is considered probable that new representation will be made by our State Department to Germany including all the cases involved in which American interests have been attacked and American lives lost. If it is established beyond doubt that the Lusitania was not warned before being torpedoed, that fact will add to the gravity of the situation. There is even talk of a session of Congress but it is unlikely that any step in that direction will be taken later developments should render it necessary.

America Receives the News

CONSTERNATION seized all classes when the first reports of the tragedy appeared in the press. The earliest account was too meager, stating only that the Lusitania had been torpedoed and leaving all details to the imagination. The public was told the number of persons aboard and hazard some guesses as to the fate, which added to the public apprehension. The Cunard offices were quickly besieged by friends of the passengers and crew, but officers without other information than that the boat had been attacked.

Little by little facts were learned by the British authorities and transmitted at large through the media. As new editions of the papers appeared depicting these facts and publishing lists of the passengers, the public excitement increased. The news spread appeared in the early editions of the afternoon papers of Friday, May 7, and night came without specific confirmation. The names of various prominent individuals who were aboard had accentuated the public interest, as all sections of the country and many cities are represented in the list.

Seldom has the American public awakened in greater anxiety than it did on Saturday morning, May 8. The press was eagerly scanned for the latest word, and when it was seen that the death-list might reach over a thousand, the public was amazed. The feeling was of grief and dismay, rather than anger, although in many quarters warlike utterances were heard. Eyes were turned upon Washington, and the feeling arose that the United States had been brought face to face with a crisis by this tragedy of the war.

One notable and significant effect of the receipt of the news was the instant collapse of stocks. Panic leaped onto the stock exchanges and ruled operations from the rumors first began to appear that the Lusitania had gone down. No class of stock seemed to escape the demoralization, a price dropped with disastrous speed. Bethlehem steel, which had been the most conspicuous stock in the recent financial works display, was the first to fall to earth and bur deeper than any other, comparatively. This frantic attempt to dispose of stock holdings reflected a fear that the United States would be drawn into the war.

It was pointed out by the New York Times that since May 17, when the naval war zone decree was announced by the United States, 91 merchant vessels, most of them British, have been destroyed, and more than 1,200 lives by submarine and mine attack.

Many well-known Americans were among the passengers of the ill-fated vessel, and it is feared that the majority have gone down with the ship. Among those who sailed were Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Hubbard, Frohman, Justus Miles Forman, Major F. W. Pearl, children, Dr. Frederick S. Pearson, H. B. Baldwin, and others known in the world of finance and public affairs. Up to May 8 it was not known how many Americans were saved, but a published list of 50 survivors known to have been rescued does not include any of the above excepting Major Pearl and family. They were also among the passengers a number of Englishmen, Americans and Canadians on their way to take part in the war.

The confidence of the Cunard Line in the ability of the Lusitania to make the trip in safety led to the prominent place in the press on the day before her last sailing of an advertisement inserted by the Imperial German Embassy warning travelers intending to embark on the Atlantic voyage that a state of war existed between Germany and her allies, Great Britain and her allies, and travelers sailing in the zone on ships of Great Britain or her allies did so at their women were seen everywhere. Many were wildly seeking information regarding friends and relatives who had taken passage on the unfortunate vessel. Americans in London besieged Ambassador Page for information as to the fate of their friends. The ambassador inquired of the British Foreign Office whether any mines had been placed at the spot where the Lusitania sank, and was informed that there were no mines in the locality.

Copyright, International News Service

LUSITANIA, "THE QUEEN OF THE SEAS," AND HER COMMANDER, CAPTAIN TURNER

A wireless despatch from Berlin via London, May 10, says: "The German Government has cabled to the State Department at Washington an expression of deepest sympathy over the loss of American lives through the destruction of the Lusitania. Germany, however, reiterates her declaration that the responsibility rests entirely with the British Government."

The scenes of excitement and sorrow enacted in the English city, when the great disaster was fully realized, recalled those that took place immediately after the Titanic tragedy. Everybody seemed to be under an intense strain. It was as though the whole nation had been stunned with the shock.

It is recognized in Washington that the sinking of the Lusitania and the loss of over one hundred American lives constitutes a new and very grave

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE. For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

THE WAR IN EUROPE

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

THE question of finance has been put very much to the fore during the past week, as a result of the speech of Lloyd George, the British chancellor of the exchequer, in the House of Commons, in which he stated that the cost of the war to date to Great Britain was $3,475,000,000. Since the beginning of hostilities the direct cash cost of the war to Great Britain, to England, approximately $5,000 a day, Sundays included. The national debt of Great Britain, which in July, 1914, was $3,475,000,000, today $5,600,000,000.

Enormous as are these figures the expenditures of Russia have been very small. For the first three months of the war, according to the Russian finance minister, $392,000,000. This expense has lately been somewhat decreased, but even then it is an enormous figure of about $1,000,000 a day. France is said to be spending less than the other two, but will still attain the enormous sum of $1,482,000,000 by the time the war is complete.

The chancellor estimated that the total war expenses from August 1, 1914, to July 31, 1916, if the war continued during that period, would be $82,000,000, as he anticipated that the expenses would be much less the second year than the first, and which, in case of the war continuing that long, he expected that it would be necessary for Great Britain to advance at least billions of dollars, perhaps more, to Russia, to enable her to continue.

When Japan made war on Germany last autumn, it was the announced intention of Germany to return Kiautschow to China, the theory being that Germany, in compelling China to grant her a perpetual lease of the site of that town, had used her power, and that she proposed to rectify this. At the time many people in Japan and the Japanese first hand rather doubted this truism, and the news of the movement that Japan is actually moving an army China in support of some of the demands made by Japan on China, the acceptance of which by China would immediately reduce her to the rank of a vassal state, seems to indicate that these doubts were well founded. The report of the financial result of the year to one of the leading hotels in this city is of considerable interest in showing how the war has paralyzed business in that city.

This particular hotel, by reason of its situation and reputation has built up for itself a clientele, and hence has had business under almost any circumstances. The report for the year 1913 was $25,563; of 1914, $2,563.

Germany began during the war a new campaign with submarines against one of the sources of British food supply, by attacking and sinking the British fishing trawlers in the North Sea, whence Great Britain draws most of her fish supply. During the past twenty-five of these trawlers were sunk. Fish is a staple of food greatly needed by the poorer classes in England, particularly in the industrial towns. Some of my friends may remember the fish shops which are on every street corner in certain districts of Sheffield, Leeds, Manchester, etc.

The celebration at Quarto,

Italy, on the occasion of the dedication of the monument to Garibaldi, which the advocates of Italian intervention in the war seized as an occasion for a demonstration in favor of such intervention, using the poet Gabriele d'Annunzio as the instrument, duly took place on the appointed day, the 5th of May. An enormous crowd was present, but though disorder was looked for, for which reason the king did not go, everything passed off quietly. In spite of the many rumors, duly cabled to us, there are as yet no serious signs that Italy really contemplates a change from her position of strict neutrality. The same is true of both Rumania and Bulgaria.

Australia and New Zealand have undertaken to raise another contingent for the British army, but these will not be ready for some time. The losses of the Canadian troops up to the 20th of April are reported heavy, particularly among the officers. Late last week Zeppelins appeared over several places in England, notably Ipswich and Lowestoft, and dropped bombs. Little damage was done and the raid was of very small consequence.

CAPTAIN ALFRED GUNTER OF THE GULFLIGHT

The news which reaches us from the land and sea campaigns against the Dardanelles continues fragmentary and unsatisfactory, and it is impossible to harmonize the conflicting official reports of the combatants. As far as can be gathered the following seem to be the events that have certainly taken place:

On the European side of the straits the British on April 25 succeeded in landing troops at six places on the peninsula of Gallipoli. Thereafter, at three of these places, the forces were driven back and had to be taken off. At the other three the troops made good their positions, entrenched, and succeeded in repulsing the determined and sustained have taken up a strong position extending across the peninsula from a point a couple of miles north of Cape Tahek to a point near De Tott's Battery, while an advanced point has been successfully established at Kleithra, which place is about five miles from the extreme end of the peninsula.

These troops have as yet made no attack on the land side of the forts, apparently. The interior of the peninsula is very rough, hilly country, without roads in our sense of the word, and forms very difficult ground to advance on, presenting many natural advantages to a defense. This defense, the British say, has been strong and unrelaxing, and the resultant casualties on both sides have been very heavy.

While these things were taking place on the land, the allied fleets were bombarding the forts from the straits, and by indirect fire from the Gulf of Saxos. Several Turkish villages are said to have been destroyed, and the towns of Gallipoli and Maidos set on fire. Whether the forts have been appreciably damaged is unknown; the Allies say that they have been, and the Turks say that they have not. At all events, they are still in condition to resist, and the fleet has not, up to the present time, been able to penetrate any distance into the Dardanelles. The same difference of opinion exists in regard to the effect of the fire of the forts on the fleet. The Turks claim to have seriously damaged the French warship, the Jean d'Arc, and three or four British ships, which report is denied by the Allies. Some torpedo boats admittedly were sunk in the operation of landing the troops.

The French landed troops on the Asiatic side of the straits at Kum Kali. These were furiously attacked by the Turks and could not hold their positions, with the result that they were taken off to their transports and again landed, but this time at a point fourteen miles down the coast, from whence it is planned to have them work their way overland to the rear of the Turkish forts on the Asiatic side.

The Russian Black Sea fleet several times during the week tried to assist the attack on the southern entrance to Constantinople, by bombarding the northern end of the entrance from the mouth of the Bosphorus. Apparently this bombardment was without much effect, although the bulletins thereof were rather glowing. Nothing more has been heard of the army the Russians were stated to have assembled near Odessa, to land on the northern Turkish coast, to make a direct attack on the Turkish capital itself, although it was said that it was actually on the transports over ten days ago.

In their campaign in the Transcaucasus, the Russians won, according to their reports, quite a victory during the week and as one result succeeded in driving the Turkish forces south of the Russian boundary line toward Erzerum. The Turkish loss was heavy, some six to seven thousand in all.

Typhus is reported to have broken out in that region, and if it has attained anything like the stage of an epidemic, will have a material effect on the military situation there.

The condition of affairs in

(Continued on page 534)

THE GULFLIGHT, NOW LOST TO AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

as over 6,000. This is quite a large percentage. Sydney cables us that the casualties published there, among the Australian and New Zealand troops, which have recently been in action at the Dardanelles, etc., are also very attacks made upon them by the Turks. The most important of the positions thus held was at Sedd-el-Bahr on the extreme point of the peninsula. At the present time these three landing forces have succeeded in uniting, and

RETURNING A "SEAPLANE" AIRSHIP TO A CRUISER IN THE DARDANELLES AFTER A FLIGHT OVER FORTS

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

The Power of Organized Religion

THERE are few agencies in the world capable of accomplishing so much for the spiritual and material welfare of the people as organized religion. There is hardly a community of any considerable size of which it cannot be said with truth that the combined forces of organized religion in that community would be equal to almost any reasonable task they might undertake.

At this time of widespread religious revival, many cities are taking stock of their religious power and influence, New York among the number. There are in the metropolis church properties representing, according to the last census, $153,925,740. In the intervening years this has become many millions more. Of these capitalized religious bodies, over fifty-seven per cent. are yielding the desired results from these vast investments. Yet, out of a total of nearly two million communicants of all the faiths represented, only one-fifth is Protestant. This is regarded as convincing evidence that the spiritual activities of many of the Protestant churches are much less than they should be. It must not be forgotten, however, that New York has a religious problem quite different from that which exists in other cities. A very large proportion of its immigration is Catholic, and this has been so for many years past; hence, the Catholic growth is steadily larger in proportion than the Protestant, while the influx of adherents of the Jewish, Russo-Greek, and other faiths has helped still further to keep down the Protestant ratio. But even with all of this competition, the Protestant churches, numbering over 1,100, or two-thirds of the whole, have not shown the gains that might have been expected.

Outside of all this there is the great multitude of the unchurched who are affiliated with no denominational organization, and only a small proportion of whom are now reached by Gospel ministrations. Existing agencies for work of this character are obviously insufficient. Missionary effort in the metropolis, now largely a matter of summer campaigns, should be pushed with increased energy all the year round.

Again, we must recognize the fact that the attractions of suburban life are responsible for the decline of many of the city Protestant churches. Every year witnesses an increase of the continuous hegira from city to country. But even with this draft on their numbers, the churches should be able, with a new infusion of zeal for service, to bring in enough new communicants to maintain a good average. How to accomplish this will be one of the problems of the coming "forward movement" in Protestantism in New York and other large cities. That the problem can be solved effectively is demonstrated by the experience of the Protestant churches of Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Boston, Cleveland, Baltimore and other cities which all show gains.

Billy Sunday expresses the conviction that the people of New York are "hungry for the old-time religion," and a large proportion of the metropolitan pastors have come to the same conclusion. Formidable preparations for the coming revival are already on the way. If all the churches unite and utilize at every point their organized energies, material as well as spiritual, in faith and confidence, sparing neither toil nor means, the great awakening will assuredly come.

The Chinese Crisis

CHINA'S negotiations with Japan have apparently reached a critical stage. She has rejected the most drastic of the demands made upon her, and especially those that relate to the interference of Japan with her political, financial, military and religious affairs. One of the principal demands, which is of special interest to the Christian churches of America, is that in which Japan aims to exercise the right of advising with the Peking government regarding the propagation of Buddhism in China. In view of the serious situation, a number of Christian Chinese pastors in America have issued an address appealing for aid and sympathy. "A dark hour has come upon China," they write; "our very independence as a nation is threatened; also the future of America's religious and commercial interest in our nation. . . . It was the aroused Christians of America who recently delivered our fellow disciples of Korea from prison, torture and probable death at the hands of the Japanese. You can do as much for imperiled China, if you will but again lift aloft the white standard of Christian justice and brotherhood for nations as for men. This is America's opportunity to play the good Samaritan to China, which is being robbed and beaten on the world's highway." The address then recites Japan's course at Tsingtau, which she still holds, and her "amazing demands" on China at a time when the great powers of Europe are at war. These demands, they claim, "could not survive for an hour in the clear light of an international conference." They are dependent for their success wholly upon the fact that other nations cannot now give them serious attention. Under cover of the world-turmoil, "Japan can overthrow China's rights and perpetrate wrongs that will set back peace and progress in the Far East for many generations."

There are still hopes that a clash may be averted and that the influence of our own government and that of Great Britain may help towards bringing about an adjustment of the difficult situation, without involving any of the more serious possibilities to which the appeal of the Chinese pastors gives expression. The situation is most unfortunate for the Chinese. An ultimatum from Tokyo would probably be the prelude to a military occupation, to which the unorganized forces of China could offer but feeble resistance. It is Japan's season of opportunity, and she seems resolved to make the most of it.

Scripture Cities in the War

ONE by one, the ancient cities of the Bible are being drawn within the active war zone. Only a few days ago the cable announced that Smyrna was being attacked and that troops had landed near Ephesus, some thirty-five miles to the southeast. Each of these localities has a history reaching back almost to the mythic age. Smyrna, the Izmir of the Turks, was a great commercial city 2,600 years ago and has often been despoiled in wars. It was destroyed in B.C. 627, and lay in ruins for almost four hundred years. Alexander the Great planned to rebuild it, but the restoration of its glories was left to others. It became again one of the most magnificent of Asian cities, and, although repeatedly war-swept and almost wrecked by earthquakes, it maintained its attractiveness. Its schools for science and philosophy were far-famed. Although a center of idolatry, it became one of the earliest cities where Christianity secured a foothold. The spiritual condition of its church, in a time of persecution and suffering, is mentioned in the Apocalypse. It was the scene of Polycarp's martyrdom, and the Jews, who made common cause against him with the Gentiles, are denounced in Revelation 2: 9, as "a synagogue of Satan." It has been a Turkish possession for seven hundred years.

Ephesus, too, has an illustrious history. Alternately the prize of Lydian, Persian, Greek, Macedonian and Roman armies, it became at last the prey of the Moslems. In Roman days, it was a seat of the Christian faith. The church had begun auspiciously and had borne much, but its love had grown cold and its zeal and enthusiasm had declined. "Thou didst leave thy first love," wrote John in rebuke and warning. Yet, despite its faults, the church in Ephesus was a notable spiritual landmark. Here the first seeds of the new faith were sown soon after Pentecost. It was the home of Paul's friends, Priscilla and Aquila, and the scene of the apostle's spiritual labors and those of Timothy, his disciple. Here, too, was the center of Diana-worship, and the great temple in which was the image that tradition declared had "fallen from heaven."

As the great world-war develops in the East, other Biblical cities are likely to be involved, including those of Palestine. Students of Scripture are watching the progress of events with intense interest, and in the general expectation of remarkable changes.

What Faith Does

IN AN attack on the Christian religion Robert G. Ingersoll wrote: "The doctrine that future happiness depends upon beliefs is monstrous. The notion that faith in Christ is to be rewarded by an eternity of bliss, while a dependence upon reason, observation and experience merits everlasting pain, is too absurd for refutation, and can be believed only by that unhappy mixture of insanity and ignorance, called faith."

Ingersoll understood many things, and said many things which were bright and true. But many of the biggest facts of life he did not see at all. Many of the fundamental ideas of religion he did not understand. The foregoing statement faintly shows that he never began to understand faintly the New Testament teaching about faith.

Faith is not primarily the thing that opens heaven's door to us. Faith is the thing that opens our own hearts to the transforming power of Christ.

Merely to say "I believe" will have not the highest value as a passport to immortal life. "Vay o ye me Lord, Lord," said Jesus sternly, "and do the things which I say?" We shall be saved if we are; we shall be saved by what we have done. But we shall need faith to make us what we are and to empower us to do what must be done. But say these things so bluntly may startle some of us. But those who are startled have forgotten the apostle James' strenuous words: "Faith without works is dead." And Paul himself explained the kind of faith he talked about was "faith that worketh by love."

In dealing with faith and its results we are dealing with facts, not shadows. We know the faith in Christ, particularly faith in the fact of his death was an expression of God's love, changes man's heart. With our own eyes we see the faith making drunken men sober, dishonest men honest, cruel men kind, impure men clean. The value of faith is that it makes men over; that it makes them fit for heaven; that it gives them the impulse and the power to do heavenly things.

This is Paul's argument in the Epistle to the Romans. He starts out by honoring the law of conscience among the Gentiles, the law of the commandments among the Jews. This law must be kept, but nobody is keeping it. Law has no power to make a man do right. Law condemns, cleans, ages; law has no life. Then Jesus came, born living, loving, self-sacrificing, divine—and with his law cannot do he does. He puts life into the soul; he puts love there, and power. He so changes the heart and reinforces the will that a man can do the things that must be done. "Do we then make void the law? God forbid! Yea, we establish the law."

But what is it that gets us thus into life with Christ? It is faith. It is that act which accepts his saving help, which yields to him the soul unloving, weak, impure, to be made kind and clean and strong. And because faith in Christ actually makes these changes and accomplishes these things the words will be forever true: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

The Value of Suffering

CHRISTIANITY has exploded the ancient idea—which was a rooted conviction of the Jewish mind—that the suffering of the righteous is an evidence of God's displeasure. "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest," wrote the psalmist.

We meet in our own circle those whose whole life and character have been lifted up to a far higher plane by the discipline of passing through tribulation. We recall a popular preacher whose distinguished son died suddenly. The father was heartbroken. He was so overcome by grief that he decided to have a substitute in his pulpit on the following Sunday. On Saturday night he changed his mind—he would preach and ask the Lord to give him a message. "That night I tore up my old sermons," he said. "They seemed meaningless and unsatisfactory—just so many words. Next morning I drew a text from memory and I spoke while I could hardly see for the tears. But God gave me a message that went home that day and nearly all of the congregation stayed to thank me. That was the turning-point in my ministry. Through suffering I was brought into touch with Christ, and I felt that all I had done before had been like wasted effort."

And this is doubtless the reason why so many here and in other lands, who have dear ones in the great war who may never return, are now seeking toward God. Their saddened hearts can find no comfort anywhere save in him. Nor do they seek in vain for however great their trial may be, he will give them strength to bear it, and hope to light up the darkness. Our hearts go out in sympathy toward the multitudes of mourners who are "sitting in the shadow." We pray that they may be comforted and strengthened, and that they may come out of their trial with a firm grasp of the eternal truths, and a clearer vision of that better time when sorrow and sighing will be forgotten in the joy of heavenly reunion.

The BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Bryan's Total Abstinence Address

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN addressed two thousand five hundred people at Carnegie Hall, New York, on April 30 on the waste of the liquor traffic. Among startling things he said: "Our drink bill is two and a half billion dollars a year. The value of last year's crop of cotton was $520,000,000, of wheat $78,000,000, of corn $1,700,000,000. We spend more on three wheat crops a year for intoxicating drink than fifty per cent. more than the entire corn crop of the year. Our annual drink bill would build 30,000 miles of macadam road sixteen feet wide and seven inches deep. It would duplicate the stock of all the national banks and have $700,000,000 in it. It would build six Panama Canals. It would amount to three times as much money as is spent on all educational purposes." Total abstinence cards were circulated in the audience and many signed them. Mr. Bryan wrote his name as witness to the cards. The meeting was under the auspices of the National Abstinence Union. There is this year of total abstinence from strong drink in olden times: "Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat, and they were that they should drink, and we them pulse." (Dan. 1: 16.)

Saved Wound in Heart

ISRAEL ZIFF, who was accidentally stabbed in the lung and heart by a large knife blade a few days ago, as carried to the Beth Israel Hospital in New York, where parts of the ribs were removed and the chest the heart was sewed up. This brilliant operation was made possible only by an automatic electrical device for artificially supplying ether and to the patient's lungs. The authorities report that the man is out of danger, and will soon be able to return to work. The physical heat, the fountain of life, is a type of love. The source of spiritual life expressed in the injunction: "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." (Prov. 4: 23.)

Cripple Rescues Boy

WILLIAM MURRAY limped along the pier at East Fifty-four Street, New York, the other afternoon and watched a group of boys who were playing their usual afternoon game of baseball. Murray so crippled he walks with difficulty; but he is employed as a watchman in a lumber yard near the pier. He is roused by a cry from the boys and saw Willie Luneburg, nine year old, leaping for a "fly" ball backward into the river. The watchman hrew away his crutches and leaped into the river after the boy. They came up together, and Murray, with feeble strokes, tried to pull the landing with his charge. Patrolman Patrick, who happened to be near, threw a rope to him. Murray held the rope in one hand and the boy in the other and was dragged ashore. Both were taken to Flower Hospital, and then to their home. This is a splendid specimen of heroism. The cripple had a perfect right, with his handicap, to hesitate and ask himself whether he would not be likely to fail to save the boy and even to lose his own life. But his burst of love for the child, who was like a stranger to him, was so strong as to leave him no moment for debate or hesitation, and threw him instantly into the dangerous waters. It is more than probable that if the patrolman had not been on hand with the rope both the boy and the cripple would have been drowned. The cripple knew he was risking his life; but a little boy, who could not swim, was drowning, and he had to jump in to save him. There are rich folks on Fifth Avenue and Riverside Drive, and big people in all the buildings, but there is no treasure that makes for the real wealth of the city greater than the spirit manifested by the crippled watchman. He cuts no figure in society, is only one of a million nobodies, but he is jetty tall when marked by God's measuring-line, and substantial when weighed in heaven's scales. Such incidents give us a fresh faith in human nature and in Christ, whose spirit of sacrifice they have caught, who said: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." (Matt. 16: 25.)

Women Get Leslie Estate

IT SEEMS that trouble from the threatened contest of the will of the late Baroness de Bazus (Mrs. Frank Leslie) has now been averted and that $1,500,000 will go at once to promote the cause of woman suffrage. Mr. Maynard D. Follin, the nephew, it is said, has made a satisfactory settlement with the executors, and the securities, consisting of listed bonds, stocks, and mortgages of the best grade, will be turned over to the women for specimens at the fashionable hotel where he was registered, the guests crowded about them in large numbers and with deepest interest. It is certain that for a while at least the visitors will seek these new specimens of the insect world. Beetles have existed through all ages and in almost all countries. Depositing their eggs in the ground, and the offspring coming up from the soil, they are said to have suggested to the Egyptian priesthood the idea of the resurrection. A beetle styled by the naturalists Scarabæus Sacer was an object of worship. Besides being worshiped as a divinity, stones cut in the form of the beetle served as talismans among the Egyptians. The word "beetle" occurs in but one place in the Bible. It is there mentioned as one of the four kinds of insects that the children of Israel were permitted to eat. Some good scholars think there should have been another word used in the translation. "Even these of them ye may eat: the locust after his kind, and the bald locust after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the grasshopper after his kind." (Lev. 11: 22.)

Big Brothers Join Church

REV. RITTENHOUSE NEISSER, pastor of the Woodlawn Avenue Baptist Church of Philadelphia, received among others as new members into his church two brothers, Edward Karns, aged 21, and Clifford, aged 19. Edward weighs 338 pounds and Clifford, two pounds less, 336 pounds. The two tip the scales at 674 pounds. While they have large physical proportions, they have also good sense and splendid principle, and have joined the Bible class and entered with zeal upon the work of the church. The size of the body makes little difference. It is the strength of mind, the warmth of affection and nobility of action that are the things that tell. The pastor on receiving these brothers could have appropriately repeated these words: "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." (Eph. 6: 10.)

Helen Keller Sees Exposition

HELEN KELLER, the deaf girl who is blind, was spending the day at the San Francisco Exposition with her teacher and life companion, Mrs. John Macy. She was blind, deaf and dumb. She has learned to speak, but cannot hear a sound, nor see anything. But she took in the exposition more intelligently and profitably than most of those who have eyes and ears. Breathing the fragrance of the eucalyptus and the roses, she said: "Do you think it will smell like this when we reach the pearly gates of paradise? And the violets—they are a song in the air. I learned to know the wild yellow violet the year I learned to speak my first word. I could not see the colors; and yet, since I came to the exposition, I think I can tell how color feels. When I walked through the Palace of Fine Arts, my heart ached and then danced as I put my hands on those statues there. I saw the incubator, the babies. I held them in my arms and hugged them, and they tried to hug me. How wonderful are the lights at the fair! I am always dreaming of the stars, and sometimes I dream of the moon; now I shall dream of these wonderful lights." It is the brain that sees. The eyes of dead people are mechanically complete, but they have no vision. About all the great things of the great exposition were first seen by the mind, then traced and shadowed in plans and expressed in material forms of delicate color, the cutting of the skilled chisel and the slow piling up of the solid masonry. And yet there was scarcely anything at the fair so wonderful as Miss Keller herself—the miracle of a dumb person, determined to speak, and speaking; the mastery of the truths and beauties of the universe without eyes or ears. At the exposition she saw the many reflections of absolute beauty which is God, and her soul saw beyond them to infinite love, her Saviour, who said: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." (Matt. 5: 8.)

FALSE WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

THE use of false weights and measures has become so general in the country as to provoke stricter statutes on the subject, and criminal prosecution of offenders. The punishment in most instances includes the confiscation and destruction of the fraudulent instruments of weight or measure, and the fine and imprisonment of the man caught using them. They had a destruction of such false measuring and weighing devices in San Francisco lately, in which they burned three that could be removed to a furnace, and took the metal ones out to sea and sunk them to the bottom. Sixty barrels gave twenty-five thousand dollars' worth of dishonest scales and weights a disgraceful funeral. Eight thousand four-hundred and thirty-five pounds of mill cans were towed out to sea and buried in a watery grave. This form of crime is peculiarly wicked, as it is a continuation of lies and theft without intermission. It is as bad to sell a half-bushel basket of peaches which only contain a peck and a half; a gallon of milk and give only three-quarters and a third, or a pound of meat or groceries a few ounces short, as it is to break into a house at night and steal the purse and jewelry. Such a fraud is thus condemned: "Divers weights are an abomination unto the Lord, and a false balance is not good." (Prov. 20: 23.)

their suffrage campaigns early in June. This munificent gift will furnish sinews of war for the campaigns in behalf of female suffrage. Mrs. Leslie was a suffragist when very few espoused that cause. By her legacy she is repeating instructions with reference to women workers in the early church: "Help those women which labored with me." (Phil. 4: 3.)

Automobile Bug at Zoological Park

THE New York Zoological Park has just received two of the smallest and yet among the most interesting of recent donations—the automobile bug and the subway worm. They were brought by "Tex" Rickard from his ranch in Uruguay, South America. The automobile bug might be called a luminous beetle. Several insects like it from Trinidad have been secured for the Bronx Zoo. There is a beetle in this country almost exactly like the automobile bug, but it does not carry any lights to illuminate the path or avoid accidents. The subway worm is something quite new here, and Mr. Snyder, head keeper of the zoological park, says it is the first one he has ever seen. They call it the train worm in Uruguay. It grows to five or six inches. It is a glow-worm. When Mr. Rickard exhibited his rare

MARY and John had lived side by side for years, and they were both fourteen when they graduated from the public school.

"I'm going to work right away," the boy confided to his friend when they met in front of their small homes the day after school closed. "They're going to give me four dollars a week to start with."

The girl did not reply, but looked at the wage-earner with wide-eyed wonder. Four dollars a week is a great deal of money when you have never earned any. It means pocket money, and new clothes, and being able to give mother some every week—it means being an independent wage-earner.

The girl watched John till he had turned the corner, then she went round the side of the house to where her mother was hanging out clothes.

"Ma, can I go to work?"

"To work?" her mother asked quickly. "Sure, you can go to work—if you can get the job."

That was all the permission that Mary needed. A few minutes later she had brushed her long hair back from her forehead, twisted the braid low on her neck, and started out. She knew the pinch of poverty, and she was going to do her share to support her home. A few blocks away there were great factory buildings, and because most of the older girls she knew worked in these buildings she went there first. The manager of the factory smiled at her and said that he did need someone to do a little work for him, though it was only a small job and could be finished up in a short time. He guessed Mary could have the place.

The girl-woman started work at once, spurred on by the thought that she would be able to tell her friends that she was "earning." The position—Mary called it a job—lasted two weeks. It was sorting a great pile of odd buttons that had been accumulating for some time, and then carding them so that they could be sent back to the supply room.

When the work was finished Mary had to leave the factory. She was not at all daunted by the loss of her position, for after five or six days of weary tramping she found another—this time in a factory where she ran ribbon through the lace of cheap garments. She held this for a longer period, for the season was on, and the orders came in rapidly. But at the end of two months business slackened, and Mary was home again—looking for work.

In two years she has held twelve such situations, and it is very probable that unless some educational force comes into her life to change it materially she will continue to work when she can, at what she can.

John went to work as an errand boy in the one large dry goods store of his home city. He was there to do as he was told. He was only a boy. In August the store did not do a great deal of business, and John was laid off for two months. He managed to get some work with a fruit dealer, delivering special packages, but by October the fresh fruits went out of season, and John considered himself lucky when the Christmas rush made it possible for him to get his place back in the store. He might be laid off with the first slowing up of business, but he was working today, and tomorrow must take care of its own troubles.

A TRADE TO THE RESCUE

BY STEPHEN A. REEDER

A blind alley outlook on life, but the only one that either of the two children know. John will be a man in a few years, but will he be able, economically able, to take a man's place? Will he be able to support a home? It hardly seems possible, for at the most all he can hope for is some small permanent position, which will hardly pay enough to keep him, let alone a wife and family.

What is going to be done about it? Where are the homes of tomorrow coming from? Should the schools give a smattering of general education, or should they teach a trade which will enable the boy or girl to earn a living wage in after life? These questions have for some time been a great problem to the far-seeing men and women of America, and slowly the educators have awakened to the solution of their problems. Mary and John need a vocational training.

The present economic situation is one that does not offer much chance for the unskilled laborer.

labor, and lead to nothing.

It is true that the children who start one of these branches do earn money at once, the boys and girls who go to a trade school be maintained while they work. Still the show that the wage-earning capacity of the graduates of one of New York's vocational schools increased twenty-three per cent. as the consequence of a five and a half months' delay in vocational training.

Equally interesting is the report of the work done by the boys of the City Industrial School, Beverly, Mass. These boys receive twenty-five weeks' actual schooling, and twenty-five weeks' instruction in the shops of a local manufacturer. The average wage of the boys before they entered school is six dollars a week, while the average wage of the boys who have gone through the school at work full time is $15.65.

A careful comparison has been made between a group of children who start work without vocational training, and of those who have that advantage. The average work for the untrained children at the end of six months was $4.30 a week, while the trained children averaged $6.86. At the end of the year the averages stood $10 for the untrained, $9.50 for the trained; while at the end of the second year the record stood $5.85 for the one and nearly double that, or $10.84 for the children who had had vocational training. The work that the children did was varied, from sweeping out closets to doing stenography and assisting carpenters and plumbers.

There are children whose talents do not run along the line of mechanics or salesmanship, and these may learn other trades. Farming, dressmaking, office work, mechanics, labor of all kinds, chemistry, in fact, almost every profession is covered by the different vocational schools. It is a springing up throughout the country. To make a fine profession requires modern scientific methods, and these methods must be learned in a school; they cannot be picked up by going out and doing odds and ends on a farm work.

Equally so, a man cannot become a carpenter if he knows only how to knock nails into a piece of wood. He must know why he is picking nails. The vocational school is fast becoming more than a theory, and the education of every boy and girl will ultimately include a practical training. At the present time a plan that is being tried out in several of the larger cities seems to be working exceptionally well. The students of the vocational schools attend school one week, the following week work in some manufacturing concern, combining practice with theory.

Lack of work means vagabondage, crime, homes, cries of relief needed for the poor means all the opposite, and a vocation means work that is well paid.

THESE BOYS ARE ERECTING A SHOP ANNEX TO THEIR VOCATIONAL SCHOOL

Thousands of skilled men have been out of work for months, their families depending on charities—their homes swept away in the rush of depression. And yet the children are finishing their school work and starting to look for positions. Last year the number of children between the ages of fourteen and sixteen who applied for permission to go to work in New York City was 33,192, or equal to the population of many of our Western cities.

During the first months of 1915 the number that applied for permission was much greater. In February the Board of Education sent out notices to all the schools, calling attention to the fact that work was very scarce, and that there was small likelihood of any of the children who would finish school at the end of the winter term getting work. They suggested that these children stay in school and take advantage of the vocational education offered them.

Parents' meetings were held in many schools and the situation was fully explained. The parents were

MESSAGES FROM THE POETS

"The House I Live In"

An Old Poem from an Unknown Author

THE house I live in has grown old;
Some parts of it are in decay;
The thatch upon the roof, once brown,
Is now all turned to gray.
Light through the windowpanes is dim,
So that I cannot clearly see;
The new ones I have now outside
Have been a wondrous help to me.
The grinders from the kitchen gone,
I miss their presence every day;
Some others that I once put in
Are of no service anyway.
The unseen, noiseless engine's beat,
That has not ceased for eighty years,
Is still at work, but slower now

Its action to my sense appears;
And the warm liquid that it sends
Through the old house to heat its walls
Grows cold as round about the place
Black winter's withering snowflake falls.
Though I have had the house repaired,
Sometimes outside, and oft within,
Yet as the silent years roll on,
I feel the walls are growing thin.
'Twill grieve me much to leave the place;
Each nook and corner I revere;
Sweet, joyous days I've spent therein
Through many a bright, glad, golden year.
To me its walls are sacred, too;
Within them I have suffered long;
But "God has been my strength and stay";

In weakness he has made me strong.
And he has come and "supped with me,"
And soothed my sorrow, eased my pain,
And made the place like "Bethany's home,"
Bright with restored life again.
Soon this old house will be dissolved;
Not lost, but only laid away;
And I shall then be taken home
In Father's inner rooms to stay,
Till the whole family shall meet
From every land beneath the sky,
And this frail house be built anew,
For me once more to occupy;
A tenant in a changeless home,
No windows dim, and no decay,
No sorrow, sickness and no death,
"For former things have passed away."

Peace

O DAY of righteousness and peace,
The world hath need of thee;
O day of kindness and good will,
Thine advent we would see!
We hail thee with our heartiest voices,
O longed-for, perfect day,
O day when all good may rejoice,
For which all good men pray!
O dawning day, a glimmering
Of thy fair light we see;
O promised day of perfect peace,
We work, we pray for thee!

"Workers together with our God—
What meaneth that high call
To do each day as best we may
Our duty, that is all,
W. D. TOLSON.

AN OVERLOOKED MISSION FIELD

THEir MODE OF TRANSPORTATION WOULD NOT SUIT US

FAIR TEGUCIGALPA, THE HONDURAN METROPOLIS

THE COUNTRY HOME IN HONDURAS IS NOT PALATIAL

CURELY those interested in missions should have their attention called afresh to this neighboring republic of Honduras so over-looked even by those who have "lifted their eyes to look upon the fields," yet in dearth of a saving.

Tegucigalpa is doubtless the most accessible capital city in the Western Hemisphere. From four to six days on mule or horseback is its quickest access, either from Amapala, its only southern port, or from the terminal of a sixty-mile narrow-gauge railroad in the direction of Puerto Cortes on the north. Occasionally the ninety-mile trip south is made in one day by one of the two or three automobiles. Freight goes up in eight days, in bad weather, by ox-carts, though the merchants often wait months for the importations. Most of the mail from the States and Europe goes round by way of Panama, because of the difficult mail route to the north.

There are a few rather modern stores owned by Germans and Chinese, and numerous shops conducted by thrifty housewives. In the twin cities of Tegucigalpa and Comayagua, connected by a handsome stone bridge across a small river much used for laundry purposes, are some seven rather pretentious Roman Catholic, image-decked churches, and priests in profusion, with the concomitant conditions of superstition, credulity, and fanaticism. With five hundred years of opportunity there, Rome manifests the usual failures and abuses. The ritualism and idolatry of the pagan aborigines have simply been supplanted by so-called Christianized forms, little improved and equally abortive. While Rome claims to be "always and everywhere the same,"

the intelligent Catholic of the United States would generally turn in disgust from its manifestations there. Prayer and worship by means of bombs, sky-rockets and fire-crackers outside the church, and images, tinsel, and mummery within, have failed to convince the intelligent part of the population; hence their indifference. A middle class is beginning to inquire for something rational, true, and saving. The great unlettered masses continue, like their predecessors, satisfied with the tinsel and traditions and loath to change, not welcoming innovations, or any system prohibiting sin.

Politically, the country seems to have reached a coveted tranquillity, and is, with a wise and conscientious and popular president, upon the up-grade.

The mountains seem to be full of minerals, the forests rich in fine woods, the pasturage extensive, and the horticultural possibilities practically unlimited, ranging from the tropical coasts, exploited by the fruit companies, to the interior highlands, being set to apples, pears and the like, from California. Medicinal plants, shrubs and roots abound. All kinds of tropical and semi-tropic climes are here.

The first evangelical mission is just being established in Tegucigalpa by the Friends Church of California. One year ago the Central American Mission made a good beginning in Comayagua. It seems that but four of the sixteen great departments of the republic, with a population approximating 500,000, have evangelical mission stations thus far. Truly an "overlooked" mission field of great need and unlimited opportunity! "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest."

A MISSIONARY CORRESPONDENT.

A BIT OF THE NORTH

A TRUE STORY BY CAROLINE T. ARNOLD

HHE WALKED before me down the street in Skagway, and I noted, as I had many times before, his lithe, free swing, the stride of a man whose life has been spent in great open spaces. He was a noble figure even among the sturdy men of Alaska who swarmed to Alaska during the first Klondike rush, the most perfect specimen of physical development I ever saw. A pure-blooded Aleut, he had mingled with the traders so much that he spoke English well, and had been given the nickname of Jim Hansen. For a thousand miles up and down the coast he was known as the most skilled and daring hunter among a race of hunters.

Aleuts have no hereditary chiefs, but by force of character and ability he held complete sway over a large band leading them in all hunting and fishing expeditions. Every year after the great big hunt he and his people would come as far south as Juneau or Skagway, and in one great carouse spend the entire proceeds of the hunt. The money gone, back they would go to their wild life again, returning each year to the same debauchery.

Call the clan, he alone seemed unaffected by dissipation. Those whip-cord sinews and perfect nerves, inherited from generations of ancestors who had lived always in struggle and danger, seemed not to suffer from his orgies. During the revelry no man, native or white, ever dared to cross him. He went his way brooding no more.

He came out into the broader street when at that time formed the main street of the little mining camp. Though the slow, steady, sullen rain, the lights of saloons and dance halls made a blurry haze. It was a grimy scene, with the taint of vice in the very atmosphere.

In the open space, a little band of Salvation Army workers were holding the nightly service. I had always felt for them a kind of impatient pity. In the midst of the rampant vice, their efforts seemed so futile.

The feeling was stronger than ever that night I felt like stopping and saying to them, "To what end do you stand here? What miracle do you think you can work?" The sight of a child beating with puny fist upon an iron door could have been no less hopeless and pathetic.

Yet that night, before my unseeing eyes, a miracle did happen. For the Adjutant, looking straight into the eyes of Hansen as he passed, stopped him with gentle yet commanding voice. "Listen and I will tell you the wonderful story of the love of God for his children, and of the Son he sent to earth to teach men the way of life."

Whether he intended to speak to Hansen directly I do not know. However that may be, the Aleut stopped and listened. He heard for the first time the name of Christ spoken with love and reverence. Of all the men in that wild country, he was the last to whom one would have thought such a story would appeal. Nothing in his life or his traditions prepared him to receive such teachings and come under their influence.

Hansen listened with the attention of an Indian, an attention which few white men can approach. He stood as motionless as a statue, his bronze face silhouetted against the lighted window of the "North Star" behind him.

When the last prayer was said, he followed the Adjutant to the barracks. At the door he touched the Salvationist on the arm. "This Oomalik," he questioned, "where does he live that I may go and speak with him?"

"Come in and I will tell you more," said the Adjutant. And all through that night they sat while the Adjutant told of the life of Christ among men.

Hansen sat absorbed. The next day he came bringing some of his tribe. "Listen," he commanded; "a message from the Great Spirit has come to us."

Day after day he returned, quiet, unemotional, but unwearied. He left all his old haunts. He seemed afraid of losing some of the precious time of instruction, and the thought of the old dissipation filled him with disgust.

It was all a matter of the greatest wonder in the camp, but more was to follow. One night when the Adjutant was hardly able to speak, Hansen stepped forward with a commanding gesture and began to speak. He had the gift of oratory that seems to be the birthright of every native of the North. He spoke in simple straightforward words, telling such a wonderful story of the coming of the Messenger that men who had never been touched by any good influence before stopped and drew near to listen. The word that Jim Hansen was preaching in the street ran through the camp. Out from the saloons and dance halls they thronged to hear him, awed by his words and the look on his rugged face.

"What is it?" they questioned of each other, but no man doubted the reality of the change that had come over the Aleut. The change in St. Paul was no more radical, and not so wonderful when you consider the difference in the early life of the two.

One evening the Adjutant chose for his theme the duty of forgiveness. Hansen suddenly started forward as if struck by a new thought. "Blood vengeance," he asked, "does God's law forbid that?"

Among the Northern tribes the taking of blood for blood is a sacred duty, the most solemn obligation that can devolve upon a man. One who failed in this respect would be an outlaw from his tribe. It begins with the next of kin and goes through the relationship in lessening degree, but only ends with the youngest and weakest of the tribe. If a person of a tribe is injured or killed, even by accident, like injury or death must be inflicted on the wrong-doer if possible, or if this is impossible, upon some member of the tribe.

When the Aleuts heard this custom condemned they were staggered. Hansen sat like a seer in a trance for some time and then he rose. Standing there, a towering figure that would have attracted attention anywhere, he cried: "Hear me, for a light has come to me. I have done a great wrong and would atone for it."

The tale of horror that followed made the listeners shudder. It appeared that the carouse after the hunt that year had been longer and more degrading than usual. Hansen's cousin, who was also his most intimate friend, had wearied of it and had tried to induce the Aleuts to stop and go back to the north coast again, but without avail.

Hoping to entice Hansen away, the cousin had put his outfit into his bidarka, and he and his wife had paddled away down the Lynn Canal. A great storm came down upon them, wrecking their frail craft, and both were drowned. Some coast Indians brought word to Hansen that his cousin lay dead on the shore, and he hurried there wild with grief and drunken frenzy.

The idea took fast hold upon him that his cousin had been murdered, and in this he was encouraged by a crafty and malicious shaman. They had been murdered by the whites, declared the shaman, and their spirits wandered crying for vengeance.

With many chants and incantations he delivered to Hansen charms which he said would have such power over the murderers that they would be drawn back to the scene of their crime within seven sleeps. Hansen and his men had only to hide and await their coming.

It seemed like a trick of malicious fate that Bert Horton and his wife should have seen the stretch of white beach and decided to land and camp there for the night. They were young people well known in Skagway, and with many friends. They started gaily on a prospecting trip, saying that this was to be their long deferred honeymoon trip. They laughed at the thought of possible danger, reminding their friends of how many years they had lived on the coast and how familiar they were with all the possibilities of danger.

Bert drew the canoe well up on the shore and began to gather wood for the fire. His wife made preparations for supper. A piece of smooth white wood caught her eye, and she wrote on it "Bert and Florence Horton"—a

Continued on page 542

U. S. Department of Agriculture WEATHER BUREAU

SATURDAY, May 1st, 1915, at five o'clock in the afternoon, the U. S. Government Weather Bureau at Washington marked this map showing weather conditions during the Great National Efficiency Test of the Franklin Car that day.

Throughout the Rocky Mountain States there was rain. In thirty localities high winds prevailed. At Chicago, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit and other lake points there was a fifty-mile gale to contend with.

This automobile test was for the American public the most significant ever held.

Its effects will be felt by every American able to own and run a motor car—and there is an automobile to every seventh voter in the United States.

The Cost of Inefficiency

The nation's yearly tire bill is more than $200,000,000—its gasoline bill more than $150,000,000. Add the sums spent for repairs—for unnecessary wear and tear, and you have an annual expenditure startling even to a people like ourselves, accustomed as we are to big figures.

The waste due to inefficiency is a drain on the economic life of the country.

The subject of Motor Car Efficiency enlisted the special interest of the great American Universities and Technical Institutes.

Laboratory tests at Yale and at the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, showing the remarkable efficiency of the Franklin in comparison with other cars, excited professional comment everywhere.

Other Universities took up the study of the Franklin principles.

The Engineering Department of the State University of Kentucky made "The Test of the Franklin Car" a thesis required for graduation.

This is an age of efficiency. Men's minds have a practical turn. So widespread became the interest, that to supplement laboratory tests a Great National Efficiency Test on the road was arranged.

The Great National Efficiency Test

Among the Supervisors of the test were representatives from the Engineering Departments of the following Universities: Toronto, Yale, Pittsburgh, Cornell, Pennsylvania, Brown, Rochester, Syracuse, Kentucky, Ohio, Lehigh, Cincinnati, Nebraska, Washington, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Armour Institute of Technology, Stevens Institute of Technology, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Pratt Institute.

At nine o'clock on the morning of May first, the Franklin Cars started in all parts of the United States and Canada, on all sorts of roads, and regardless of weather conditions.

Each car carried a Supervisor of Tests, who had already certified the preliminary details—the gasoline tested to prove that it was of ordinary commercial quality of cially measured by the Sealers of Weights and Measures of the respective States; the routes planned to the cars would be compelled to go and return by the same roads to equalize any advantage of wind and grade; the car a regular model Franklin Car; the drivers men with experience on a par with the average automobile owner.

Results: 137 regular Franklin cars, in 137 Cities, averaged 32.1 miles to a single gallon of gasoline—

The highest record 55 miles to a gallon of gasoline—

44 cars averaged 40 miles to a gallon of gasoline.

A New Standard for Measuring Motor Car Efficiency is Established

Here at last, with this remarkable record, the Franklin Car establishes a standard for comparison of automobile efficiency. It provides the public with a simple and definite means for judging automobile values—the best they have had since the automobile was invented.

Everybody knows how to judge the relative value of upholstery, paint, leather, fittings—the things on the outside of a car.

It is the things on the inside—things the buyer doesn't see, that turn up money.

If a car is not right in design, construction, in material, it will show first in the gasoline tank.

Engineers determine the efficiency of an automobile by comparing the useful power delivered to the driving wheels, with that which is lost by friction.

Gasoline Consumption will show up inefficient tires. They will use extra power in friction—more gasoline is used.

Gasoline Consumption will show up excessive weight. Excessive weight requires more power to move—more gasoline is used.

Gasoline Consumption will indicate whether a car will last. Where more gasoline is used there is friction, and where there is friction there is wear and tear.

Gasoline Consumption will show up useless mechanical complications. The more working parts to a car the greater the friction—more gasoline is used.

The mileage secured from a gallon of gasoline is a true indication of the total efficiency of the whole car. It takes into account the efficiency of the tires, axles, universal joints, transmission, clutch, mechanical efficiency of the engine, thermodynamic efficiency of the engine—everything about the car.

Consider what this test of the Franklin Car means to you—to every owner of an automobile—to the scientific and technical men who watched the test from start to finish.

Think what it means when so little power is lost by friction: when the maximum of power is delivered to the driving wheels with an average of 32.1 miles to a gallon of gasoline the country over!

Only a Fine Car can do it.

You have had your experience. Now make your comparisons.

Sworn Final Results

City	Driver	Road	Record
Akron, O.	A. Auble, Jr.	Good	51.8
Aberdeen, S. D.	G. M. Worthington	Rough	22.7
Albany, N. Y.	C. G. Heck	Heavy	30.5
Amboy, Ill.	A. Aschenbrenner	Good	25.6
Athens, O.	C. H. Welch	Dry	31.8
Atlanta, Ga.	W. M. Hull	Rough	31.3
Auburn, N. Y.	G. H. Leonard	Muddy	31.4
Baltimore, Md.	W. F. Knapp	Good	38.0
Bar Harbor, Me.	F. L. Savage	Muddy	22.2
Billings, Mont.	Arthur Barth	Muddy	20.0
Binghamton, N. Y.	S. H. Lewis	Muddy	27.0
Boston, Mass.	Otto Lawton	Fair	39.9
Brooklyn, N. Y.	G. B. Perkins	Fair	36.1
Buffalo, N. Y.	George Ostendorf	Fair	26.2
Canton, O.	G. W. Belden	Good	13.5
Carthage, Mo.	A. L. Caulkins	Muddy	36.0
Charlotte, N. C.	J. D. Woodside	Fair	36.2
Chattanooga, Tenn.	J. H. Alday	Dry	30.3
Chicago, Ill.	E. H. Sanders	Good	30.7
Cincinnati, O.	Newman Samuel	Dry	35.7
Cleveland, O.	R. H. Eckenroth	Fair	24.4
Colorado Springs, Col.	G. W. Blake	Fair	30.7
Columbus, S. C.	Wm. Gibbs	Good	26.1
Columbus, O.	O. C. Belt	Dry	31.7
Concord, N. H.	W. E. Darragh	Wet	33.6
Cortland, N. Y.	J. A. Farrell	Wet	28.8
Dallas, Texas	W. G. Langley	Good	38.6
Danvers, Ill.	Frank Simpson	Fair	31.5
Dayton, O.	F. B. Heathman	Good	30.5
Decatur, Ill.	C. E. Dawson	Dry	32.9
Denver, Colo.	F. C. Cullen	Heavy	21.0
Des Moines, Iowa	S. P. Johnston	Good	34.2
Detroit, Mich.	W. J. Dougherty	Fair	42.3
Duluth, Minn.	J. T. Peacha, Jr.	Heavy	35.2
Eau Claire, Wis.	G. R. Wood	Fair	29.7
Elizabeth, N. J.	E. V. Price, Jr.	Poor	40.8
Elmira, N. Y.	Fred M. Jones	Muddy	31.4
Eric, Pa.	John Griffith	Fair	31.5
Fall River, Mass.	Ernest Place	Fair	37.8
Falmouth, Mass.	F. W. Crocker	Heavy	28.9
Fleetwood, Pa.	Wilson Sell	Fair	34.1
Fort Wayne, Ind.	L. Ohnhaus	Good	31.9
Galesburg, Ill.	E. T. Byram	Dry	22.6
Geneva, N. Y.	W. W. McCarroll	Fair	34.5
Georgetown, Texas	T. J. Caswell	Dry	23.6
Grand Forks, N. D.	J. W. Lyons	Heavy	24.3
Grand Rapids, Mich.	J. R. Jacobsen	Fair	28.1
Great Falls, Mont.	B. D. Whitten	Dry	37.6
Greensburg, Pa.	E. L. Turner	Dry	28.6
Greenville, S. C.	R. N. Tannahill	Dry	34.4
Hampton, Va.	J. V. Bickford	Fair	22.0
Hartford, Conn.	H. P. Seymour	Good	10.4
Helena, Mont.	W. L. Swendeman	Muddy	18.4
Holtville, Cal.	W. J. Seat	Sandy	24.1
Hoosick, N. Y.	John Massey	Fair	36.4
Houston, Texas	Rudolph B. White	Rough	22.5
Indianapolis, Ind.	Glen Diddel	Good	35.0
Ishpeming, Mich.	E. R. Nelson	Heavy	27.9
Ithaca, N. Y.	H. L. Cobb	Fair	30.4
Jacksonville, Fla.	W. F. Winchester	Dry	30.0
Kankakee, Ill.	E. A. Babel	Good	29.1
Kansas City, Mo.	E. P. Williams	Fair	43.7
Kingston, N. Y.	W. M. Davis	Dry	82.3
LaCrosse, Wis.	Alfred James	Dry	29.0
Lake Park, Iowa	H. C. Meyer	Rough	27.6
Lexington, Ky.	V. K. Dodge	Dry	33.5

City	Driver	Road	Record
Lincoln, Neb.	Fred M. Ryan	Rough	21.6
Little Rock, Ark.	J. F. Jones	Dry	37.1
Los Angeles, Cal.	R. C. Hamlin	Good	35.1
Louisville, Ky.	G. M. Younger	Dry	36.8
Marion, Ind.	M. L. Swayzey	Good	33.0
Meriden, Conn.	J. F. Miller	Dry	49.2
Milwaukee, Wis.	Wm. F. Sanger	Fair	51.2
Minneapolis, Minn.	L. A. McKay	Good	47.8
Moline, Ill.	D. H. Duncan	Fair	23.1
Montreal, Can.	H. Grothe	Muddy	24.6
Neenah, Wis.	J. F. Stroebel	Dry	26.3
New Bedford, Mass.	S. C. Lowe	Good	33.0
Newark, N. J.	W. L. Mallon	Dry	36.5
New Haven, Conn.	Cowles Tolman	Dry	55.0
New York City	Glenn A. Tisdale	Wet	35.2
Oil City, Pa.	H. S. Phinny	Sandy	18.3
Oklahoma City, Okla.	J. W. Lee	Good	36.3
Paris, Ky.	C. A. Weber	Fair	34.0
Pasadena, Cal.	W. P. White	Good	31.4
Patterson, N. J.	Nicholas Hughes	Good	33.2
Peoria, Ill.	S. K. Hatfield	Good	34.4
Philadelphia, Pa.	James Sweeten, Jr.	Wet	41.7
Phoenix, Ariz.	George Hageman	Wet	53.0
Pittsburgh, Pa.	W. Murray Carr	Dry	34.2
Plainview, Texas	John J. Eller	Muddy	21.1
Portland, Me.	H. D. Cushman	Muddy	24.9
Portland, Ore.	J. C. Braly	Good	43.8
Providence, R. I.	W. L. Wilcox	Wet	43.8
Putnam, Conn.	O. C. Bosworth	Muddy	29.8
Redlands, Cal.	B. S. Hatfield	Muddy	26.0
Regina, Sask., Can.	A. O. Store	Good	33.9
Remington, Ind.	C. B. Johnston	Dry	25.5
Rochester, N. Y.	G. R. MacCollum	Good	34.5
Rockford, Ill.	L. J. Theiss	Fair	33.4
Rutland, Vt.	O. H. Coolidge	Muddy	26.6
Saginaw, Mich.	Fred H. Witters	Dry	25.1
San Antonio, Texas	L. E. Birdsong	Dry	35.6
San Diego, Cal.	W. S. Smith	Muddy	29.8
San Francisco, Cal.	John F. McLain	Good	36.1
San Jose, Cal.	L. Normandin	Good	35.6
Saranac Lake, N. Y.	E. E. Bellows	Wet	30.3
Scranton, Pa.	O. D. DeWitt	Rough	36.4
Seattle, Wash.	W. A. Wicks	Good	39.3
Sharon, Pa.	C. H. Wiltsie	Dry	24.4
Shreveport, La.	J. M. Nabors, Jr.	Dry	22.2
Sioux City, Iowa	Thomas Murphy	Soft	23.5
Sioux Falls, S. D.	Knapp Brown	Good	41.0
South Bethlehem, Pa.	L. L. Sterner	Fair	25.8
Springfield, Mass.	F. G. Jager	Heavy	36.1
Springfield, Mo.	H. E. Seeley	Fair	26.9
St. Louis, Mo.	J. B. Dryer	Wet	36.9
St. Paul, Minn.	A. H. Clark	Fair	31.8
Syracuse, N. Y.	C. W. Bull	Fair	41.7
Toledo, Iowa	Harvey Jones	Heavy	24.8
Toledo, O.	C. B. Sage	Good	31.7
Toronto, Ont., Can.	A. W. Wilson	Good	34.9
Trenton, N. J.	Walter Richards	Bad	25.8
Utica, N. Y.	W. W. Garabrant	Heavy	39.3
Vincennes, Ind.	D. D. Aldrich	Poor	35.7
Walla Walla, Wash.	R. H. Tuttle	Muddy	34.2
Walton, N. Y.	J. R. Bryce	Muddy	18.8
Washington, D. C.	D. S. Hendrick	Good	33.8
Waterloo, Iowa	R. H. Cramer	Fair	39.7
Wellsville, N. Y.	Oak Duke	Fair	27.7
West Brooklyn, Ill.	J. W. Thier	Rough	35.1
Wheeling, W. Va.	J. J. O'Keefe	Good	26.2
Williamsport, Pa.	S. A. Courson	Bad	20.3
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.	W. S. Lee	Sticky	34.1
Wilmington, Del.	Peter Hanson	Fair	23.1
Worcester, Mass.	F. B. Williams	Muddy	29.7
Youngstown, O.	Jacob Stuhldreher	Good	27.9

Make Your Own Comparisons

Many people do not want agents calling on them until after they look into and check up the facts—then make their own comparisons.

To any man or woman who cares enough about motor car efficiency—motor car economy—to write us, asking for Franklin Facts, asking us to show why the Franklin Car is the most efficient automobile in America today—why it is the easiest riding car—why it will go further in a day, with the greatest comfort and least expense—we will send the proofs.

We rely entirely upon our certified facts, upon proven results. They mean so much to you, we want you to have them even though you do not buy another car in five years.

FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILE COMPANY
Syracuse, N. Y.

DUNKLE DELIVERS THE GOODS

BY LOUIS E. ORCUTT

Time flies! You used to make red-letter days of her first shoes, her first short dress, her first long dress, the day she abolished braids.

Now the bigger events are crowding in, milestones so important as to be observed with choice gifts. Now it is her graduation day. Next will come her wedding day.

Time is the great arbiter. It ticks relentlessly away. It is the most important factor in life. What more appropriate, then, for the young woman or young man graduate than a watch, as handsome as your purse can buy—but, first of all, accurate, dependable, an exact timekeeper—an Elgin?

Elgin Watches are famous for their accuracy. Your jeweler is an Elgineer. He will furnish you with an Elgin movement as refined as you care to purchase. He will case it in as rich a setting as you feel you can afford. At any price it will be a timekeeper to be proud of.

Write for Elgin Wonder Tale Booklet, sent free. Send stamped and addressed envelope for set of Elgin Poster Stamps.

ELGIN Watches

KEEP TIME

LORD ELGIN
(Extra thin model)
$100 to $115

B. W. RAYMOND
(R. R. Watch)
$15 to $75

G. M. WHEELER
$25 to $50

LADY ELGIN
A watch for every woman

ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH COMPANY
Elgin, Illinois

"THAT Prescott woman again!" Dowling hung up the receiver of his 'phone with a bang and tore off his memorandum with a jerk that sent the pad spinning.

"What's she want now?" "What doesn't she want? If there is anything in the dry goods line that she hasn't 'phoned for, I'd like to know what it is. Here, John, is her latest: One spool of No. 50 white cotton—that's easy; one box of medium-sized pins—we have three guesses on that; another yard of that cerise ribbon like she bought yesterday—I hope Miss Fink remembers and that it isn't all gone; and a yard and a half of cream meline. Wants it sent right up and our wagon doesn't start on its next trip until ten o'clock. Says she's got to have it because she has a dressmaker there and they need everything on this list before they can get to work. Why doesn't she send that big overgrown boy Henry down for it?"

"Oh, Henry probably hasn't had breakfast yet; and, anyway, you know, Henry is a Prescott and the Prescotts do not carry bundles home."

"Piffle! Say, John, step into Morton's and see if he won't deliver this package for us. His wagon goes up that way about nine o'clock."

Mr. Dowling took several more urgent 'phone orders before he succeeded in getting through with his morning's mail. He was just filing away the last letter when he heard Morton's familiar footstep on the balcony stairs.

"Mighty kind of you, Morton," he said, as he cleared some samples out of the other chair in his office, "mighty kind of you to take care of that little package for us this morning."

"No kinder than some deliveries you've made for me, Dowling. Fact is, William, I've been thinking about making you a proposition. I've been thinking it over for several days. Here's the point. You have two wagons and so have I. We keep them going pretty hard most of the time, yet our customers never get their goods quick enough. Half our telephone calls are inquiries about orders that are out on our wagons somewhere. Now, I just thought I would suggest that we combine our delivery service. That will give us each four wagons and twice as rapid a service as we have now; and it won't cost either of us a cent more."

Dowling thought a minute. "Guess your scheme is worth looking into. Bill," he said, "Hitch your chair up to the desk here and we'll see what we can do out."

BOTH men were so interested in their work that they were taken entirely by surprise when a rather agreeable voice, asking for Mr. Dowling, arrested their attention. Their visitor, Mr. Ralph Johnston, field agent for the H. C. S. Automobile Company, gave them some valuable suggestions as to the operation of such a mutual service as they were planning, and had almost sold them two of his company's delivery outfits to replace their four horse-drawn wagons, when Dowling had an idea.

"Look here, gentlemen," he said, "what's the matter with a mutual delivery service for the whole town? I'll call a meeting of the merchants at the Town Hall at 2 o'clock this afternoon. You get all your information, Mr. Johnston, and we'll organize a mutual delivery service and buy several of those wagons of yours."

The merchants of Dunkle were always ready for any proposition of Dowling's and they were all on hand at the Town Hall at 2 o'clock.

"Gentlemen," said Dowling when the last man was seated, "we have worked together, very much to our mutual advantage, in the past. The Dunkle restaurant has cost us mighty little and has brought the town the good will and the permanent custom of a large percentage of the farmers hereabout. The Dunkle Paid Fire Department has saved us more than its cost in lower insurance premiums, not to mention the little fires that would have been disasters but for it. Now I intend to propose another co-operative venture, for our own good first, and second for the good of the town. We are each of us running one or two wagons; and, half the time, we are not in shape to handle an emergency delivery. Meanwhile our wagons are criss-crossing all over town, seldom more than half loaded, trailing each other, wearing out equipment and failing to give satisfactory service, either to us or to our customers.

"This morning Morton and I had about decided to try an experiment, when this young man entered and introduced himself as the field agent of the H. C. S. Automobile Company, and said he had been sent to me, by our brother Campbell there, as the merchant most likely to purchase an auto-delivery outfit. We told him horseflesh was good enough for us and that it always got home. Then we showed him the plans we had been sketching out for the use of our four delivery outfits. He said it looked good to him; but he asked us if we would be willing to let him show us what he could do with his gasoline wagons. We thought we were safe enough, so we gave him his head. After he had talked with us about an hour we felt that we needed the help of the whole town; we couldn't turn him down alone; and so we called this meeting. Gentlemen, permit me to introduce Mr. Ralph Johnston of the H. C. S. Automobile Company."

MR. JOHNSTON stepped forward and handed Mr. Dowling some sheets of paper which he asked him to give out to the other men, then he hung up a good-sized map of Dunkle and its vicinity. "Gentlemen," he said, "I do not want to take a dollar of your money unless I can show you how, by spending the dollar, you will be putting back two dollars. My business is selling auto-delivery outfits. In preparing to sell them I had to study the problems of package delivery which all of you are up against. I have sold a good many outfits because I found a way to help a great many men give better delivery service at less cost. I have planned for this trip to Dunkle for some time; and I had Mr. Campbell, our local agent, secure information for me. Some lines of goods may be sold with superheated atmosphere; but we have to deliver the goods and we have to build our sales on facts. Facts as to conditions that now exist come first, and then facts as to what we can do to improve those conditions and to avoid the elements of waste and unnecessary expense that are always present.

"The worst thing about your situation here is the thing that Mr. Dowling suggested: the duplication of service, by your various systems, from which nobody benefits. The next worst thing is the cost of all this delivery equipment and the expense of keeping it in operation. I have had a table made up showing the delivery equipment now operating in Dunkle, the number of employees engaged and the approximate cost of operation.

"You will notice, gentlemen, that you have 28 wagons and horses and 39 men and boys engaged in delivering your goods. You have $6,810 invested in equipment and you pay out in salaries $15,576 and in feed and repair bills about $8,340 every year. In return for all this investment you get inefficient service, dissatisfied customers, useless telephone calls and more or less trouble and misery of an incidental sort. Now I propose to substitute, for your present equipment, four of our one-ton delivery wagons, one light wagon and one motorcycle outfit. The second table in your hands will show you the first cost, maintenance cost and manning required by this equipment.

"You will notice," Johnston continued at his first opportunity, "the permanent investment in a mutual delivery service will not be much different from your present total, about $6,000. On the other hand, you employ only eleven men where you employ thirty-nine; that gives twenty-eight men and boys to put behind your counters where they can work that means profit.

"You will have to pay a little higher salaries to the men who operate these auto-delivery wagons. I have figured it at the outside. You will need a trained chauffeur and a helper on each of the large wagons, and a steady man on the light wagon. I have figured the chauffeurs at $75 a month and the helpers at $50. You can probably get a man for the motorcycle at $40 and you may save $50 a month on the others; but I don't want to mislead you and I have figured everything long. It will cost about $100 a month to keep your two horse-drawn wagons; the large auto-delivery wagons will cost about $100 a month to maintain, which will include oil, repairs, tires and all ordinary expense; the light wagon will cost about $75 a month to maintain and the motorcycle about $50. Your total salary cost will be about $615 a month or $7,380 per year, less the one-half your present cost. Your maintenance cost will be about $640 a year, about $1,300 less than you are now paying. So much for what it will cost.

"NOW, as to what you will get. You now get a twice-a-day delivery within one mile of the court house. That service keeps horses and men busy as they can be kept. Please notice this map here. I have divided the town, and the immediate district surrounding it, into four parts, by dotted lines. One of the delivery wagons I propose to have you purchase will be able to make three deliveries each in one of these four divisions, extending the service on all roads to a distance of at least three miles from the court house. The wagons can leave a central office at 9 A.M., 12 M. and 4 P.M. and your patrons will soon learn to time their purchases to catch the deliveries. The light wagon can make hourly trips on emergency service and the motorcycle can take small deliveries that have to be handled immediately, such as deliveries of medicines for instance. The two-horse-wagon outfits, which you hold in reserve, can be used for close-in deliveries on days when there is an overload for the regular runs of the auto or the two of them could take care of one district in case of a breakdown, probably giving two deliveries a day, which would be a lot better than appointing your customers entirely.

"Here is the proposition, gentlemen. You now deliver only in this small circle, and none of you get more than two deliveries a day, some of you only one; and there are stores giving no delivery service. With an investment of a little less money you will cover nine times the area with a 50 per cent. more frequent service, employing less than one-third as many men at less than half the expense. You will have a service that your customers can depend on; and you will tie up to your town a large amount of country trade which now has to haul its own goods or depend on the parcel post. Outside of the three-mile delivery you will still have the once-a-day delivery of the parcel post for all packages up to 50 pounds in weight. Your wagons will have no such limitations. We will keep your wagons in running condition for three years at the absolute cost to us of the service, replacing free any defective parts."

"How we pay for this cupperated delivery?" asked Humberknickel,

Is a King's Doctor told you to take Sanatogen—

You would be impressed—for you know that a King's Doctor must be a man of highest professional standing. You would take Sanatogen feeling confident that it would do the things promised; give you fresh vigor, fortify your system as no other tonic could.

Now it is a fact that the private physicians to seven Emperors and Kings, after personal observation of its effects, have endorsed Sanatogen in writing. (See for instance, the accompanying letters of Dr. Ott and Dr. Kuhn.)

So you see a King's physician might recommend Sanatogen to you, if you could consult him—indeed there are over 21,000 practising physicians who would tell you to take Sanatogen, because they all have written us, some telling of its power to strengthen the nerves, others of its power to enrich the blood and up-build the system, and still others of its wonderful qualities as an aid to digestion.

Such are the credentials of Sanatogen—they should, they must convince you that Sanatogen has a service to perform in your case.

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in three sizes from $1.00 up.

Grand Prize, International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913.

Dr. Ernest Ott

Late King Edward's physician, Martenbad, writes:

"I have been using Sanatogen for a number of years in my practice with excellent results. These results have been notably good in the case of elderly people when it was desired to build up the strength, to stimulate bodily functions, and to improve the circulation of the blood."

Dr. Conrad Kuhn

Physician to the Court of H. I. M., the Emperor of Austria, writes:

"I have had the very best results from Sanatogen in the treatment of frail, anemic children and patients suffering from wasting diseases."

Send for a Free Copy of "Nerve Health Regained." If you wish to learn more about Sanatogen before you use it, write for a copy of this booklet, beautifully illustrated and containing facts and information of the greatest interest.

THE BAUER CHEMICAL COMPANY
F Irving Place New York

German grocer, who had always made his deliveries by means of his boy Jake and a mule.

"The best way I have heard of is to keep a record of the number and weight of the packages from each store, and charge each store, weekly, with its proportion of the expense, based on the service rendered."

After some more discussion, and the appointment of a committee to check over Mr. Johnston's figures and verify them, the Dunkle Co-operative Delivery Service was organized and Mr. Johnston got his order for five auto-delivery outfits. Campbell also got an order for a motorcycle delivery outfit.

The service was inaugurated on September first, and cards giving the schedule of deliveries were handed out, mailed and reprinted, with a half-page announcement in the papers. Every one who urged to use the 'phone. "The Dunkle Co-operative Delivery will bring it," was the slogan on every lip. All in town but Mrs. Prescott soon accommodated themselves to the schedule. Improvement was marked in the business of Dunkle. The big stores became bigger, the little stores grew big and Campbell sold more pleasure cars in one year than he had sold before in three.

Dowling and Morton were comparing notes in Dowling's new office in his new store a year later, when the telephone rang.

The order girl switched the call to Mr. Dowling's 'phone.

"Yes, this is Mr. Dowling. Yes, Mrs. Prescott. Yes, we can send it out at once. What? Tomorrow morning's regular delivery will be soon enough? Very well. Thank you. Yes, you will surely get it in the morning."

"What do you think of that, Morton? She says she prefers to wait for the regular run tomorrow."

THE MIRACLE OF THE SWAMP

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

THERE is a swamp not far from my home—a swamp with a small round pool in almost the center of it. It is a disagreeable little place at best, this pool, for the water is dark and slimy, and the banks are covered with unhealthy looking mud. One knows instinctively (although it is impossible to see to the bottom of this pool) that there are tree roots, and tin cans, and snakes somewhere beneath the opaque surface of the water.

In the winter I saw this pool covered with ice; not the blue-white sparkling ice of a healthy little lake, but the greenish brownish slime-filled ice of a sordid little swamp pool. Later, in very early spring, I saw the ice melt and the natural unpleasantness return. In late spring, however, I began to see a change, for green shoots began to appear above the water and small leaves of a deep velvety substance began to open—and to grow. It transformed the pool into a perfect fairy bower—a meeting-place for Titania and her band.

It was not until sunset time on one summer day that I saw the miracle. I cannot help calling it a miracle, for the slimy pool had been very slimy indeed. As I passed by the swamp I first smelt a vague perfume, very different from the usual musty odor of it, and then suddenly the pool, bathed in the rainbow light of the sunset, came before my eyes. It was a pool glorified, for it was covered with golden-hearted lilies that were as pure and white as driven snow.

ONCE, some time ago, I had a friend who was nearly a philosopher. He used to talk vividly on life, and one of the points that he used to bring out as I sat round-eyed and utterly believing, in the early twilight, was this:

"All people," he said, "are born with an equal chance! The son of a beggar has just as much chance as the son of a millionaire!"

Perhaps—

You all, maybe, have seen beautiful gardens. You have seen roses blooming in well-ordered beds, and pansies smiling happily from a velvet lawn. You have seen tulips and sweet peas and asters cultivated beautifully. Then again, most of you have been in greenhouses. You have perhaps seen rare orchids and carnations and ferns thriving among all the conveniences of modern gardening, and, either in the garden or the greenhouse, hasn't this thought occurred to you: "Well, why shouldn't they be beautiful? Haven't they every reason to grow?"

Few of you, perhaps, have seen the miracle of a lily blooming in a swamp pool. But when you see such a thing you can't help feeling as if the lily deserves more credit than the roses or orchids that grow in the carefully cultivated beds. It is easier to grow beautiful where everything else is beautiful than it is to come up, pure and white—with a golden heart—from the

I have been reading a book today

that told of the struggles of a waif who was literally taken out of the slums of a city. With a murderer for a father and a drunkard for a mother (both of whom died when she was very young), she is left to battle alone with the temptations of the world. I cannot begin to tell you the trials that she walks through unscathed, but when, in the last chapter, she married a nobleman and lived happily ever after, I gave a very profound sigh of relief. The book was unreal? Yes. Noblemen aren't marrying many slum girls. But the book was fascinating and in a way it gripped you. For the girl was a lily and her environment was the pool in the swamp. She might have been a little weed in the mud on the banks—she might have been the slime even (it would have been easier), but she kept her heart and her soul pure—and she won!

Oftentimes girls write to me or talk to me about their lives. And oftentimes I hear one of them say: "If I had a different chance I could do differently!" "If my home were in the country (or in the city, as the case may be) I could work out my own salvation!" "If my family would help me, I could succeed!"

Oh, friends of mine, there are many, many "ifs" in this world of ours, and they are the roots that hold you down to the bottom of the pool where the slime of discouragement, and the mud of horror, and the snakes of despair live. Of course it's easier to stay in the bottom, to never look above the surface of things; but it's braver, and greater, and more beautiful to rise to the surface (even though the struggle bruises you, and at times makes your heart heavy and your thoughts sad); for when you rise to the top, there will be fragrance and sunlight and happiness waiting for your pure white soul and your golden heart.

Girls, dear, some of you may be rich and happy, with a future spreading brightly before your eyes. I hope that you'll read this article, but it isn't so much for you as it is for the girls who have been unhappy, who—perhaps—cannot see up to God through the muddiness of the little pool that they live in. There's a rule that they will have to follow to reach the top, a rule that Lincoln, and Napoleon, and David, who was a shepherd boy, must have followed to make them leaders. This is the rule:

Keep learning, and hoping, and praying, and pushing!
That's the rule that turns a swamp into a place of miracles!

AN APPRECIATIVE VIRGINIA READER

We enjoy your magazine very much. Your articles concerning the Catholic situation were read with approval. The Protestants are loathsome in this matter, and our press must awaken them. The articles along spiritual lines have fed us, and I hope we have grown. Many of your readers would rejoice if some of the church barriers could be broken, and more union be the glorious result. A. H. OBER.

Portsmouth, Va.

Graduation —

A watch presented at the eventful time of Graduation will not only recall pleasant memories through a long lifetime, but also encourages the success-bringing Habit of PUNCTUALITY

There's a Satisfaction in Being Sure!

South Bend Chesterfield

See this New Model at your Jeweler's

FROZEN IN ICE KEEPS PERFECT TIME

Above is the novel "SENIOR" model "Chesterfield," a finely finished, closely timed, 17 jewel movement with temperature adjustment, in guaranteed 20-year, special dust-proof, gold-filled case.

This watch combines the stylish elegance of extreme thinness with exceptional time keeping accuracy.

Other South Bend watches, both ladies' and gentlemen's, from $16 to $100.

Mail Coupon Today for 68-Page Watch Book

—Just published: Illustrated in color, shows all the SOUTH BEND watches including the "Chesterfield" series and the famous Studebaker Railroad grades. Also more than 100 handsome cases, Enamel Novelties, Monograms, Fraternal Emblems, and new plain and engraved designs.

Our Special Club Offer

—an interesting money-saving proposition is also described. Send for this free book today—use the coupon below or post card.

South Bend Watch Co.
25 Studebaker St.
SOUTH BEND, IND.

South Bend Watch Company
25 Studebaker St., So. Bend, Ind.

Please send me 68-page book about SOUTH BEND WATCHES.

Name _____
Street _____
Town _____

THE WAR IN EUROPE

Continued from page 525

Serbia are said to be growing worse instead of better. The country, in addition to being in the grip of typhus in its worst form, is also said to be infested with a plague of vermin of the most disgusting character, which is carrying disease everywhere and against which all measures seem to be powerless.

The fighting in the west has been very hard on the western end of the line centering around Ypres. Having succeeded in the prior fighting recently, in driving in the Allies' line north of this town, the Germans, it appears, have moved their greatest offensive weapons and the weight of their attack a few miles south, and are once more lunging straight at Ypres itself over precisely the same ground where the British army withstood them in one of the most sanguinary battles of the war in late October and early November last year. As a matter of fact, the present German offensive here has brought them nearer to Ypres than they were at any time last October, for Zonnebeke, which the British managed to hold last year, is now in their hands.

In the early part of the week the Germans captured Zonnebeke, and since then have devoted most of their attention to Hill No. 60, which my readers will remember was captured from them by the British very recently. On this hill, as the week concludes, the Germans have succeeded in winning a foothold, and as these lines are being written a desperate battle is being waged with this hill as the bone of contention. Farther west there has been quite serious fighting near Dixmude and Nieuport, but there the honors seem to have been easy.

On Friday and Saturday of last week (May 1 and 2) one of the most extraordinary events of the war happened. Dunkirk, a large and important seaport on the extreme northwestern coast of France, was bombarded and some twenty persons were killed and forty or fifty wounded, nineteen shells in all falling. At first Paris supposed that this bombardment had been done by German warships, as, according to an official statement, these had been seen off the Belgian coast. Later this explanation was categorically denied by the British, who, in an official statement, said that it was not true that German warships had bombarded Dunkirk, and followed this up by another statement still later to the effect that an aerial reconnaissance proved that the bombardment was by a land gun.

But there is no point at which the German lines in the northwest of France and the southwest of Belgium approach nearer to Dunkirk than eighteen miles, according to the positions as we know them, and there is no known gun in the world that will carry such a distance. This bombardment only took place on the two days mentioned, and up to the present time it has neither occurred again nor has there been any satisfactory explanation of the occurrence.

According to Russian reports, the advance of the Germans in northwest Russia towards Riga apparently was only a raid. Nevertheless, the Germans have reached and occupied Mitau on the railroad running to Libau, and seem to be able to hold the ground captured. Reports from Scandinavian sources of this movement state that the land forces are to be aided by the German fleet, and that we may very shortly expect to hear of an attack by the German fleet on either Libau or Riga, whichever is the real objective of the invading forces.

On the Warsaw front and in south Poland there has been almost no activity at all, though signs are not wanting that this inactivity will not long continue.

The Austrians have won in west Galicia the most important victory, both in size and strategically, that they have won since the beginning of the war. The Austrian flanking force moving east from the Donajec front during the week was successful in piercing the Russian center on its front and thereby doubled up the entire Russian right wing in Galicia, advanced as far as the town of Jasi, driving the Russian right wing in order before them. The extent of the victory cannot now be definitely stated, but it is known that over 40,000 Austrians have been captured, besides a large number of guns and an enormous quantity of supplies and munitions of war.

The strategic effect of this victory was to compel the retreat of the entire Russian center from its hard-won positions along the southern slope of the Carpathians, from the Dukla and other of the passes held by them, because the Austrians by reaching Jasi had seized a position in the Russian rear. This retreat began on Thursday, May 5, and it may be considered problematical whether or not the Austrians will be able to carry out their retreat without considerable losses in the present position of the retreating army it has in its rear the Austrian forces, which it formerly feared, and in front, between the Russians and any haven of refuge, are the Austrians at Jaslo flushed with victory.

OUR State Department has taken every precaution to inform itself fully in relation to the attack on the American tank steamer Gulfight (which was torpedoed on May 1 off the Scilly Isles) with the view of ascertaining all the facts in the case before making it a subject of diplomatic discussion with the German Government. The first news received in Washington was a cable despatch from United States Consul Stephens at Plymouth, England. It said: "American tank steamer Gulfight torpedoed off Scilly, 1st inst. Captain died of heart failure. Body landed. Two of crew drowned; thirty-five saved. Vessel afloat; patrol boat attempting to tow her into Scilly."

Ambassador Page sent examiner to the torpedoed tanker and made a preliminary inquiry, taking depositions of officers and crew. Captain Smith, chief officer of the Gulfight, sent a statement of the owners, the Gulf Refining Company of New York, which was forwarded to the State Department. It set forth that about one o'clock Saturday afternoon, May 1, while the vessel was fifteen miles west of Bish, flying a large American ensign in heavy weather, and following a British patrol boat, she was torpedoed without warning. A submarine was seen twenty-five minutes previous, three and a half miles ahead, when she was submerged about five minutes later. The damage to the Gulfight was reported to be extensive, being located on the bluff starboard bow, below the load water line. The captain in tanks was apparently undamaged. Operator Strauss and Seaman Chenta jumped overboard immediately after the explosion and were drowned. Captain Gunter, the commander of the tanker, died sixteen hours later, apparently from heart trouble, as he was uninjured.

When the despatch was sent, the injured vessel was anchored at Scilly in charge of the British admiralty officials. Cable press despatches state that it was known that a German submarine was in the immediate vicinity. Our State Department has cabled Ambassador Gerard at Berlin, directing him to ask the German Government for whatever information it has in the case, to be transmitted by him to Washington and also to make a similar inquiry regarding the attack on the Cushing. While the affair of the Gulfight is regarded as the most serious that had happened to American shipping up to this time, there is no disposition on the part of our government to act precipitately, nor will anything be done until all the information accessible is at hand.—THE EDITOR.

Copyright U.S.A. P.L.C. by
The B.V.D. Company.

"That's Your Friend, The B.V.D. Label, Boys!"

"TAKE a mental snapshot of that Red Woven Label, Tom, and you won't be fooled as I've been once. Now, they can't sell me anything but B.V.D. Underwear. I'm just as particular about my underclothes as I am about my outer clothes.

"I prefer B.V.D. because it feels so soft and fits so good. Take my word for it, it's certainly cool and comfortable, washes up like new, and gives me no end of wear. I don't buy, if the B.V.D. Red Woven Label is missing."

On every B.V.D. Undergarment is sewed This Red Woven Label

B.V.D. Union Suits
(Pat. U. S. A. 4-30-07)
$1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $3.00
and $5.00 the Suit.

B.V.D. Coat Cut Under-shirts and Knee Length Drawers, 50c., 75c., $1.00 and $1.50 the Garment.

(Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. and Foreign Countries)

The B.V.D. Company, New York.

London Selling Agency: 66, Aldermanbury, E. C.

30 Days' Free Trial
Direct to you at factory prices. Beautiful, sanitary. Enameled snowy-white inside and out; revolving shelves, cork cushioned doors and covers; porcelain drinking water reservoir and cooling coil—attachable to city water system if desired.

White Frost Refrigerator
SANITARY

Guaranteed 25 years; lasts a lifetime. Adopted and used by U. S. Government. Easy payment plan. Free delivery and white frost. For complete literature, write to:
WHITE FROST REFRIGERATOR CO. Dept. (C), Jackson, Michigan

Cool, Delicious Luncheons
—kept fresh in this refrigerator basket—can be packed, carried any distance and enjoyed with a relish. The nickel-plated, tin-lined ice compartment in a

Hawkeye
Refrigerator Basket

insures the hungry motorist, sailor or fisherman a temptingly cool, fresh lunch. Keeps bottles cool and clean. Protected from dust, germs and insects. Does not drip. Write for a folder, list, literature, or order in detail.
BURLINGTON BASKET MFG. CO.
Burlington S. E., Iowa

UNMATCHED SPEED
EXTRA POWER—NO VIBRATION

"Some speed! Drives a 16 ft. boat 12 miles an hour," writes Mr. Sanders, Madison, Wis. Has power to spare—Does not shake the boat.

THE GREAT 2-CYLINDER KOBAN ROWBOAT MOTOR

Fine record—absolutely reliable—easy starter—easy to handle. Reverses by pressing a button. Both cylinders fire simultaneously—that's what removes vibration—3 H. P.—speed propeller. Best constructed rowboat motor on the market.
Koban Mfg. Co., 207 So. Water St. Milwaukee, Wis. Agents Wanted

Gets ALL the Dust Easily and Quickly
No vacuum cleaner, whether electric or hand power, can do more than this and

The Reeves Vacuum Cleaner

on account of its lightness and simplicity, can be used without moving furniture, will clean stair carpets, furniture, corners and crevices and fulfill many requirements impossible with ordinary vacuum sweepers. Send today for interesting booklet. Local representative wanted.
THE REEVES VACUUM CLEANER CO.
134 Broad Street
Milford, Conn.

I N THIS world there are many opportunities always at hand, and whensoever we will we may avail ourselves of them. In the spring and summer we always have flowers, and whensoever we will we may pluck them; always are there friends about, and whensoever we will we may visit them; work there is aplenty, and whensoever we will we may turn to it; and though we have always with us, and whensoever we will we may do them good.

for knowing the wretched an starving pele in coun-le numbers are crying to us day and night for help.
We mind our reers of this va need and nee the ut-mst generosity The Christian Herald ful is solely fo widows an orphans of the war, a de above all others to be plied and heeded. Our com nittees are no at work in

The total of the fund to May 5 is $145,265.63. Since making known the need in Poland, gifts have rapidly increased, and we commend and thank our readers for their sympathy and help toward those upon whom calamity has so terribly descended. Speak to your friends, move your church societies, write to your acquaintances, and in other ways make known the Address all gifts to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

"YE MAY DO THEM GOOD"

the receipts to May 5, $145,265.63, now acknowledged in the Christian Herald as yet.

1. L. S. S., Yuma, Colo., $28.11. Mr. & Mrs. Wm. C. Clark, S. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 83

[illegible]

Mrs. C. B. Burr.

ALBERT M. FINE, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1967
 JOHN A. VANDERLIP, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1968
 SUELLA L. A. A. FINE, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1969
 JAMES A. MURPHY, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1970
 MURRAY H. MORGAN, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1971
 JOHN L. ALLEN, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1972
 JOHN A. KENNEDY, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1973
 ROBERT W. WILSON, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1974
 R. M. FORTNEY, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1975
 GEORGE COOPER, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1976
 FREDERICK M. NORTON, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1977
 KENNETH D. HANCOCK, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1978
 JOHN A. MURPHY, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1979
 SUELLA L. A. FINE, M.D., President, "I Love My Country," A.C. 1980

Mrs. C. F. H. S... M... I M H ...
H W ... M ... M M ...
Arthur W. P... A L ... A Friend of the Suffraging Interest K...

[illegible][illegible]

W. H. R. Portsmouth, Va. A Friend, Philadelphia, Pa., Miss Anna C. Edwards, Mrs. Mary L. Rice, Allentown, Pa., Adolph Youngberg, Lawrence, Harston
A Friend, Greenacres, Pa. Miss J. P. Russell, D of R, Class, Presby. Church, Avella, Ind., A. C. H. Eosberg, Anna T. Jones & John Mack, Yes
G. Anderson, Mrs. M. E. West, Eva C. Wilson, M. & Mrs. G. V. Shedd
E. J. Eliek, Jessie Chae, Homer, C. Boyd M. Guffy, J. Fritz, Mrs. J. W. Whamser, Mrs. S. H. Croft, Miss Lillian Fish, Mrs. T. J. Krimmhart, Allentown, San Francisco, Calif. A Friend, Reno, 192, Pa.

Additional acknowledgments later.

—makes beautiful, richly browned loaves, baked way through to the center—makes airy, delicious biscuits—makes perfect cake.

NEW PERFECTION portable steel ovens insure perfect baking results. A continuous current of freshly heated air passes over and under the food. All the soggiess comes out of the dough—all the goodness stays in. They are made (with glass or steel doors) to fit any oil or gas stove.

The NEW PERFECTION is the one trouble-proof oil-stove. It burns oil as cleanly and efficiently as a gas stove burns gas. It is safe and economical—five to ten cents a day is the fuel cost for the average family.

Made in 1, 2, 3 and 4 burner sizes, with or without cabinet tops; also in 2 and 4 burner models with Fireless Cooking Ovens.

Adopted by the Standard Oil Company as the standard.

Sold at moderate prices by hardware, furniture, department and general stores, or wherever you see the picture of the NEW PERFECTION GIRL.

Send to Dept. E for our free illustrated catalogue, or send 10 cents in stamps for the famous NEW PERFECTION Cook Book containing 227 prize recipes.

NEW PERFECTION
OIL COOK STOVES

"Now Serving 2,000,000 Homes"

MANUFACTURED AND GUARANTEED BY

THE CLEVELAND FOUNDRY COMPANY
7608 PLATT AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

MADE IN CANADA BY THE PERFECTION STEEL COMPANY LTD. ARLIA, ONT.

1. The first group of respondents (10%) was composed of the following individuals:

FAULTLESS "Wearever" RUBBER GOODS

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

NUMBER 14
PAT. MAR. 30, '15

NUMBER 20
PAT. MAR. 30, '15

FAULTLESS BATHING CAPS FOR 1915

THESE are the leading styles for this season; you will see them at all the beaches. Smart, graceful models that go well with any costume. Exclusive plain and novelty creations in attractive colors and combination effects. You can match almost any costume with a Faultless Cap.

Faultless Bathing Caps are practical; are carefully fashioned, fit tight around the neck and over the ears, amply protecting the hair. There are styles to suit every taste; and for men, too. Get a Faultless Cap—they give greater satisfaction.

Faultless Beach Balls, Sponge Bags and Auto Goggles are practical, convenient and inexpensive accessories.

These Faultless summer requisites are a section of our complete line of Faultless "WEAREVER" Rubber Goods. Whenever you need any rubber goods for Household, Toilet, Nursery, Sick-room or general use, go to the Faultless Dealer and get Faultless "WEAREVER" Rubber Goods. They are quality goods that give the utmost in service and value.

If you cannot locate the Faultless Dealer, tell us what you wish to purchase and we will see that you are promptly supplied.

THE FAULTLESS RUBBER COMPANY

Makers of a Complete High Grade Line of Rubber Goods for the Home.

Ashland, Ohio, U.S.A.

NUMBER 12
PAT. JUNE 4, '12 DEC. 9, '15

NUMBER 9
PAT. JUNE 4, '12

NUMBER 16
PAT. MAR. 30, '15

NUMBER 7
PAT. MAR. 30, '15

FAULTLESS RUBBER BEACH BALLS

FAULTLESS SPONGE BAGS
RED-BLUE-GREEN
WISTERIA-SIX SIZES

FAULTLESS AUTO GOGGLES

FAULTLESS SPONGE BRUSH
THREE SIZES

"Wearever" RUBBER SPONGES
A SIZE FOR EVERY HAND

DAVID BRINGS THE ARK TO JERUSALEM

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR MAY 30.
II SAM. 6: 1-19; PS. 24

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.D.

"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." Ps. 122: 1.

This is one of the Songs of Degrees composed, as it is thought, for the use of the pilgrim-bands that traveled from all parts to the annual festivals, celebrated yearly at Jerusalem. It was a beautiful institution, and the land must have been gay with the groups of worshippers who made their way to Zion. Each valley would send its contingent to the main thoroughfares; and the family, which had originally started in its loneliness, must soon have become the nucleus of a vast crowd. It was a matter of great gladness when the time came round, and it was said by kindred souls: "Let us go unto the house of the Lord; our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem."

It was not only that the worshippers would meet God in his house; they would also travel in sweet fellowship with members of their families and with friends from whom they had been severed for months. So many bits of news to exchange; so many enquiries to make; so many experiences of human life to narrate. It is this which communicates so much joy to our common worship. We would find and worship God in our spirit, our home, or our vocation. But there is an added zest in the companionship of his people. The fellowship of kindred souls exercises a quickening influence on our lives. "One cried unto another." The holy enthusiasm in one breast kindles a like flame in another. The song rises higher, the sense of God deepens, as we come to Mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, to an innumerable company of angels, and to the spirits of the just made perfect. Dreamers are awakened! Loiterers are hastened! The lonely are comforted!

When God Comes

By Arthur H. Howland

FOR seventy years the ark of the covenant had been in the house of Abinadab at Gibeah. It was brought here by the men of Kirjath-jearim when the Philistines had sent it back after they had been so distressed by its possession. Read again the narrative of the loss of the ark in battle at the time of the death of Eli's sons and its subsequent return to Israel (I Sam. ch. 4 to 7).

David, with all his faults, was, as we have seen, essentially religious. He did not understand God, but he loved him and worshiped him. And he knew that no nation could have a safe and prosperous career without God's presence. So he sent to bring to his new capital the ancient object which was the symbol of that presence. The tabernacle itself, after the destruction of Shiloh, had been removed to Nob, afterward to Gibeon. David made a new tabernacle at Jerusalem to receive the ark. The old tabernacle remained at Gibeon and during David's lifetime worship was conducted at both places.

The narrative about Uzzah has long been a cause of distress to sensitive souls who feel that the punishment he received was out of proportion to his offense, especially since he had evidently not the remotest intention of wrongdoing. The incident has been justified by the claim that God needed to impress afresh upon the people the need of absolute, literal, reverent obedience. During the inchoate times of the Judges and since Samuel's death, while ark and tabernacle were separated and the priesthood disorganized, the ancient oracles had been forgotten. Neither priest nor people nor king knew how to serve and worship God aright. Whether the chronicler is correct in stating that God killed Uzzah, or whether, as some commentators think, especially since the text here is "uncertain" (See Hastings' Bible Dictionary on Uzzah), his sudden death was merely attributed by the people to Jehovah's anger, in any case the incident caused the king to abandon his project for the present and take the ark to another private home.

Here comes suddenly one of the most beautiful verses of the Bible: "And the Lord blessed Obed-edom and his household." God's presence is a terror to people who are wrong, but a blessing to those who are right. And—and this is the thing we are constantly in danger of forgetting—the sole and single thing that we need to make us truly happy is the presence of God. Again and again he brings us back to this. We seek happiness in this or that. We find it and lose it and find it again. Some terrific loss smites us, the loss of something we thought we could not live without. And in the horror and pain of this loss, we find God again, and learn once more that he is all that we really need. Jesus said to Martha: "One thing is needful." Only one thing, that is. And the one needful thing is to keep ourselves in his presence, where his blessing can abide upon us.

Well, the king, the priests and the people studied up the law, found how the sacred ark should be handled and transported, went out to get it with gladness and came back with it to the city in a riot of joy and singing.

Now read the twenty-fourth Psalm, which forms part of our lesson. Even the scholars who limit the number of David's psalms to a dozen or less give him credit for this one. He wrote it for this particular occasion. In it he tries to express the tumultuous joy of the city and its king as the visible token of God's presence enters to abide.

Compare some of the verses of this twenty-fourth Psalm with some of the eighteenth, which is also known to be David's, from the fact that the narrative in II Sam. 22 contains the same song. In Psalm 24 the singer asks: "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? Who shall stand in his holy place?" and answers, "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." In Ps. 18: 24-26 he declares: "Therefore hath the Lord recompensed me according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands in his eyesight. With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful; with the upright man thou wilt show thyself upright; with the pure thou wilt show thyself pure."

We must leave David and his own conscience to that long ago day. But how about our own consciences in our own day? Jesus spoke about the blessing of the "pure in heart." It was the same blessing that Obed-edom had, the same blessing that David sang about, the same blessing that came to the city when the ark of God entered—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Happy day, happy hour, when God's Spirit enters a city, a home, a life! Happy the years spent in his presence. Happy will be eternity for those who dwell with him.

The Presence and the Praise

By Amos R. Wells

THE lesson of the death of Uzzah, when he touched the ark, is greatly needed by us today. "Ian Maclaren" once wrote: "One is haunted by the conviction that we have almost bidden good-by to reverence." This lack of reverence is seen in our carelessness regarding the House of God, the Day of God, the Book of God, and the Name of God. The Pilgrim Fathers were within half an hour's sail of their destination on our coast when they moored their boat at an island, for the Lord's day had come. There, in the

"We are advertised
by our loving friends"

A Mellin's Food Boy

Mentally and physically strong, the happy result of the

Mellin's Food Method of Milk Modification

Send for our book,
"The Care and Feeding of Infants."

Mellin's Food Company
Boston, Mass.

Boston Garter

Velvet Grip

"Everybody
in the world wears 'em"

From Bohan & Harris successful play

IT PAID TO ADVERTISE

Silk 50¢
Lisle 25¢

DAISY FLY KILLER

PLACED ANYWHERE ATTRACTS AND KILLS ALL FLIES. Neat, ornamental, convenient. LASTS A SEASON. Made of material can't spill or tip over. will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealer or sent by express paid for $1.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE PRAYER LEAGUE

League Scripture for May: "God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him." Ps. 17

ARE we all remembering the noon hour prayer? Accounts come from many sources that the spirit of prayer is being deepened among God's people. There are so many tremendous things to pray for, to say nothing of the daily pressing needs of families and homes. We urged our readers last week to join in still more definite and expectant prayer for a world-wide revival. Many prayers continue to be made for the early end of the war, and many devout souls are making earnest supplication for the divine guidance of those who have in hand America's affairs of state. A correspondent writes: "A friend in Washington has begun a movement which you will want to promote, I am sure. It is simply an agreement among Christian men to pray daily during these troubled times for the President of our country, and to get others to do likewise." The members of the Christian Herald Prayer League will not fail to include the President and his chief advisers in their daily petitions.

M. A. T. writes from Hartford, Conn.: "I sent in a request for prayer for the healing of a woman critically sick with pneumonia. That day there was a consultation of physicians and none of them spoke hopefully. The nurses said all the symptoms were bad. During the night the temperature dropped five degrees and became normal. There was steady improvement, and the patient is in a better condition than before the illness." Mrs. P. G. B. writes from Eugene, Ore.: "My mother sent a request to the League for prayers that I might recover my health. The prayers have been answered, and now I am able to do all my own work." A. M. J. writes from Carnegie, Pa.: "Some time last fall I sent a request to the League to pray for a young man that did not go to church nor read the Bible. The prayer has been answered." Mrs. A. B. writes from Youngstown, Ohio: "I want to thank you all for the prayers for me, as they have been answered even in a better way than I had expected." B. G. writes from Antwerp, N. Y.: "God is sweetly answering prayers for myself, and renewing soul, body and spirit." A Reader writes from Madison, Ind.: "I want to acknowledge God's goodness and faithfulness in answering prayer. Several months ago I asked the League to pray for a man who was a hard drinker, and I rejoice to say that the prayer has been answered."

"An Old Subscriber" writes from Coldbrook Springs, Mass.: "Some weeks ago I sent a request that prayer be made for the sale of my large farm. Being an aged widow the need was great. The prayer has been answered. An honest buyer has purchased, and all connected with the sale is all that I could wish. This is truly an answer to prayer and I and my family cannot praise the Lord enough."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

M. F. S., Gayhead, N. Y. (for conversion of friends); Mr. and Mrs. O. E. E., North Dakota (restoration of little daughter's health); Mrs. A. R. S., Monmouth, Ill. (for improved health); An Illinois Subscriber; J. H. C., Brooklyn, N. Y.; C. H., California (for restoration to health and relief from financial difficulties); Mrs. E. P., Knightdale, N. C. (for revival meetings and the conversion of a number of members of the junior Sunday school class); A Friend, Santa Cruz, Calif.; Reader, Mineral Point, Wis.; B. L. C., Bristol, Conn.; E. S. A., Janesville, Wis. (for sale of property); Mrs. D. S. S., Attica, N. Y.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at Kewanee, Ill.; New Hampton, Iowa (particularly that the fathers and mothers may awake to the need of a church in the community); at the Wisconsin Veterans' Home and the town of Indus, Wis.; Williams, Iowa (special blessings upon a tent meeting to begin in July); Madison, Tenn. (for a revival that will reach every heart and home); Dallas, Texas; West Carroll Parish, Louisiana; Tipton, Ind.; Montverde, Fla.; W. H. F. asks prayer for special blessing upon Kentucky's "Go-to-Sunday-School Day," and that the adoption of this plan will become nation-wide.

T. W. asks prayer that an efficient minister be sent to a pastorless church at Moncton, N. B., and that the church may be revived by the Holy Spirit; Mrs. T. I. D. asks prayer that a pastor may be sent to a church at Dallas, Texas; Mrs. E. M. S., Lockland, O., asks prayer that a faithful Christian minister who is out of a pastorate may be called to a church. F. R. asks prayer that difficult problems in a church at Goodrich, Mich., may be solved in such a way that God shall be glorified.

Mrs. M. F. K. asks prayer that her husband's mind may be restored; J. S. M. H., her daughter's; M. A. H. sister's; M. L. R., pastor's wife; eight friends ask prayer that the minds of relatives, friends or themselves be strengthened.

M. H. and Mrs. M. T. ask prayer that their sight may be restored; L. J., a daughter's; M. A. H., a friend's; J. F., two friends; Mrs. E. W., Mrs. H. K. and a Friend that sight may be strengthened.

Seven parents ask prayer that their sons may be saved from the liquor habit; two friends, their brother; four friends, that other relatives and friends be saved from drink. A Reader asks prayer that a friend may be cured of the morphine habit.

Forty-seven friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other words their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Eighteen parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons.

Eleven wives ask prayer for the conversion of their husbands.

Forty-four friends ask prayer for the conversion of other relatives and friends, including one that wife, parents, brothers and sisters may be Christ; another that three daughters, their husbands, and three nephews and one niece may be soundly converted; another that four children may be saved.

Eleven readers ask prayer for special blessing for relatives or friends.

Two husbands ask prayer for the healing of their wives; five wives for the healing of their husbands; eight parents for the healing of their daughters; three for the healing of sons; thirty-nine friends ask prayer for the healing of other relatives and friends; fifty-two friends ask prayer for the healing of themselves, including three who ask prayer that useful limbs be regained.

Thirteen friends ask prayer for healing of hearing for themselves and other friends, including one that for children and self may have hearing restored.

Twenty-eight friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs, including one who asks that money and help may be given the people in town in Wisconsin to save their homes; also one that help may be supplied in raising a debt on a new parsonage.

Thirty-nine friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including one that a woman may be delivered from the cigarette habit. Four friends ask prayer that burdens may be lifted; three ask prayer for reconciliation with relatives or friends. One, that a husband and wife who are estranged may become reconciled.

Address all communications to the Prayer League, Christian Herald Bible House, New York.

Anvil Sparks

..Better to be a saint by some other name than something else by the name of saint.

..He who has good nature has good fortune also. The two cannot be divorced. If good nature goes, so does good fortune.

For Graduations

No. 4071. Beautiful Heller Diamond Clustered natural pearl, single stone ring, perfectly plain mounting. Price $12.

For Birthdays

The Time to Buy a Gem-Set Ring

Birthdays and approaching graduations bring the need of gift suggestions. Every heart warms to a gem-set ring. It is the most prized of all presents. It carries a dainty sentiment that endears it forever—it serves as a lifetime reminder. A ring of rare beauty is within the reach of every one's purse.

No. 2750. Lady's solid gold cluster set ring with two genuine oval garnets or any birthstone and two genuine white pearls in the center. Price $7.00.

No. 3986. Young lady's solid gold fancy little finger ring in three faceted genuine garnet, amethyst or topaz. Price $9.00. In genuine green tourmaline, price $10.00.

No. 3328. Lady's solid gold, fancy cluster set ring with genuine topaz or amethyst, surrounded by four genuine pearls. Price $7.50.

No. 3970. Gentleman's heavy solid gold ring with genuine amethyst, topaz or garnet. Price $10.00. With synthetic ruby, price $12.00.

A Tribute to a Master-Designer of Rings

Rings were merely rings until some years ago. Then came a master to the art of designing rings. For the past twenty years he has been regarded by those who know as the leader in this craft.

This advertisement is a tribute to him—to WHITE, the artist who made the gem-set ring famous.

His designs are of rare beauty, distinctive and exclusive—masterpieces to delight the connoisseurs.

If you want a ring for yourself, or for son, daughter or friend, you will want to see W-W-W Rings.

These rings are known to your jewelers as W-W-W Rings.

W-W-W Rings

Made Only in Solid Gold with Stones Guaranteed to Stay

If at any time a stone comes out or is cracked we will replace and reset it free. This covers all stones but diamonds. It makes your purchase doubly safe.

The wide range of prices—$3, $4, $5, $10, $25 and up—is made to fit all purses.

Beautiful Catalog and This Interesting Story—Free! Send for Your Copy Now

A talented writer has written for us a charming short story about a gem-set ring. It is full of rich human interest. It is worth sending for.

We will send you a copy free—just for a postcard and the name of your jeweler. Contains pictures of choice selections from the 4000 styles we make, with descriptions and prices.

WHITE, WILE & WARNER
Dept. M 229, Buffalo, N. Y.

Makers of solid gold gem-set rings in which the stones do stay.

ZINC OXIDE FOR SKIN ERUPTIONS

Vaseline Oxide of Zinc combines the well-known curative properties of Zinc Oxide with a pure "Vaseline" base. It is healing, soothing, absolutely harmless. In tubes and jars at drug and department stores. Write for booklet describing the various "Vaseline" preparations and their many uses.

CHESEBROUGH MFG. CO.
(Consolidated)

13 State Street, New York City

SAVE HALF Your Paint Bills

By using INGERSOLL PAINT—proved best by 66 years' use. It will please you. Only paint endorsed by the "Grange." Made in all colors—for all purposes.

DELIVERED FREE

From the Mill Direct to You at Factory Prices.

INGERSOLL PAINT BOOK—FREE

Tells all about Paint and Painting for Durability. How to avoid trouble and expense caused by paints fading, chalking and peeling. Valuable information free to you, with Sample Color Cards. Write me. DO IT NOW. I'll save you money.

O. W. Ingersoll, 253 Plymouth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES $18 TO $60

Look at these bargains! Typewriters Rebuilt in our own factories. Every machine is guaranteed for one year.

Remingtons $20 to $55 Smiths $18 to $40 Underwoods $35 to $60 Royals $25 to $45 L. C. Smiths $30 to $50 Oliverts $20 to $35

We have others. Send for catalog describing them, and address of nearest branch office.

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO., Inc., 345 Broadway, N. Y.

Whitcomb's "Flexsole" Shoe

Can Be Bent Double Most comfortable shoe made for Women. Soft, perfect fitting, and handsome. No seams, no stitches, no lining. Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded. Send outline sole of foot and state size usually worn.

Agents wanted Everywhere Special Inducements

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Plow Share Symbol of the nation-wide peace movement. Send for particulars and further information. AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN AND CITY IN THE WORLD. Gold plate lined pin or button with safety catch, 25c. Send amount of order direct. PLACE MECHANICAL CO. — James Corse, Sec. Y. M. C. A. Building, 19 S. LaSalle St., Chicago.

For 36 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 709 $25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving investors PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay Advice and Books FREE Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D. C.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for Asthma (Asthma) All Druggists, or by mail, 50c. STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

(continued from page 520)

"Safe here," he said in a dutiful, unless a shell should strike off. But I think they'll soon turn the artillery fire altogether." I twisted the sparkwheel of one of the portable lighters that the Germans use, and the glowing coal at the end of the chemically treated cord took the wick of a candle. I lit my lamp to help him, and found the little dirt-walled room fairly luminous with yellow light. It was possible to stand without turning your head against the glare, and while he picked up

LITTLE HAI IEH TSI (the "Abused Leaf"); a story of Childhood and its Perils in Heathen China. All who are interested in sweet and innocent childhood will find this a fascinating story. A postal card addressed to "China Orphans, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York," will bring you free copies of this illustrated booklet.

ELECTRIC CRANKING LIGHTING IGNITION

The Dayton Engineering Laboratories Company, Dayton, Ohio

Absorbine, Jr.

THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

Absorbine, Jr., $1.00 4 oz. and $2.00 12 oz. bottle at most druggists or delivered.

by the Sheldon Method

Thousands of Remarkable Cases

Remarkable Cases
An old lady, 72 years of age, who suffered for many years and was absolutely helpless, found relief for the rest of her days through the Sheldon Method. A man who was helpless, unable to rise from his chair, was riding horseback and playing tennis within a year. A little child, paralyzed, was playing about the house after wearing a Sheldon Appliance 3 weeks. Successfully treated more than 20,000.

We have successfully treated more than 20,000 cases in the past 14 years.

30 Days' Trial at Our Risk

Every sufferer with a weakened or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate thoroughly. The price is within reach of all.

Send for Our Free Book
If you will describe the case it will aid us in giving you definite information at once.

Leakless Inner Tubes

Goodyear Laminated Tubes
Built Layer on Layer—Extra Thick

Here is something every motorist should know.

Goodyear Laminated Tubes are built of many thin layers—each of pure rubber—vulcanized together. No flaw can be hidden as in a thick piece of rubber. It is seen and eliminated. Every layer is perfect.

Such a Tube can't leak. And our valve patch can't leak, because it is part of the Tube and not stuck on.

Remember that. Many a tire trouble is due to leaky Tubes.

14% Heavier

Goodyear Laminated Tubes are extra heavy. They have always outworn any tire. But this year we have added 14 per cent to their average thickness—all pure rubber.

THE GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER CO., Akron, Ohio

And our Tube prices this year are reduced 20 per cent. So these layer tubes, extra-thick, now cost about the same as others.

Always Gray

Goodyear Laminated Tubes are not colored. They are gray—the natural pure rubber color. Color requires a large percentage of mineral adulteration. And minerals hold heat, a Tube's worst enemy.

Whatever tires you use, get Goodyear Tubes. They will outlast your tires, save you leaks and trouble.

They will also convert you to Goodyear Fortified Tires, built by the same high standards.

Any dealer will supply you.

INSOMNIA

Leads to Madness, if Not Remedied.

"Experiments satisfied me, some 5 years ago," writes a Topeka woman, "that coffee was the direct cause of the insomnia from which I suffered terribly, as well as extreme nervousness and acute dyspepsia.

"I had been a coffee drinker since childhood, and did not like to think that the beverage was doing me all this harm. But it was, and the time came when I had to face the fact, and protect myself. I therefore gave up coffee abruptly and absolutely, and adopted Postum for my hot drink at meals.

"I began to note improvement in my condition very soon after I took on Postum. The change proceeded gradually, but surely, and it was a matter of only a few weeks before I found myself entirely relieved—the nervousness passed away, my digestive apparatus was restored to normal efficiency, and I began to sleep restfully and peacefully.

"These happy conditions have continued during all of the 5 years, and I am safe in saying that I owe them entirely to Postum, for when I began to drink it I ceased to use medicines."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

TABLE GRACES For DAILY USE SPECIAL DAYS and OCCASIONS All Will Welcome This New Book of Graces. Postpaid. Paper, 25c. Cloth, 50c. M. E. MUNSON, 77 Bible House, New York, N.Y.

His Mistake

HE MOVED up to the city,
When he'd made his little pile;
Built a house and had a garden,
Dressed his girls in city style;
He read the city papers,
And he ate the city food.
His wife joined half a dozen clubs,
His boy became a dude;
But he left his religion in the country.

He took a dab in politics,
The city kind, of course;
He bought a high-powered auto,
It was faster than the horse.
He had a box at opera
And a lot of gilt-edged stock;
Built the bank right in the center
Of the city's finest block;
But he left his religion in the country.

The church just round the corner
Was of other brand than his;
So he visited the movies
Or spent Sunday at his "biz."
He knocked the city preachers
And he laughed at Sunday laws,
While his boy went to the mischief
And his girls were lost—because
He had left his religion in the country.

And when he took his journey
To the place where all men stand,
He walked up to the Golden Gate
As though he owned the land.
"I know you're from the city,"
Said St. Peter, with a sigh;
"And I'm sorry I must tell you
This is once you can't get by,
For you've left your religion in the country."

REV. GEORGE S. FULCHER.

An Explanation

In the Christian Herald of April 28 there appeared an item entitled "His Grave Too Short," which had gone the rounds of the press and was supposed to be entirely authentic. No name was mentioned. The wife of the man writes to this office stating that the story started with the local newspapers and grew as it spread until about no vestige of truth was left. She says the grave was not too short; that there was no delay in the funeral, and that he did not order his own tombstone. This paper supposed, of course, that the statements were true throughout, or it would not have published them. We are very sorry that its publication should have given grief to his dear companion.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

The Call of Foreign Missions for Money, Men and Prayers

Christian Endeavor Topic for May 30.
Hag. 2: 4-9

THERE is a good deal of special interest just now in the matter of raising money for missions, due first to the new report just published of the missionary finances for the fiscal year ending April 1 and also to the special campaigns under way by some denominations to raise extra missionary money during the year just opening. The Episcopal Church plans to raise $400,000 extra, one-fourth of the amount being already in hand. The best showing last year was made by the Baptists, who began with a deficit of $276,000 and during the year not only paid all the current expenses and wiped out this debt, but came out fifteen hundred dollars ahead. Altogether the American churches contributed last year $55,000,000 to Home Missions and $18,000,000 to Foreign Missions. It is a surprising fact that the war seems to have stimulated missionary giving throughout Europe. The Church of England reached a higher record than it had attained for the past two hundred years. In Germany five of the seven missionary societies gave more than the year previous.

An Evening with Great Hymns

"How Firm a Foundation," "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," "Not Ashamed of Jesus." Epworth League Topic for May 30.

THREE great hymns. It is a striking fact that the author of How Firm a Foundation is unknown. It was printed as far back as 1787, and the author's name is given as Keen. In the present day the author appears as George Keith, but his authorship of the hymn is only a conjecture. The composer of the music is altogether unknown. These men, or it may be the one man who wrote both words and music, thought so much of the wonder of the Great Foundation as to be willing to be forgotten. Out of sight, unknown, they still sing through the generations this mighty hymn of trust.

SEEKING HOMESTEAD LANDS

ONE of the influences which has set so many people to thinking of the possibilities of establishing a home in the public domain is the Three-Year Homestead Law, which greatly simplifies the winning of a homestead by cutting down the time which a homesteader must occupy the land before taking title to the property. Another spur to homesteading is found in that other revolutionary act of Congress, the so-called enlarged homestead act, which makes it possible, under certain conditions, for a man or woman to secure just twice as much free land as could formerly be obtained by any one individual—in short, 320 acres instead of 160 acres.

Perhaps the greatest stimulus has come from the action of the secretary of the interior in throwing open to settlement—restoring to entry, to use the official phraseology—millions of acres of land in various Western states, notably in Montana, Idaho, Oregon and Colorado. Lands in nearly every county in these states are affected by this order. Most of the tracts which are spoken of as "restored to entry" comprise land which the government saw fit, for one reason or another, to reserve or withhold from settlement of homesteaders, but which upon reconsideration it was decided to put back on the market for the benefit of the people.

The enlarged homestead law is applicable to the states of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyo-

A Mighty Fortress Is Our God in both words and music the Martin Luther. One can feel the of the old giant's courage and atmosphere and spirit of the times when the reformers were laying against terrific odds to re-build the church of Christ. It is said that ever Luther was in difficulties there was no way of surmounting would sing this hymn. The hymn always brought a solution of the problem, always showed out of difficulty. This is a fine habit for present-day Christians. Difficulties seem big when we look at them, but when we look at God they are small.

Joseph Grigg when only ten years of age wrote the wonderful hymn

Jesus, and shall it ever be,
A sinful child ashamed of thee

The second line has been changed to read "A mortal man ashamed of thee." It is one of the sweetest and most beautiful hymns in all the books. It has lured many souls to a new life for their Master.

The Baptist Fleet

B. Y. P. U. Topic for May 30. L. C. 5: 1-3

YOUNG people, and older people too, never tire of hearing of the Life Line, Captain G. H. the Osceola, Captain W. E. Storey and the Robert G. Seymour, Capt. Rev. William R. Howells. The fleet is cruising along the coast of Oregon and California, carrying the Gospel to neglected inhabitants of the islands of that region. The command of the Osceola has a parish of five thousand acres, which is inhabited by Chinese, Japanese, Indians, Portuguese and Italians. Captain Storey speaks seven different languages, was five years a missionary in Japan and speaks to the people in their own language. These island-dwellers have no other opportunity of hearing the Gospel or even the Scriptures except as it is provided by these Gospel seamen.

ming—not to all the public lands those states, understand, but to portions of the public domain as been officially declared "non-timbered, non-irrigable." It is this last that the rubric, of course, every person who knows anything of our government policy realizes that Uncle Sam is not supposed to be giving away timber or mineral lands; but many people seeking a change of base from the letters they send Washington—do not seem to have grasped the fact that in order to "enlarge" homestead of 160 acres they must take arid or non-irrigable land, which means land that has not sufficient rainfall to grow agricultural crops without the necessity of resorting to unusual cultivation.

However, the situation is promising as one might be tempted, if accustomed to this kind of land as nothing more nor less than desert land. Great strides have been made in "dry farming," whereby non-irrigable land may be made yield profitable crops; and in some times land which has been pronounced "non-irrigable" may be by no means so devoid of water as the classification would imply. Even if a spring be found, it may possess it under the enlarged homestead act, providing his estate embrace more than forty acres of irrigable land.

Persons who have gained the impression that the United States

...ing thickly settled, and that
...ing possibilities are ended, may
...rised to learn that there yet
...in the United States upward
...000,000 acres of vacant public
...to say nothing of an even
...unoccupied area in Alaska,
...the government is planning
...$1,000,000 railway, 1,000 miles
...length, which will do for the big
...milla what the transcontinental
...rds have done for our own
...est
...res showing in detail the distri-
...tio of vacant public lands have been
...mp by the officials of the General
...office. The area of public land
...apropriated and unreserved in
...ais as follows: Alabama, 51,920 acres; Arizona, 36,958,749 acres; Arkansas, 368,972 acres; California, 20, 902,752 acres; Colorado, 18,899,441

acres; Florida, 307,924 acres; Idaho, 16,342,781 acres; Kansas, 102,200 acres; Louisiana, 123,045 acres; Michigan, 79,316 acres; Minnesota, 1,082, 199 acres; Mississippi, 46,793 acres;
Missouri, 1,061 acres; Montana, 22,
237,660 acres; Nebraska, 270,162 acres; Nevada, 55,502,439 acres; New Mexico, 30,104,841 acres; North Dakota, 672,949 acres; Oklahoma, 42,333 acres; Oregon, 17,331,206 acres; South
Dakota, 3,573,269 acres; Utah, 33,756, 502 acres; Washington, 1,799,774 acres; Wisconsin, 8,760 acres; Wyoming, 31,553,323 acres.

WALDON FAWCETT.

TEMPERANCE MEN TO MEET

THE attention of men and women, not only of the United States but of all the world, will be centered in the great American Anti-Saloon League Convention to be held on the Million Dollar Steel pier, Atlantic City, N. J., July 6 to 10. It will be the greatest "dry" gathering ever recorded. A most complete exhibit is being prepared for the occasion and speakers of national and international reputation will address the delegates.
The first state law requiring that the nature and effects of alcohol should be taught in the public schools was passed in 1882; within twenty years every state of the union had such a law in its statute books. A committee organized by the American Academy of Education in 1903 has spent more than twenty years watching the working of these laws, and in judging the results using the text-books. The opinion of the experts is that these laws result in the teaching of hygiene and temperance are most helpful in warning boys and girls of the evils of alcohol.
A French paper, favoring such a course of study in France, says: "Compulsory courses in anti-alcohol instruction enlighten the youth upon the fatal consequences of the evil. Later, these young men will read and wonder why the government permits this dreadful plague to sap the nation's vitality."

Of the results of prohibition in Kansas a leading Philadelphia paper says: "It has helped to make the citizens of Kansas the richest, per capita, in the country, and the richest of all agricultural folks in the world; has given her a permanent school fund of $10,000,000 and has reduced her illiteracy to almost nothing. Ninety-eight per cent. of her 400,000 school children have never seen a saloon."

At the coming July convention in Atlantic City, N. J., all persons will be recognized as delegates who are appointed by local churches, Sunday schools, Adult Bible Classes, Brotherhoods, Gideons, Young People's Societies, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., and W. C. T. U., or any other temperance organizations. Each local organization is entitled to one delegate and one alternative. Names of duly appointed delegates shall be sent to the secretary, Anti-Saloon League, Westerville, Ohio.
ALLAN SUTHERLAND.

THE TALE OF A SIMPLE SOUL

THE other day, in a small city of central Michigan, a quaint little Hollander, eighty-six years old, died.
The newspapers of the little city, a nearby large city chronicled the death in large-headed headlines; the picture-headed one of the paper's masthead. The mayor of his home city issued a proclamation, asking that all business be closed during the funeral services and that the church bell in the city be tolled five minutes. Five ministers of the great faith upon the platform and took part in the services held in the great church in the city, that yet held hold the many who came.
He was banked with the choicest of house blossoms. Some of the citizens acted as pall-bearers along line of carriages followed remains to their last resting-place. A woman whom, in his death, a deity delighted to honor kept a watch in his young days. But one day he went to church and heard from the words, "There is no rest to the wicked." He went out and he broke in the heads of his neighbors. He went into the market long business and prospered; he went about the streets of his home city with a yoke over his shoulders, and he used in his native land, a yoke with fresh vegetables suspended from each side.
He said the men who worked for every night, that he might live up to the scriptural injunction, "Owe no man anything." "The Lord and I are partners," he used to say. "He sends me to warm and the rain to water the good soil that he gave. I seed. He makes it grow and I harvest." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, . . . that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."
IONE KNAUER BATES.

faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. He could neither read nor write the English language, yet became, after his conversion, well versed in the Bible, and could quote Scripture fluently.

This rare personality had a round, jolly, smiling face and a quaint Dutch brogue that could never give the English sound of J, and it is impossible to spell Jesus as he pronounced it. It was something like "Yesus," and his townspeople grew to love to hear him tell of "Ye-sus' love." It was the one great joy of his life to tell of that love to acquaintances on the street, in prayer meetings, whenever and wherever he could make the opportunity. He became a licensed preacher in the Methodist Church and from the large city church pulpits, rescue mission platforms and in the country schoolhouse he told the story of his Saviour's love with a fervor begotten of a life touched with holy fire.

By his direction his daughter made a little book for him. Its leaves were of black, red and white paper. Black for sin, he used to say; red for the blood of Jesus Christ, and white for purity. He called this his Bible, and used it when giving his pulpit talks.

But it was while going about his daily duties that this happy little Dutchman did his greatest work for the Master. His cheery optimism and absolute dependence upon God's guidance made him an inspiring example to rich and poor, the learned and the illiterate.

One summertime the floods came and the river covered his garden acres, ruining his crops. Friends came with words of sympathy to find a smiling little man, who said, "The Lord is my partner. It will be all right. He will take care of me. I am not worrying."

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, . . . that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

"Stop Depreciation—Build with CYPRESS Lumber"

AT FIRST"

"THE WOOD ETERNAL"
THE WOOD THAT LASTS
SHALL BE FIRST—with wise

BUNGALOW FOLKS

Some people have no bungalow, but everybody has a Bungalow hope. The WOOD you use determines your Investment value. Use CYPRESS, of course. The plans you build from decide its Artistic value. Vol. 18 of the CYPRESS Pocket Library (FREE to you) contains Complete Specifications and Working Plans (worth $10 to $25 and sufficient to build from) for a beautiful CYPRESS Bungalow costing about $3000. Write Today

(Plan by Henry L. Wilson, Architect, Chicago)

Why not FIND OUT what CYPRESS can do for YOU, NOW?
"He who uses Cypress builds but once."

WRITE US—ASK YOUR OWN QUESTIONS—about big woods, or little ones. You can rely on detailed and reliable counsel if you address our "ALL-ROUND HELPS DEPT."

SOUTHERN CYPRESS MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION
1226 Hibernia Bank Building, New Orleans, La., and 1226 Heard Nat'l Bank Building, Jacksonville, Fla.
PROBABLY YOUR LUMBER MAN SELLS CYPRESS; if not, write us, and we will tell you a nearby dealer who DOES

The Key To Success Stop Forgetting

Increase Your Efficiency
The secret of business and social success is the ability to remember. I can make your mind an infallible classified index from which you can instantly select thoughts, facts, figures, names, etc. I enable you to concentrate, develop self-control, overcome bashfulness, think on your feet, address an audience, Easy, Simple. The result of 20 years' experience in developing memories of thousands of students. Write today for copy of my book "How to Remember" and Copyrighted Intensely Interesting Memory Test Free, also new to obtain 100% copy of my book "How to Speak in Public."
Prof. Henry Dickson, Principal
Dickson School of Memory, 701 Hearst Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Don't expose your family to draughts, cold and dampness

Open or close your shutters from inside

The Mallory Shutter Worker enables you to open, close, bow or lock your shutters at any angle, by turning a crank on the inside of the window sash.
Simple and easy to install— you yourself, or any carpenter can put them in place on old or new houses, whether brick, frame or stone.

Write today for further information
MALLORY MANUFACTURING CO.,
310 Moore Street, Flemington, N. J.

Genuine All Hand-Woven Unblocked PANAMA
Can be worn in this condition by Men, Women and Children. Easily blocked in any style. Light Weight, Durable. All head-sizes. Brims from 2 1/2 to 6 inches. Sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00. Money back if not satisfactory. Write for Catalog.
Panamas from $1.00 to $100.00
PANAMA HAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City

FREE REARER WEDDING Write for Book of latest styles, prices on Engraved Invitations, Announcements, Cards, etc. With each order we will make free HANDSOME CARD RE-CEIVER from copper plate they are engraved from VIRGINIA STATIONERY CO., 915-F Main St., Richmond, Va.

AGENTS Big Profits
New patented lock stitch awl. Sews anything; shoes, harness, buggy tops, etc. Sells like wildfire. Low price, big profits. Enormous demand. Write quick for sample to workers. THOMAS AWL CO. 7524 HOME ST., DAYTON, O.

STAINED SHINGLES
Roof, light olive, sides, dark green.
Architects, Freeburg & Fidler, Jamestown, N. Y.

This Handsome House Roofed and the upper part of the walls covered with "Weatherbest" Stained Shingles

Beautiful Effects—Extreme Durability
"Weatherbest" Shingles are made only from selected grade Red and White Cedar. They are stained any shade you desire with a stain which is not only lasting as to color, but on account of the wood-preserving materials in it, the natural life of the shingle is greatly increased. Shingles come to the job all ready to put on; no brush coat is necessary. Every shingle is stained from tip to butt, not merely part length as is usually done. Our scientific, thorough process and materials insure permanent satisfaction.

Ask us for Free packet sample Shingle Strips showing colors on the natural wood, enabling you to pick out just the shades you want. Any shingle information gladly furnished.

TRANSFER STAINED SHINGLE CO.
161 Main Street North Tonawanda, N. Y.

Makers also of the superior quality "Transfer Brand" Red Cedar Shingles
Demanded by knowing builders, sold by best lumber dealers everywhere

To Folks Who Dally With Corns

To you who pare corns—

You who use liquids—

Or other old-time ways.

You've amply proved that using such things is merely dallying with a corn.

For your own sake, prove the right way. Millions of people have found it. Half the corns that grow are ended by this wondrous Blue-jay plaster.

The corn pain ceases the moment you apply it. Then the B & B wax—a famous chemist's invention—gently undermines the corn. In 48 hours the whole corn comes out, without any pain or soreness.

Ask your friends. Scores of them have proved that Blue-jay makes it folly to have corns.

Blue-jay Plasters

15 and 25 cents—at Druggists
Samples Mailed Free

Bauer & Black, Chicago and New York
Makers of Physicians' Supplies

With the Purity of home making, you get deliciously light, fluffy ice-cream, conveniently and economically, by using the easy running

LIGHTNING FREEZER

Automatic Twin Scrapers Famous Wheel Dasher
Your dealer can supply you

Recipes for Frozen Desserts, by Mrs. Rorer, sent free
NORTH BROS. MFG. CO., Philadelphia

BECOME A NURSE

We have trained thousands of women in our own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse" 248 pages with actual experiences 48 illustrated lesson pages free. There is a Chautauqua nurse in your vicinity. Ask her about our training. Her address upon request.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St. Fourteenth Year Jamestown, N. Y.

LADIES! Ease Your Feet

Send for free catalog telling all about our Neat, Noiseless, Flexible, Comfortable, unlined Vici Kid O'Sullivanized PILLOW SHOE. News shoes easy on feet. No breaking in required. Fit and feel like a cloud. O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on all styles.

$3.00 Postpaid

PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept. 3
184 Summer St., BOSTON, MASS.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES
Prices $15.00 up. SOLD or RENTED anywhere at 1/4 to 1/2 MANUFACTURER'S PRICE, allowing RENTAL TO APPLY ON PRICE. Free Trial. Installment payments if desired. Write for catalog to TYPEWRITER EMPORIUM, 34-36 W. Lake St., Chicago pitiful little token which was found clasped in her hand long afterward.

A BIT OF THE NORTH

Continued from page 529

Hansen and his men rushed out on her with their long hunting knives and she fell stabbed with many wounds. The one wild cry she gave brought her husband, only to meet the same death at the hands of the savages.

The sight of their supposed enemies slain at their feet gave the Aleuts a sense of exultation, and they broke into a wild dance of triumph. Later they carried the bodies back well above the tide-mark and buried them, for no Aleut mutilates the dead.

Secure in the certainty that there was not the least likelihood of their crime being discovered on that desolate shore, they returned to Skagway. Hansen especially was uplifted by a sense of having performed a sacred duty. In such an exalted state might a priest of the olden times have turned from the sacrificial altar.

He refused to go back to the former revelry lest he should lose the sense of exaltation. He wished to walk alone and give himself to the thought of his vengeance. And it was in this very mood that he had been arrested by the Gospel message and had found salvation.

When he had told the whole terrible story, he asked simply, "What shall I do now?"

The Adjutant took him to Marshal Shoup, and that efficient officer immediately set off for the place where the bodies were buried. Hansen and some of the deputies accompanied him and brought the bodies back to Skagway.

The town was in a frenzy of rage. The miners wished to seize Hansen and his men and tear them limb from limb. "Me first, boys," said Marshal Shoup calmly. "While I am marshal, every man, white or native, shall have a fair trial."

To my thinking, there was never a trial in the country more dramatic. Outside the building, Aleuts in their fur parkas and Indians wrapped in gaudy blankets made a spot of brilliant color on the somber scene.

Inside the courtroom gathered a motley throng, merchants, lawyers, miners in yellow slickers and gum boots, an English baronet in Alaska on a hunting trip, a celebrated surgeon who had gone there for the novelty of the experience.

Hate was written on every face. Marshal Shoup and his men, well-armed and alert, guarded the prisoners, never for a moment off their guard.

Among them all, the most commanding figure in the room was Hansen himself.

He repeated his account of the crime, never softening it in any way or speaking a word in his own defense. For his men he pleaded eloquently. "Me alone, me alone," he said again and again. "These were but my tribesmen, doing my will. Let them not suffer for my sin."

The most remarkable part of the testimony was when he tried to make his hearers feel how real to him was the love of the heavenly Father, of whom he had known nothing till a few weeks before, and how completely his nature was changed.

"I see a light!" he cried; "it shines upon me in my darkness; it leads me. It is for this I speak, that I may show to all men my sorrow for my sin."

Men looked at him and at each other in amazement. What was this power, they asked themselves, that roused this wild and savage hunter to such repentance? No man heard him unmoved. Of his entire fearlessness and sincerity there could be no possible doubt. If he had sometimes preached powerfully in Skagway streets, he now preached with tenfold power in Juneau courtroom, although all that he said was in the line of testimony.

Judge and jury were puzzled. It was a hard task to condemn this strong, manly fellow to death. Hansen solved their difficulty. He pronounced sentence on himself, the culminating act in the strange tragedy.

Looking at the judge with softened, kindly face, he signed for permission to speak; permission given, he rose.

"I will die," he said. "By white man's law will I die, for that is good. I will die that my death may show to all men what the love of God can do. I was a wild animal with a black heart, knowing not God nor his mercy. My brothers here"—he turned to some of the men of the Salvation Army—"have taught me and I am become a man. Like a man will I die, to be a warning to my people. Go to them. Teach them. Let them not live any longer in the darkness of their sins." His voice rang like a trumpet call. Pity it is that all the world could not have heard the call.

The judge tried to speak, but his voice failed. "Say the words, brother," encouraged Hansen gently.

"You have said them," replied the judge, and sat down more overcome than he had ever been in all his years in the court room.

That evening a delegate from the town bearing a petition to the President of the United States sailed from Juneau.

In the opinion of President McKinley, it was not wise to pardon Hansen, lest his example and the lack of punishment should have a bad influence on the natives, but at least the self-imposed sentence of death was not carried out. Instead he was sent for life to the dreary prison on MacNeil's Island, and there, if indeed he still lives, he drags out a weary life.

It has always seemed to those who heard Hansen tell his tale of tragedy and of redemption that if he could be set free he would be the greatest missionary ever sent out to the North.

A LEAF HID THE STAR

RICHARD JEFFERIES, in his unique book, The Story of My Heart, wrote that he was sitting by his window one summer evening watching for the first star to appear, as he knew the position of the brightest in the southern sky. The dark came on, and grew deeper, but the star did not shine. By and by, other stars less bright appeared. So it could not be the sunset which obscured the expected one. Finally, he concluded that he must have mistaken its position, when suddenly a puff of air blew through the branch of a pear tree which overhung the window, a leaf moved, and there was the star behind the leaf!

When we cannot see God's beautiful star of love, there is always something of earth which obscures it. It never fails to shine, and clouds cannot hide it, for it will pierce the darkest cloud.

But, just as a tiny leaf hid that bright star from Jefferies' view, some small thing may prevent us from seeing the light of God's love. A dollar can be held so close to the eye as to obscure the sun. Thus it is in regard to spiritual light. We can shut it out by the things of earth. But nothing can come between us and this light unless we allow it to do so, and we can always remove the obstruction.

"Give me," said Herder, "a great thought with which to quicken myself." Here is a great thought which should inspire and comfort every child of God. It is that nothing can separate us from his love—the love which is like a steady, clear-shining light. However dark the night of sorrow, disappointment, or other hardship may be, this light will never fail to shine. We can always see it unless we ourselves allow something to obstruct the view. Whatever that obstruction may be, we can always remove it if we will. If we permit nothing to hide it from us it will cheer and guide us all the way from earth to heaven.

A. M. G.

For the Blue

Bran for breakfast would be many a dull day. It is Nature's laxative. But the bran should be made inviting.

In Pettijohn's the bran is laden in luscious soft wheat flakes. The food is a dainty, rich in flavor, liked by everyone. Yet 25 per cent is bran.

Pettijohn's fosters the bran bit—makes it delightful. And it fosters right living and good cheer. Watch its effect for one week.

Pettijohn's

Rolled Wheat With the Bran

If your grocer hasn't Pettijohn's, send us his name and 15 cents in stamps for back-age by parcel post. We'll then send your store to supply it. Address The Oats Company, Chicago. (900)

Delivered TO YOU FREE on Approval and 30 days trial

SEND NO MONEY but write today for our 1915 catalog of "Ranger" Bicycles, Tires and Sundries at prices so low you will astonish you. Also particulars of our great offer to deliver you a Ranger Bicycle on one month's free trial without a cent expense to you. BOYS you can make money taking orders for bicycles, tires, lamps, sundries, etc., from our handsome catalog. It's free. It contains "combination offers" for re-fitting your old bicycle like new at very low cost. Also much useful bicycle information. Send for it. LOW FACTORY PRICES direct to you. No commission. You cannot afford to buy a bicycle, tires, lamps, etc., without first learning what we can offer you. Write now. MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. D-71, CHICAGO, ILL.

From Us to You, at Factory Prices

Illustrated Catalog, showing many styles to choose from. Mention Dept. "C. H." and write today, a post card will be sent.

Cornish Co. Washington, N. J.

WHEEL CHAIRS and TRICYCLES

A Wheel Chair is often an invincible ally. We offer over 75 styles of rolling chairs and tricycles. Improvements. Ship direct to you and sell. 10 DAYS' TRIAL. Liberal return policy. All sending for FREE catalog. GORDON MFG. CO., 341 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.

The BEST LIGHT

Positively the cheapest and strongest light in the world. Used in every country on the globe. Burns its own gas. Casts no shadow. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE. THE BEST LIGHT CO., 3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

YOU CAN AFFORD Familiar Songs of the Gospel (No. 1 or 2). Round or shape. 83 songs, words and music. 50 each. 83 songs, words and music. E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, IND.

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. Attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

Wyoming, Pa. The psalmist wrote: "My sin is ever before me." What do you say to the man who cannot forgive himself?

We should say that he ought to get his mind off others instead of on himself. People do not live how much of self-reproach is really self-justification. In it a man is really implying that his deeds, whether good or bad, are very important and his own feelings about his deeds a matter of great moment to the world. But the proper attitude is to forget self and the old life. If you like, "I was the chief of sinners," let it go at that. Tell every new convert forget himself and his past, in earnest, self-sacrificing effort for others in the name of Jesus. Of course there is one kind of sin which is hard to forget—that is the kind that has brought pain or loss or trouble to others. But in these sins we can make right quicker and better by thinking about the future rather than the past. If we can reach the people we loved or grieved, we should try to make up to them the loss or sorrow we caused; if we cannot, we should try to find some one else to pay to him in kindness and service the debt we owe another. As for our own souls, Christ forgives us freely, and we must not dishonor him by questioning that forgiveness. We do not need to forgive ourselves. We can go on with our work, doing it well in gratitude to the Saviour who has forgiven us, and because of the new love for others which he has put into our hearts.

Mrs. G. W. K., Central City, Neb. We can see no inconsistency in the church function as you describe. Eating together has always been a delight to Christians. The Gospels tell of many feasts at which the Master was present; took supper with his disciples on the night before his death; the earliest description of the church after Pentecost contains these words: "And they, continuing daily in the temple, and taking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart." (Acts 2: 46.) The meal hour is a time when matters of common interest can be discussed, free from the pressure of the morning's afternoon's work. The pleasures of congenial fellowship and of taking physical refreshment, added to the leisure of the table, put the mind in good condition for considering important problems. A vast deal of modern "business" is conducted over city luncheon tables. If of course a meal in the church or under the auspices of the church should be decorous, pleasant, conducted in every respect as if the Master himself were present.

W. L., Eldridge, Mass., "Bible Student," Newton, N. J., and others: The statement in the article recently published in the Christian Herald entitled "The Forty Days," by Pastor D. I. Steffens, that the New Testament recorded three appearances of the Saviour on earth after the resurrection, was an error of the press, the author having written "ten" instead of "three," and the blunder having been made by the typist. We are glad to make this explanation in justice to Pastor Steffens, whose thoroughness as a Bible scholar we highly appreciate.

V. T. C., Mountainside, Ala. 1. Saul is believed by many Bible chronologists to have reigned forty years over Israel, approximately from 1093 to 1053 B.C. Others think this doubtful, as it would make the king an octogenarian when he fought his last battle. Josephus, the historian, says: "He [Saul] reigned eighty years while Samuel was alive, and after Samuel's death, two and twenty years." There is no means of determining how long his reign preceded his death. 2. All of the twelve disciples were Jews, their number being divinely chosen after the analogy of the twelve tribes. A majority were Galileans and some are believed to have previously followed John the Baptist (Matt. 12: 25; John 1: 35; Matt. 19: 28).

W., Libertyville, Iowa. 1. "Neighbor" is a comprehensive word. It signifies not only one who is near at hand, but one who is connected with us by the common bond of humanity, and consequently one whom we should consider as a friend and, in the broader sense, even a relative. The Pharisees in Christ's time had narrowed down the meaning of the word to those of their own nation. They taught that by the law they were not forbidden to hate their enemies; but Jesus showed them that the people of the whole world are neighbors, and that they ought to apply the Golden Rule to all men, even their enemies. It is true that a man can be a member of our own church and of our own town and yet not be our neighbor in the sense that Saviour meant; but such a one is among the failures who do not comprehend the teaching. If they did comprehend it and applied it practically, then they would be real neighbors. In the parable of the Samaritan both sides are illustrated, but it is certainly clear that the priest and the Levite should have been neighbors, and would have been if they had had the Christ-spirit. 2. You ask "is it possible for the people of God to seek him daily and delight to know his ways (as a people that do righteousness, and who forsake not his ordinance), and at the same time to be in transgression and sin and under condemnation?" No. The two conditions are absolutely contradictory. If they are genuine Christians and seek God in all sincerity and delight in serving him, they will seek at the same time to be strengthened against temptation and kept from falling. They will not trust in their own righteousness, however, but in the righteousness of Christ as Saviour. To conceive of such contradictory elements of character in any one person as those you have described, would be to picture a hypocrite who made a cloak or pretense of religion.

J. M., Stratford, Canada. Did Satan ever lie to Christ? If so, when?

We have the plainest of assurances that the devil is a liar (see John 8: 44). When Satan tempted Jesus by offering him the kingdoms of this world, as though they were his own, he knew he did not own them, but had usurped them; hence, they were not his to give.

E. G. K., Sewell, W. Va. 1. The italics in the English Bible indicate that the words so printed are missing in the original, though in many cases they are clearly implied. The translators believed the added words to be necessary to a correct understanding of the text. It seems unfortunate that this particular method of designating the supplied words should be chosen, for in modern printing italics make the word emphatic, while most of these words are unemphatic. 2. Gen. 3: 15 is by many commentators believed to refer to the coming of the Messiah, though the literal meaning is true, even without the Messianic interpretation. There is enmity between man and Satan, and between man and the serpent. The instinct to kill snakes is almost universal. But it is natural to believe that this statement is the definite promise that evil shall be permanently overcome by means of a man and we know that man to be Christ. 3. The Christian Herald Almanac gives every year a summary of the denominational statistics, together with a brief historical and doctrinal statement about each denomination.

Miscellaneous

R. A. G., Garfield, Wash. Your question is one for a skilled pathologist.

Inquirer. The legislature of Montana recently voted to submit the question of statewide prohibition to a vote of the people at the election in November, 1916.

J. C. G., Fostoria, Ohio. Explanations of the passages you mention are so varied and extensive that we must refer you to some good Biblical encyclopedia.

A. N. S., Springfield, Ore. The passage in question is interpreted as meaning that the man who acts in the manner indicated drives the woman into sin, in case she marries again.

Mrs. A. L. R., East Northfield, Mass., writes: "There has not (so far as I know) been one word of protest against the big fair being open on Sundays. You will recall how the Chicago fair was going to open Sundays, and the agitation against it was so marked that it was kept closed; a victory for Sabbath-keeping. One would think for the sake of the ones employed it would be necessary for rest and health, if for no other reason."

E. L. T., Santa Rosa, Calif. A number of writers who have made a special study of prophecy have published articles on the subject of the war in relation to revelation. The majority hesitate to identify the present struggle with Armageddon, however, although all agree that the war possesses features that resemble the prophetic description. We quite coincide with your view that the people of the United States should not conclude that our country has escaped this trouble owing to being more Christian than the others, but should rather "turn to a more earnest and heartfelt worship of God and seek him in spirit and truth."

W. W. K., Louisville, Ky. Seven is one of the symbolic numbers of Scripture. God rested on the seventh day (after the Creation); the seventh month was the month of great religious observances; the seventh year was the sabbatical year, and the year succeeding seven times seven, or the fiftieth year, was the jubilee year. Seven expresses the idea of completeness and satisfaction. It indicated the resting-point from labor, and it has significance in many other ways. It marked the septennial rest for the land from all tillage and cultivation, as enjoined in the Mosaic law. In that year, the whole land was to "keep a Sabbath unto the Lord." Not only was the land to lie fallow, but the rest was to be shared by men and cattle.

The Flag of 1915

In these days, when nearly every great nation is at war, "Old Glory" is one of the few flags that are not being riddled with bullets. It is really the "Peace Flag" of the world today.

Have you a Flag for use on Memorial Day, Flag Day, and Fourth of July?

Our 1915 Flag (6 feet long by 4 feet wide) is made by the Dunkards of Pennsylvania, within sight of Valley Forge, where Washington and the Patriots once struggled for liberty.

Here is your chance to own one of these large American Flags, the same as those shown in the picture below. Not a little flag, but a large-sized "Old Glory," 6 feet long by 4 feet wide—bigger than the top of your dining-room table—real red, white and blue, with stripes double-stitched together, and guaranteed not to fade, run or shrink, no matter what the weather.

Here is an opportunity to keep faith with your patriotism. You will not only have use for a flag on every holiday for years to come, but you can also use it constantly for decorative purposes in public and private sociables, in the club-house, in the church and in the home. Memorial Day is almost here. You will be able to celebrate it properly with this flag.

The Tabernacle at Medina, N. Y., decorated with The Christian Herald Flags Described Herewith

The flags used in the illustration herewith are actual Christian Herald Flags which were sent to Messrs. Burgess and Butts for the purpose of decorating the tabernacle during the "Good News" campaign in Medina, N. Y., recently. The photograph of the tabernacle interior was sent to us by Mr. Benjamin F. Butts, Director of Music, during the revival.

HOW TO SECURE ONE OF THESE FLAGS

At this time of the year, the Christian Herald usually puts forth extraordinary efforts to increase the membership of the Christian Herald Family. YOU are a member and we know you will help us. But we have no right to accept your good offices for nothing, so we make the following proposition:

We will send the large American Flag described above } $2 and The Christian Herald for one year, all for only }

Or, you may secure the Flag FREE. To any old subscriber who will send us one new eight months' subscription to The Christian Herald (remitting $1.00 with order) we will send one of these large American Flags

FREE

ACT NOW

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

CONGOLEUM RUGS

For porches —and every room in the house

CONGOLEUM RUGS are made by a new and wonderful process. We believe housewives will find them superior to any of the medium-priced grass, fibre, or fabric rugs now on the market.

Congoleum Rugs are absolutely sanitary. The way to clean them is to wash them, for they are waterproof. They do not fade in the sun. They lie flat and never "kick up".

We have patterns suitable for every room in the house where a moderate-priced rug is required. For porch use, these Rugs are particularly appropriate, as you do not have to take them up when it rains or when you clean the porch, as water does not hurt them in the slightest.

Many dealers throughout the country are recommending Congoleum Rugs in place of linoleum by the yard, which has to be cut and accurately fitted, and unless the job is well done it buckles and is unsatisfactory. When you buy Congoleum Rugs you have none of these troubles—just lay them on the floor—they don't even need fastening—they lie so flat and perfect.

Sizes and Prices

Congoleum Rugs are made in all the popular sizes and in many patterns. Prices in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains are as follows:

1 yard x 1 yard	$.60 each
1 yard x 1½ yards	.90 "
1 yard x 2 yards	1.20 "
1½ yards x 1½ yards	1.35 "
1½ yards x 2 yards	1.80 "
2 yards x 2 yards	2.40 "
2 yards x 3 yards	3.60 "
2 yards x 4 yards	4.80 "

Congoleum Two-piece Rugs

Undoubtedly the most novel Rug on the market today is the Congoleum two-piece Rug, which is a real achievement. The Rug is made in two pieces for easy handling and has the so-called "invisible seam", so that when it is laid on the floor it matches perfectly. Ideal for dining room, bed room and porch use. Prices:

3 yards x 4 yards	$7.50 each
3½ yards x 4 yards	8.50 "

The name "Congoleum" is stamped on the back of every Rug. Look for it when you buy and be sure to get the genuine.

Handsome Rug Chart Free

If you are interested write to us for handsome Rug Chart, in colors, from which you can make selection and get your dealer to supply you with the Rugs you desire.

UNITED ROOFING &
MANUFACTURING CO.

DEPT. OF BARRETT MFG. COMPANY

PHILADELPHIA CHICAGO BOSTON
LOS ANGELES SAN FRANCISCO SEATTLE
MONTREAL TORONTO WINNIPEG VANCOUVER
ST. JOHN, N. B. HALIFAX, N. S. SYDNEY, N. S.

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER YEAR
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MAY 26, 1915

VOL. 38—NO. 21. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

*The horses stand beside the bars,
And all the barnyard hum
Blends softly in a thankful song—
For suppertime has come.*

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

Mrs. W. E. P., Fidelity, Ill. I was trying to explain to my young ladies' class in Sunday school the difference between law and grace. Some could not see it as I did and they thought it still necessary to keep the commandments in order to be saved and not on believing in Christ. I explained that when we come under grace, we will keep the commandments naturally, without the effort the Old Testament people had to use. God now gives righteousness instead of requiring it. Am I not right? Two of them thought that our works had as much to do with saving us as our faith. I told them they were saved by faith and rewarded (not saved) according to works.

You were only partially right. The clear and definite teaching of the Scripture is "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Divested of all theological phrases, the way of salvation is pointed out in these plain words. Man, as a sinner, is under condemnation by the law; but the Gospel opens the way to pardon and to rehabilitation in righteousness. Salvation is of God's free grace and comes through no merit of our own. Christ has satisfied the law and paid the penalty in our behalf. He is to be accepted as Saviour, Atoner, Advocate, Counselor, Friend. Not in the strength of our own righteousness, but with his righteousness covering our imperfections, and his shed blood washing away our sins and his divine intercession pleading for our forgiveness, we place our whole life, here and hereafter, unreservedly in his hands. We must first confess our sins with sincere repentance, and then determine, with his help, to forsake sin hereafter. If we have wronged any one, we must show the sincerity of our repentance by righting the wrong. We must ask help to overcome all assailing doubts and to have our faith strengthened daily. We have his assurance that such prayers will never be unanswered. In all of this process, there is nothing concerning works. If men were saved by virtue of their works, what would become of those who, sunk in the lowest depths of sin, have no works to plead for them? Yet he "saves to the uttermost." He has already fulfilled the law and done all the works needful for our salvation, and it only remains for us to accept his sacrifice and rejoice that Jesus has "tasted death for every man," and that he died for us. Regeneration follows conversion, and the regenerated heart, in grateful and glad obedience, brings forth those fruits of the Spirit that are described in Gal. 5: 22, 23; Eph. 5: 9; James 3: 17, 18; Phil. 1: 11. They are the things that make the life rich and abundant, in contrast with the barren and unproductive nature of the unregenerated life. Thus fruit (or works) logically follow, for it is inevitable that a living faith must be productive; hence our faith is literally known by the works we do in token of the love that gave us as a free gift that new and larger freedom which otherwise we could never have attained. (See Rom. 8: 2; Gal. 5: 1; Rom. 6: 18; John 8: 32, 36.)

Mrs. J. R., Chula Vista, Calif. There are various passages that clearly imply recognition in the future life. David, speaking of the death of his infant son, said: "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me" (II Sam. 12: 23). Jesus, in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, implied recognition (Luke 16: 23). Again in Luke 23: 43 (penitent thief), there is the same idea, and in John 14: 1-3 recognition is clearly to be inferred. While we cannot know all, we have enough to assure us that God is far kinder than we can ask and that the future of all who believe and trust in him is safe in his keeping. (II Tim. 4: 7.)

M. E. P., Spartanburg, S. C. Recently on a pastor's advice I made up my mind to be a Christian. I have joined the church and am trying to do right, but I am not happy nor satisfied. I want something, but I do not know what it is. I feel that God requires something of me, but cannot imagine what it is. I want with all my heart to be a child of God and to feel his Spirit near me. I want to live for him and be what he would have me be, but do not know what to do.

One does not become a Christian by "making up one's mind," nor by joining the church, nor by doing some difficult thing which is specially revealed. We cannot make ourselves Christians. That is something God does. And he does it, not when we "make up our mind," or "join the church," or "do something," but when we trust him to forgive our sins for Christ's sake. No wonder we get discouraged and bewildered in trying to do such an impossible thing as to make Christians of ourselves; but it is a delightfully easy and simple thing to let God make Christians of us. Take God at his word. Trust him. Do not wait for feeling, but believe at once that he does forgive and receive and adopt you. As soon as you begin to trust him you will find yourself beginning to love him. Then go to work at once trying to save and help and cheer others in his name. If doubts come back and if your "emotions" vary, as they are bound to do, or they would not be emotions, keep on trusting God. Because we have received Christ he "has given us the right to become the sons of God" (John 1: 12). Then, step by step, as you continue to trust and love him, he will make his will clear to you and help you by his Spirit in the work you try to do.

Mrs. L. A. H., Landisville, Pa. Had the twelve disciples repented before Jesus chose them as his followers?

The question whether or not the disciples of Jesus were regenerated men in the evangelical this connection, it would be well to read the first thirteen verses of Gen. 6, which describe physical conditions on the earth before the Flood. Josephus, the Jewish historian, in Antiquities, chapter 3, says that in process of time those antediluvians forsook the practices of their forefathers and became perverted, dishonoring God and doing all manner of injustice. He refers to an ancient tradition that their acts of lawlessness were those of a race of turbulent giants. Beyond what is set forth in Scripture, however, and what geology reveals, there can be nothing but inference and conjecture concerning that period. It is significant as supporting the theory of a changed and clear atmosphere, that we find in Gen. 9: 13 the establishment of the rainbow as "the token of the covenant," which leads to the conclusion that no rainbow could have been visible from the earth until the change.

C. J., Carpenter, Wyo. There is a decided tendency toward greater freedom in the matter of conduct in religious services or exercises held in church buildings. Christian people are learning that unconventional conduct does not necessarily deprive souls of divine blessing. We

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

Once each month we attach, just under this notice, a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose CHRISTIAN HERALD subscriptions expired at any time during the past month. If your copy has this subscription blank attached, please use it to renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR RENEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THREE WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION TO THE BLANK.

When renewing, indicate on the blank whether your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our premium books, My Garden of Hearts, $2; The Fundamentals of the Faith, $2.20; Wonder Stories, $2; The Strange Adventures of Captain Quinton, $2; India Papered Letter Bible, $3, with your subscription, a straight year's subscription at $1.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR $3. It is understood that the old subscriber must pay the full subscription price of $1.50 from the new subscriber and must not in any way receive the special price with the new subscriber.

Send money by postal or express money orders. Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 100 House, New York.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. Charles Holmes, Schodack Landing, N. Y., would be glad if any reader would tell her why Jericho was called "the City of Mo."

Reader, Luella, La. Your river problem is one we cannot answer. We would advise you to consult an engineer, as it may be a very important matter.

Mrs. Katie E. Atwood, a former resident of Bedford, Ind., or any one knowing her present whereabouts, is requested to send her present address to "Pastor," 89 Egmont Avenue, Springfield, Mass.

Mrs. C. D. Stone, 393 Seventh Street, Buffalo, N. Y., a long-time reader of the Christian Herald and a fine old Christian, has just turned her seventieth milestone. Perhaps some of our friends would like to cheer her up with a "post card" shower—an excellent way of expressing sympathy and encouragement.

D. F. E., Washington, D. C., and other readers. The European war is not interfering in any way with the forwarding of money to China or Japan for orphan support, nor is there any prospect that it will do so. We make this statement to reassure those readers who are interested in orphan support and who may have been anxious about the matter.

Several Readers. The legend at the top of the flower cards from Jerusalem is in Arabic, and reads "Zohoor il aradi el mukaddassie, meaning, when translated, "Flowers of the Holy Lands." The Jerusalem Cross is from a flag adopted by the various Crusader nations, which was white, with five red crosses, emblematic of the five wounds of Christ.

L. V. W., Mount Kisco, N. Y., writes at the Orthodox Branch of the Society of Friends has large missions in the following countries: Palestine, India, China, Japan and Africa besides those in Mexico, Cuba, and Alaska.

C. P., Flushing, N. Y. The interpretation of Scripture which appear in the Mail-Bag are those that are preferred by the best modern orthodox scholarship. It should be remembered that absolutely literal interpretations are unsafe; "the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life." (II Cor. 3: 6.) There are in the Scriptures passages that are allegorical, typical, mystical, and these cannot be subjected to literal treatment, as if the case were a simple statement of familiar fact.

F. N., Seattle, Wash. 1. The Edomites are the descendants of Esau. (See Gen. 36: 1.) The country which Esau and his family and flocks occupied was a tract of Mount Sinai, which they continued to hold for many generations. In the course of time they lost their independent existence. 2. The Turks are not heard of in history when they emerged from Central Asia and located near the Aral and Caspian Seas. No attempt has ever been made to identify them with the ancient people of Idumea.

A. D. J., Cozad, Neb. As the body is the temple of the Holy Spirit, we should strive to keep it clean and wholesome and free from vices. (See I Cor. 6: 19.) Any habit of indulgence that lowers physical efficiency or interferes with mental activity should be dropped. We believe this applies in this particular case.

Mrs. J. G., Chicago, Ill. This journal deserves a neutral attitude on the war and consequently cannot undertake to decide as to the truth of the charges and countercharges that appear in the daily press, although we have no doubt there is a good deal of exaggeration.

THE VETERAN

BY EMMA A. E. LENTE

"WHEEL me up by the window, daughter, and lay my flag at hand,
And when the boys come marching by, at the open sash I'll stand,
And wave and shout till they turn and look, and give me a rousing cheer,
They will lift their caps in the old salute when they see me standing here.

"I am lame, and my sight is almost gone, but my pulses burn like fire;
My feet grow strong, and my eager heart beats high with the old desire
To follow the flag and the captain's call, wherever the way shall lead;
But there, I forget; I am old and lame; I should fail in a time of need."

And the dear old veteran sat in the sun close up by the window-pane,
And his trembling hands on the window-ledge beat time to an old refrain;
But soon he lifted his whitened head, for he heard the bugle's blare,
And the roll of drums and the thud of feet came clearly upon the air.

"Now, honey, they're coming; open wide the window, and let me lean
Across the sill with my little flag so we surely will be seen
By the dear old boys as they journey past with the flowers they go to lay
On the grassy graves of comrades dear, and to honor their names this day."

And the boys passed by with the old salute, and the music died on the air,
And the sun shone down with a genial warmth on the old man leaning there.
But his spirit had followed the bugle and drums; he had heard a Captain's call;
And the little flag still waved from the hand that would not let it fall.

sense has been frequently discussed. The Christian Herald has always held that they were. See particularly "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered," paragraph 139. As to their having repented before he chose them, it would perhaps be impossible to determine this matter accurately in each case, but the strong probabilities are that they had, either long before or just before this time, all repented of their sins. It may be that even Judas had the beginnings of spiritual life, which he later forfeited. The preaching of John the Baptist doubtless had much to do with the preparation of the hearts of the disciples for their opportunities and responsibilities as friends and fellow workers with Jesus and for the spiritual life into which they allowed him to lead them.

W. M. H., Wyndmere, N. D. The passage in Gen. 2: 5, 6 states that the ground at that early period was watered not by rain but by mist. Gen. 6: 4 informs us that the stature of many in those antediluvian days was gigantic. Geologists, too, have associated that period with the existence of huge animal types, the fossil remains of many of which have been found. All the indications known to science lead to the conclusion that atmospheric and other conditions were favorable to the production of great fauna and flora. Science also indicates that the coming of the Flood marked the period of a general change of atmospheric conditions, and a corresponding change in the development of animal and vegetable life in the world. In should consider even when Sunday school anniversaries are held in the main auditorium of the church on the Sabbath Day that the audience should feel at liberty to applaud anything which particularly pleased or helped them; and if some of the older boys were so delighted as to feel that they must stamp on the floor, it might not be necessary to reprove or stop them. What we are after is the boys, not the dignity of the congregation nor the preservation of the church carpet.

Reader, Dayton, Ohio. At the beginning of the present year, the daily cost of the war in Europe to the combatant countries was estimated as follows: England, $7,500,000; France, $8,750,000; Germany, $12,500,000; Austria-Hungary, $8,750,000; Russia, $12,500,000. As the armies in the field have largely increased in the last four months, the daily cost has doubtless risen considerably, but no present figures are available. The figures given above are the result of investigations by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in Washington.

N. A. M., Wedderburn, Ore. The order quarantining eleven counties in your state, issued by the State Sanitary Board against rabies, was doubtless rendered necessary by the fact that many dogs had become affected in those sections. For full information as to guarding against rabies, write to the Pasteur Institute, New York City, if you cannot get it from your own state health officer.

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

OUR PROTEST TO GERMANY

JUSTUS MILES FORMAN

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood
ALFRED G. VANDERBILT

Copyright, George Greiner, Inc.
PRESIDENT WILSON
Upon Wilson Near Are the Eyes of the World

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood
CHARLES FROHMAN

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood
ELBERT HUBBARD

Among the Dead

NOT since the days of the Spanish War have the American people been so deeply stirred as during the week that followed the sinking of the great Cunard liner Lusitania by a submarine attack, involving the loss of over 1,500 lives, upwards of 100 Americans being among the victims. It was noted as a singular coincidence that the number of those who perished was very nearly the same as that of the lost on the ill-fated Titanic. It was a week of national anxiety and excitement, yet of remarkable restraint. All eyes turned toward Washington, where the President, shut out from interruptions, was reflecting in solitude over the gravest problem that had yet confronted his administration. An endless stream of letters and telegrams poured in upon him from all parts of the country during the first four days after the disaster. Those messages gave an index of the public mind. It is learned that while a few were warlike in tone, the great majority brought assurances of loyalty and confidence in the wisdom of the executive. As a whole, the messages were of real service, permitting the President to feel the pulse of the nation and strengthening him with the knowledge that in the present crisis he could depend upon its undivided support.

On Wednesday, May 12, the President began the preparation of the American note to Germany. From memoranda which he himself had written in shorthand, he dictated the note dealing with the Lusitania tragedy to Charles R. Sem, his confidential stenographer. In adopting this course, he set a precedent, as all his other important state papers, including his messages to Congress and the "strict accountability" note to Germany in February last, as well as other international communications, have been written by him personally on his own typewriter, at a desk in the White House lobby. The

There has been much speculation and conjecture as to the course which Germany is likely to follow. As the reply of the German Government to the American note may be received in Washington before this issue reaches our readers, it is useless to deal with anticipatory rumors. There is, however, a very decided impression in Washington that President Wilson's note will open the way to diplomatic exchanges which may lead to an understanding acceptable to both governments. Expectation of a favorable outcome has been strengthened by the official declaration received by our State Department from the German Government through Ambassador Gerard on May 11, in which it sets forth its policy with respect to American and other neutral ships meeting German submarines in the naval war zone. This declaration, which was issued as a "circular statement," deals with "mistaken attacks by German submarines on commerce vessels of neutral nations." It states that Germany "has naturally no intention of causing to be attacked by submarines or aircraft such neutral ships of commerce in the zone of naval warfare . . . as have been guilty of no hostile act. Even when such ships have contraband of war on board, they are dealt with by submarines solely according to the rules of international law applying to prize warfare. . . . Should a neutral ship nevertheless come to harm through German submarines or aircraft, on account of an unfortunate, (?), in the above-mentioned zone of naval warfare, the German Government will unreservedly recognize its responsibility therefor. In such a case it will express its regrets and afford damages without first instituting a prize court action." While the circular referred to does not define the attitude of the German Government on the subject of the treatment of Americans and other neutral non-combatants on British, French or Russian vessels, it is still regarded as holding the promise that the case of the Lusitania may ultimately be dealt with in a similar spirit.

Meanwhile, leading men of all parties are deprecating undue public excitement. Ex-President Taft, at an address in Philadelphia on May 11, strongly urged patience and self-control as a national duty. Delay, he said, due to calm deliberation, cannot change the situation or minimize the effect of what we finally conclude to do. . . . Our action will not lose efficiency by giving time to the people to know what they are facing.

WILLIAM S. HODGES

DEAN AND WILLIAM S. HODGES, JR.
Philadelphia Who, With Wife and Two Boys, Aged 7 and 8, Was Lost

Some of the members of the Cabinet, it is reported, questioned the advisability of taking a drastic stand in the new note to Germany; but it seems to have been ultimately concluded that our government should not fail to make clear that the note of February 10 had in view the possibility of just such an occurrence as has actually happened. Other members favored giving consideration to every possible aspect of the problem, which was done as far as the limits of a long session permitted. As there were no outsiders present at the meeting, however, impressions of what took place must be regarded as largely newspaper rumors. One thing is certain: The President's note is a whole met with the hearty and united approval of his cabinet. After the cabinet meeting, the note was sent to the State Department for the purpose of conforming it to the requirements of diplomatic rules. This duty was attended to by Counselor Lansing and Second Assistant-Secretary of State Acheson, after which it was taken to the White House, where next morning Presi-

THE GRIM EVENT

By William B. Ashley

THE maritime giantess which now lies drowned at the bottom of the sea astonished the world by her great size and speed, and was greeted with every mark of wonder upon her safe arrival at New York after her first trip across the ocean in September, 1907. She had been built to wrest from Germany the record for trans-Atlantic speed and comfort, and had succeeded. But alas for her! When that speed would have stood her in best stead—Germany won.

The Lusitania carried 1918 souls on her last voyage, although she had accommodations for 500 first-class passengers, 550 second, and 1,200 third-class, and a crew of over 900 men, or roughly 3,200 souls in all. War times have all but done away with ocean travel for pleasure. The passengers on this last trip numbered 1,251, of whom 188 were Americans. For the most they were men and women of standing in the business and social world, and in several cases entire families were aboard. In all, there were 150 babies on the ship, 50 of them under one year of age.

This company set sail in the knowledge that death was abroad upon the waves. They expected to elude him. They thrilled with the excitement of the idea. This would be a unique ocean trip about which they could tell with many imaginary touches for years to come; they tingled with the thought that ahead of them, unseen and alert, lurked hostile submarines of a great nation. It would be a glorious game of hide and seek, a thrilling race.

It is reasonable to suppose that these passengers, as the mighty vessel neared the war zone, told each other over and over again what a wonderful ship they were on, and how sure she was to carry them safe to port. They said that her double bottom and her watertight compartments, one hundred and seventy in all, which could be closed from the bridge in a matter of seconds, made her unsinkable by a torpedo. As though mere size meant safety, they spoke of her eight great decks and her three anchors of ten tons each, her five thousand electric globes requiring two hundred miles of wiring, and her twelve hundred side windows. But most of all, they spoke of her speed. "Twenty-five knots an hour, and can be forced up to twenty-six and one-third knots," they exulted. They spoke of her phenomenal trips across the ocean, and reminded each other of her best westward record of 4 days, 11 hours and 42 minutes. And then their thoughts were brought back to the danger into which they were plunging by the reminder that the Lusitania was being sought after by the German navy as the greatest marine prize possible in the war, a fact that had kept her insured, they said, at ten million dollars.

IT WAS a little after two o'clock in the afternoon of Friday, May 7. Quite a number of passengers were still at luncheon. Others idled in the lounging rooms and on deck, and some were in their staterooms. The crew were at their stations, and all in authority were on the lookout, with every sense alert for evidence of submarines. On the part of the passengers, who were on the watch, there was almost a feeling of disappointment that none showed up to give them chase.

The ship was about ten miles off the southeastern tip of Ireland, opposite a place called Old Head of Kinsale, at the entrance to the Irish Sea. The danger was passed. The great engines below were sending the Lusitania along at eighteen knots, under orders from the Admiralty. A few hours more and the ship would be a scene of excited bustle as her happy passengers trooped ashore at Queens-town.

Continued on last column

THE NOTE TO GERMANY

Department of State

WASHINGTON, May 19, 1915.

The Secretary of State to the American Ambassador at Berlin:

Please call on the Minister of Foreign Affairs and after reading to him this communication leave with him a copy.

In view of recent acts of the German authorities in violation of American rights on the high seas, which culminated in the torpedoing and sinking of the British steamship Lusitania on May 7, 1915, by which over 100 American citizens lost their lives, it is clearly wise and desirable that the Government of the United States and the Imperial German Government should come to a clear and full understanding as to the grave situation which has resulted.

The sinking of the British passenger steamer Falaba by a German submarine on March 28, through which Leon C. Thrasher, an American citizen, was drowned; the attack on April 28 on the American vessel Cushing by a German aeroplane; the torpedoing on May 1 of the American vessel Gulfight by a German submarine, as a result of which two or more American citizens met their death; and, finally, the torpedoing and sinking of the steamship Lusitania, constitute a series of events which the Government of the United States has observed with growing concern, distress, and amazement.

Recalling the humane and enlightened attitude hitherto assumed by the Imperial German Government in matters of international right, and particularly with regard to the freedom of the seas; having learned to recognize the German views and the German influence in the field of international obligation as always engaged upon the side of justice and humanity; and having understood the instructions of the Imperial German Government to its naval commanders to be upon the same plane of humane action prescribed by the naval codes of other nations, the Government of the United States was loath to believe—it can not now bring itself to believe—that these acts, so absolutely contrary to the rules, the practices, and the spirit of modern warfare, could have the countenance or sanction of that great government. It feels it to be its duty, therefore, to address the Imperial German Government concerning them with the utmost frankness and in the earnest hope that it is not mistaken in expecting action on the part of the Imperial German Government, which will correct the unfortunate impressions which have been created, and vindicate once more the position of that government with regard to the sacred freedom of the seas.

The Government of the United States has been apprised that the Imperial German Government considered themselves to be obliged by the extraordinary circumstances of the present war and the measures adopted by their adversaries in seeking to cut Germany off from all commerce, to adopt methods of retaliation which go much beyond the ordinary methods of warfare at sea, in the proclamation of a war zone from which they have warned neutral ships to keep away. This government has already taken occasion to inform the Imperial German Government that it cannot admit the adoption of such measures or such a warning of danger to operate as in any degree an abbreviation of the rights of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of belligerent nationality, and that it must hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability for any infringement of those rights, intentional or incidental. It does not understand the Imperial German Government to question those rights. It assumes, on the contrary, that the Imperial Government accept, as of course, the rule that the lives of non-combatants, whether they be of neutral citizenship or citizens of one of the nations at war, cannot lawfully or rightfully be put in jeopardy by the capture or destruction of an unarmed merchantman, and recognize also, as all other nations do, the obligation to take the usual precaution of visit and search to ascertain whether a suspected merchantman is in fact of belligerent nationality or is in fact carrying contraband of war under a neutral flag.

The Government of the United States, therefore, desires to call the attention of the Imperial German Government with the utmost earnestness to the fact that the objection to their present method of attack against the trade of their enemies lies in the practical impossibility of employing submarines in the destruction of commerce without disregarding those rules of fairness, reason, justice, and humanity which all modern opinion regards as imperative. It is practically impossible for the officers of a submarine to visit a merchantman at sea and examine her papers and cargo. It is practically impossible for them to make a prize of her; and, if they cannot put a prize crew on board of her, they cannot sink her without leaving her crew and all on board of her to the mercy of the sea in her small boats. These facts it is understood the Imperial German Government frankly admit. We are informed that in the instances of which we have spoken time enough for even that poor measure of safety was not given, and in at least two of the cases cited not so much as a warning was received. Manifestly, submarines cannot be used against merchantmen, as the last few weeks have shown, without an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity.

American citizens act within their indisputable rights in taking their ships and in traveling wherever their legitimate business calls them upon the high seas, and exercise those rights in what should be the well-justified confidence that their lives will not be endangered by acts done in clear violation of universally acknowledged international obligations, and certainly in the confidence that their own government will sustain them in the exercise of their rights.

There was recently published in the newspapers of the United States, I regret to inform the Imperial German Government, a formal warning, purporting to come from the Imperial German Embassy at Washington, addressed to the people of the United States, and stating, in effect, that any citizen of the United States who exercised his right of free travel upon the seas would do so at his peril if his journey should take him within the zone of waters within which the Imperial German Navy was using submarines against the commerce of Great Britain and France, notwithstanding the respectful but very earnest protest of his government, the Government of the United States. I do not refer to this for the purpose of calling the attention of the Imperial German Government at this time to the surprising irregularity of a communication from the Imperial German Embassy at Washington addressed to the people of the United States through the newspapers, but only for the purpose of pointing out that no warning that an unlawful and inhuman act will be committed can possibly be accepted as an excuse or palliation for that act or as an abatement of the responsibility for its commission.

Long acquainted as this government has been with the character of the Imperial Government, and with the high principles of equity by which they have in the past been actuated and guided, the Government of the United States cannot believe that the commanders of the vessels which committed these acts of lawlessness did so except under a misapprehension of the orders issued by the Imperial German naval authorities. It takes it for granted that, at least within the practical possibilities of every such case, the commanders even of submarines were expected to do nothing that would involve the lives of non-combatants or the safety of neutral ships, even at the cost of failing of their object of capture or destruction. It confidently expects, therefore, that the Imperial German Government will disavow the acts of which the Government of the United States complains; that they will make reparation so far as reparation is possible for injuries which are without measure, and that they will take immediate steps to prevent the recurrence of anything so obviously subversive of the principles of warfare for which the Imperial German Government have in the past so wisely and so firmly contended.

The Government and people of the United States look to the Imperial German Government for just, prompt, and enlightened action in this vital matter with the greater confidence, because the United States and Germany are bound together not only by special ties of friendship, but also by the explicit stipulations of the Treaty of 1828, between the United States and the Kingdom of Prussia.

Expressions of regret and offers of reparation in case of the destruction of neutral ships sunk by mistake, while they may satisfy international obligations, if no loss of life results, cannot justify or excuse a practice the natural and necessary effect of which is to subject neutral nations and neutral persons to new and immeasurable risks.

The Imperial German Government will not expect the Government of the United States to omit any word or any act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and its citizens and of safeguarding their free exercise and enjoyment.

BRYAN.

IT IS pointed out by naval experts that perhaps a half-dozen submarines had taken up their grisly station days before along this coast. The secret orders under which the Lusitania steered her course, were less known to the enemy. Regularly at short intervals, these submarines came to the surface to sweep the horizon with keen gaze. Confined for days within the narrow limits of the craft, deprived of every comfort, commanded to think of but one thing, getting of the Lusitania, the crews of these submarines were ripe for the task assigned them against the low sky, a black horizon to shape itself. This black became a ship . . . a steamer ocean greyhound . . . a mighty life, power, joyousness and fenness, warm with human lives. path these fearful instruments destruction waited.

But what could they do, those skulking hulks, to injure that waving mass of steel, with its double bottom and one hundred and seventy water-tight compartments, rushing through the water at the rate of eighteen knots an hour? Well, they still 4,000 yards distant, a submarine torpedo about seventeen feet in length weighing half a ton, and traveling at a speed of twenty-eight knots, would strike her full and fair in a vital spot at 3,000 yards its speed would be thirty-two knots; at 2,000 yards, twenty-four knots; at 1,000 yards, the ton explosive could strike the oncoming ship at a speed of forty knots, crash open her massive plates, drill through her double walls, tear apart her steel beams and pillars and open a breach for the ocean to pour through like a river.

These torpedoes are filled to the forward end with gun-cotton, most fearful of explosives. Behind it is the compressed-air chamber or power room. Then a compartment with delicate mechanism that controls the movements of the torpedo. This is the engine room and behind it the buoyancy chamber. When the torpedo is launched on its death run, two screw propellers at the rear, driven at high speed by the engine, operated by compressed air, push it forward, and it is kept in position and steered by a marvelous and intricate mechanism. The thing is discharged from the compressed air tube at a distance of about fifteen feet, and instantly becomes alive, cleaving the under-sea like a giant arrow, its screws sending to the surface a whirl of bubbles that disclose its course to an onlooker, as a swirl of dust above the highway marks the rush of a racing automobile.

IT WAS that peculiar and mistakable disturbance of the water, suddenly seen from the liner's deck, that cut short a man's laugh, remark, stupefied another, struck with amazed horror still another. There was no time to shout, there was no time to think. There was this swift, sinister frothing swirl, a glimpse of a black flash, and the Queen of the Seas trembled and was dead.

The fearful shock of the impact, the instant listing of the boat as the ocean poured into her, the frightful rush of an internal explosion, were instantly comprehended by all. Their fate they had dared had overtaken them. The death they had played a hide-and-seek with had found them. The foe they had laughed at had run them down. The great vessel to which they had entrusted their lives and which for six days had carried them safely across the deep, was in a few minutes a useless mass of wreckage on the bottom of the sea—useless excepting as she served the purpose of a tomb. So the daring voyage was ended.

WHEN the worst was apprehended, with extraordinary calm the passengers as well as the officers of the crew faced their fate. The vessel was turned shoreward, and the boats were lowered. By no means all the small boats could be lowered, and

Continued on page 553

JAPAN-CHINA WAR AVERTED

IN THE midst of the horrors of May 8, while the world was gasping over the tragedy of the Lusitania, there came the good news from the East that the threatened war between Japan and China had been after all averted. The war had been settling so heavily over those two nations that for a day or two previous there had been little hope that a conflict could be avoided. It had been announced for several days that Japan was about to present an ultimatum to China, which it was feared China would not accept. Chinese officials had refused to discuss the provisions of Group 5 in the demands made by the Japanese Government upon China, which they claimed would rob the Chinese nation of independence. The demands of this group required that the central government of China should employ influential Japanese subjects as advisers for conducting administrative financial and military affairs; that China and Japan should jointly police the important cities of China or employ a majority of Japanese in the Police Department of China; that China should purchase from Japan at least half of the arms and ammunition used in the whole country or establish jointly in Japan factories for the manufacture of arms. On May 7 President Yuan Shi Kai sent the following telegram to the New York Times: "In spite of the long and painful effort to bring negotiations to a peaceful settlement, we have been forced that Japan would present an ultimatum this afternoon at three o'clock and we, heretofore, are making a supreme effort to preserve the peace of the Far East." Upon the day following news came that Japan had modified her ultimatum by continuing to withhold the provisions of Group 5 for further discussion. The Chinese Government readily acceded to the modified ultimatum and the war cloud passed. It had been announced on May 5 that the Chinese, thinking that the Japanese ultimatum would demand acquiescence to the requirements of Group 5, were making military preparations for the defense of the Chinese capital. It was asserted that 100,000 troops had been concentrated in and near Peking. The Japanese legation was reported to have notified nationals to leave Peking, and it was said that the legations of other countries aligned themselves in a difficult situation. President Yuan Shi Kai faced a peculiarly difficult position, because while he was confronted by the Japanese demands on the one side, he also had to deal with the likelihood that in case he should accede to these demands there would be a revolution in China against their own government. On May 6 the Japanese minister at Peking received cable the terms of the ultimatum, which were to be communicated to the Chinese Government the following day. It was stated that the Chinese president and cabinet were unanimously determined to surrender no point impairing the sovereignty of their nation. The Chinese newspapers unanimously urged the government to remain firm, holding that further concessions would endanger national existence and that the Chinese position could not be made worse by fighting. In case China refused to accede to the ultimatum it was nated so that the acquiescence of the Chinese Government was made easy. One provision of Group 5, however, had already been conceded by China, which was that in case the province of Fukien required foreign capital for railway construction, mining, harbor improvements and ship-building, Japan should first be consulted. Vice-Minister Tsao Yulin in his last visit to the Japanese legation before the presentation of the ultimatum had proposed verbally to meet the Japanese railroad demands; to grant Japan the privilege of establishing schools and hospitals in China, and to relinquish China's three requirements about the Shantung Province, namely, that it should return to the status quo before the war, that China should participate in the peace conference, and that China should be compensated for damages in the Kiauchau campaign.

While China was not required to submit to the demands of Group 5 at this time, she is required, under the terms of the accepted ultimatum, to reopen these questions at some future date.

It is freely stated that Great Britain is believed to have been largely influential in persuading Japan so to modify her demands at present so as to make their acceptance by China possible. Although the Chinese populace feared and expected that war with Japan was imminent, there was little demonstration against Japanese residents except an unorganized boycott. It was reported that more than 20,000 Japanese refugees had arrived at Dalny and the Japanese residents were vacating Canton and other Chinese cities.

It was declared that the military program marked out by Japan in case the ultimatum had not been accepted was the occupation by Japanese forces of the centers of wealth and political power of China. The gradual penetration of the Chinese territory would have continued until Japan's demands were granted. It is claimed that Japan's aim would have been to avoid loss of life so far as possible. Chinese troops would have been captured and disarmed, and not fired upon unless offering resistance. It is estimated that China has about 450,000 troops under arms, of whom 300,000 have had modern military training.

Professor Stanley K. Hornbeck, of the University of Wisconsin, recently prepared for the Chicago Tribune a most interesting résumé of the Japan-China situation, comparing it with the procedure by which Japan finally conquered and assimilated the empire of Korea. Phrases from the treaties and conventions of various years, beginning 1894, are quoted, in which Japan solemnly asserts that she desires to preserve the integrity and independence of Korea. But on August 29, 1910, Japan formally declared Korea annexed to the dominions of his imperial majesty, the Emperor of Japan.

expected that besides the military operations at the capital there would be hostilities in the province of Mukden, where 50,000 Chinese troops were stationed. A Volunteer National Salvation fund had been raised for the government, one resident of Canton, whose property was valued at $120,000, having contributed all but $20,000 of his fortune to this fund. But before the ultimatum was finally presented the offensive requirements of Group 5 were elimi-

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

LOOKING WEST THROUGH THE HEART OF PEKING

IN THE FRONT LINE TRENCHES

BY EDWARD LYELL FOX

[Continuation of Mr. Fox's vivid recollections of personal experiences at the front in Europe, the first of which appeared in the Christian Herald May 17, the second, here continued, May 18.]

"FUND the lieutenant in his babyproof.

"I have been waiting for you," he called in a cheery way.

Then footfalls came from within. An under-officer saluted and handed him a bit of paper. Returning to the phone, the lieutenant picked up the receiver. I heard him call regimental headquarters, and then, reading from the paper, he reported in French: "Fifteen dead; twenty-eight wounded."

Thousands of miles from these trenches, America knows them as the "trenches" line of the newspaper headlines in the early autumn stopped across France, withdrew northward, and, fastening its barb in Belgium, ceased to move. Day after day, when I read the newspapers, America knew that the line was the same;

perhaps near Dixmude or Mülhausen it changed from time to time, but by November first it was evident that it was there to stay—for a time at least—and war maps became a bore.

The next time you read your newspapers, glance again at the map of the west front. Follow the line that begins on the Channel above Calais, turning southeast above Ypres and ending in the passes of the Vosges in Alsace; then think of it in this way: On the dunes you can enter a ditch that has been dug across Europe from the English Channel to Mülhausen. You can walk about three hundred miles under ground, eat three meals a day, and sleep on officers' cots without once having to expose yourself in the open. You will realize—as you see second, third, and fourth trenches parallel and connecting by labyrinthine passages—that the labor of excavating would dig a dozen subways. The Catskill Aqueduct, the Chicago subway, the irrigated desert lands of our West seem inadequate for comparison. Not from the standpoint of engineering skill; more than that. You think of this ditch in terms of the Panama Canal and the Great Wall of China. It is a work of heroic proportions, for it has been dug under constant fire. And it is only a detail of this war.

Before I came to Germany I was told: "There is not much doing in the West. Both armies are marking time." But there is that battle line roughly three hundred miles long. A surgeon in the Feldlazarett in Vis en Artois told me that they had on the average ten wounded a day, and that their hospital—a schoolhouse by the way—was fed by a segment of the front about two miles long. When you think of the terrific fighting near the Channel ports, this average is not high for the whole line. So when you glance at the little map in your newspaper think of it as meaning three thousand wounded men a day, ninety thousand a month, and a tenth as many dead. Think of it as meaning the Ypres Canal, where soldiers have gone mad and thrown themselves into red water; think of the field of Soissons, twice strewn with the dead; think of men in the trenches of the Argonne forest undermined and dynamited into the leafless trees; and when any one says to you, "There is not much doing in the West," imagine a three-hundred-mile line with three-quarters of a million soldiers standing in muddy brown water, and three-quarters of a million more whom they have just relieved, lying on beds of straw, too exhausted to remove their uniforms until it is time to wash; think of that line as meaning that for every five minutes of every day a German is being killed; and no one knows how many English, French and Belgians! The ink the newspapers use for that line is wrong: the line is not black; it is red. . . .

I had been behind that line, too. I went the length of it from Metz in the south to Lille in the north. There came a day when, after luncheon with General von Arnim and his staff, I left their headquarters in northern France, and climbed into one of the fast army motors, painted the same gray green as the uniforms, unable to shake off the feeling that this was not war at all; that the buff-walled

Continued on page 563

A WORLD ON ITS KNEES

A REVIVAL SERMON BY REV. EDWIN WHITTIER CASWELL*

Text: "And he said, Thus saith the Lord, Make this valley full of ditches." II Kings 3: 16

MESHA, king of Moab, had been at war with Israel for nearly forty years and had completely conquered her. Jehoram, coming to the throne as successor to his brother Ahaziah, longed to restore the prestige and glory of his people. He therefore formed an alliance with Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, and with his vassal king of Edom. The combined forces took a seven days' circuit around the south of the Dead Sea, so as to attack Moab and surprise her army.

Owing to recent droughts there was no water flowing through the valley which separates Edom from Moab. The armies and horses were suffering tortures from thirst. Jehoshaphat, being a devoted servant of the Lord, went to prayer, and received the intelligence that Elisha the prophet was with the army. The three kings then sought out Elisha, beseeching him to intercede for them. The hand of the Lord came upon Elisha in answer to his prayer, revealing what he should do. Elisha said, "Thus saith the Lord, Make the valley full of ditches. Ye shall not see wind, neither shall ye see rain, yet that valley shall be filled with water. He will also deliver the Moabites into your hand."

The armies believed the words of Elisha, dug the ditches, prepared the pools, and in a few hours a storm far away on the hillside, which they could not see, sent its waters down in a torrent that filled all the dug-out places.

A Stirring in the Tree Tops

It is not difficult to believe that already, throughout Christendom, a great religious revival is beginning to prevail. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church sent out a call nearly two years ago for the prayer of intercession, that the descent of the Holy Spirit might come upon all her churches. The Methodist Episcopal Church at its last session in general conference appointed a large committee upon evangelism. The most blessed results have followed throughout the church, and especially among the great colleges, both North and South. The Baptist denomination is manifesting great zeal and energy in the same mighty movement. Episcopalians are being aroused; Congregationalists are coming to the front; hundreds of evangelists on the firing line are reporting great victories. Missionaries are feeling the thrill of a new divine endowment. The Occident and the Orient are both awakening; the new republic of China is shaking off the lethargy of centuries. John R. Mott and G. Sherwood Eddy have recently held, in the great cities of the Chinese empire, vast assemblies spellbound with their story of the Gospel of Christ. The officers and leaders of that greatest nation on the globe have earnestly invited these meetings and many of them have embraced Christianity.

The mighty scourge of war that now shakes the world has brought the millions of people on all continents to their knees in prayer to Almighty God. Ten millions of soldiers, facing death every hour, are looking away from earth to God's throne in the skies. Hundreds of millions of sufferers, separated from dear ones, uncertain whether it is for a little while or forever, are also besieging the throne of grace for spiritual help, sympathy and salvation. Is not our world one great prayer meeting, where God and angels are mercifully ministering to human beings?

Signs of Promise

A great temperance crusade, in harmony with this religious revival, is belting the globe. Russia, by one stroke, banished liquors from her realm. India has done the same; China is throttling the opium monster. All countries are rising against the rum power. Thus Almighty God is arousing the sleeping consciences of mankind in this greatest uprising in all history. Wrongs are finding the scaffold and Right the throne.

In this world battle, this conflict of the ages, who doubts that Christ will win and Belshazzar and his revelers will lose?

Revivalists send cheering news throughout the world every day, as they bring thousands to the wells of salvation. Drs. Chapman and Torrey and a multitude of other evangelists are reporting triumphs on every hand. Every minister and layman in Christendom, as they help to prepare the way by digging the ditches, should cry out in holy expectation, "The flood is coming, the mighty deluge is near, whose white waves shall wash all shores, cleanse all lands, ushering in the universal reign and kingdom of our Lord." "Onward, Christian soldiers," should be our song, while we should shout:

Victory! Victory! Victory!
Yes, it will come!

Elijah predicted an abundance of rain. John the Baptist predicted the near approach of the Son of God. Jesus foretold Pentecost. All these predictions came true. Other great reformations and revolutions have been announced by those who were sensitive to the voice and touch of God. Thousands of ministers, missionaries and devoted followers of Christ have been waiting in prayer for years for the appearance of the cloud that will spread over all the heavens and send down the mightiest spiritual baptism mankind has ever received.

This cloud became visible a few years ago, suspended over Wales, where Christ came down in mercy drops like the rain and baptized that little country with power from on high. Later it hung over Korea, where tens of thousands entered the valley of blessing, peace and power. Then New Zealand and Australia were in the course of the trade winds of heaven, where Chapman and Alexander and Torrey saw thousands swept into the kingdom. It is not difficult to believe that today a cloud is beginning to cover the heavens everywhere.

Digging the ditches should be the cry of every Christian church, opening the avenues, getting ready for the tide that will become waters to swim in, that cannot be passed over.

The World's Great Need

The history of the church has been a history of special revival movement. Nehemiah, Jonah and John the Baptist aroused a nation to repentance. Always some portions of church members have opposed these periodical equinoctials. For some are better satisfied with life in the camp than with activity on the field.

Israel crucified Jesus when he was awakening mankind out of the slumber of ages. Rome resisted Luther when Protestantism was born. The Episcopal Church outlawed the Wesleys amid the greatest revival of the eighteenth century. New England opposed Edwards in his evangelistic ministry. Presbyterianism fought Finney while he was arousing the church in saving men. Moody at first was called an irregular, illiterate mountebank. Chapman has been styled a sensationalist. William Booth and his Salvation Army once was tabooed and excoriated by all the churches, while he was bringing many to repentance.

Such people should remember that nature has her special seasons; that after the waiting period of winter come the bursting glories of spring; after the growth of summer the harvest of autumn. The ocean has its annual tides and periodic movements, and rivers flow down in special floods to overflow and enrich the soil. Why then should we wonder when God comes with unusual floods of grace, when the harbors of heathendom are flooded and the shores of civilization bathed with the waters of purity?

It appears that the conditions all over the earth are now favorable for the greatest revival in history. After the vast acquirement of wealth during recent years, a financial reaction is depressing business centers all over the world and had been prevalent before the beginning of the war, but a vaster social and economic unrest is also visible. Woman is rising to grasp her inalienable rights; the laboring masses are claiming greater wages, liberty and influence. This civic and social awakening is an opportune hour for universal evangelism. Following prosperity came the desire for frivolity and amusement. This craving is fed by the new inventions, such as the moving picture show, cheap vaudeville theaters, games of all kinds, automobile racing, riding, a flood of cheap fiction and story papers. A great spiritual revival alone can check this reckless rioting and frivolity.

Many churches are afraid of what they call emotional excitement. Not in politics. Oh, no! Not in the new socialism, not in reform movements, not in the enfranchisement of woman; not in baseball games. In all these people may become wild with enthusiasm. Only in religion must the feelings be smothered and suppressed. But is not the heart the natural realm of religion? Conversion first is love and affection, philanthropy. It is sentiment before it becomes saving power; a rapture, then a renovator. He has said that "emotion is that which moves, that which gives motion." When the millions of Christendom become filled with the Spirit's power, then the motion of our planet will be heavenward, through an atmosphere of millennial glory.

"Prove Me Herewith"

Every Christian soul should dig down in the earth, casting out all idols, clearing away the rubbish of unholy desire. "Emptied that he might be filled." Then the divine river of life will flow into the heart as easily as the two oceans did into the Suez and Panama Canals. Then will the church become the highway of travel for immortal men, between the two oceans of time and eternity.

Let us make the Valley of Decision full of truth. Thousands are coming down from the icy mountains of unbelief, from the altitudes of skepticism, from the hills of worldliness, down into the Valley of Decision. Let us dig deep into indifference and awake the dead to life. Let us make ditches in the Valley of Unbelief. Doubters never dig. It is in the coming of the Lord inspires activity. Soldiers had no weather bureau except the word of God. They believed his word, though they saw no cloud, felt no breeze, had no signs. We have many evidences to inspire faith; we hear the roar of the Niagara of divine love pouring into millions of happy hearts.

Dig deep into worldliness in the great cities where millions are thirsting for the waters of life. Today we may bring them to the fountains of blessedness that save and satisfy the soul.

Dig in the valley of formalism. Some churches instead of being trees of life, are like the petrified agate trees of Arizona, beautiful to look upon, but like granite, with no current of life flowing through their veins, no fruit growing upon their branches. These prostrate agate tree-trunks cannot be used even for fuel or building purposes. They are polished relics of former greatness and usefulness, like some churches, shining with intellectual brilliancy, but soulless petrifications, past feeling, magnificence in ruin. Wealth may adorn such stately piles with the polish of refinement and culture, but all avenues are closed to the divine flowing. Think of a God-created church, commissioned and empowered to go into all the world to proclaim the Gospel to all people, sitting down in the deserted cathedral ruin, where ivy grows to the eaves, creptude, and travelers gaze with wonder upon the building, shining on in its lifelessness, exclaiming: "How are the mighty fallen!" Chang into stone! Gleaming still in its galvanized splendor.

Are You Ready?

Can it be that there are such churches? O ye who have the power of the Spirit of the Almighty, breathing his life-giving love, can bring these petrifications back to life again.

The Church of the Living God is now in the front of a worldwide conflict. The Moabites of a sinful world are before us. Have we confidence in our Elisha? Do we believe in the Lord of hosts? Are we willing to make room for the coming of the waters, that they may be in us a well of water springing up into everlasting life? "A man shall be as rivers of water in a dry place." Christ is that river. When he comes, all pulpits will be on fire and there will be crowds to see them; every Christian should pray that the baptism of the Holy Ghost may fall upon Christendom.

* Preached in the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Flushing, N. Y.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON S. COOPER

The Friend on the Road

UNDAY, May 30. Luke 24: 15. "Jesus himself drew near." The Friend whose absence they were mourning was with them on the road. They walked in sadness because their eyes were fastened upon a grave; and lo! the bars of death had been broken, and the buried One was now at their side. They thought that the glory had departed, while all the time a greater glory had arrived.

That apparently desolate road there walked the conqueror of death, the Lord of resurrection. It was not midnight, but sunrise, with all the promise of a superlatively glorious day! They thought they were journeying westward, in the direction of spent and exhausted days; they were really journeying eastward, in the direction of a dawning of whose splendor they had never even dreamed.

Sometimes the darkness settles down upon our mind and we think that all is over, and the blessedness is spent. There is a grave somewhere; maybe the grave of a loved one, or of some fair, hushed hope, or of some fond and promising ambition. And that grave seems to be as big as the world. There is nothing else in the world but that grave. There is nothing left!

Yes, there is. Jesus is left, and he is mightier than death, and the Lord of every grave. He is left, and in him the graves shall give up their dead. We shall be amazed at what he will "bring with him." Beautiful things which we thought were lost and buried will rise again in the power of his resurrection. Lovely hopes, which we thought had withered and withered like autumn leaves, will appear again as everlasting flowers, blooming in the paradise of eternal life and love.

And so let the assurance of this coming glory brighten your brightness on the present bit of road. The Lord is with us, and in the day of unveiling, when he is revealed in all his fulness, the great surprise, that to his own holy presence, will be the once lost things which are manifested with him in glory.

J. H. J.

Spiritual Tones of Rest and Peace

UNDAY, May 31. Isaiah 32: 9-20. "Quiet resting-places." When this prophecy was uttered the land was unquiet. The Assyrian army was near and the war-cloud darkened the horizon. And the general anxiety, the voice of the great trumpet was heard urging the nation to trust, not in Egypt, but in God, and promising that he would lead them to dwell in quiet resting-places. The context is inexpressibly beautiful, as we read of the outpouring of the Spirit from on high, the hazing of the wilderness into the fruitful field, the workings of righteousness, the flowings of peace.

Like the emphasis on "my people," and the certainty, "shall dwell." Never was there more need of this assurance than today. The conflict is so close, the rush of the busy crowds so impetuous, the pace of life so ardent. As Solomon said: "All his ways are full of labor." But amid it all God builds a refuge around certain things and says: "These shall be quiet resting-places for my people." In the eye of a cyclone there is a space of unruffled calm, and beneath the turbulence of the ocean surface there are deep, untroubled waters. These have been enumerated as among the quiet resting-places of the people of God: the evening-hour when the day is over; the Lord's Day when we withdraw into the sanctuary of the heart and worship in the Holy Temple of fellowship with the Universal Church; the sequestered room of sickness, whether our own or of some beloved other, and heaven—the quietest resting-place of all, though it is said of it that the celestial worship and service stay not, day without night. But there we are freed from temptation, anxiety, and fret, with God eternally shut in.

F. B. M.

Sin and Society

TUESDAY, June 1. Luke 19: 10. "For the Son of man came to seek and save that which was lost." If we take the spirit and sweep of Jesus' life and teachings—not isolated texts—we must be convinced of the magnificent optimism of our Lord in the recoverability of human society. To make this principle plain Jesus, while on earth, sought out the worst sinners—the people we would not touch today in our churches—and awakened within them the sense of God's limitless forgiveness and love. Jesus was the world's greatest Social Worker.

The prophets Amos, Micah, Hosea, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Malachi—the latest of the New Testament seers—paved the way for this new social emphasis. These prophets did not preach a far-away heaven to be prepared for, but the changing and the lifting of evil human social conditions. They would sweep away the dead ceremonialism of priests who put ritual before conduct and who cared not for the people. They inveighed against luxury and selfishness in adding field to field and forgetting to listen to the greater music of humanity.

Jesus took up this strain of social redemption and compared the kingdom of God to the family. "Would your father give a child a stone when he asked for bread?" he asked. Conceive of what your earthly father or mother would do to save his or her own child. How much more will your heavenly Father care for his children, the Father that watches the birds fall, the Father who is beyond our conception greater in love than our human parents. Is it possible for us to conceive God as being less loving, less forgiving, less tolerant than the best men and women we know in the world?

Jesus came to seek and save that which was lost. How? By showing men the heart of God, who loved to the uttermost every one of his children. It is the love of God that breaks and wins the heart of the world. The arch-sin against society is the withholding from men that spirit of love which Jesus exemplified.

C. S. C.

The Pardoning Love of Christ

WEDNESDAY, June 2. John 7: 53-8: 11. "Neither do I condemn thee." The early church was inclined to suppress this story, lest it might lead to sin. They did not realize that that averted face would make men bow their heads in shame, and beat upon their breasts; not for themselves alone, and not because of fear of punishment, but because they had torn open his wounds and woven again the thorns for his brow. We go forth from his presence to sin no more.

Jesus seems sometimes to wait before uttering the words of peace; but this is not due to any reluctance in his love. He only waits for those ruthless accusers to drop away and for the soul to have time to realize itself in his holy presence. It is the only place in all the universe where we are safe. Accusing voices are hushed there, and accusing forms steal away. Wait! He will condemn thy sin, but not thee. And his condemnation will be more in his looks than in his words. Thou wilt accuse thyself a thousand times more bitterly than he will. And finally, because of the propitiation offered by him on the cross, he will forgive thee and send thee forth to tell others the story of a love which fails not, nor is discouraged in its conflict with human sin; but is ever, with tireless patience, setting itself to substitute for the reign of sin in our hearts the reign of grace through righteousness unto eternal life.

F. B. M.

Does Your Religion Work?

THURSDAY, June 3. Matthew 12: 33. "For the tree is known by its fruit." The teaching of Christ regarding religion is not so much relative to what men believe as to how they believe it; not so much what men subscribe to as the results of their creed in practical love and good works. When his disciples came to him, complaining that certain ones did miracles but not in his name, he reminded them that they should look not to what the men in another camp claimed as a creed, but to the spirit and result of their work. John the Baptist sent to Christ from prison, asking doctrinal questions about his identity and authority. Jesus answered by healing the sick before the eyes of the messengers.

Darwin was not a believer in Christianity. He went to the South Seas, he saw the conviction and the work of the missionaries at Tahiti. It was a new, convincing argument to the scientist, who was looking for practical facts. He said: "The lesson of the missionaries is the enchanter's wand: the march of improvement consequent upon the introduction of Christianity through the South Seas probably stands by itself in the records of history." The creed of the missionaries worked!

Let us beware of a creed that is merely inherited and not gathered up into personal experience. A creed that does not accomplish something is not faith, but useless baggage. Merely to go to church, to recite formulas and talk in pious language is not Christianity. A Christian is a man who has the spirit of Christ and who thinks and acts and lives in a big and generous way as Christ lived. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven."

Today let me put my creed to work.

C. S. C.

Heavenly Strength and Reinforcement

FRIDAY, June 4. Colossians 1: 1-12. "Strengthened with all power . . . unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness." Patience, according to the literal rendering of the Greek word, is just to remain under. God has allotted the burden you are bearing, and it is your business quietly to stand where he has placed you, steadfast, immovable and strong. We are told of Daniel—and it is high praise—"that he continued." To all of us there will come hours when we should be glad to see the relief-guard, and are inclined to plead for deliverance from our share of the world's burdens. But at such times let us remember that God is waiting to strengthen us "with all power unto all patience," and in our patience we shall possess our souls. Look up, friend; one touch will be enough to create the contact through which the divine dynamic shall enter to reinforce you.

In one of his unpublished poems, Longfellow tells us that fountains will suddenly gush up at our feet, because rain has fallen on distant hills. So our souls become renewed for the burdens and activities of life because power, according to the might of Christ's glory, is being communicated. He is watching, and says to many a burden-bearer, needing to be encouraged and strengthened: "I know that thou hast patience and didst bear for my Name's sake, and hast not grown weary." And when he speaks like this we are strengthened indeed, and reply: "Let my Lord speak, for thou hast strengthened me." Note that the power on which we may count is that which comes from the risen and glorified Christ; and therefore we are enabled not only to bear, but to bear and suffer long with joyfulness. We need as much grace and more to bear and suffer as to run through a troop or leap over a wall.

F. B. M.

Our Task to "Prepare the Way"

SATURDAY, June 5. John 1: 29. "Behold the Lamb of God." John the Baptist had really but one theme, one voice, one mission; it was to prepare the way of the Lord by preaching repentance. He baptized with water, while he waited to lift the curtain upon him who would baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire. He was all his life preparing that one sermon. He preached it everywhere. He got his text and many of his thoughts from the old prophets. It was old theology; but he knew that the earth, seas and heavens were old, and that God is from everlasting. So John answered the old question: "When is He coming?" He was to make the old real and true. Skeptics thirst for the new because they have not the true.

John, the greatest man in the olden times, was called to the greatest honor. The Christ of God, first revealed to John, was introduced by him to all the coming ages, when he cried, "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world."

Should it not be the mission of every believer to make the same announcement to his friends, to prepare the way of the Lord for entrance into human hearts? It should be the one great theme of all Christians: "Have you seen the Lord?" "Come and see him of whom Moses and the prophets wrote." Behold him! Look and live!

E. W. C.

GOD'S ANGELS

ALONE on the mountain at sunset, I gaze on the glowing skies,
And my spirit fills with glory as the changing splendor dies;
And the infinite longing within me finds an answer to its prayer:
'Tis the gate of heaven before me and the angels of God are there.

Alone in the silent desert in the watches of the night,
With only the heavens above me, and only the stars for light:
Yet out of the boundless silence comes a thought dispelling care:
I am not alone in the desert, for the angels of God are there.

Alone in the forest at dawning, when the day is beginning to break,
When the mists of the night are fading and the early birds are awake,
In the rosy tints of sunrise, in the breath of the morning air,
A mystic presence surrounds me, for the angels of God are there.

GERRIE O. LEAVITT.

TO MASTER THE DARDANELLES THE ALLIED FLEET MUST REDUCE SEVERAL FORTS LIKE THIS OF SED-EL-BAHR

LOOKING INTO THE MATTER

THE WAR IN EUROPE

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

FOR most of the week ending May 13 one of the greatest battles of the war has been going on on the western end of the western battle line. This battle has been in two sections, one around Ypres and the other from just north of Arras to Richebourg, a little northwest of La Bassée.

The fighting around Ypres was mostly between the British and Germans, and centered around Hill No. 60, so often mentioned in the despatches; and on the road between Ypres and Meuin. Hill No. 60 is just a little to the southeast of the town of Ypres and perhaps three miles therefrom. While not much of a hill, its height being less than two hundred feet, it is the only elevation in many miles in this flat country, and hence is of very great value as an observation point, and besides commands the road to Comines as well as the Ypres-Comines Canal. Originally in German hands, a few weeks ago the British succeeded in capturing it, and since that time the Germans have been endeavoring to retake it, the attempts during the last week having been continuous and very determined. From time to time the Germans gained a foothold on the hill, but were subsequently driven back, and the week closed with the combat still going on.

The Meuin Road fighting was even more severe and nearly as continuous, and here the Germans have apparently gained a few yards. The importance of Ypres, for the possession of which this fighting is taking place, is that it is considered strategically the key to the French coast ports of Dunkirk and Calais, and if it should be taken by the Germans, it will be a difficult matter to defend these ports, while their loss would be serious.

FARTHER south the combat between the French and the Germans on the Arras-Richebourg line has been even more desperate. The French, at the opening of the fight, made considerable gains, particularly in the center of the line, and took many prisoners, some four thousand being claimed. Later they lost a portion of the ground won, and the battle still continuing, it is hard to say definitely which has the upper hand, as they sway to and fro, with now one side, now the other seemingly possessing a momentary advantage. Only one thing is clear, that in all this fighting the way is prepared for the publication of exceedingly large casualty lists.

In addition to this titanic struggle there was a little fighting between Dixmude and Nieuport, farther west, and some very warm skirmishing north of Nieuport at St. Georges, which, however, seems resultless as far as any change of position goes.

Elsewhere along this long western battle line, from Arras to Alsace, there has been comparative calm, though of course "comparative" is used in a relative sense. There have been many artillery duels, in some cases followed up by infantry attacks, in Champagne, some severe skirmishing between the Meuse and the Moselle, and the old battle for the possession of the summit of Hartmannswiller Kopf has gone on intermittently.

The aircraft have been very active, as was to be expected in view of the weather conditions, but the results of their activities do not seem to have been very great, though both sides have lost quite a number of airships during the week.

The mysterious big German gun has again for a short time bombarded Dunkirk and the towns in its vicinity. Zeppelins and other aircraft appeared at various points over England during the week, but only dropped a few bombs, apparently being on a reconnoitering expedition.

NEWS from the campaign in the Dardanelles continues to be very scanty and unsatisfactory. Such official bulletins as there are contradict each other point-blank. On the one hand we are informed from Athens, the only supposedly neutral source of news, that General d'Armadé cables that the Allies are steadily continuing their land advance, each day gaining ground and occupying new and important positions from which the Turks have been driven, and that the losses of the latter have amounted to forty-five thousand.

One peculiar thing about this news is that a commanding general should address news to a news agency. The British official report said that the Allies have advanced to and occupied Kuthia, but this place, which is four miles from the end of the Galipoli Peninsula, is where they were supposed to be three weeks ago. The Turks on the other hand state that the Allies have not advanced at all, and are having great difficulty in maintaining the positions originally seized at the time of landing, and are enabled to do so only because sustained by the guns of the fleet.

ENGLAND'S COAST POPULATION IS REASSURED BY A DAILY PATROL

Both sides attribute large losses to the other, and this is undoubtedly true, and the only thing which can be said with any degree of certainty. The attack by the fleet on the straits themselves does not seem to be making much progress either. We hear of bombardments of the forts, but these are apparently not sustained but intermittent. Before much can be said on this campaign the news will have to be a little more definite.

The Russians bombarded the Black Sea mouth of the Bosphorus a couple of times during the week, but as far as is known with little result.

THE Italian situation seems to be in about the position of last week. The stories with which we are deluged from Geneva, Paris and other places regarding Italy's intentions, may be dismissed as worthy of little consideration, being obviously inspired.

The Socialist Party, after a party convention has declared against intervention, which is far more important fact than any of the above. Giolitti, who is the strongest Italian political leader is also opposed to war, and if the matter comes to a vote in the Chamber it is probable that the constitutionalists with 318 votes, the Socialists with 77, the Catholics with 24, will be found opposed to intervention, which will leave the Radicals with 70 votes, the Republicans with 16 and the Syndicalists with 3, in small minority.

IN West Russia, the Germans took the important Russian port of Libau, with many prisoners and much artillery, and advanced towards Riga in the early part of this week, reaching it on the 15th. Here the Russians gathered forces to oppose them, and as these lines are being written, a battle of some magnitude is taking place. From here south to the Vistula there has been considerable fighting, particularly towards Kovno, and in the district to the east of Suwalki and Augustowo, and most particularly towards Vilna. The Germans are making a great effort to break through in this sector, the railroad on which Vilna is located, which is the main line from Petrograd south to Warsaw with the design of destroying it, and thus crippling the movement of troops and munitions toward.

In central Poland there was some fighting but indecisive fighting on the Bzura River, on the Warsaw front. In south Poland, on the time to time, there were artillery duels at various points on the long front, but as yet were not followed up, no changes in position resulted.

In western Galicia, the Austro-German movement commanded by General von Mackensen was completely successful, and the Russians have been compelled to evacuate northern and central west Galicia, from the line of the Dniester River to a line east of the east bank of the river San, and to surrender all the positions in that territory which had cost them months of effort and many thousands of lives to conquer.

The Austrian line now extends from Mielec on the east bank of the river Wisloka in the north to east of Rzeszow, and thence across the San River along the east bank southerly through Lisko, to-wisko, to the foothills of the Uszok Pass. The southern part of this territory, the Carpathian passes have been completely cleared of Russian forces as far east as this Uszok Pass. One important result of this movement is that possession of the larger part of the Galician oilfields has been taken by the Austro-German forces, and if held, the question of replenishing their supply of gasoline and petroleum will be solved favorably for them.

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

THE IDEAL AMERICA. President Wilson on May 10 addressed an enthusiastic audience of 4,000 newly naturalized citizens assembled in Convention Hall, Philadelphia, and drew a picture of America as the example of peace and humanity which, coming at the moment of the public ferment about the Lusitania tragedy, has a restraining influence on hasty passions, and at the same time placed before the American people a distinctly new ideal. The speech ranks with the greatest that the President has ever delivered, and the most significant passages are here given.

"I have just taken an oath of allegiance to the United States. Of allegiance to whom? Of allegiance to no one, unless it be to this great government. You have taken an oath of allegiance to a great ideal, to a great body of principles, to a great hope of the human race. . . . liberty and justice. 'Humanity can be welded together only by love, by sympathy, by justice, not by jealousy and hatred. I am sorry for a man who seeks to make personal capital out of the passions of his fellow men. He has lost the touch and ideal of America, for America was created to unite mankind by those associations which lift, and not by passions which separate and abase. . . . A man does not go out to seek the thing that is not his. A man does not hope for the thing that he does not believe in, and if some of us have forgotten what America bequeathed you, at any rate, imported by your own hearts a renewal of the belief. . . . No man that does not believe in you will ever realize any high ideal. . . . undertake any high enterprise. . . . because you brought dreams with you, America is more likely to realize dreams such as you brought. You are cheering us if you came expecting us to be better than we are."

"Some friends, what that means: that Americans must have a consciousness different from the consciousness of every other nation in the world. I am not saying this with even the slightest thought of criticism of other nations. You know how it is in a family. A family gets centered around itself if it is not careful, and is less tolerant in the neighbors than it is in its own members. So a nation that is constantly renewed out of new forces apt to have the narrowness and prejudice of a family; whereas America must have this consciousness, that all sides it touches elbows and hearts with all the nations of the world. The example of America is a special example. The example America must be the example, that only of peace because it will not let itself be of peace because peace is the elevating influence of the world, strife is not. There is such a thing as a man being too proud to let there is such a thing as a feeling so right that it does not need to convince others by its own right."

LIBERTY BELL NOW SPEECHLESS. In preparation for its journey to the Panama Pacific Exposition, and for the purpose of preservation, the clapper of the Liberty Bell, which has been in position for 162 years, was recently removed and replaced in Independence Hall and may not be taken to the exposition. In its place a structure of steel, with six metal bars spanning the chipped edges to prevent the great crack in the bell from spreading, has been substituted.

300 OUTLOOK FOR CHICAGO. The committee from Chicago Protestant churches which visited Paterson, N. J., to invite Evangelist Sunday to conduct a twelve weeks' tabernacle campaign there, announces that Mr. Sunday has agreed to go to Chicago on January 1, 1917, the petition signed by 55,000 Chicago men and women having considerable effect. More than $50,000 has been guaranteed for expenses.

WHO ROCKS THE BOAT?

By W. J. Linsington

*WE are now on a storm-tossed, ugly sea,
With the war winds all around us.
With some who would like to blow us up,
And some who would like to ground us.
But the day is there and the nation's all right,
However some want to knock it.
There's a splashing spray from the waves, but, say,
Sit still on the boat! Don't rock it!*

*The Lord only knows where we're going to land,
And thus far he hasn't told us.
But we are not seeing the seas too blood,
And the strength of our right will hold us.
Still, you can deny that the water is rough,
And nothing but a covered ark block it,
The seas may play round us, but say,
Sit still on the boat! Don't rock it!*

SAILS UNDER AMERICAN REGISTRY, WITH STARS AND STRIPES PAINTED ON EACH SIDE

SHOULD BE IN WATERPROOF PAINT. What is said to be the first sailing ship to leave the port of Boston with a cargo for England in fifteen years, the Ruth Stark, loaded with a million feet of lumber consigned to Liverpool, has been decorated with the Stars and Stripes, painted on each side of the hull, as a provision against all contingencies, although the boat is unsinkable by reason of her cargo; but her commander, Frederick Williamson, whose wife accompanies him on the trip, relies on his unique plan to take his ship unscathed into port. The boat was formerly an English bark, but has been placed under American registry by virtue of the special laws enacted because of war conditions.

QUICK ACTION BY WOMEN. The International Women's Congress at The Hague resolved to inaugurate a world movement for peace, and named Jane Addams of Chicago, Signora Genoni of Italy and Dr. Alleta Jacobs of Holland a permanent delegation to visit most of the European countries, these envoys starting out immediately the conference closed to make their plea first in Holland, then in England, then Germany, Austria, and so on.

A $7,500,000 DOCTOR'S BILL. This is the sum which the Presbyterian Hospital and Columbia University will charge the American public to erect on the ten-acre tract formerly used by the American League for a baseball park in New York City two groups of buildings to be used as a united hospital and medical school by these institutions, so comprehensive and modern in their equipment and scope as to give this country a great center for medical research, training and hospital work equal to the best among the famous medical centers in European capitals. The bill will have to be paid, or guaranteed, in advance.

BEARS US NO MALICE. General Victoriano Huerta, of Mexico and Spain, has decided to settle with his family on Long Island, where in a spacious mansion he will entertain numerous friends, inclusive of quite an array of military men, some of whom figured in recent Mexican history. The numerous members and servants of his household have arrived.

VICTORIES OF THE WIRELESS.

At Darien, Panama Canal Zone, the Navy Department has established the most powerful radio station, using the Poulsen arc system, in the world, adding a 2,000-mile link with Washington in the wireless system now being constructed between the capital and the Philippines, the Poulsen arc being the system installed by the government during its temporary occupation of the German radio station at Tuckerton, N. J., from which point some 10,000 words are exchanged weekly direct with Berlin, a distance of about 4,000 miles, which is nearly the same radius of the Darien station.

VENEZUELA ELECTS PRESIDENT.

General Juan Vicente Gomez, who as first vice-president succeeded Cipriano Castro on the latter's retirement from the presidency in 1909, was made president by unanimous ballot of the national congress on May 3 for the term of 1915-1922.

"OWE NO MAN ANYTHING SAVE TO LOVE ONE ANOTHER."

A late news item in the press reads as follows: "The May circular of the National City Bank gives some interesting facts regarding the present situation in European finance, particularly that of the belligerents. It says the war loans to date stand as follows: Great Britain, $2,525,000,000; France, $1,802,100,000; Russia, $1,065,000,000; Germany, $5,491,000,000, and Austria-Hungary, $730,000,000, a total of $9,613,400,000."

ENGLAND TO INTERN HOSTILE ALIENS.

One prompt and drastic effect of the sinking of the Lusitania was a new policy announced by the government in the House of Commons, May 13, providing for the internment of alien men of enemy countries between the ages of 17 and 55, and the deportation to neutral countries of all other males, all women and children from hostile lands, a special court being constituted to pass on individual appeals from this decision. There are 24,000 men and 16,000 women in England subject to this ruling.

THE GRIM EVENT

Continued from page 548

A dozen off were crushed or overturned, with the loss of 12 captives. Some refused to believe that the ship would be snapping their fingers at death, watched less confident as life-belts, or leap into the boats that were being lowered even into the sea in hope of being picked up. But it was too late to laugh at death.

It is well to laugh at death when one awaits him and there were those who bravely died to save others. For the vast majority, that crashing torpedo meant the end of everything save eternity. Mothers and their little ones sat down clasped in each others' arms. Husbands were torn from their wives to die apart, or the one to be saved rather to be lost.

day on the hillside. No American dead were buried there, but their homes were sealed in coffins to be returned home. The greater portion of the dead could not be identified, largely because of the absence of relatives; the identity of some was revealed by papers in their pockets.

Deeply pathetic scenes occurred as members of families sought each other from house to house where survivors were cared for, and from place to place where the unidentified dead were lying. Where Americans were recognized their bodies were covered with the Stars and Stripes. The American dead included many well-known men and women of this country and some children, in all 102. Few babies were saved.

For days after the tragedy bodies were picked up by vessels miles from the scene. A drifting lifeboat from the Lusitania was washed ashore and in it were the bodies of three women and two boys. A fishing boat on May 12 reported having counted one hundred floating bodies, the finishing touches to a horror that exceeds anything in the long annals of disasters at sea.

Elsewhere in this issue of the Christian Herald some mention is made of heroic deeds reported by survivors. England as a people was roused to frenzy by the sinking of the Lusitania. Violent demonstrations against German residents in English cities broke out on all sides. Grief and despair over the heart-breaking losses of many households found expression in demands for retribution. Individual Germans and Austrians, even though naturalized, were hunted by mobs. In many cases their places of business and their homes were wrecked. It became necessary to call upon troops to quell the uprising.

THUS came to a close that astounding game of hide and seek with death. Human hearts and minds have received a shock new in the history of the race; a new problem in the relations of men has come to pass. A new wound has been inflicted upon civilization. A new argument has been forged in favor of Christianity and brotherhood and universal peace.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Kuening, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE: $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE: For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE: It takes at least two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION: The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS: It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

Looking to the President

IN THE sinking of the Lusitania, involving the sacrifice of more than one hundred American lives, we have for the first time been made to realize the terrible nature of the war that is now convulsing the greater part of the world. All that has gone before, in so far as it directly affected ourselves, has been trivial in comparison with this awful tragedy, which has plunged the nation into grief and aroused its deepest indignation.

It is a very grave and difficult problem with which the administration is now dealing, and the outcome cannot yet be clearly foreseen. No American has desired to enter this war. Remote from it by thousands of miles, we have trusted that the time might come when we might find an opportunity to assist in calming the tempest and restoring peace. In these epochal months we have seen nation after nation drawn into the struggle, until it seemed as though the whole civilized world were engaged in efforts at mutual extermination. Our rights to the freedom of the seas violated by two great belligerents, for the sake of peace we have satisfied ourselves with a dignified protest. And now, with our thoughts turning inevitably to that dark tragedy in the Irish Sea, many of us have felt that all our forbearance has been in vain. Other nations have expressed their sympathy, Germany among the number; but nothing can bring back the lives of our lost sons and daughters who, in accordance with the usages of civilization, were entitled, as neutrals and non-combatants, to protection and safety. The fact that they were warned of danger, while it may be regarded by many as dividing the responsibility, does not lessen or remove it. Yet the keen regret will always remain with us that had the warning been heeded and precaution taken, as it should have been, the awful calamity would have been averted.

In this crisis, the American people have looked to the President in the confident belief that, with the aid of his Cabinet advisers, he will be able to deal with the situation in a manner that will command the patriotic approval of all classes. Nor has their expectation been disappointed. The note to Germany, which was discussed in Cabinet meeting on May 12, was framed by President Wilson after three days of solitude and reflection, during which he had an opportunity to test the feeling of the country on the questions at issue, and he has been guided largely by the result of that test. The note is firm and explicit in its request that Germany disavow the acts of which we complain, make due reparation and take such action as will assure the safety of non-combatants and neutrals hereafter. The whole note is dignified and courteous. It is in spirit an appeal to the conscience and the humanity of Germany. It is a state document which will be endorsed without reserve by the whole people.

At this critical juncture, the war spirit should be restrained, in order that the President may not be embarrassed. All the resources of diplomacy will be employed in reaching a satisfactory solution. We have every confidence that he will leave nothing undone that is needed to safeguard the honor of the nation and its best interests, yet without losing sight of the high ideal toward which this nation has set its face ever since the war began. If the assurance of the safety of American lives and the protection of American interests can be honorably secured by peaceful means, as we pray they may, the whole country will feel thankful that we have in the seat of Washington a President who has the courage to show to the world that our professions are not mere shallow phrases; who can make it clear that our purpose is to save the further sacrifice of innocent lives, not to make war; and who personally represents the great ideal of Christian civilization, that violence settles no principle.

That the divine blessing may rest upon the efforts of the President and his Cabinet and aid them in finding a peaceful and honorable solution of the trouble should be the prayer of every true American.

The World's Granary

AT THE beginning of the great export wheat movement last year, prudent men with far-seeing vision urged an effort on a large scale looking to more extensive wheat culture. They foresaw an increase of the worldwide need should the war be prolonged. In its May crop report, the Agricultural Department indicates the result by the cheering prediction of a billion bushel wheat harvest. Farmers were not slow to take the advice given in the Christian Herald and other journals. They saw wheat prices mounting steadily and they kept on increasing the wheat area of cultivation until they had added over five million acres, making a total of 41,253,000 acres under cultivation in wheat alone. The winter loss has been the smallest in many years. Crop conditions are excellent, and the total yield of winter wheat is estimated at 693,000,000 bushels. Spring wheat is in a promising state, and when reaped will bring up the grand total close to the billion mark, should there be no serious setback in the next few weeks. This splendid showing is a presage of abundance not only for our own needs but for those of such countries as may have to face a serious shortage on account of the war. It means that God has been good to us in giving us the bounteous assurance of food enough and to spare. There is little doubt that the hunger of Europe will demand to be satisfied for many months to come; but such drafts will not deplete our larder. It is still true, as one of our poets wrote, that "the farmer feeds them all," and that the successful cultivation of the land is the backbone of the nation's prosperity.

Hopes for a World Court

IT WAS a striking coincidence that during the days when excitement was running high in the United States over the tension between the relations of this government and Germany, when many felt that there was extreme danger of our being drawn into the vortex of the world-war, a number of America's most prominent men, including an ex-President, were in session at Cleveland discussing practical measures for bringing about the establishment of a World Court.

"This body is not so foolish," said John Hays Hammond, chairman of the congress, "as to conceive that war will be made impossible by such a court. What we hope to do is to minimize the possibility of war." Ex-President Taft declared: "We are trying to be practical. We are not rainbow-chasers; we are not offering a millennium." Mr. Taft acknowledged that some disputes would not be justiciable by this court. He called attention to the general arbitration treaties negotiated by Secretary Knox with France and England during his administration, but which failed of ratification by the Senate. The fact, however, that England and France approved these treaties shows how much hope there is for the extension of the principle of arbitration.

Mr. Taft, Judge Alton B. Parker, and Mr. Bainbridge Colby all discussed the subject "The United States Supreme Court a Prototype of a World Court," holding that there was no reason why the various countries could not leave the adjudication of their disputes to a supreme tribunal just as the various states of the Union abide by the decisions of our Supreme Court.

The Christian Herald earnestly hopes that this latest effort for a world court will meet with unprecedented success. Surely at the close of the present turmoil of war, the nations of the world will be ready to consider earnestly the possibility and opportunity of living together in peace.

Heroes and Ideals

THE Day of Memories—memories mostly of the Civil War. Very few now living have vivid memories of that time. Why, then, observe the "Day of Memories"? The cold calculation of reason might suggest that since living remembrance of a tragic crisis has faded, the observance of Memorial Day is but the "shadow of a shadow." There is, however, a ripening of memories which is even more precious than the fresh memories themselves.

When harsh new memories have perished and taken with them the ghost of hatred, a better thing takes their place. The surviving veterans of both sides begin to confess that war is a "mistake"—that differences might have been settled another way. Their children and grandchildren hear this. The nation learns, as individuals do, a lesson from the "mistake."

Today we put flags upon the graves of soldiers of North and South with equal reverence. Something besides their poor shattered bodies is being piously guarded here. The flags stand, sentinel-wise, over the dead to mark our respect for courage and patriotism. They also mark for the living a harvest-field of good feeling and mutual understanding. The thing to do upon Memorial Day is to make the best of the closed and settled past—to make it fruitful in lessons of wisdom.

Of such lessons the Civil War, like all great upheavals, teaches many. One of them, perhaps the most impressive, is that all profound and undamental issues are, in the last resort, decided by the people in their majestic mass.

This, in a blind, slow way, has been the method of progress in all civilization. The cruelest tyrannies lasts only until the people can get their hands upon it and tear it down. Our republic is founded upon this idea. It has been a success in many ways. It is moving on to greater successes. Even in a republic some tyrannies continue unseen, thrived in obscurity, wielding spectral scepters which continually menace the liberty of multitudes of the ignorant and apparently powerless. There always be something of this tyranny in the reestablishment of democracy. It will take ages to eliminate. But the process of democratic evolution is, on the whole, going forward and not backward.

In a big country like ours, which is absorbing millions of foreigners every year, it is amazing to think of the progress already made. Free speech, free press, a generous franchise, and education are ripening every year the unconquerable forces of self-respect, justice, hope, personal ambition, national ideals. Now, in this day, for some of the darkest tyrannies of the few over the many, the hour of doom has already struck.

"Memorial Day" is, therefore, the annual marking of a priceless tradition, ineradicably seated in the consciousness of the nation, to be lived stronger and stronger every year. A part of that tradition is an inextinguishable reverence for those of our ancestors who, whether in war or peace, contended for what they thought was right. The force of the tradition pushes us onward to a never-conquest over the present enemies of justice.

This One Thing

THE unfortunate dog of the fable, while a piece of real meat drop into the water, the hope of getting a bigger piece, has been unjustly maligned. We fail of getting many real and precious things because we will not get of something else.

For instance, many a big task is spoiled because the worker will not let go of the countless little nagging other tasks that dog his brain. The men who achieve big things are the men who let lifting things alone except as they contribute to a big task in hand.

We should cultivate this habit of concentration even in our resting. Many a vacation is spoiled because the worker will not leave his work behind him. Work is not helped by being carried over worryingly into one's rest; and the rest is so spoiled that one misses the fresher vigor and clear brain which should accompany the return from rest.

Again, we often need to let go of our preceptions. Some men are so busy clinging to what they have already learned or believed or in work; they almost lose the capacity for fair, frank, open-minded observation. Truth does not need to be clung to in fear lest it will escape. The open mind, the calmness of reason, the quietness of genuine thought, the willingness to give anything up if it we shall be led to greater truth—that is the way to scholarship, to sainthood, to success of any kind.

We do not find God's blessing in its fulness until we are ready to drop and lose all other things. "One thing is needful," said Jesus. To find that education, thing, all other things must be laid aside. We shall return to them later, to all of them that are earthly, but we shall return with the Master's blessing and the Master's power. "This one thing I do. Forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, pressing toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Jesus Christ."

—MEXICO GETTING FREE. One of the most enlightened of Mexico's political leaders, Minister Cabrera, has issued a statement giving the views of the Carranza faction concerning the political attitude of the Roman Church in that country. He presents a mass of documentary evidence intended to expose an alleged attempt of the [Roman] clergy to obtain aid from the government in re-establishing the powers of the church. He urges all true patriots to combine their strength against the re-establishment of the church hierarchy in that republic, that such re-establishment would hold back the progress of the country, and check the efforts to bring order out of chaos.

The BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Criticizes Premature Superannuation

REV. DR. CHARLES F. PARKHURST says: "It is an exceedingly awkward thing to be superannuated, to be called dead, with the interment indefinitely postponed." This condition, he thinks, is too often the fault of the man himself, who does not keep abreast of the times, and is tired before his years would justify such action. In the trade, business or profession, there comes a time when the forces let down, and a man ought to stop for the good of himself and of his work. Some elderly men are pushed aside unjustly by competition; ingratitude. Others still far this side of the decline are retired because they will not think, study or grow. Dr. Parkhurst is himself an example of the large number of men who, in all the callings, are as vigorous in body, mind and soul at three score years and ten as they were at forty. The vitality of Moses in his old age is thus recorded: "An Moses was an hundred and twenty years old when he died; his eye was not dim, nor is natural force abated." (Deut. 34: 7.)

Unspoiled

IT IS reported that Mrs. Mary White, seamstress and repair woman in a department store in Savannah, Ga., has fallen heir to the estate of Washington Ware, of Knoxville Tenn., valued at several millions, and has received cash enough on the legacy as the first payment to support her without work. Mrs. White says she has spent the greater part of her life at hard work; that she is happy in her present employment and will not give it up. There is nothing healthier nor happier in the material or spiritual world than work along the lines of the heart's love. Christ thus recognizes his allegiance to the royal law of love: "My Father's love is the Father's love; and I love" (John 5: 17.)

Hawks vs. Mice

THE Department of Agriculture informs us that out of fifty species of hawks and owls only four are actually injurious to crops. A man reports that he saw an owl do nine field mice at a meal. It is stated that one colony of hawks will kill 10,000 rodents in a single season. The saving of the farmer's crops by the destruction by hawks and owls of the mice and young rats is said to be enormous. These birds of prey were held as an omen by the Jews and classed as unfit for food. "And the owl, and the night-hawk, and the eagle, and the hawk after his kind." (Lev. 11: 16.)

Sent $6 Conscience Money

SECRETARY DANIELS the other day received one-dollar bills from a volunteer in the navy with a note explaining that the money was "to pay for government stationery, which I appropriated to my own use between September 1, 1910, and September 6, 1914. I used the stationery in my personal correspondence. I must make this matter right before I can go on with a Christian life." The man was right. He had "gotten religion" and had gotten it so deeply he felt it was his duty as nearly as possible to make right the things wherein he had done wrong. If all who have defrauded the government were to get the same kind of religion the sailor got there would be an appreciable addition to the treasury. Under the Old Testament dispensation, the thief was compelled to restore several times the value of the thing stolen: "If a man shall steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep." (Ex. 22: 1.)

his duty in the army with honor, and also obeyed this injunction: "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life." (1 Tim. 6: 12.)

Boy's Love for Mother

THERE was a boy arraigned in Judge Lindsey's Children's Court at Denver, Col., who would run away from school, and told his teacher he did so in order to work. The judge said to him one day, as he rebuked him: "Tim, there will be time enough to work when you are a man." The boy replied: "My father was a man, and he didn't work. He went off and left mother and me, and I guess that's what killed her, too." One day the boy ran into the court room in joy and taking a crumpled paper from his pocket gave it to the judge and said: "I am going to school now every day, and mind everything you say, for I have finished the job I had." The judge found it was a receipt for fifty dollars in full for a headstone for his mother's grave, which he had paid with nickels and pennies hard earned. "I wanted her to have a monument, too, judge, like the others had. She done a lot for me; that's all I could do for her now." What a boy Tim was! Look out for him when he shall become a man, in the front rank of character and human endeavor! What a contrast to the boys and girls who are ungrateful and disobedient to their parents, and cause them such pain and anxiety! How many mothers, weighed down with earthly misfortune, are comforted with dutiful sons and daughters! Tim, in his furnishing a monument for his beloved mother, copies the spirit of Christ, who, on the cross, left this record of his great love for his mother: "He saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home." (John 19: 26, 27.)

THE G. A. R. ARLINGTON AMPHITHEATER, THE NATION'S GREATEST MEMORIAL TO ITS FALLEN HEROES, NOW UNDER CONSTRUCTION

MEMORIAL DAY will have unusual interest this year from the fact that the magnificent memorial to the American soldier, the Arlington Amphitheater, which has long been in contemplation, will then be in actual course of construction. There are now maintained eighty-three national cemeteries where almost four hundred thousand of our soldier and sailor heroes are sleeping. But it was felt that there should be at Arlington, the largest of the national cemeteries, in closest proximity to the national capital, a fitting memorial that should stand through all the years as a monument to the heroes of all of our wars. Through G. A. R. members of Congress, a bill was introduced two years ago, appropriating $700,000 for an Arlington Amphitheater Memorial, and $250,000 was made immediately available. Two well-known New York architects, Carrere and Hastings, designed the structure, which will be the finest of its kind in the world. Building operations were begun last February. The site is a large open plateau in the southern section of the cemetery, just east of the Maine Memorial, seen in the picture on its white base back of the amphitheater, and near the site selected for the southern approach to the proposed Lincoln memorial bridge over the Potomac. The Arlington Amphitheater is to be of marble, elliptical in shape, 250 feet long, and the arcade, 320 by 160, will be open to the sky. Around the arcade will run an elaborate colonnade, which will open from the main entrance, through to the reception hall. This hall will be a stately apartment with two galleries which are intended to serve as a war museum. The arcade will have an inclined floor of cement with marble seats, the seating capacity being five thousand. A large semi-circular stage, to accommodate one hundred persons, will occupy one side of the arcade and over it will be a gallery, reached by outside stairways, which will seat fifteen hundred. Around the perimeter of the Amphitheater and just inside the arcade will be forty-four boxes for distinguished guests. Directly under the stage is to be a beautiful mortuary chapel, where funeral services can be held in stormy weather. Leading from each side of the chapel, and under the arcade, will be three hundred crypts. The esplanade and gardens surrounding the amphitheater are to be a fitting setting for this courtly structure. A great, grateful nation in the establishment of its cemeteries, its chief one being at Arlington, echoes this sentiment of the patriarch: "Give me a possession of a burying-place with you that I may bury my dead and go on my way." (Gen. 23: 4.)

Colonel Maus Retires

COLONEL L. MERVIN MAUS, who was surgeon-general of the Eastern Department of the army on Governor's Island, N. Y., was retired from active service on May 9, having reached the age limit of sixty-four years. He has the distinction of having served longer than any other officer in the medical corps of the army. He is a veteran of Indian campaigns, of the Spanish war, and of the Philippines. He killed the rats of Manila and eradicated the menace of the bubonic plague. He compelled the people of that city to be vaccinated and made the place immune to smallpox. He has been a pronounced temperance man, an enemy of the army canteen and a devout Christian. He did

For those who are carefully tended deceive us worse than the neglected ones." Dr. Butler said: "It has not been our experience that the women we have tended have failed us or the community." Womanhood has had a long and cruel history of oppression and degrading influence by heathenism. Fragments of the injustice came down into our Western civilization as late as fifty years ago, protesting against the higher education of women. Practical common school and domestic education, with occasional study of the finer arts, was held to be the proper preparation for life. The higher education has proven a great blessing to women and to the community, fulfilling these words: "That our daughters may be as cornerstones, polished after the similitude of a palace." (Ps. 144: 12.)

At Barnard

AT THE twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of Barnard College for Women, celebrated in New York April 29, Dr. Butler quoted Euripides, who wrote: "Why trouble to guard the women folk?

The New REO the Fifth the Incomparable Four

The New Reo The Fifth "The Incomparable Four"

WHAT NEED WE ADD to that you already know of this great car? For of course you do know. If you have not owned one, you have many friends who do. And they have doubtless told you in more extravagant terms than we would care to use.

MORE THAN 50,000 of them are today in hands of users.

NEVER SINCE THIS MODEL was first announced, has it been possible for us to make enough to supply all who wanted them.

WE HAVE MADE, so far this season, several thousand more of this model than our original plans called for—and still the demand seems to increase faster than the supply.

WE MIGHT POSSIBLY have made more had we been willing to sacrifice quality—or to take the slightest chance that that would happen. But we were not. Quality first, quantity a secondary consideration. That has always been the Reo way.

TO MAKE THEM EVER BETTER—so much better that, always, the demand will beckon the supply—that is our aim.

FROM SEASON TO SEASON we have made such improvements as the progress of the science has made possible. And as our facilities have increased and our purchasing ability become greater, we have from time to time reduced the price of Reo cars at the same time that we have increased the quality and the size.

IN THE CASE OF THIS FOUR we have been able to do two things we had considered impossible—we have made a bigger at the same time that we have made a still better car.

HOW WAS THAT POSSIBLE? you ask. Tell you:—

THE MOTOR PROVED to have more power than was necessary—more than was really desirable for the weight of the car. Refinements, recently made, increased that power still more.

SO WE FOUND we could add three and one-half very desirable inches to the length of the car, give the buyer a more luxurious equipage, and yet have a car of ample power.

THAT DIFFERENCE, in length—and we made it wider at the same time—makes all the difference in the world in the capacity and the comfort of the car.

OTHER NOTICEABLE improvements in a car which formerly seemed almost perfect—are:

IMPROVED UPHOLSTERING—higher backs to seats.

IMPROVED WINDSHIELD support—with braces running from cowl to body sill.

POCKETS in all doors.

INSTRUMENTS mounted flush on instrument board.

HOOD FASTENERS—new and improved type. Stay put—and unfasten readily when you want them to.

ENTIRELY NEW TOP—a real One-man top. Can actually be put up or down by one man—after long use as well as when new.

WINDSHIELD—Oval moulding and pressed steel construction throughout.

RADIATOR—New method of securing to frame—more flexible—prevents strains on roughest roads. More cooling capacity.

WHEEL BASE—increased 3"—now 115".

NOBBY TREAD TIRES on rear wheels and extra wide, over-size, demountable rims.

SPRINGS—Improved method of lubrication for spring shackles.

STREAMLINE HUB-CAPS—an exclusive Reo feature.

ANTI-RATTLER on brakes, and anti-rattling support.

IMPROVED STARTING mechanism—no sliding contacts and resistance.

NEW HEADLIGHTS with hingeless anti-rattling doors and outside focus attachment.

NEW DESIGN FENDERS—crown type, closer fitting under pan.

NEW METHOD of supporting ignition coil. New design universal joint for generator.

NEW CYLINDER DESIGN—independent exhaust ports. Injector type exhaust manifold. New low-pressure muffler.

NEW THREE-PIECE piston rings, giving greater power and acceleration.

IMPROVED VALVE operation mechanism—larger surfaces, ball joints, self-lubricating.

NEW ONE-PIECE cam shaft—larger bearings—and hardened and ground.

ADDED FRICTION SURFACE to clutch. New operating mechanism calling for less foot pressure. Improved thrust bearings.

EQUIPMENT—One-man top. Flush instruments; highest-priced d'Arsoval type ammeter and usual tools and accessories.

Price $1050 f. o. b. Factory; In Canada $1445

Don't You Do It!—If Y

JUST BECAUSE THERE IS a demand for more Reos than we can make—for both the Four and the Six—we are confronted with a peculiar condition, and one which we feel we ought to warn our customers.

THE ONLY ARGUMENT competitors—dealers or makers—can use against Reo is "You can't get a Reo—demand is greater than supply."

OF COURSE, THAT'S THE BEST possible argument in favor of Reos. Must be a good reason for this tremendous demand for these cars.

MUST BE BUYERS KNOW OR FEEL that in a Reo is to be had the utmost value for money. Must be; present Reo owners are telling their friends and relatives "buy a Reo and no other. Must be."

MERE ADVERTISING—our own assertions regarding and praise of our product—cannot create such an overwhelming demand. Must be the quality of the product itself and the praise of present owners.

SOME MAKES OF CARS are to be had in plenty. Some go abegging for business. Some dealers are willing to make concessions, bad trades or both—while, the one who is a Reo dealer is to get enough cars from the factory to supply his insistent demand.

AND THERE'S THE POINT—there's the condition against which we want to warn you in this ad—the matter of substitution.

WE HAVE FOUND—we regret to say it but it is true—that dealers, and in some cases Reo dealers have tried to persuade prospective buyers to accept some other car instead of a Reo, using as the argument, "You can't hope to get a Reo at once—output all cars are contracted for."

ISOLATED CASES THESE, but you may run onto one of them. Hence the warning. OF COURSE WE CAN'T BLAME rival dealers for trying to persuade you to buy a car you can get today instead of waiting a few days for a Reo.

AND SINCE THERE IS NO OTHER valid argument—no other you would hear in a minute—for you know and have set your heart on a Reo—it is only natural that you should try to use the fact that there is an over-demand for Reo cars of both models.

NOR CAN WE, IN TRUTH, DENY IT. We do not attempt to. Do not desire to. We are mighty proud of it—for as we've indicated, it is the best possible evidence of the superiority—Reo desirability.

BUT THE FACTS ARE THESE—read carefully; there is at this writing a demand for cars that exceeds our ability to produce. Why we receive on an average one hundred and twenty-five telegrams per day begging for more cars. Orders are flowing into the factory like a constant stream—and the spring freshet threatens to overflow the place. A ready-made water mark has been passed.

AND THAT DESPITE THE FACT that, all last winter, when others were talking about the big twenty-five acre Reo plants were running full speed and a night shift since the first of March. Think of that!

BUT—NOW GET THIS!—That does not indicate that it is impossible for you to get a Reo. FOR IF YOU ORDER NOW, YOU CAN. Anyway, you may.

ASK YOUR LOCAL REO DEALER—telling him at the same time it's no use talking about any other car for you have made up your mind to buy a Reo and be sure you get exactly how many days you will have to wait for your car.

REO MOTOR CO.

Canadian Factory

REO "SIX" the Six of Sixty Superiorities

$1385

Don't Get a REO—Wait!

WASES—and yours may be one of them—it will be possible to get a Reo on the order it.

DEALER MAY HAVE just received a carload or a trainload and among them one he has not taken an order, or one for which he can induce the buyer to accept a price less than that originally stipulated.

THERE MAY BE such cases. Only way to find out is phone or drop in and ask a Reo dealer about his condition.

IN ANY CASE you'll find he has specifications in at the factory for deliveries in the future—running clear up to August first, in fact. And if you give him your order at once, you'll put you down for a car out of one of those future shipments. Meantime, you'll have the old car for a short time longer.

DON'T ASSUME that there is an old car. Naturally—for ninety per cent of those Reo cars are motor-wise from long experience. Those who are not so motor-wise as those who can be induced to accept other and less known makes as "just as good" as

IT IS A BAD IDEA to drive the "old boat" during the spring break-up anyway. It's much worse after than it is now—can it? So it's a good idea to let it take the bumps on rough roads and have the new, spick and span Reo for the opening of the good season and for that tour you are planning.

WHEN YOU CAN'T AFFORD to delay ordering your Reo.

DO THAT NOW—else the predictions of rival dealers may come true. You may not be able to get a Reo at all. For you know what this spring rush is.

IT HAS BEEN A TIME—never since the first Reo left the factory—when we could not supply all who wanted Reos. Never a time. Always the demand for Reos has been greater than the possible output.

IF YOU MAY BE WILLING—and, as we've said it isn't a bad idea—to drive the old car a little while, you must take full advantage of that interim to order.

YOU CAN GET A REO—can be certain of getting the car of your choice; the car of your choice is such a tremendous demand—and on the day it is promised.

THEY MAY BE CASES—we can't say for certain of course—but there may be cases where cars are sold clear up to August, beyond which date the factory has made no promises. And your own local dealer may be one of these. Only way to find out is, as we've said, ask him.

BE SURE TO TELL HIM that, under no circumstances, will you accept any car but a Reo—that you'll wait all summer before you'll invest that amount in some other car that may fall even a little short of what you want and know you can get in a Reo.

YOU'LL NEVER be quite satisfied with any but a Reo. You and the whole world have agreed that is the car you want—have set your heart on it.

REMEMBER, "NO SUBSTITUTES"—and he'll make an awful try to get you a Reo, of whichever model you prefer.

Reo, Lansing, Mich.

Ontario

The New Reo Six The Six of "Sixty Superiorities"

- (1) FLAT TUBE RADIATOR—won't leak through freezing.
- (2) RADIATOR DESIGN—the sloping, curved visor and graceful contour give class to the entire car.
- (3) STREAMLINE HUB-CAPS—original with Reo. Will be widely copied.
- (4) EXTRA HEAVY, one-piece, forged front axle—50 per cent over-size.
- (5) TIMKEN BEARINGS (4) in front hubs.
- (6) REO CYLINDER DESIGN—guarantees straight cylinders, uniformity of water jackets—no distorted cylinders—no scored pistons.
- (7) SAFETY—FIRST—and sure—oil system.
- (8) THREE-PIECE piston rings—more power—quicker acceleration.
- (9) FIFTY PER CENT over-size crank shaft.
- (10) EXTRA HEAVY cam shaft—extra large cams. One reason for silence and uniformity of power in this Reo.
- (11) ECCENTRIC FAN belt adjustment.
- (12) SPIRAL HALF-TIME gears.
- (13) VALVE ACTION—roller lifters.
- (14) OVERHEAD INTAKE VALVE—not exhaust. Another reason for greater power and silence.
- (15) FIBRE ROLLER tappets on intake—another "silence" feature.
- (16) VALVE ENCLOSURE—silences, and keeps them silent—see next paragraph.
- (17) BREATHING TUBE exhaust in valve enclosure.
- (18) NO OIL SPRAYED on outside of motor by breather-tube.
- (19) TWO FLEXIBLE JOINTS between motor and generator.
- (20) ADJUSTABLE main crank-shaft bearings.
- (21) DUAL—injector type—exhaust manifold.
- (22) WATER-HEATED INTAKE manifold.
- (23) REO STEERING gear. Not a "talking point," but a driving convenience much prized by Reo owners.
- (24) DRY DISC CLUTCH—no tendency to drag.
- (25) THREE-UNIT power plant.
- (26) FOUR universal joints.
- (27) BRAKE AND CLUTCH control system—only one hand-lever.
- (28) REO one-rod control—simplest ever devised.
- (29) REO GEAR—shift—direct connected lever—you feel the gears as if your fingers touched them.
- (30) REO patented locking device—impossible for two gears to mesh at once.
- (31) HYATT bearings in transmission.
- (32) "INDEX" PLATE surrounding control rod.
- (33) FULL FLOATING rear axle.
- (34) TIMKEN bearings in rear axle.
- (35) NEW TYPE torque-arm.
- (36) WORM BEVEL driving gears.
- (37) CANTILEVER rear springs.
- (38) RIGID attachment of cantilever springs to axle.
- (39) REMY electric starter and lighting.
- (40) STARTER hook-up—exclusively Reo. Worm drive. No shifting gears—no over-running ratchets.
- (41) STARTER LEVER—handy but unobtrusive.
- (42) TIRE PUMP attached to main driving shaft.
- (43) DIMMING attachment to headlights.
- (44) PILOT light and tail light connected in series.
- (45) SPECIAL tail-light switch.
- (46) PRACTICALLY one-piece pressed steel cowl.
- (47) 6½-INCH WIDER tonneau, 122" wheelbase.
- (48) 50 PER CENT. OVER-SIZE in all vital parts.
- (49) REO ACCURACY—REO CARE—Reo inspection everywhere. Parts ground to absolute exactness.
- (50) 190-ODD STEEL FORGINGS.
- (51) REAL LEATHER upholstery—we never found a substitute that was "just as good."
- (52) REAL HAIR—retains its spring.
- (53) REAL RUBBER and Sea Island cotton in tires.
- (54) VENTILATING, rain-vision, clear-vision windshield.
- (55) WINDSHIELD and top support—have to study in detail to fully appreciate.
- (56) GENUINE one-man top.
- (57) LIGHTER weight in proportion to power.
- (58) EVERY PART—radiator-cap to tail light—Reo made and Reo guaranteed.
- (59) MOST ACCESSIBLE car in the world. We will prove it.
- (60) FINALLY—and most important to you—the Reo name plate signifies that the Reo guarantee, with all it stands for in integrity and financial stability, goes with the car.

Price $1385 f. o. b. Factory; In Canada $1895

Another Element
of Paige Prestige

PAIGE

"The Standard of Value and Quality"

Another Element of Paige Prestige Real Economy

REAL economy in motor cars is vastly more than a mere matter of tire mileage and low gasoline consumption.

Practically any car of light, "flimsy" construction will make a creditable showing as far as its tires and carburetion are concerned. But Repair Bills and Depreciation may tell quite a different story. And these—after all is said and done—are the items of upkeep which stamp your car as an Economy or an extravagant Luxury.

If you have seen the new Paige Six "46," you can readily understand why the item of Depreciation on this car is bound to be a small one. This car is one year ahead of the field. It is refreshingly new in lines, design and equipment. It belongs to no "school," for it is rapidly establishing a school of its own—the School of 1916.

"The year ahead car" that's what they call the Paige "Six." And if you are really interested in economy, that is the car you will want to buy.

Paige-Detroit Motor Car Co.
1205 McKinstry Avenue
Detroit, Michigan

The FAIRFIELD
SIX-"46"
$1395

White Triple Motion
Mountain Freezer
The "World's Best"
Ice-Cream Freezer

Saves
Time Work Worry

Ice cream made the right way with a White Mountain
Freezer is easier to make than a pudding or a pie.

BY ACTUAL TEST—Thirty-five minutes to make two apple pies (to say nothing of the baking). Two quarts of delicious ice cream made in twenty-one minutes. We have proved it; so can you.

The White Mountain Freezer Co.,
Nashua, New Hampshire.

When your own painter suggests

Zinc

for the paint he is going to use on your house, it is a sign that he is negotiating for all your future work.

"Your Move" is a book that supplies sufficient information for you to act upon.

The New Jersey Zinc Company
Room 404, 55 Wall Street, New York
For big contract jobs consult our Research Bureau

THE FIRST MEMORIAL DAY

MANY fanciful explanations have been offered as to what first prompted the idea of a Decoration Day. Some compare its observance to the celebration of All Saints' Day or All Souls' Day in European countries, when the graves of the dead are decorated. Others relate that a German soldier, who had fought in the Civil War, casually remarked that in his native country there was a custom of annually decorating graves of soldiers, and that this chance comment suggested our following the example.

It does not seem necessary, however, to go out of the way for any unusual explanation of what was evidently the most natural spontaneous tribute from the living to the dead. The root of Memorial Day was in the hearts of our sad and sorrowing women.

As soon as the war was over, as springtime came and the grass grew green on the graves of the fallen soldiers, the Southern women here and there went forth to cover the graves with spring blossoms. The women of Petersburg, Va., were among the first to visit the cemeteries with their wreaths of flowers. In Columbus, Miss., two years after the war had ended, the women strewed their fragrant tributes impartially over the graves of the Confederate and the Union soldiers. It is said that the publication of these instances in Northern newspapers inspired Francis Miles Finch to write the poem "The Blue and the Gray."

A year later, in 1868, following the suggestion of Adjutant-General N. P. Chipman that the Grand Army of the Republic should inaugurate a custom of spreading flowers on the graves of Union soldiers at some uniform time, General John A. Logan, then its commander-in-chief, issued an order naming the 30th day of May. The idea spread rapidly. Legislature after legislature enacted laws making the holiday a legal one. While May 30 has been universally observed in the North, the Southern States vary their dates.

The day was at first designated as Decoration Day, but in time the term came to be regarded as too limited or superficial to express the more comprehensive scope of present-day exercises, and the name was changed to Memorial Day.

Credit for being the real originator of Memorial Day is generally given to Mrs. Mary Cotton Redpath, who died recently in her home in Malden, Mass., at the age of ninety-one. The close of the war found her in Charleston, S. C., with her husband, James Redpath, who was a war correspondent on General Sherman's staff and who remained in Charleston, engaging in educational work among the freedmen, opening day schools and night schools and establishing public reading rooms. Mrs. Redpath appealed to the people of South Carolina for funds to purchase the burial field in Charleston and to erect a monument. Response was prompt and generous. In May, 1865,

MRS. MARY COTTON REDPATH
Who Began the "Decoration Day" Custom

just fifty years ago, a great memorial service was held in the Church, in which the tire company made her to the cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Redpath rode an open carriage with another member of the committee and General John Porter High, who had set a detachment of soldiers as escort.

On the previous day Mr. Redpath had told something of the plan to the negro children in an "overflow school" he was conducting in the Presbyterian Church, and asked them to interest their playmates and neighbors to gather wild flowers to decorate the graves. A little negro girl said: "Let's all go an' git a'mfuls an' a'mfuls of posies, an' jest hide the graves from sight, till we cain't see 'em agin no mo'."

It is said that over 10,000 people participated in this first celebration of Memorial Day. Mrs. Redpath in recounting her experience wrote: "The enthusiasm was intense. When the procession formed, freedmen removed the horses from the carriage and dragged it out to the cemetery. The people surged around us, waving their flowers and chanting the verd, stirring songs of their race. When we reached the burial ground, the graves of the soldiers were heaped with myrtle, the small yellow rose (red cloth-of-gold, and other Southern blossoms."

Mrs. Redpath had been deeply interested in the negroes previous to the Civil War. Her home in Malden was one of the stations of the underground railway by which slaves escaped to Canada. After the war, when her husband established the Reoth Lyceum Bureau, their home became a center for leaders in literary and political circles. Through all her life, however, Mrs. Redpath remained actively interested in philanthropic and religious work. An intimate friend of many years' standing says: "I always found her doing something for others, using no small part of her small income to help those in need. For a number of years she lived alone (after the death of her husband in 1891), resting in her heavenly Father, never even locking the doors of her house by day or night. She claimed to be in His presence always, and talked to him as personally present. The last weeks of her life were particularly sweet and beautiful. She would say every day: 'I guess the Father will come for me tonight, and I hope he will; I want to go.'"

MARY KENDALL HYATT

•AN IDEAL CHILDREN'S ROOM

IN THE Smithsonian Institution at Washington there is a room especially arranged for the children. It is not fitted up with swings, slides and seesaws, but with some of the wonders of nature; curious animals, birds, fishes, insects, plants and rocks. The room was designed and prepared under the personal direction of the late secretary, Dr. Samuel Pierpont Langley, whose interests were so human and broad that he took time from his other studies to direct the arrangement of this room for his "little clients," as he called them, devoting nearly two years to the work. He believed in the saying of an early philosopher, that "knowledge begins in wonder." This little room for the children still remains intact, just as Dr. Langley planned it sixteen years ago. It is just as up to date today as it ever was in classification and choice were far-sighted and have never been improved upon. Located across the hall, opposite the main entrance of the institution, exposed to the sunlight from the south, it presents a world of entertainment to grown-ups as well as smaller visitors.

DRYING EUROPE'S TEARS

NOTHING succeeds like success, and nothing relieves like relief, and so we rejoice in being able to report so much actual relief being accomplished by the Christian Herald Fund for the Widows and Orphans of the War in Europe. All the arduous work entailed by such an undertaking, and all the sacrifices made by those who give to the fund, are more than worth while when relief is under way among despairing human beings.

A second report has come to hand from our committee in Holland, working among the refugees from Belgium, (which the following is an extract:

You may shortly expect the definite report of our committee. As already stated, we contributed $2,000 to the Home for Belgian Orphans in Amsterdam, and the remaining $8,000 are being gradually paid out to the suffering Belgian widows with children residing in Holland. It has taken a great deal of investigation to make sure of the money being spent to the very best use, and I would like to place on record here the great help I have had in my clerical work from Mr. A. Driebeek, an influential underwriter of this town, who, at the time when my health did not allow me to do much mental work, almost gave up his whole business in order to take over practically all the work and is still superintending the proper distribution of the money. A word of thanks is due to my sister, Miss G. Jongeneel, who is regularly assisting us in our work.

The position is at present that nearly the whole of the $8,000 have been promised to a certain number of widows and orphans of the war, although the whole sum has not actually been paid out, seeing that in most instances we promise a certain weekly contribution for a certain number of weeks. I would have said that we have picked out the most deserving cases, were it not that we have a large number of equally deserving and necessary cases where the balance of our funds do not allow us to help, and I am just wondering whether, out of the generous contributions we received by you, you cannot appropriate a small remittance to the Holland Committee.

(Signed) P. C. JONGENEEL.

WE RECENTLY printed a telegram notifying us, through the State Department at Washington, that our committee had been organized in Vienna to distribute relief to Galician refugees, and ten thousand dollars was once made available for that committee. We now are in receipt of interesting letters confirming that telegram, the substance of which we quote:

VIENNA, AUSTRIA, April 16, 1915.

Christian Herald, New York City.

We have the honor of enclosing herewith copy of a letter written to the consul general here in Vienna, informing him of the formation of the "Christian Herald Galician Committee," according to the suggestion given in your letter of March 25.

You will see from this letter that we have tried out your wishes, which we shall also try endeavor to do in the future. The desired photographs will be sent you as soon as possible.

Thanking you in the name of the poorest of the poor—the Galician widows and orphans—Yours faithfully,

(Signed) WLADIMIR SCHILLING-SINGALEWYCYZ, Secretary.

JULIAN ROMANCZUK, President of the Christian Herald Galician Committee.

The letter referred to reads as follows:

VIENNA, AUSTRIA, April 16, 1915.

Albert Halstead, Consul General of the United States of America, Vienna.

According to the suggestion of the Christian Herald, Bible House, in New York, contained in their letter of March 25, and the conference in the consulate at which Mr. Julian Romanczuk and Mr. Wladimir Schilling-Singalewycz had the honor of being present, we inform you that we have now formed a special committee—"The Christian Herald Galician Committee"—for the relief of widows and orphans and the Galician fugitives, who are the victims of the war.

I present Mr. Julian Romanczuk, vice-president of the Austrian parliament, is the chairman; Mr. Roman Zaleskyj, professor of the technical high school, and the Reverend Monsieur Dr. Joseph Zuk are representatives, and Wladimir Schilling-Singalewycz, member of parliament, is the secretary.

In order to omit any irregularity in our administration we shall address ourselves to the Reverend Antonius Julius, the head of the Galician committee, and we shall also be glad to be the help and co-operation of the members of this committee.

We are, as yet, only in the beginning of our activities, but as soon as we have more positive results we shall not delay in presenting ourselves before the American ambassador, Mr. Frederic C. Penfield.

Finally we shall esteem it a favor if you will kindly communicate the contents of this letter to the Christian Herald.

We beg to remain, dear sir,

Your very obedient servants,

(Signed) WLADIMIR SCHILLING-SINGALEWYCYZ, Secretary.

(Signed) JULIAN ROMANCZUK, President.

MR. FREDERIC C. PENFIELD, American ambassador at Vienna, under date of April 21 also writes us enclosing a letter from the American consul general at Vienna notifying him formally of the appointment of the Christian Herald Committee for the relief of Galician fugitives. As our readers know, a committee already was in existence in Vienna for the relief of Austrian widows and orphans of the war. The new committee will give itself wholly to looking after cases among the refugees from Galicia and other parts of Poland, who have arrived in great numbers in the vicinity of Vienna, and whose condition is well described in the letter above as "sacrifices of the war" and "the poorest of the poor." This arrangement was by our wish, and has the endorsement of the Vienna-Austrian Committee, for Consul-General Albert Halstead writes: "It seemed in all the circumstances better to form a separate committee from members of the existing committee in Vienna, for the relief of Galicians, otherwise duplication in relief was certain."

The active interest taken in the administration of this relief work by our State Department officials abroad adds greatly to the satisfaction we all must take in the arrangements which have been made.

We invite our readers to make this fund a mighty power for good. It represents Christian sympathy, Christian sacrifices, Christian love. You honor Christ by sending hope and comfort into these places of woe.

On Wednesday, May 12, the fund had reached the splendid total of $150,404.81. Acknowledgments are being made in the Christian Herald as rapidly as space permits, and a number will be found on page 565 of this issue.

Please address your gifts to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Temperance 5,500 Years Ago

A FOREIGN exchange has this interesting paragraph: "There is still in existence an Egyptian papyrus of the date of 3500 years before the Christian era, which contains the following caution: 'My son, do not linger in the wine-shop or drink too much wine. It causeth thee to utter words regarding thy neighbor which thou rememberest not. Thou fallest upon the ground, thy limbs become weak as those of a child. One cometh to trade with thee and findeth thee so. Then say they, 'Take away the fellow, for he is drunk.' This is believed to be the oldest temperance lecture in existence.

Friendly Words From India

May I express to you our untiring pleasure in the Christian Herald. Our home mail comes to us each week, bringing letters and papers, and we look for no paper more eagerly than for the Christian Herald. It seems to keep us in touch with the dear homeland in a very special manner, and since the war began, we feel that no paper that we receive from America, has given us so wide and fair a knowledge of war conditions as the articles by Arnoux.

The students of the seminary wait eagerly until we have read the Herald, so that they can have it, and it certainly brings pleasure and instruction and inspiration to many in this compound.

Recently we heard a very fine and helpful sermon from the pastor of our church, and when we spoke some words of appreciation to him, he said: "My inspiration for that sermon came to me from something I read in the Christian Herald."

May you continue long to bring help and inspiration into heathen India, and to all the world.

Ramapattanam, Nellore District.

Mrs. J. H.

$50 REWARD!

The Thief Sees The Red Bull-dog

Car Thieves Fear the M.S.A.

"The little red bull-dog" on the radiators of cars owned by members of the M. S. A. is highly respected by auto thieves. Inside of one hour after the theft of such car is reported to us, thousands of notification cards offering $50 reward for the arrest of the thief are actually in the mails. No thief has ever succeeded in breaking through the far-flung line of M. S. A. surveillance. This is just one of the many helpful activities of the

MOTORISTS Security Alliance

This Big National Organization looks after the motor owner's interests in a multitude of ways—keeps you out of legal difficulties—frees you from the extortion of supplymen, garages and hotels—aids you in all emergencies.

Some of the Benefits:

- Emergency Certificate of Identification for Credit.
- Best Legal Service Obtainable.
- Best Medical Attendance.
- 25% Saving on Insurance Covering Automobile Risks.
- Big Saving in Supplies.
- Protection Plates for Your Car.
- Official Routes and Touring Suggestions.
- Prevention of Extortion.

M. S. A. BOOK FREE

Send for the official M. S. A. Book free to auto owners. Learn what big things the M. S. A. is doing for its members.

Local Agents Wanted

We have a very attractive proposition for men who are qualified to represent the organization. Every local agent must be an automobile owner.

MOTORISTS: Tear Off and Mail for Free Book
J. Lester Williams, Sec'y Motorists Security Alliance,
Dept. 28, 327 So. La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.
Please send the official M. S. A. Book. I own a car. Your mailed reply.

BARNEY Oldfield's famous phrase, "Firestones are my only life insurance," is of interest to every car-owner by the proof it affords of Firestone safety and vitality under sternest trial.

You naturally infer that what Firestones will do for the men who grind out tire-life in racing tests, they will do for your demands of tour and daily travel.

Firestone Net Prices to Car-Owners

	Case Ro'd Tread	Case Non- Skid	Grey Tube	Red Tube
30x3	$ 9.40	$10.55	$2.20	$2.50
30x3 1/2	11.90	13.35	2.60	2.90
32x3 1/2	13.75	15.40	2.70	3.05
34x4	19.90	22.30	3.00	4.40
34x4 1/2	27.30	30.55	4.80	5.40
36x4 1/2	28.70	32.15	5.00	5.65
37x5	35.55	39.80	5.95	6.70
38x5 1/2	46.00	51.50	6.75	7.55

In the Firestone scale of values, low price is incidental—only quality is vital. Firestone prices are down to the level of ordinary tires because public recognition of Most Miles per Dollar gives us tremendous volume.

The efficiency and scope of the Firestone system of distribution cuts costs some more. Share in these industrial advantages. Your dealer has Firestones.

Firestone Tire and Rubber Company
"America's Largest Exclusive Tire and Rim Makers"
Akron, Ohio—Branches and Dealers Everywhere

NATHAN REBUKES DAVID

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JUNE 6.

II SAM. 11: 1—12: 7. (COMPARE PS. 51)

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.D.

"Create in me a clean heart, O God." Ps. 51: 10.

Of old the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the deep, or, as the R.V. margin reads, "was brooding upon the face of the waters," for the earth was waste and void. Prime chaos ruled, but undeterred and undespairs, the Spirit of God waited, that out of it might evolve the order and beauty of the world. It was to that all-sufficient power and love which he knew were nigh, that David turned in this awful hour, when Nathan's parable suddenly revealed the enormity of his sin. It was much to be forgiven, but he required infinitely more. He desired that God's saving grace should enter the very depths of being, and there deal with the fountains from which these dark poisoned springs had arisen. This is what Jer. 24: 7 and Ezek. 36: 26 promised; and what our Saviour has secured. "Any one is in Christ there is a new creation, the old things are passed away; behold, they become new." (II Cor. 5: 17.) It is recorded that the day after his sudden conversion, a siren voice whispered to Augustine: "It is I," but he answered quickly: "Ah, but it is not I. Personality remains unaffected, but the Christ-life permeates the whole character, casting out inveterate evils, extirpating bad habits, and communicating new aims, impulses, and resources.

David's Worst

By Arthur H. Howland

AFTER the ark of God had been brought to Jerusalem, David's new capital, the story of Israel's many-sided king goes on with bewildering changes of cruelty and kindness, light and shadow, piety and crime. Chapter seven sees him sitting in his palace and wishing that he might build a house of worship for Jehovah. God refuses to allow him to build a temple, the reason being more fully set forth in I Chron. 22: 8. His hands had spilled too much blood to be allowed to erect a house of worship for God. The Lord, however, does promise him and his descendants great blessing, and David utters in response a humble and beautiful prayer. Chapter eight sees him back at the horrible business of killing his enemies. Chapter nine, with another abrupt shifting of the scenes, shows the magnanimous affectionate spirit of the king as he tries to find whether or not his friend Jonathan had left any descendants, and tells the story of his beautiful kindness to the lame son of his old-time friend. Chapter ten contains more battle scenes. Chapter eleven shows us David again in his palace, this time not thinking of the God for whom he would build a temple, but looking upon the beauty of an unknown neighbor who so fascinates him that he sends to learn her identity. When he learns that she is the wife of one of his officers, passion overthrows principle and piety and he brings her to his palace. Then follows the horrible story of Uriah's murder, so shameful, so deceitful, so cowardly, so altogether base and dastardly.

We see in the story of this sin of the first magnitude the deadly power of habit. The trouble with David was that he had grown used to killing. He had slain so many people, feeling that he was moved to the slaughter by patriotism or even by the conviction that he was slaying the enemies of Jehovah, that when it came to the question of killing a man who was in his way, he could do it easily.

This is one of the deepest horrors of war, that it dulls the perception of human life. Not only the soldiers themselves, but the men and women who read the battle stories, the boys who get the habit of playing soldier, all are apt to lose that deep horror of pain and death which possesses us at normal times. The way to keep from the danger of becoming hardened is to keep interested in saving others from pain and from danger and in making life for them beautiful and attractive.

"Thou art the man." There are few nobler pictures in all history and literature than that of the stern prophet Nathan pointing his finger at the king and saying this. At another time the Great Teacher to whom had been brought a sinful woman said quietly to those who were accusing her: "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone." His words smote every heart, and, man by man, they slunk guiltily away.

If any of us do wrong there will be less justification and less claim to leniency for us than if we had not heard this story of the guilty king; had not heard the stern word of his rebuking prophet and the words of that stern Prophet who condemned the sinners of his day.

There is for us a safeguard and protection which David lacked—the story of the life and words, the death and the resurrection of Jesus Christ. He shows us how to keep from sinning by adopting his principle of love of living not for self, but for others. He teaches us to care for the happiness of others more than for our own. He sets fresh emphasis and vividness upon the old fact of the exceeding sinfulness of sin. He gives us power to fight temptation. He offers to cleanse our souls by the measureless power of the love that expressed itself on Calvary. He comes to us in the invincible power of his resurrection life to give us triumph in every great crisis, and, moment by moment through every day, to make us "more than conquerors."

The Box on the Buggy

By Amos R. Wells

AS DAVID grew richer, more powerful, more famous, more luxurious, he must have grown less religious. If God had been in his life as he was when he wrote the twenty-third Psalm, the temptation of Bath-sheba would have had no power over him. We all know Phillips was the son of a wealthy father, the first mayor of Boston. He was subject to all the temptation of riches; but one day, after hearing a sermon by Lyman Beecher, he went to his room, threw himself on the floor, and cried: "O God, I believe in thee. Take what is thine own. I ask this, that whenever a thing be wrong it may have no power of temptation over me, and whenever a thing be right it may take no courage to do it." In his years the great anti-slavery and temperance orator said: "I have never found anything that impressed me as being wrong exerting any temptation over me, nor has it required any courage on my part to do whatever I believed to be right." This might have been David's experience on the same terms. It may be ours.

That unholy gazing upon Bath-sheba led to adultery, and adultery led to murder. This is like all sin. "Sin is a fountain," wrote Andrew Bonar; "not a mere act, but a fountain of evil." And he went on to urge, "Never the with one sin. It is like a little cloud which, as a poet has said, may ho a hurricane in its grasp." In the same vein Dr. Charles S. Robinson said: "It is as supreme a folly to talk of a life sin as it would be to talk of a small Decalogue that forbids it, or a diminutive God that hates it, or a shallow will that will punish it."

Nathan's parable was directed toward the abuse of power. The

"DON'T SHOUT"

Anyone can adjust it. Over one hundred thousand sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Bldg., Phila.

Christian Health Movement

led by W. Earl Flynn, America's great Christian Health lecturer and teacher. Brightens intellect; renews ambition; lengthens life; adds beauty to face and form. Information FREE, together with simple health menus for child and grownup.
W. EARL FLYNN, Dept. 6, Lincoln, Neb.

WAR

—STARTLING 1915 PROPHECIES—
Re-reading foretold present War, also Turkish War—gave exact dates 18 years ago, says War and Anarchy will soon reign here also. Claims America became involved, every existing Institution utterly destroyed. New Age, approaching, shows how and why. Multitudes devouring his inspired book, intensely fascinating. Convincing. Biblical prophecies, startling disclosures. Silk cloth, 100 pages, postpaid, $1.00. 15c. 10c. Peekskill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

SYSTEMATIC BIBLE STUDY

Let us tell you about the study of the Bible and methods of practical Christian work by correspondence, which is being received more favorably than ever before. We are offering

EIGHT DISTINCT COURSES

These courses give a wide range of choice and we are quite confident we have a course that will meet your need. Our prospectus and other literature, which we will be pleased to send you, will tell the story. Address

The Moody Bible Institute
Dept. F.8, 153-163 Institute Pl., Chicago, Ill.

BY CORRESPONDENCE

Darning - Made - Easy

Saves Nearly One-Half Time
Its shape makes the darning of hose quick and pleasant. No other darning at all compares with it. 15c. postpaid. Special terms to Church Societies selling them for profit. Patented and made only by Landon MFG. Co., 1208 N. Conestoga St., Philadelphia, Pa.

had power over the poor man, and it to kill the poor man's pet lamb. (e) of the commonest of human fallacies is to think we can do as we please with what we have or can get. It took some courage for Nathan to step out at his king the stern words, "You art the man!" but justice is no respecter of persons. Every Federal judge must take an oath that he "will administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor as to the rich." "This oath," said Justice Brewer, "while defining the official obligations of the judge, with equal emphasis states the duty of every citizen." In all our dealings with others, and no less in all our forming of opinions about others, we must seek to do exact justice, without favor or fear.

David's conscience answered at once to Nathan's accusation. Doubtless it had been eager to speak all the time, but David had listened to it. Two men had a horse and buggy to go to a village seven miles away. When they came back, with a very weary horse, the sole-keeper asked if they had gone only seven miles. When they said they had, he opened a little box on the side of the buggy and showed them an instrument which registered thirty miles as the length of their drive. Such a silent witness against us is our conscience, and some day it will give a full account of all we have done. May it be an account of which we shall not be ashamed!

Then came David's punishment, the death of his child. Would he have been punished if the babe had lived? He surely would. His punishment began as soon as his sin began. As Ruskin wrote, "For us every day is a day of judgment. Judgment waits at the doors of your house, it waits at the corners of your streets; we are in the midst of judgment." David repented, as his wonderful fifty-first Psalm testifies; but his child remained dead, and Uriah remained dead, and we may well believe that David's joy remained dead for the rest of his life. "He that hath tasted the bitterness of sin," said Charnock, "will fear to commit it; he that hath felt the sweetness of mercy will fear to offend it."

The Young People's Meetings

The Body Kept Subordinate

BY P. U. and Christian Endeavor
Topic for June 6. I Cor. 9: 27-29
(Consecration meeting)

CAN you conceive the terrifying situation of being bound, flat and helpless, upon the back of an untamed horse and sent hurtling and crashing through a wilderness? This is the old story of Jeppa, whose experiences artists, as well as a poet, have made vivid.

Let many people live constantly in a situation very much like that, only more perilous. Their bodies are untamed beasts to which their souls are bound, and these wild beasts carry them about at will.

The true relation between horse and man is that the man should dominate and direct the horse; otherwise the man is in deadly peril. The true relation of body and soul is that the soul must dominate and direct and use the body.

This is a consecration meeting. The way to get into right relation to your body is to present both soul and body to Christ. Then he will give your body power to control and direct your body.

An athletic, muscular Christian is a beautiful object. Billy Sunday is admirable as an athlete as he is admirable as an evangelist. The human body is the most marvelous mechanism in the world. It reaches its highest perfection when it is dominated by a sanctified soul and skilfully used in labor for the welfare and salvation of others in the name of Christ. We may not all have the special gifts of an evangelist, but we can all compel our bodies to do the bidding of our souls again in the power of the Holy Spirit, and strive to the best of our ability and opportunity to be soul-winners and light-brighteners.

The Promises of Guidance

North League Topic for June 6.
Isa. 1: 5; Ps. 25: 9, 48: 14,
1: 8; Isa. 58: 11

WILL God really tell me what to do today?

We should have a very different looking Bible if all the promises of guidance were taken out.

And since they are there they must mean you—and you—and you—and me. And they must mean us today. Oh, we of little faith!

It is hard for our teaching to overcome the logic of example. If the Sunday school teacher says that there is harm in smoking cigarettes, and the doctor says there isn't by smoking them—the boy who wants to indulge in the habit will believe the doctor.

Do You Know Your Bible?

Honor Roll and correct answers to List 4 will appear next week.

New Questions. List No. 5
II Corinthians

1. (a) Whom had Paul sent as a messenger to Corinth after writing his first epistle to the church there? (b) Where had he hoped to meet the returning messenger from Corinth? (c) Where did he finally meet him?

2. (a) What remarks of Paul in this epistle indicate that he was anxious about the results of the first letter? (b) What report did the messenger bring about this matter?

3. (a) What attitude does Paul now urge the Corinthian church to take toward the brother whose wrong-doing had necessitated the severity of the first epistle? (b) What did Paul consider to be the only source of his own efficiency? (c) What great statement does he make about the relative values of the letter of the law and the spirit?

4. (a) What Old Testament event proved that there was glory even in the old dispensation of law and condemnation? (b) With what two phrases does Paul characterize, or designate, the new dispensation, which has a far greater glory?

5. (a) What will happen to those who behold (or reflect—see American Revision) the glory of Christ? (b) Quote the beautiful verse in which Paul describes the method by which God brings his light to the hearts of believers.

6. (a) What great statement does Paul make as to the relative endurance of seen and unseen things? (b) What did Paul state to be the motive of his life?

7. (a) What result should Christ's death have in the lives of believers? (b) What official relation does the believer hold to Christ? (c) What exhortation sums up his message to others?

8. (a) What warning does Paul give about close association with unbelievers? (b) What blessings will follow disentanglement from the world? (c) What earnest exhortation does Paul make to the Corinthians at the close of the appeal to separate themselves from worldly defilement?

9. (a) What special work had the Corinthian church undertaken a year before Paul wrote this letter, in which Titus and his companions had been instructed to assist? (b) In what province had the Christian believers been assisting nobly with this enterprise? (c) How did Paul express himself to the people of this province about the zeal of the Christians of the province of which Corinth was a part (Achaia)? (d) What would be the result then, if they should lessen their activities and not come up to his first expectations?

(Note. There is a marked difference in the style and tone of the last three chapters of the epistle. The conjecture has been made that news had come from Corinth that the party hostile to Paul had renewed and intensified their activities.)

10. (a) What did Paul's opponents say of his physical presence and spoken words as compared to his writings? (b) How had he demonstrated his fidelity to Christ's work? (c) What better thing did God give Paul when he asked to have the thorn in the flesh removed? (d) What was Paul's greatest wish for the Corinthian Christians?

When a man does right he is happy; when he gets others to do right he is still happier.

The trouble with most of the flowery sermons is that by the time the sermon is finished the flowers have withered.

Reconstructing Car Values

A New 1916
Oakland—
Ready for Delivery

THE order was: "Build a new Oakland Four. Build it to a new standard of quality and service—at a new price. Build a Four which is more than ever the Master of any hill or road task." And now after months of planning and building and testing, this Oakland is ready for you—a new model, a new standard of service—every inch a monarch of Fours!

"Make it extra powerful—and build it light. This new Oakland has surplus power—not an ounce excess weight."

"Make it durable—our reputation is based on sturdiness with simplicity."

"Make it comfortable for five—no crowding."

"And we are going to sell this new Oakland Four for $1050."

With Oakland standards of uncompromising quality this means only one thing—Volume. Already the bell of public opinion has rung with the enthusiasm that is following Oakland initiative.

Four Cylinder Oakland—Northway High Speed Motor, 39 horse power; Delco Electric starting, lighting and ignition system; Oakland Stewart vacuum gasoline feed; one man top, crown fenders, extra rim, speedometer. In short, complete equipment.

Other important additions to the 1916 Oakland line will be announced soon.

DEALERS: Wire for Allotment. New Territory Apportioned in Order of Application

Oakland Motor Company, Pontiac, Mich.

Model "38" Speedsters, Roadsters, Touring Cars

Oakland

$1050

"Sturdy as the Oak"

Pyrene

You know this trade-mark through National Periodical Advertising

IF a stranger in your community saw fit to conceal his identity, you would look upon him with suspicion. You would insist upon knowing his name and antecedents before you consented to do business with him or receive him into your home. Yet some people still buy crackers out of a barrel, coffee or tea from a bin, prunes from a hogshead and unnumbered other things without a name or a brand that identifies the goods and thereby protects the purchaser.

It is safer and cheaper to buy the well-known, advertised article put up by the manufacturer with his name and trade-mark on the package. Safer, because the manufacturer who puts his name on his goods puts his future into your hands. He must put quality into the goods or lose your trade, because you can always identify his goods. Cheaper, because advertising reduces the producing and selling costs of manufacturers by enormously increasing their output.

Trade-marks and national advertising are the two greatest public servants in business today. Their whole tendency is to raise qualities and standardize them, while reducing prices and stabilizing them.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

MEMBER OF THE QUOIN CLUB
THE NATIONAL PERIODICAL ASSOCIATION

THIS 1915 Model Ranger 30 DAYS Free Trial

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER—30 days free trial on this finest of bicycles—the “Ranger.” We will ship it to you on approval, freight prepaid—without a cent deposit in advance. This offer absolutely genuine. WRITE TODAY for our big catalog showing our full line of bicycles for men and women, boys and girls at prices never before equaled for like quality. It is a cyclopedia of bicycles, sundries and useful bicycle information. It's free.

TIRES, COASTER-BRAKE rear wheels, inner tubes, lamps, cyclometers, equipment and parts for all bicycles at half usual prices. A limited number of second-hand bicycles taken in trade will be closed out at once, at $3 to $8 each.

RIDER AGENTS wanted in each town to ride and exhibit a sample 1915 model Ranger furnished by us.

It Costs You Nothing to learn what we offer and how we can do it. You will be astonished and convinced. Do not buy a bicycle, tires or sundries until you get our catalog and new special offers. Write today.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. D-71, CHICAGO, ILL.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.

THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO. Box 150 LIMA, OHIO.

Get Well Like I Did

Use Tyler's Macerated Wheat and other raw foods. Doctors Recommend It. Users Praise It. Unequalled for Constipation. Send 2c stamp for Raw Food Book and Health Guide or send 10c for Trial can of the Food and Book, postpaid to any address.

BYRON TYLER, 49 Syndicate Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., U.S.A.

See These Tire Prices

30x3	$8.60	34x4	$15.75	34x4	$16.70
30x3 1/2	10.85	34x3 1/2	12.90	36x4	17.45

10% extra for non-skids—any style rim you specify.

DOUBLE SERVICE TIRES

at prices that cannot be duplicated, with money-back privilege if not satisfactory and with 7000 mile road service guarantee.

How is it possible? It is due to our new process of manufacturing Double Service Tires, which are made from two of the best known standard tires by special vulcanizing, reinforcing and heavy back stitching. Describe tire and request. Send check or money order today. Return express collect if not satisfactory.

Reference, Central Savings & Trust Co., Akron, Ohio.

The Double Service Tire & Rubber Co., Dept. "M," Akron, Ohio

"Don't-Snore"

Stops snoring and mouth breathing. Money refunded if it Don't. Ask for Booklet.

THOS. B. MORTON CO., (Inc.), 3 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

Fish Bite better, if you bait with Magic-Fish-Lure. Best fish bait ever discovered. Write to-day and get a box to help introduce it. Agents wanted. J. F. Gregory, K-127, St. Louis, Mo.

FREE "Linene" COLLAR

State size on postal and whether you want the life cut or slow turnover style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T. Boston, Mass.

THE ADVENTURE

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

GAVE Her His Life Belt Though He Could Not Swim," "Bride Seeking Husband," "Survivors Describe Acts of Heroism."

The headlines stare at us from every paper, sometimes bordered in black, and we look at them—incapable almost. For nothing seems so unbelievable, so horrible, as a disaster at sea.

There were all people on the stricken Lusitania—lords and ladies, doctors, ministers, school-girls and debutantes, actors and authors and actresses. There were folk in search of pleasure, folk on the trail of business—folk hunting, perhaps, for adventure. And among them were many that were brave—brave with the conspicuous courage of the great emergency that bares the soul of a man or a woman.

Alfred Vanderbilt was a figure in society, a man of millions, whose smallest faults have been hunted out, and his tiniest good deeds and smallest weaknesses printed in large type many times in the daily papers. But now that his name is written in letters of flame (for he heads the list of Lusitania heroes) every other feeling is swamped in a great flood of pride and love.

"People" (I am quoting from a newspaper) "will not talk of Mr. Vanderbilt in the future as a millionaire sportsman and a man of pleasure. He will be remembered as a hero, and men and women will salute his name. When death was nearing him, he showed gallantry which no words can adequately describe.

"Find all the kiddies you can, boy," he said to his valet. The man rushed off collecting children, and as he brought them to Mr. Vanderbilt the millionaire dashed to the boat with two little ones in his arms at a time. When he could find no more children he went to the assistance of the women. When the ship gave every indication that it would sink within a few minutes, Mr. Vanderbilt took off his life-belt and gave it to a woman who passed him on the deck. Then he turned back, as though to look for another belt."

IT IS not only in old Sparta that mothers were brave. There was a mother on board who made her great sacrifice in a wonderful way. "She lost all her three young children, one six years, one four, and the third a babe in arms, six months. She herself lives. She held up the three of them in the water, all the time shrieking for help. When rescued by a boat the two elder children were dead. Their room was required on the boat and the mother was brave enough to realize it.

"Give them to me," she shrieked, "give them to me, my bonnie wee things. I will bury them. They are mine to bury as they were mine to keep."

"With her hair streaming down her back and her form shaking with sorrow, she took each little body from the rescuers and reverently placed it in the water again, and the people on the boat wept as she sobbed a little prayer to God. . . . Just as the rescuers were landing, her third and only child died in her arms."

The brave deeds were not confined to grown-ups, however, for one of fourteen is called the heroine of the Lusitania. This is the story:

"Miss Katherine Kaye was running from New York, where she had been visiting relatives. . . . With smiling words and reassurance she climbed aboard the lifeboat as easily as an able seaman. One sailor fell at his oar as a result of a hard stroke to escape swamping. The girl took his place and rowed until the boat was out of danger."

A physician, Dr. Daniel V. Moore, from South Dakota, because of his medical skill was able to do much for his fellow sufferers. "A girl who had heard sing at a concert was singing," he said modestly, "and I caught hold of her somehow and her into the boat. I grasped her by the shoulders and landed her safely. He was a barber in the first class cabin and a more manly man I never met. We pushed away hard to avoid the suction, but our boat was filling. . . . In a few minutes she was filled level full. Then a keg floated up and I pitched it about ten feet away and followed it. After reaching it I turned to see the fate of our boat. She had capsized and covered my."

It would be impossible to tell the individual names of every brave person, but there are three names that group together. Mme. Marie Dege, Herbert S. Stone and Lindon W. Bates, Jr., fought and died while trying to save some of the hopeless, helpless ones. "This little band," say the printed accounts, "guided women and children, supplied lifeboats, banded the wounds of other passengers, and then plunged hopelessly into the sea, having given up their own lives. There was no cooler spot aboard the boat."

Mr. Charles Frohman, known all over the country as the manager and producer of the better class of plays, was identified among the bodies recovered. One of the survivors said his face was the calmest of any of the dead. Perhaps his last words—words that will go down in history—may explain the peace that carried him through the gates of death. A young Frenchwoman, Rita Jolivet, who was talking to him at the time of the agony, gives his message to the world: "Mr. Frohman was especially calm and magnificently courageous. He told all to keep still, and when the ship listed and every one rushed to the deck where the first boat was being launched, he said to us: 'Stay where you are; this is going to be a close call. We shall have more chance here than by rushing for the boats.' The he went on just as calmly as though he were discussing some small dinner question. 'To my mind,' he said, 'death is the most beautiful adventure which life can offer. The test for all at all times is to meet it as such.'"

Just after that the second torpedo struck.

THESE glimpses of heroic soul in passing, help us bear our heavy cross. And, although there is no way of knowing, we can well believe that hundreds met death just as calmly as those whose last deeds have been quoted. For when a soul trusts in God, death—even death at sea—is the most beautiful adventure which life can offer.

Golden Hours

SOME day we may try to make a list of all our readers who have celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. We may not get to this soon, but it will be interesting whenever it is done. Meanwhile we can at least record such a happy event in the lives of Mr. and Mrs. E. Cook of Milaca, Minn., who on the 16th of last November enjoyed all sorts of delightful remembrances from their friends in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cook have been members of the Methodist Episcopal Church for over fifty years and of the Christian Herald Family for more than half of that period.

Rivulet or Torrent

YOU have seen the difference between the stream that creeps along in its dull and sluggish course, sometimes full and sometimes empty, and the foaming torrent that rushes forth, leaping over rocks and stones, carrying all before it as it seeks its way to the ocean.

Which does your life most resemble? The trickling stream, which at best slowly slides along—the life of formalism—or the bounding torrent, "which rejoiceth as a young man to run a race"—the life of faith and love and sympathy, because of the invigorating Spirit of life in your soul?

Bath, N. H. REV. J. R. F.

Continued from page 549

château in the beautiful iron-fenced park had not been commandeered as an army headquarters, but that it was simply the home of one of these young men, who had invited all his brother officers from a nearby garrison to a luncheon; and that now you were leaving to catch a train. As the motor lurched soggily from the soaked driveway I took a last glance at the château; a wisp of blackish smoke, beaten low by the rain, was waithing along the brick chimney, and an old servant was sweeping away the mud that our boots had left on the porch; but as the motor swung past the little square-paned library windows I saw that they were pierced with tiny holes, through which passed the thin tendrils of wires, caught against a great tree and leading off through the park; and in the window I saw a soldier telephoning, while another at a table seemed to be writing down what the man in the window was calling off. Ahead a tranquil driveway tunneled the trees. . . .

The brown-leather uniformed army chauffeur, ignoring the insane skidding of the car, was racing through a desolated country. It is the contrast that always catches you in this war. In the sugar-beet fields that came up to the road I began to see an increasing number of mounds, some four, some thirty feet long, incongruously protruding from the flat ground. And I began to see little wooden crosses, turned the deeper yellow that new wood turns in the rain; and some of the crosses, loosened by the downpours, leaned over, their arms resting in the mud, and on one a helmet hung. On either side the unharvested field of sugar beets had become the harvested fields of the dead. . . . Where you saw the white sides of a farmhouse, no smoke mounted from the gaunt gray chimney; and in the yard beyond no human being moved, for you were passing through a countryside where the armies had passed. We drove on, but we could not leave the long sinister mounds behind. And you began to think what an awful thing it is not to be able to go a hundred yards without seeing a grave! I noticed that Oberleutnant Herrmann no longer sat hunched with the blue collar of his cape turned up to his ears and staring straight ahead; restlessly he seemed ever glancing from left to right. I wondered what he, a soldier, who had been decorated for bravery in German Southwest Africa, thought of these things that he so restlessly saw.

"A great battle was fought here early in October," he said after a time. "Sixty thousand men were engaged." He paused. "There were six thousand dead. A hundred were wounded every day for five days for each mile of a forty-mile line."

That was all; but his eyes roved from grave to grave. For two miles we followed the avenue of wooden crosses; and then, still in the open country, the car stopped. Then I saw that the car ahead, carrying the staff officers, had stopped too, and that they were getting out.

"Over to the right there," said a captain, pointing towards a clump of trees through which the ruins of cottages loomed dimly in the rain, "is a village which we shelled because the French refused to leave it. Then they took up positions in the cemetery," and with a wave of his hand the captain indicated an ancient brick wall that had seemed to enclose only a grove of tall acacias at the end of the sugar-beet field. "It took us three days of hard fighting to capture the cemetery," he continued as we waded through the mud.

"Three days—and how many lives? And as you approached the brick wall, you thought that now it was not considered of enough importance to have a single soldier on guard; which is one of the false impressions that always come to you after hearing that a certain point was taken at such sacrifice, and then to find that point abandoned. For the moment you seemed to think of the cemetery as being typically futile of war; and then its place in the vast strategical contemplation of a battle line three hundred miles long emerges from your temporarily befogged vision.

It was such thoughts as this that were running through my mind—and that obsess you in these days of national pride—as we entered by the rusted iron gate and stood in the place of desecrated graves. But as I walked among them, their white monuments chipped with rifle balls, the leafless boughs of the great trees spreading above, splintered with shrapnel, the red wall torn open here and there to admit the shells, one of which must have burst in that rain-filled crater by the iron-railed shaft over there; as I saw a clutter of rifle butts, smashed off against a tombstone, perhaps so that the metal parts could be taken back to an ordnance factory to be molded again; as my foot kicked a rotting black cartridge belt, I thought not how terrible it was to have fought in and thus desecrated a sepulcher. I was thinking of the men who had fought here. I was wondering only whether they lived. I was wondering how many of those thick white bullet-chipped tombstones had shielded men from death. I was wondering how many more of them would have been killed had they fought in the open field; and as I examined the shattered granite slabs I could think of them only in the terms of the protection they had given.

Then in the extreme corner of the yard I saw a monstrous cross looming high. I judged it to be about thirty feet high. Made of grided iron, it was; painted black. But as I walked toward it I saw that it was a crucifix and that the designer had fashioned the dying Christ in white marble, which had turned gray. And the stone eyes of the Christ seemed to be hopelessly gazing down, and with an uncanny feeling you wondered what the soldiers had thought; but something told you that they had probably not seen it at all. Something was desperately, defensively urging me to climb the stone steps to the cross so that from the base I might examine the figure closer. And I saw then, not that it had miraculously escaped unharmed, so that men might later make pilgrimage here and see, but that three bullets had nicked the cross and gone ricocheting off. And I walked away from it wondering if any soldier had sought the shelter of that huge cross.

One of the staff officers was speaking to me.

"Will you return to headquarters with us for tea?" he was saying; and he gave a slight shudder. Of course it was from the cold rain; but now I think it odd that I felt a need to have to tell myself that. Nor did any one feel inclined to talk as we passed through the rusted gate in the red wall and turned towards the road. . . .

To be continued

Deliver Us!

FROM all the gloom and sorrow that bloody warfare brings, when monarchs start to borrow some grief from other kings; from dreadful scenes of slaughter, and dead men by the cord, from blood that flows like water, deliver us, O Lord! From fear and melancholy that every death list gives, from all the pompous folly in which an army lives; from all the strife stupendous that brings no sane reward, but only loss tremendous, deliver us, O Lord! From seeing friend and neighbor in tools of death arrayed, deserting useful labor to wield the thirsty blade; from seeing plowshares lying all rusty on the sward, where men and boys are dying, deliver us, O Lord! From seeing foreign legions invade our peaceful shore, and turn these smiling regions to scenes of death and gore; from all the desolation the gods of war accord to every fighting nation, deliver us, O Lord!

WALT MASON.

Start the Week Right

When washday comes 'round in India, the women soak the dirty clothes in water, lay them on a flat stone, and then beat them with another stone. Hard on clothes? Certainly!

But isn't it nearly as hard on the clothes to hard-rub them on a washboard and boil the life out of them? To say nothing of being a slave to the washtubs yourself!

If you'll wash the easy Fels-Naptha way, you can be sitting at your back windows by noon on washday, looking with pride at your week's wash as it dries snow-white on the line.

The first thing to do is to wet the clothes, soap them with Fels-Naptha and put them to soak for thirty minutes.

The Fels-Naptha Soap loosens and dissolves the dirt. All you need do is rub lightly with your hands, or in a washing machine, rinse, blue—don't boil—they're ready to hang out.

By getting the washing done and out of the way quickly and easily you start the week right—and make all your work easier. That's why a million up-to-date women are using Fels-Naptha Soap today and every day, not only for washing but for all kinds of housework. Cleans the daintiest laces as well as heavy rugs and carpets.

Fels & Co., Philadelphia

DUTCH BULBS

Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissi, Crocus, give, for a small outlay of time and money, an abundance of flowers in the house from December until Easter, and in the garden, from earliest spring until the middle of May. Bulbs are grown almost exclusively in Holland, in enormous quantities, and sold at very low prices. Usually cost double before reaching you. By ordering from us now instead of waiting until Fall, make a large saving, get a superior quality of Bulbs not to be obtained at any price in this country, and a much larger list of varieties to select from. Our orders are selected and packed in Holland, and shipped to our customers immediately upon their arrival in the best possible condition. If you wish to take advantage of our very low prices, must have your order not later than July 1st, as import Bulbs to order only. They need not be paid until after delivery, nor taken if not satisfactory. (References required from new customers.) For prices smaller quantities see our import price list, the most comprehensive catalogue of Bulbs published, may be had the asking.

A FEW PRICES	Per 100	Per 500
Fine Mixed Hyacinths	$2.90	$14.00
Fine Mixed Tulips	70	3.25
Narcissus Double Ornatus	75	3.50
Double Daffodils	1.90	8.75
Narcissus Empress of Marston	3.90	13.50
Narcissus Golden Spots	2.30	10.00
Spanish Iris, Splendid Mixture	55	2.00

JOTT NURSERY, 351 Fourth Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

WHEN DINNER COMES

One Ought to Have a Good Appetite.

A good appetite is the best sauce. It goes a long way toward helping in the digestive process, and that is absolutely essential to health and strength.

Many persons have found that Grape-Nuts food is not only nourishing but is a great appetizer, and children like the use of it and grow strong and rosy from its use.

It is especially the food to make a weak stomach strong and create an appetite for dinner.

"I am 57 years old," writes a Tennessee grandmother, "and have had a weak stomach from childhood. By great care in my diet I enjoyed a reasonable degree of health, but never found anything to equal Grape-Nuts as a standby."

When I have no appetite for breakfast and just eat to keep up my strength, I take 4 teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with good rich milk, and when dinner comes I am hungry. While if I go without any breakfast I never feel like eating dinner. Grape-Nuts for breakfast seems to make a healthy appetite for dinner."

My little grandson was sick with stomach trouble during the past summer, and finally we put him on Grape-Nuts. Now he is growing plump and well. When asked if he wants his nurse or Grape-Nuts, he brightens up and points to the cupboard. He was no trouble to win at all—thanks to Grape-Nuts."

James given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Well-being," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

AMAZING PROFITS

IN MUSHROOMS. Anyone can make big money, in spare time, entire year growing mushrooms in cellars, sheds, barns, boxes, etc. Tell you where to sell at high prices. Free illustrated instruction booklet. HIRAM BARTON, 326 W. 48th St., N. Y.

HURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 44. H. C. S. BELL CO., 111 S. 15th St., Hillsboro, Ohio.

No one thinks of leaving poisons within reach of little children—except fly poisons. Yet fly poisons kill more children than all other poisons combined.

We quote from an editorial in the December issue of The Journal of the Michigan State Medical Society.

"From the first of July to October 15, the press of a few states reported 45 cases of poisoning of children from the use of fly poisons."

These children were all under six years of age. The poisoning was caused by swallowing the liquid covering poison fly paper or by sucking the poisoned and sweetened wicks protruding from tin boxes. The editorial suggests that a large number of cases of such poisoning probably escaped recognition because:

"—it is difficult, perhaps impossible, for even an experienced physician to distinguish a case of arsenical poisoning from cholera infantum, the symptoms being so similar. How many children have been poisoned from these fly poisons, amid the deaths ascribed to cholera infantum, can never be known."

Mothers who have intuitively avoided fly poisons, now have their good judgment complimented by these actual facts. The danger is even greater than most of them knew.

"Arsenical fly-destroying devices are as dangerous as the phosphorus match. They should be abolished. There are as efficient and more sanitary ways of catching or killing flies, and fly poisons, if used at all, should not be used in homes where there are children, or where children visit."

TANGLEFOOT

The Sanitary Fly Destroyer
Non-Poisonous
Catches the Germ With the Fly

The new metal Tanglefoot Holder removes the last objection to the use of Tanglefoot. 10c at dealers, or sent postpaid—two for 25c—anywhere in the United States. (40)

THE O. & W. THUM CO.
Dept. 231, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

"This is the original effective non-skid tire"

—says Old Man Mileage

"The Republic Staguard Tread was originated at a time when there wasn't a single effective non-skid tread on the market."

"So the Republic inventors didn't imitate, didn't attempt to construct something 'just as good.' They studied road surfaces, analyzed skidding dangers, and designed along scientific principles a tread capable of doing every requirement."

"For seven years thousands of experienced motorists have been putting it to test on slippery city pavements and hard gritty country roads. That they believe it to be the Supreme Tire Value is proved by their continuous use of nothing but Republics."

"From the standpoint of economy, too, Republic Tires will win your decision easily. They cost more to buy than many, because there's more real quality in them—but they cost less to use than any, because you get more uninterrupted mileage out of them."

Write for "Old Man Mileage—His Book," which contains facts of vital interest to every tire buyer.

The Republic Rubber Co., Youngstown, Ohio
Branches and Agencies in the Principal Cities.

REPUBLIC TIRES

STAGGARD PLAIN AND "WM" TREADS
TRADE MARK REGISTERED
U. S. PATENT OFFICE

Republic Staguard
Tread, Pat. Sept.
1-22, 1908.

THE PRAYER LEAGUE

A BOY thirteen years old writes: "Tell mamma I am feeling fine and my leg is improving. Write to the Christian Herald for me and tell them to thank God for what he has done and for his many blessings. I am praying that he will make me well and make me a good Christian boy." A father who wrote some time ago for prayers for a number of his family who had been taken to the hospital for treatment, writes now: "My family are all home from the hospital in answer to prayer. The oldest son arrived home well two weeks ago today."

Glad tidings continue to reach us of gracious revivals of religion and the salvation of souls. Mrs. M. J. M. writes from Crawfordsville, Ind., referring to a previous request for prayer for a glorious revival, and adding: "Evangelist Bob Jones has just closed a five weeks' meeting here, with two thousand converts." Mrs. T. writes from Memphis, Tenn.: "Several weeks ago I asked the prayers of the League for God's blessing upon a revival to be held in our church. Prayers were abundantly answered. Many unconverted were brought to Jesus. Many who had grown cold renewed their vows. It was a grand revival." A Believer writes to tell of a gracious revival at Salem, Va. A Friend writes from Medford, Ore.: "Some time ago I sent a request for the conversion of a young man. He has since been converted and joined the church." A grateful mother writes from Indiana: "I sent a request for the prayers of the League for my son, who was addicted to the drink habit; I am so grateful that he seems to be entirely cured." A Reader from California writes: "A short while ago I asked for prayer when there seemed no way for me to continue earning my salary. God provided a way and I am still trusting that he will be my help in every way."

A sorrowing mother writes to ask special prayer for a son who has not been heard from since December 18. He was ill at that time and his mother urges prayer that he may be restored to health and that he may find work and be converted, that he will write home and return to his loved ones. A father writes from Canada to ask earnest prayer that his son may be delivered from the drink habit and may be led to the Saviour. A wife writes from Illinois, telling of pressing financial burdens and asking prayer that her household be relieved of its difficulties. A business man from a city in Pennsylvania writes to tell of business cares and perils and to ask prayer for special help. A Georgia mother asks prayer for the healing of her little son, that her husband may become more settled in his religious views and be more closely united with her in the worship of God, and that the home may be prospered.

Mr. and Mrs. M. write from Lykesland, S. C., to say that their brother, whose health was restored last summer in answer to prayer, is so ill again that the doctors say he cannot recover. He is a father with three little children, a mother and two sisters dependent upon him. His sister writes: "I have faith that God will cure him." A mother writes, expressing great anxiety because her young son is not doing faithful work in school, and asks earnest prayer that he may do better.

A Reader asks prayer "that our heavenly Father will help us to prove ourselves not guilty of the crime of which we are accused." Mrs. W. asks prayer that a friend may prove himself innocent of a wrong deed of which he is accused. A mother asks prayer that her little child may be given a clear mind, a better disposition and more perfect power of speech. Another mother asks prayer that her daughter may receive justice in a court proceeding; a wife, that her husband may return home; another mother, that her daughter may be reconciled to her. E. B. C. asks that she may have God's guidance in a difficult matter; A Reader, that she may be relieved of a great headache. Thirty-four other friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs.

Two wives ask prayer that their husbands' minds may be restored; a mother, her daughter's. Three friends ask prayer that their sisters' minds may be restored or strengthened; a brother's. Six friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening of other relatives, friends or for themselves.

Seven friends ask prayer that their sight may be restored; six friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for other relatives, friends or for themselves.

Prayers are asked for revival of religion at Hanover, Mass.; Washington, D. C. (spiritual awakening in that city); Seabrook, N. H.; Tuscola, Ill.; Carlinville, Ill. (in victory of temperance forces there); Ann Arbor and Jackson, Mich.; Texas (that a Spirit-filled preacher be sent for revival services); Detroit, Mich. (special blessings upon a congregation there); Nashville, Tenn. (that all the unconverted boys in a Sunday school class may be saved). Prayers are asked for the success of a revival campaign in a town named. Prayers are asked for state-wide prohibition in Ohio and Kentucky, and for nation-wide prohibition; also that prize-fighting be abolished in the United States. Prayers are asked that a church at Chambersburg, Pa., may be freed from debt; that a pastor may be sent to the First Reformed Church at Howland, N. Y., and that there may be friendly relations between two churches.

Ten friends ask prayer that their sons may be saved from the liquor habit; two wives, their husbands; three friends, their brothers; two friends, their nephews; one, a scin-law; one, a friend.

Two friends ask prayer that they may be saved from the drug habit.

A friend asks prayer to be just as a Christian as God would have her; another, to be a power for good among those with whom she works; another, to be saved and truly know it. Fifty-one friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

A father requests prayer that his sons may be saved; twenty-eight other friends ask prayer for the conversion of sons.

Eleven wives ask prayer for the conversion of their husbands.

Forty-seven friends ask prayer for the conversion of other relatives or friends.

D. S. asks prayer that all debts may be removed from an old lady's mind and that she may know her sins forgiven. Ten friends ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for dear friends or relatives.

Six husbands ask prayer for the healing of their wives; fourteen wives, for the healing of their husbands, including two who ask that their husbands may regain the use of their limbs; fourteen parents ask prayer for the healing of their daughters; ten, for the healing of sons; thirty-eight friends ask prayer for the healing of other relatives or friends, including three that friends may regain use of limbs. Sixty-seven friends ask prayer for the healing of self, including eight who ask for the restoration of limbs; another that an impediment of speech may be removed and natural voice restored; another that the power of speech and use of right arm may be restored; another that health may be restored and all use of legs and arms regained.

Eighteen friends ask prayer for the healing of hearing for themselves or other friends.

Forty-eight friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Why the Porcelain Doesn't Break

Where the porcelain insulator in our spark plugs must endure the terrific force of the explosions in our cylinders, Champions have an asbestos-cushioned copper bushing (A-A in the illustration.)

Champion
TOLEDO MADE FOR THE WHOLE WORLD'S TRADE

"X" for Ford Cars

has been factory equipment since 1911. It has this distinctive Champion feature.

Saves trouble. Saves money.
Buy Champions with this feature for stationary engines.

75% of all American-made automobile stationary and traction gasoline motors are delivered new, equipped with Champion Spark Plugs.

The Champion Guarantee
Complete satisfaction to the user—free repair, replacement or money back.

See your dealer or write direct to us.

Champion Spark Plug Co.
304 Avondale Ave.
Toledo, Ohio

WIDOWS AND ORPHANS RELIEF FUND

The receipts to May 12, $150,404.81, not all acknowledged in the Christian Herald as yet.

Miscellaneous Amounts

Mrs. W. G. Payne, $4.20; Mrs. Goldie Howe, Mrs. Clara & Mrs. Bonnie Rogers, $6; Mrs. W. H. Gorton, 75 cents; First Baptist S. S., Plainville, Mich., $12; S. S. of the Episcopal Church, Norwood, N. Y., $14.91; S. S. of the Wagon Reformed Church, Medvale, N. Y., $10.50; D. N. Clanton, $13.27; Children & Teacher School Dist. No. 27, Dell Rapids, S. D., $8.00; Jane Bailey, $4; Junior Christian Endeavor Society, Alexander Valley, Calif., 50 cents; E. J. Irving, 20 cents; C. A. Rupert, 10 cents; A. Sympathizer, Coraopolis, Pa., 10 cents; Cash, Coraopolis, Pa., 10 cents; Mrs. Hayes & Mrs. Mott, 10 cents; Stewart Cupps, 10 cents; Mrs. Ervin, 10 cents; Cash, Coraopolis, Pa., 10 cents; Mrs. Foster, 10 cents; W. H. Rosenheimer, 15 cents; W. J. Bostock, 10 cents; C. E. Stone, 25 cents; Bertha Kellar, 10 cents; Zion Lutheran Church, Revere, N. D., $16.65; Philathea Class, Presby. Church, Henderson, N. C., $11; Friends, Capon Bridge, W. Va., $6.93; Reformed Church & S. S., Walkill, N. Y., $23.83; Class of Boys, at the Fred Victor Mission, Toronto, Ontario, Can., 75 cents; Mrs. D. J. McArthur, $3.50; Anonymous, Stoughton, Pa., $17; Mrs. & Mrs. Chas. H. Briggs, $13; Swedish Congregational, Swedish M. E. & Swedish Baptist Churches, Quincy, Mass., $52.58; An Old Member of The C. H. Family, Oswego, Kan., $135; Churches, Clearfield, Iowa, $10.77; Class No. 3, Presbyterian S. S., West Durham, N. C., $2.25; Maine S. S., Underwood, Minn., $145; Walter Trask, 20 cents; M. E. S. S., Deland, S. D., $8.75; Epworth League & Ladies' Aid Society, Laramie, Wyo., $14.10; Vernon, Texas, 5 cents; Lutheran Church, Clark Center, S. D., $12.15.

Gift of $100

A. Friend, Mosquito, N. M.

Gift of $75

Citizens, Dumaguete, Philippine Islands.

Gifts of $25 Each

Chas. L. Scott, Presby. S. S., Dumaguete, Philippine Islands.

Gifts of $20 Each

Trinity Lutheran Church, Rockford, Ill.; R. Back, Rockford, Ill.; Lela B. Hansen.

Gift of $15

Summitville, N. J.

Gifts of $10 Each

Court Jefferson, No. 34, Foresters of America, Odd Fellows Wash., D. C.; Chattanooga Twp., T. C. H. P. O.; Young Ladies' Society, Bayton, N. D.; J. W. Fry, Martha M. Patterson, J. Watson Baker, Presbyterian Mission, Pine Ridge, S. D.; Isaiah Cranston; Fortnightly Club, Farmington, N. J.; Sarah Blakely, G. R. Rayson, Bible Classes of the M. E. Church, Falconer, N. Y.; Congregational and Society, Ellington, N. Y.; W. A. Marsh, Thomas H. North, Session of the First Presby. Church, Connelville, Pa.; Oscar Cedarholm, Alex. Cunningham, Eleanor Neill, Mr. & Mrs. J. McC. Sagg, Wm. H. Gray, E. H. Preble.

Gifts of $5 Each

Mary L. Hilton, Gurley Memorial Presby. Church, Washington, D. C.; B. Bradford, B. M. Edwards, Ladies' Missionary Society, R. D. Congregational, Parnassus, Pa.; Mrs. D. M. Miller, St. E. Edwards, Chas. A. Gauthier, N. S. Child, A. W. Child, W. I. Grooms, Miss Emma Thompson, A. M. Ziegler, J. W. Brown, Geo. Merry, Free Methodist S. S., Stange, Pa.; Mrs. L. K. Landis, Mrs. Mary Holman, Mr. & Mrs. J. H. Glenn, Mrs. D. L. Lawrence, Mrs. A. Loomis, Young People's Society, Presby. Church, Scotchtown, N. Y.; Mrs. Joseph Cox, Mrs. Anna & Miss Lela Bush, Rev. & Mrs. T. L. C. Silva, Chas. Anderson, A. Friend, South Taworth, N. H.; R. H. Douglas, Miss Alice E. Sweet, Mrs. Julia A. Foster, Mrs. A. C. Chester, E. K. Ringer, Frank H. Gray, Dr. R. W. Fry, A. Friend of The Christian Herald, Barver, Quebec, Canada; Wm. Walla, Wash., Chas. H. J. Bliss.

Gifts of $3 Each

A. Friend, Winona Lake, Ind.; Edna E. H. Brown, A. Friend of The Christian Herald, N. H.; La Grange, Ind.; S. S. Eyngreen, Ala.; Kirtland, Ohio; Swatow, China; Woman's Sunday School, China; Lelia M. Bostock, Jeanie C. Beall, Miss Florence Richards, Geo. E. Anderson, M. N. Barton, N. Y.

Gifts of $2.50 Each

Mrs. G. N. Lee, Mr. C. H. Beer, Larson Bros., W. T. Silver.

Gifts of $2 Each

Robert Altom, Mr. A. H. Newell, N. J. G. G. Harvey, Fillmore, N. Y.; S. S. Smith, N. Y.; Missionary Club, Waverly, N. H.; M. M. A. Jones, Paul Mortenson, Martha Nelson, Nelson Bros., M. R. Guild, Clark Road, Mrs. Jos. H. Wright, Leonard George, L. J. Gray, Sunday School, Mayfield, Texas; D. H. Krenner, Rev. & Mrs. H. Gustafson, Mrs. Wm. Gray, H. E. Phillips, Logansport, Ind.; Hooper, Neb.; Miss Jennie Rutledge, H. T. & S. M. Stiles.

Gifts of $1.50 Each

Chris. Nelson, Farnet, T. Grooms, W. W. Groshel, F. M. Jameson & Sarah J. Baker, Mrs. E. Boatright & Daughter.

Gifts of $1 Each

A. Subscriber, Princeton, Ill.; Phillipsburg, Kan.; A. Friend, London, Me.; Mr. I. H. Armstrong, A. Friend, Eaton Rapids, Mich.; In His Name, Marissa, Ill.; Latiside, Pa.; Mrs. M. A. Grooms, Nashville, Ohio; Lewiston, Idaho; H. H. D. Lewis, A. Friend, Brookfield, Mo.; Mrs. C. B. Stone, Mrs. D. W. Christie, William Muldo, Mrs. M. E. Shortell, Mrs. T. J. Childs, W. W. Davis, Mrs. J. W. Bryant, Miss Martha Newell, Ray Wood, John Cropp, Andrew Nelson, Peter Sagar, Mr. David Shipway, Mrs. H. N. Crooks, A. R. E. Scott, John Meacham, Mrs. Thomas Dye, A. H. Grubel, Emma Bush, Mrs. V. W. House, W. E. Sherman, H. E. Willison, Lizzie A. Miller, Sara Sagan, N. Y. Z. Ashton, Texas; G. H. McKinney, Robert M. Hodges, Grace Farnsworth, Mrs. Emma Stephens, Mrs. J. B. Jones, Mr. & Mrs. C. J. Tugley, Mrs. W. T. Vance, M. H. Sonnet, Castle, N. Y.; G. H. Jones, Miss Anna Carlson, Anonymous, Tangle Point, Pa.; Mrs. H. Cantrell, E. F. S., Mrs. D. L. Kinsolving, Mrs. J. K. Evans, Durham, S. C.; A. O. Trask; J. C. H. McKimsey, A. Friend, South Wadsworth, N. Y.; Mrs. E. A. Bruce, A. Friend, Winona Lake, Ind.; Mrs. A. F. Robinson, Mrs. Minnie Lockyer, Mrs. G. H. Sherman, Mrs. Belle Hoyt.

Gifts of 50 Cents Each

Mrs. America E. White, Mrs. J. W. Armstrong, Mrs. Anna E. Barclay, Mrs. Crawford, A. Friend, Colon, Neb.; Misses Ruth & Vivian Gould, E. G. Anderson, Jas. D. James, Wm. Lutz, E. Denio, Hubert Jaycox, Jacob Felter, Billings, Mont.; J. A. Gray.

Gifts of 25 Cents Each

A. Friend, Moravia, N. Y.; Edna Goheen, A. Friend, Coraopolis, Pa.; Mrs. Quinn, M. Singer, Gus. D. Kullman, Wm. A. Smith, M. D. Tolson, Mrs. W. J. Bostock, Geo. Phillips, W. E. Fell, F. J. Ewald, Leon Trask, Spencer Fiske, Earl Griffin, Curtis Griffin, F. Felter.

Additional acknowledgments later.

HOLMES & EDWARDS Silverware

for Wedding Gifts

Holmes & Edwards Inlaid Silver is different from ordinary silver plate, because the spoons and forks—the pieces in most constant service—are reinforced at wearing points by

Silver Inlaid

Trade (HOLMES & EDWARDS SILVER-INLAID) Mark

The Carolina pattern is also furnished in a high quality XIV plate without the inlay. Every piece bears the HOLMES & EDWARDS name as guarantee of superior quality. Made in a complete line of articles, including handsome serving pieces.

Ask for Holmes & Edwards Silver at your dealer's.

Our booklet E-157 illustrating single pieces and sets in display cases, will be mailed on request.

THE HOLMES & EDWARDS SILVER CO.
International Silver Co., Successor
Bridgeport, Conn., U. S. A.

WANTED

In every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl, to represent the Christian Herald. This is an

OPPORTUNITY

To build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address

AGENCY DEPARTMENT

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Japanese Rose Bushes Five for 10 Cts.

The Wonder of the World. Rose Bushes with roses on them in 8 weeks from the time the seed was planted. It may not seem possible but we guarantee it to be so. They will BLOOM EVERY TEN WEEKS. Winter or summer and when 3 years old will have 5 or 6 hundred roses on each bush. Will grow in the house in winter as well as in the ground in summer. For All The Year Around. Package of seed with our guarantee by mail, only Ten Cents. Jean Seed Co. Box 116 South Norwalk, Conn.

Get the INSIDE Price
Get the inside price of a White Frost refrigerator and see how low it is. Get the inside price of a White Frost refrigerator and see how low it is. Get the inside price of a White Frost refrigerator and see how low it is.

White Frost Refrigerator

Beautiful economical SAVES. Its price in cost of 1 lb. of food, 1 lb. of food, 1 lb. of food. No need for coal, gas, or electricity. Perfectly safe, reliable, and durable. Perfectly safe, reliable, and durable. Perfectly safe, reliable, and durable.

30 Days Free Trial—Freight Paid

White Frost Refrigerator Co., Dept. C-2, Jackson, Mich.

Get This Book FREE

Tells how any member of entire family can now grow mushrooms at home in spare time, in cellar, bath, shed, etc. Costs little to start, big profits, ready market.

Spawm now produced by scientific methods makes tops certain. We furnish book on growing mushrooms. Used in State Agricultural colleges. Secure free information. Address, A. V. Jackson, Falmouth Mushroom Cellars, Inc., 347 Gifford Street, Falmouth, Mass.

Only Scientific Mushroom Farm in U. S.

EVERY LADY

who sends us ten cents for postage and packing, and the name of three or four persons who keep boarding houses in her town will receive, prepaid, one large package of Chocolate Orange Fruit candy and one of Chocolate Biscuits. Biscuits and FREE. Don't miss this chance, as this is the most delicious chocolate fruit and nut candy made. Send ten cents TODAY, and get two big packages FREE and a money making plan.

AGENTS WANTED

Wholesome Sweets Co., 1328 Broadway, New York City

KEEPS FURNITURE LOOKING NEW

Don't let grime, smoke stains, finger marks and scratches, make your furniture look old before it's time when 3-in-One will keep it new looking all the time.

Do this: Wring out a cloth in cold water. Add a few drops of 3-in-One. Wipe furniture, wringing out cloth frequently. Dry and polish with a woolen cloth or a cheese cloth, rubbing always with the grain of the wood. This removes unsightly marks and stains, and brings again the first new, beautiful look. Also use to make a fine dustless duster. Or oil your sewing machines with it. Rub it over bathroom fixtures and see how clean they look. 3-in-One is sold in drug, grocery, hardware, housefurnishing and general stores: 1 oz. bottle, 10c; 3 oz., 25c; 8 oz., (1/2 pt.), 50c. Also in Patent Handy Oil Cans, 3 1/2 oz., 25c. If your dealer does not carry these, we will send you one by parcel post, full of 3-in-One for 30c. A Library Slip with every bottle.

3-in-One oil

FREE—A generous sample of 3-in-One and the 3-in-One Dictionary. Write today.

Three-in-One Oil Co.
42 CG. Broadway, New York

Fifty Years Experience in Chicago Investments

Together with

- 1—Personal Investigation by our own experienced men.
- 2—Large margin of security.
- 3—Serial payments resulting in increasing margin of safety.
- 4—Location in established district.
- 5—Substantial earnings for protection of principal and interest.
- 6—Responsible ownership and capable management.

Send for circular C describing 5% and 6% bonds on Chicago property in $100 and $500 denominations.

Peabody, Houghteling & Co.

(Established 1865)

10 So. LaSalle St.,

Chicago

The Salaried Man

who buys $100 bonds either for cash or on our Partial Payment Plan of $25 a month is providing for himself a future of assured independence.

Write us for List H. of $100 Public Utility bonds and notes which you can purchase today to yield

6 3/4%

A. H. Bickmore & Co.
111 BROADWAY, N.Y.

New York City Invites you to invest in its Transfers of Tax Liens

Investments made through us yield more than six per cent per annum.

Tax Lien Co. of New York
68 William St., New York City

When in Doubt about an approved investment in

BONDS OR STOCKS

Write our Statistical Department

Investors Manual "C. H." sent on request

RENSKORF, LYON & CO.

Members: New York Stock Exchange, New York Cotton Exchange, New York Coffee Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade

33 NEW STREET (Ground Floor) NEW YORK

Send for "Bond Talk 'A'" telling why GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANIES

Are the best place for investment funds today.

R. W. Brooks & Co.

(Incorporated)

115 BROADWAY, NEW YORK
Albany Philadelphia

INVESTMENT AND INSURANCE COUNSEL

This department is maintained for the benefit of our regular readers; the service is offered entirely free of cost to them, and all correspondence is strictly personal and confidential, in so far as the identity of the inquirer is concerned. Always enclose letter postage and write name and address plainly, addressing your inquiry to Financial Editor, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

Neither THE CHRISTIAN HERALD nor any other publication can guarantee the value of investment securities. We do all we can, however, to make sure of the integrity of our advertisers before admitting them to our columns. Any advice given is an expression of our conclusions, based upon information we believe to be reliable; but we must not be held responsible, should any loss arise from its acceptance.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

T. M. C., MAINE. Middle West Utilities Company ten-year 6 per cent. collateral gold bonds are regarded as an excellent investment security.

REV. C., RHODE ISLAND. The New Jersey charter of Panuco Plantation Company became void in 1909 for non-payment of taxes. This is not an uncommon ending for such enterprises.

MRS. C. C., CONNECTICUT. Twentieth Century Gold Mining Company, Ltd., stock is worthless. According to the Copper Handbook this company was a swindle. Dividends were paid by the promoter while he was unloading stock on unsuspecting investors.

H. C. R., INDIANA. The Ohio National Life Insurance Company of Cincinnati is an "old line" company organized five years ago under the insurance laws of Ohio. The company makes a satisfactory financial statement and we believe its life income policies are sound.

J. B. T., ARIZONA. (1) You did just right. Always steer clear of visionary plantation schemes. Buy no land you have not personally seen. (2) Atlantic Coast Line Railroad general unified mortgage 4 1/2 per cent. bonds at $892 are attractive.

A. M. D., CALIFORNIA. Many of our leading bankers express the belief that very many good investment securities are now selling at prices considerably below their intrinsic worth, and that those who have money to invest should defer no longer in making their purchases of sound issues.

MRS. C. W. H., TENNESSEE. The following securities may be considered applicable for an investment for $1,500 to yield 6 per cent.: one $500 Southern Illinois Light and Power Company first mortgage 6 per cent. gold bond; one $500 Commercial Security two-year 6 per cent. bond, and five $100 New York Central 6 per cent. convertible debentures.

DR. T. E., PENNSYLVANIA. There is no restriction on the time allowed by the dealer to take up a $100 Missouri & Southeastern Utilities Company first mortgage sinking fund 6 per cent. bond, bought through the means of $20 payments, nor will the dealer raise the price on your unpaid units should you delay final settlement, no matter how much the market value of the bond may subsequently become enhanced.

REV. P. C. M., OHIO. Commonwealth Power Railway and Light 5-year 6 per cent. convertible gold bonds; Lackawanna Steel 6 per cent. 2-year gold notes; Kentucky Utilities 6 per cent. 10-year bonds; Morris and Essex Railroad first refunding mortgage 3 1/2 per cent. gold bonds; Atlantic Coast Line Railroad general unified mortgage 50-year 4 1/2 per cent. bonds are all most attractive securities for a well-balanced investment for $8,000.

D. M. P., NEW YORK. (1) Commercial Security Company 6 per cent. bonds are secured by two and three name commercial paper. They are bought for investment by many national banks, state banks, trust companies and individual investors, and are generally regarded as forming an attractive short-term investment with a liberal interest return. (2) The bonds can be had in $500 denominations and carry coupons payable four times a year. The interest rate is 6 per cent.

Mrs. C. C. D., DELAWARE. (1) United States Rubber Company common stock receives 1 1/2 per cent. quarterly dividends. The earnings of the company exceed the dividend requirements, which fact lends a considerable speculative attraction to the shares at the present price. But the stock is hardly a woman's investment. (2) Central Leather Company common stock received 3 per cent. in 1914. The past quarter's report shows greatly lessened earnings. Time-tried, conservative issues are best for a woman's investment.

R. D. L., WEST VIRGINIA. To arrive at middle age without having "a dollar in the world," despite the fact that for years you have received a good salary, is a most unfortunate position for one to find himself in. But you are but one of a host of other men similarly placed. We receive letters in the course of a year from many persons who confess that they have never been successful in accumulating even a modest estate, though in many cases they have been the fortunate recipients of incomes far in excess of their actual needs. The logical reason for this lack of thrift is not hard to find. It usually is found in the prodigal's lacking first the habit of frugality and systematic thrift, and second, some practical outside aid for compulsory saving. It is never too late to mend, never too late to turn about face and commence systematic periodical saving of a part of your income.

J. A. C., KENTUCKY. (1) There are only two stocks on your list, namely, Baltimore and Ohio and Louisville and Nashville, that could be considered investment propositions. Either issue is attractive from an investment viewpoint, and also possesses some degree of promise of enhancement in value. The investment yield from Louisville and Nashville at the present price will be about 5.80 per cent. The yield from Baltimore and Ohio at the present price will be about 6.70 per cent. (2) New Haven, Utah Copper, Tennessee Copper, American Ice, Virginia-Carolina Chemical, Southern Railway common, M. K. & T. and Missouri Pacific are all highly speculative issues.

K. D. S., MASSACHUSETTS. Upon the payment of $3 per year on any mortgage bond to the state comptroller of Massachusetts the bond will be exempt from taxation in that state for one year. In New York the law governing taxation on bonds is different. The new "Mills Bill" provides that after the first day of May, 1915, and before the first day of November, 1915, any person may present at the office of the comptroller of the state of New York any secured debt or description of same and on payment of a tax of three-fourths of one per cent. of the face value thereof ($7.50 per $1,000 bond) shall have the same stamped or endorsed as exempt from all taxation by the state or any municipality of the state for the period of five years from the date of payment of the tax.

"PRUDENCE," CONNECTICUT. Our attention has been called to the wording of a statement made in the issue of April 28 in which we said: "Reliable mortgage firms always stand ready to repurchase loans from Christian Herald readers." Undoubtedly this was an overstatement, inasmuch as it practically commits the mortgage firm to a guarantee for the security itself, and this no reliable firm would attempt to do. What we meant to say has been rendered in much happier wording from one of the largest mortgage firms in the country. In a letter calling attention to the error they say: "Whenever a client, who holds our loans, finds himself unexpectedly in need of ready funds and desires to convert one or more of his loans into cash we have, on several occasions, repurchased the loan, charging the investor a very nominal fee to offset the actual cost of reselling, and there have been instances where we have taken the investment off the investor's hands without any charge whatever. It is for our interests, of course, to accommodate our clients in every possible way that we can, and which would include rendering our services in connection with mortgages they might wish to convert into cash, but to sell our loans under the explicit understanding that we stand ready to repurchase at any time is something that we do not do, and we know of no other reliable mortgage firm that pursues such a policy."

DR. C. H., DELAWARE. (1) Hold your Chesapeake and Ohio stock. The company so far in the fiscal year shows an increase of over $1,000,000 and for April the gain was $250,000. The price of the stock does not in any way reflect the betterment. (2) We suggest the securities named below as constituting an excellent investment for $20,000. Probably you can buy these bonds from your nearest broker or banker. If you cannot we will cheerfully furnish the names of firms in New York from whom they may be obtained:

	Yield
State of Maryland 4s.....	4.05%
St. Paul, Minn. 4 1/2s.....	4.15%
New York City 4 1/2s.....	4.25%
Erie R. R. 5s.....	5.50%
French Government 5s.....	5.50%
Brooklyn Rapid Transit 5s.....	5.00%
Baltimore & Ohio Conv. 1 1/2s.....	4.37%
Quebec, Canada, 5s.....	5.15%
Pennsylvania R. R. 4 1/2s.....	4.25%
U. S. Steel Corp. 5s.....	4.90%
N. Y. Central Deb. 6s.....	6.00%
Chi. Mil. & St. Paul Conv. 5s.....	4.85%
Amer. Te. & Tel. 4s.....	5.10%
Cumberland Co. 5s.....	5.20%
Col. Gas & Electric Co. 1st 5s.....	7.00%
Consol. Water Co. 5s.....	6.35%
Knoxville Gas Co. 5s.....	5.75%
Virginian Railway 5s.....	5.15%
Hudson & Man. 1st 5s.....	6.75%
Omaha & Council Bl. 5s.....	5.30%

This page went to press May 14, 1915

INCREASE Your Income

Make your money work for you, not let it be idle—if unemployed it waste away.

Our Partial Payment Method makes it possible to turn each dollar into money earner.

A small initial payment will start to start with, then added to by monthly payments you secure sound dividend paying securities.

Dividends on your securities credited to you from the day the payment is made.

Ask for Booklet #1
Write, phone or call

HARRIS, WINTHROP & C

Members New York Stock Exchange

THE ROOKERY
CHICAGO

15 WALL ST.
NEW YORK

CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS

have from the first taken kindly to the bonds offered them by the Commercial Security Co. That is only natural. The careful and conservative man or woman can be relied upon to choose a careful and conservative investment—especially when it affords the opportunity to realize

6%

Other readers of The Christian Herald who are looking for soundness and then for as high a rate of income as possible are finding it in these Commercial Security Bonds.

May we not have the opportunity of telling you about them?

Drop us a postal asking for Circular C 5.

COMMERCIAL SECURITY CO.

(Est. 1907. Resources, $6,500,000)

NEW YORK
Knabe Building

CHICAGO
First Nat'l Bank Bldg.

Six Per Cent. Bonds Based on New York Real Estate

6% Coupon Bonds—For income. Denominations of $100, $200, $500, $1000 and upward, paying interest semi-annually and maturing in ten years.

6% Accumulative Bonds—For saving. Denominations of $1000 and upward, purchasable by annual, semi-annual or quarterly installment earning 6% compound interest.

We have issued and offered these Bonds for more than a quarter of a century, returning to investor nearly $13,000,000 in principal and interest. Complete descriptive matter will be sent on request.

American Real Estate Company

Founded 1888
527 Fifth Avenue

Capital and Surplus $3,560,855.41
Room 534 New York

6% Farm Mortgages

Withstand Depression

The ups and downs of business not reflected in our Farm Mortgage values. Our 6% Farm Mortgages, rich Northwest agricultural lands are sound, steady, sure investment at all times. "We're right on ground" and have been for 31 years. Write for our Booklet "O," and of offerings. Large and small amounts.

E. J. LANDER & CO.

Grand Forks, N. D.

Est. 1883

Capital and Surplus, $400,000

NO EUROPE THIS YEAR! VISIT FOREIGN AMERICA

12 DAY All Expense $ Northern Cruise 60%
Visiting Foreign America

equal in interest, safety, and healthfulness to a European cruise. Visiting HALIFAX, Nova Scotia, the land of Evangeline, and ST. JOHNS, Newfoundland, the Norway of America.

RED CROSS LINE

New tourist steamships, STEPHANO and FLORIZEL, with every convenience and safety device. Cost of trip includes every essential expense. 7 days at sea and 5 in Splendid cuisine, orchestra, sea sports. Ship is your home throughout the trip. Reduced rates for superior accommodations May and June. Write today for illustrated booklet #4.

BOWRING & COMPANY, 117 Battery Pl., N. Y.

FREE TO INVESTORS THE INVESTOR'S POCKET MANUAL

270 pages invaluable to investors—current information—present market values—previous fluctuations of all listed stocks and bonds. Investment bankers or brokers will supply copies.

FREE ON APPLICATION—OR

you may procure current numbers for 30c per copy from
THE FINANCIAL PRESS, 124 Front St., N. Y.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen patents. Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted. I get patent or no fee. Manufacturing facilities. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

EXPERIENCES IN THE MISSION FIELD

PERSECUTED FOR CHRIST'S SAKE

BY BISHOP FRANK W. WARNE

PERSECUTION is inevitable for those who accept Christianity through the work of the mass movements.

Let me tell you the story of the Christians in one village. After baptism they had been persecuted to such an extent that they had fled from their homes. Soon the people of that village were in great difficulty without them. They went and pleaded with the new converts to come back, giving them my promises, none of which were kept after they returned. I held a meeting in their muhalla and a hundred yards away saw the great village wall, with the people of the other castes drinking water. At the close of this meeting the Christians threw themselves upon the ground (hath jorkar) with clasped hands, and cried, "Please do something to get us water!" It was about three o'clock in the afternoon and the shimmering heat was terrible. To those poor people, right in sight of good well, were refused water because they were Christians. Yet not one of them even suggested the idea of giving up his new-found faith and hope of a joy, though they were promised water if they would do so.

The reason for the great value of a well in Bible times is made very clear in the Indian heat and drought. Water is usually withheld, not to the extent of taking life, but to that of making existence almost unbearable. The Christians are beaten, and their fowls and eggs are taken from them. This means as much to these poor people as it would mean to an American to be robbed of the stock on his farm. I saw one set of villagers who kept goats to supplement their income, who told how after their baptism the grazing land for their goats was taken from them and they were forced to sell their herds at a nominal price, and thus cut in two the income which in full made but a poor existence.

When I asked, "Did you retaliate?" they said, "No, Jesus teaches to endure and not to retaliate, and we held our ears" (an Indian method of expressing abject submission) "lest we should break his commandments and do something we ought not to say when we were thus persecuted." How many true Christians have we in America?

AN EXCITING ADVENTURE

NOT long ago I went with an evangelist to one of my country chapels, a distance from Tengchowfu, to hold services. I got an early start in order to give ample time to prepare for next day's services on market day. About five o'clock at night some of the boys invited the Chinese kang for me with gifts. After the day's trip and even preaching I retired about ten o'clock at night, but was awakened at two in the morning, suffocating from the dense smoke in the room. I could hardly breathe. At the foot of the kang I found my cotton quilts and Chinese mat were on fire. I hastily jumped from the kang, opened the door and flung the quilts and mat out of the snow in the courtyard. It took me about two hours to get all the fire in the quilts extinguished in the snow by stamping upon them. Fortunately my black sheepskin coat, which I had on me, did not catch the flames. After I thought all the fire was extinguished from one of the quilts, I hung it on the inside chapel door, expecting comfortably to go to sleep in my overcoat. Soon after I was again awakened by the quilt burning and had to throw it out again, but for good this time. The door also started

All this has begotten in the people a real spirit of sacrifice for His sake. They are willing to be tied to trees and be beaten for Jesus' sake; they give up the grain of their scanty food rather than renounce Christ. One young man, Nagappa, while holding family prayer in his father's house, was taken by the hair of his head and dragged out to the police station by a village official and compelled to sit there for hours in the rain. When asked by one of the workers why he did not write to the missionary and let him report this injustice, he said:

"They have not nailed me to the cross yet, and my Jesus was nailed to the cross for me. He did not save me that I might have an easy time; I am willing to suffer for his sake, that I may lead those who persecute me to Christ."

I wrote to one of our best missionaries working in the very heart of the movement and the persecutions, and asked, "Do you believe in the genuineness of this movement, and if so, why?" The answer entirely corresponds with my own convictions and with it I close:

"I think I shall give just one point which is to me a constant marvel, and that is the way the Holy Spirit seems to work directly in the hearts of these people in a way which is not common among educated people, who depend so much on books and one another, and on the inspiration of sermons and meetings. It strikes me that the desire for the education of their children, the hope of better social position, or any other reason or combination of reasons, will not account for their being willing to be beaten, to be turned out of their homes, to have their work taken from them, to have wells and water supply cut off from them. If they do not get something which feeds the heart hunger and ministers to the soul, I am utterly at a loss to explain their coming."

"With the large number of Christians and inquirers, we have so few preachers that we cannot give a great deal of help. Not enough, I think, to account for all they endure, but the Holy Spirit can minister to each one of the thousands, and I believe he does so minister, and believe that to be the secret of the whole mass movement."

to burn. You can imagine the night was spent in fear, thinking the overcoat, which was my only cover, might also catch fire. The trouble with this kang was due to the flames being stopped, giving no chance for the heat to expand under the surface.

Next day was market day. A new mat for the kang was bought and a mason was ordered to repair the kang. In North China markets are held in the principal towns and villages every five days. They are always arranged so that the markets in a given neighborhood come in rotation. Tradesmen and small dealers follow these markets, usually attending one each day, where all necessities can be purchased. The term "kan chi" is heard every day, which means "go to market." Crowds came from all directions and our chapel was soon crowded with earnest listeners. The Gospel of salvation was presented to them in one room, while in another our Chinese doctor was busy tending patients. This was kept up from morning until night. The following nights I slept on a cold kang in my fur coat, for I did not dare risk heating the kang again before it could be repaired.

(O. BRASKAMP.

Tengchowfu, China.

Strawberry Shortcake Made With Sunshine Golden Flakes

You don't need to cook to make most tempting strawberry shortcake. Toast some Sunshine Golden Flakes in the oven for a moment; place on a plate as a foundation and pour the strawberries over them. Then, place a second layer of Golden Flakes on top and more strawberries. Crown all with whipped cream. These flaky-as-pie-crust biscuits are always ready to make shortcakes, tarts, patties and pies in a moment. They have that delicacy and unvarying goodness that have made all

Sunshine

Specialties

favorites with lovers of good things to eat. We cannot send Golden Flakes by mail, they're so fragile, but if you have never tasted Sunshine Specialties, let us send you a Free Sunshine Revelation Box containing 14 kinds of these "Quality Biscuits of America." Your name and address with 10c (for postage and packing) bring it by return mail. Give your dealer's name, please.

LOOSE-WILES BISCUIT COMPANY

Bakers of Sunshine Biscuits

759 Thomson Avenue

L. I. C., New York

"BILLY SUNDAY The Man and His Message"

Authorized by MR. SUNDAY

MANY have criticized the unconventional methods of Billy Sunday, but the sobering fact remains that he has led over 300,000 men and women to a profession of Christianity.

Serious men and women the country over are asking, "What manner of man is this?" This book, written by Wm. T. Ellis, LL.D., provides the answer. It not only tells the story of Sunday's eventful life, gives a keen analysis of his manner and methods, traces his remarkable success as the most conspicuous Christian leader in America, but it also contains the heart of his message arranged by subjects and published by special agreement with Mr. Sunday for the use of copyright material and photographs which could be used only with his permission.

Preaches Religion in Homely Phrases

"I never preach a sermon until I have soaked it in prayer."—BILLY SUNDAY

Mr. Sunday is tremendously in earnest. His utterances are vivid. His epigrams, like his stories, are of the homely Lincoln sort that people remember. He bars the truth and makes it enter and stick. The crowds follow him. They come to hear a man preach a strong Gospel, which can meet the real need of the human heart.

"Billy Sunday, the Man and His Message," is an intensely interesting book because it deals with a subject of the greatest human concern in a new way. Bound in cloth. 496 pages. 32 chapters. Illustrated.

HOW TO OBTAIN THIS REMARKABLE BOOK

We will send you a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," and The Christian Herald for one year, for..... $2.00

OR, We will send to old subscribers a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," as a reward for sending a NEW eight months' subscription, accompanied by..... $1.10

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, N. Y.

For Thorough Sanitation

Refrigerators Need

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JUNE 2, 1915

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

VOL. 38—NO. 22. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

*The days of sport when youth is sweet,
And all the world is gay,
Will live in thought when comrades meet,
Though years have passed away!*

Photograph by Harry F. Blanchard

At such a time a mere man cannot be expected to lend much more help than happy smiles, proud glances and loving words. But the women who know—the grandmothers-to-be—they provide the practical things, the caps, the socks, the bootees, the dresses—even the Ivory Soap!

Yes, even the Ivory Soap, because the woman who has reared a family of her own knows how important it is to start right with the bathing of the baby and the washing of his clothes. She realizes that the tender little body must be bathed properly from the first if irritation of the skin is to be avoided. And that the dainty garments must be kept soft and sweet if baby is to look clean and feel comfortable.

This same experience has shown that Ivory Soap is ideal for nursery use. She appreciates the mildness and purity which make the daily Ivory bath harmless to the tenderest skin and enable the mother to wash safely and thoroughly the finest fabric in a baby's layette.

IVORY SOAP  99⁴⁴/₁₀₀ % PURE
IT FLOATS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

THE PRESIDENT REVIEWS SIX THOUSAND PROUDLY MARCHING MARINES AND SAILORS, THE PICK FROM BATTLESHIPS OF THE ATLANTIC FLEET

OUR FLEET A MORAL FORCE

THERE was an unlooked for climax to the great ten-day review of the Atlantic fleet at New York. It came in the President's brief address at the mayor's committee luncheon, the day before the ships sailed away. It was the declaration that the American navy is first and last a moral force. Several thousand sailors and marines had just passed between miles of people, stirring them to wild cheers by a sense of martial power. Just afterward, the President, on the yacht Mayflower, passed between the two rows of warships anchoring from Seventy-ninth Street to the extreme northern limits of the city, their mighty guns belching salutes as he passed, while on both sides of the river millions of people looked on with thrilling nerves, elated almost to the point of frenzy at the thought of the power residing in that double column of steel ships. It is good to know that these forces of our country exist solely to uphold a moral principle.

THE ten days' stay of the fleet drew enormous crowds to the city. There have been former reviews here, but none have ever attracted so many spectators. Beautiful Riverside Drive, which overlooks the Hudson and commanded a view of almost the entire fleet, was constantly thronged. The sightseers bubbled over with excitement and enthusiasm. It enriched the owners of small boats that plied between the shore and the battleships.

The sixty-one fighting vessels that comprise the fleet arrived in four divisions. The auxiliary division, which included the mine-laying cruiser San Francisco, the supply ship Itasca, several naval tugs and fuel ships, took its station farthest up the river, opposite Fort Washington Park. Next in order began the battleship squadron, the pre-dreadnought Louisiana, flagship of Rear Admiral McLean, opposite One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street, and from thence down to Seventy-ninth Street the dreadnoughts and first-class cruisers along the east side of the river; opposite, reaching from One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street down to Seventy-ninth Street, lay the destroyer flotilla, seventeen vessels in all. Fifteen submarines were grouped somewhat to the north of Grant's Tomb, with their tenders; the navy's hospital ship Solace, built in 1896, and of small consequence, stood herself opposite the upper end of the seventeen fighting vessels. The Wyoming, a superdreadnought, flagship of the North Atlantic Fleet, Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, commander-in-chief of the fleet, stood opposite Eighty-second Street.

For the most part the better-known vessels were singled out by the crowds on shore, and their differing fine points widely discussed. In all, the fleet is said to have carried twenty 14-inch, one hundred and six 12-inch, fifty-six 8-inch, thirty-six 7-inch, forty-eight 6-inch, one hundred and thirty-three 5-inch, twenty-four 4-inch and two hundred and thirty-eight 3-inch guns. There were four admirals in command of subdivisions: Mayo, commanding the first division, flagship the New York, newest of our superdreadnoughts now in commission; Boush, commanding the second division, flagship the dreadnought Utah, stationed just opposite Grant's Tomb; Coffman, third division, flagship the Virginia, a pre-dreadnought; and McLean, commanding the fourth division, flagship the Louisiana. The Florida, which was Admiral Fletcher's flagship at Vera Cruz, was stationed just below the Utah, and was one of the favorites of the man on shore.

Of all the types of vessels the submarines ranked first in public interest. They were the objects of attention from never-ending crowds. Know-it-alls loudly disseminated misinformation about them, which other would-know-it-alls sagely accepted. But most everybody preferred to regard the submarine as a greatly mysterious craft, and delighted in speculation as to what deadly purpose attached to their numerous protuberances and half submerged parts. There were not lacking sanguine patriots in straw hats, escorting clinging girls, who stated with daring positiveness that that little flotilla of fifteen submarines could speedily end the war in Europe if they were given the chance.

At night the entire fleet was brilliant with electric lights, and made a marvelous showing on the broad river. The constantly waving beams from the searchlights could be seen in suburban towns miles away, and were watched from those distant places nightly with interest. Undiminished crowds swarmed upon the waterfront, watched the display and the fireworks, and listened to the distant strains of the ships' bands. Thousands who visited the ships in the daytime were able proudly to air their superior acquaintance with these fighting craft among the less fortunate, who had to be satisfied with this nighttime view of the pets of the nation.

On the first Sunday of the fleet's stay, city churches conducted special services for officers and men who came ashore. After that the great numbers that the launches continually brought away from the ships on shore leave were entertained in lavish fashion, and were, of course, the heroes of the day. The period was given up to relaxation preparatory to the arduous sea maneuvers which follow the review.

THE COLORS PASSING THE REVIEWING STAND, EVERY MAN SALUTING

THE President reached New York on board the Mayflower in ample time to review the parade of marines and sailors Monday morning, May 17. Up till then the weather had been generally clear and mild, but Monday was unpleasantly cold and damp. Rain almost spoiled the plans. But there was enough let-up of unfavorable conditions to permit the six thousand men from the ships to cover the route and pass in review before the President. The reviewing stand was located in front of the public library at Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street. With the President were Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Lieutenant Commander Berry, the President's naval aide; Secretary Tumulty and Acting Mayor of New York McAneny, besides members of the President's family. The marching men were the pick of the fleet and were in service uniforms. It was noticed with interest that many Filipinos were in the various bands. The great crowds along the route were stirred to continuous applause.

TO SEE THIS HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE FLOCKED NIGHTLY FROM POINTS MILES DISTANT FROM NEW YORK

Following the parade the President was entertained at luncheon by the mayor's committee, and afterward reviewed the fleet in the naval yacht Mayflower; then dined aboard the flagship Wyoming, and in the evening enjoyed the water carnival provided by the fleet. Tuesday morning from the deck of the Mayflower he again reviewed the fleet as it got under way and headed for the open sea. The President took his station on the bridge of the Mayflower, at anchor off the Statue of Liberty; she flew the Presidential ensign and was escorted by four destroyers. Secretary Daniels was aboard the Dolphin near at hand.

The great vessels made a magnificent spectacle as they steamed out of the river, in every case saluting the President with twenty-one guns. All river craft dipped their flags to the passing fighters, and ocean liners lying in their slips, including eleven German ships interned at Hoboken, joined in this general salute to the fleet.

These ships had just completed four months of maneuvers off Guantanamo, and sailed from New York to hold what Secretary Daniels declared will be the most ambitious and important war maneuvers ever undertaken by the service. This great drill will keep the ships busy until the end of June.

OUR note to Germany, dealing with the Lusitania affair, which was delivered to the German foreign office on May 18, had not been answered as late as May 20, nor was it then expected that the official reply would be received for several days. Many rumors were current in Washington as to the probable course which Germany will follow in replying to the note, but these conjectures received little attention. Representatives of the Administration kept their own counsel and were satisfied to await the events. In all probability Germany's reply will have been received before this issue of the Christian Herald reaches its readers. In this connection it is recalled that the American note of April 28 to Berlin regarding the case of the William P. Frye has not been answered up to the present time. The case has been sent to a German prize court for a formal inquiry.

Secretary Bryan on May 19 admitted that there was no expectation on his part of an immediate answer to the Lusitania note, and the inference was drawn that another week might elapse before it was received in Washington. He did not consider day inexcusable under existing circumstances.

Probably the least perturbed man in Washington was the President himself. He apparently ignored as altogether unimportant the various newspaper speculations and conjectures, and proceeded with his usual duties in a manner that gave the impression of confidence in the ultimate outcome. An intimate friend, who spent a day at the White House as the President's guest, is quoted as saying that the latter's confidence is absolute; that he believes that a peaceful solution will be found for the present difficulty; that if it should develop otherwise the initiative must rest with Germany, and that the country's preparedness for emergencies is greater today than at any time in its history. But was the last thing in the President's mind. The same authority adds that "the army and navy officials have full confidence in the ability of the President to settle the thing in his own way."

There was some talk in Washington of a new note to Great Britain relative to violations of international law and injury to American commerce, but it is doubtful whether any step will be taken pending the present diplomatic exchanges with Germany.

HOW SHALL WE ANSWER THESE LETTERS?

THE two letters reproduced below are more eloquent than any words we could write in behalf of the innocent sufferers by the war. We have been fortunate in securing upon our committees abroad men who command the highest respect and confidence in their communities, and who are, moreover, men of wide sympathies with their fellow men. They have been grateful for the opportunity to distribute the bounty of Christian Herald readers among the broken-hearted, and the care with which this is done is evidenced in the letters from the committee at Vienna.

Up to Friday, May 21, the Fund for the Relief of the Widows and Orphans of the War amounted to $152,660.50. From now on we must expect that just such earnest pleas as these for additional remittances will come from all the committees—and how shall we answer them? Despite the millions poured into Belgium, the need there is still unappeased; all northern France is still under the heel of war; Poland knows no resting from battle and destruction; there are suffering peasants in East Prussia; there are orphaned children and widowed mothers uncountable in Austria; the refugees from Galicia still cry for their daily bread; Serbia is still prone. Shall we say "We have given you $150,000; be content?"

Or shall each one of us do without some luxury, all luxuries, even some things we think necessary, but which may not be after all; shall we do without, in order that these great-hearted men in distant lands, who hold up before us such pitiful scenes of woe, may be able, in the name of the Christian Herald Family, to drop healing into more and more broken hearts?

Save one mother from utter despair, you and your family, reader, and you, reader, save one little life who yet may live to be a blessing to his fellow; and you, reader, take pity upon this mother and her three starving little ones and send them just bread, that is all they ask, just bread, life, a little longer time to hope, a little longer time to feel the touch of kindly hands in a world of tears.

Please address all communications on the subject of the Christian Herald Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

[Translation.]

VIENNA, April 15, 1915.

Mr. Theodore Waters, Secretary of the Christian Herald, New York.

Dear Sir: Today a preliminary report is being sent to the esteemed Christian Herald.

I should like especially to seize this opportunity to thank you with all my heart for your kind intervention with your society, who has enabled us to alleviate at least part of the terrible misery which the horrible war has brought to the inhabitants of Austria.

So far we have distributed about 45,000 crowns ($6,800), but every day the flood of requests and petitions increases, and in few days the amount which you put to our disposal in your extraordinary kindness will be exhausted.

Thousands and thousands of widows and orphans, however, are left over and the fury of war adds new ones to them every day.

We are now here, however, with empty hands and are obliged to disappoint the hopes of even the very poorest. I pray you, therefore, that new amounts will soon be put again to our disposal by your warm-hearted readers, in order to enable us to mitigate even if ever so little the horrible misery which we become acquainted with through the immense numbers of petitions. Widows with many children or orphans whose father has fallen and whose mother has died of fright or despair, these cases, alas! are only too frequent.

I never should have believed that so much misery could be possible. I reiterate my thanks to you and the Christian Herald most heartily, and pray you to help us again and soon. God will reward you. With the assurance of most thankful esteem, I am

Your very devoted,

J. THEMESL,

Imperial Councilor,

President of the Committee for Assistance.

P. S.: As soon as the previously sent sum has been used up, which will be the case in a few days, you will receive the lists of the people we have assisted. A photograph of a family of ten, also a picture of the committee which you desired, will be sent to you in the near future.

[Translation]

VIENNA, April 22, 1915.

To the Esteemed Direction of the Christian Herald, New York.

The Austrian Charity Committee of the Christian Herald begs to send report regarding its further activity.

The letters mentioned in the report of February 23, 1915, addressed to the political authorities as also to the district governor and provincial governments, have been sent off, and in consequence, we have already received a large number of petitions for assistance from the different provinces and they have been attended to.

The cases cited in the petitions, the truth of which was certified to by the heads of the municipalities, were very affecting. The very first petition which was examined referred to a widow forty years of age, whose husband was killed December 9, 1914, forty-two years of age, in the southern scene of war

(Serbia). The couple had ten children from one twenty-two years of age, and a son of twenty years fell also in the southern scene of action on December 14, 1914. A son, twenty-two years of age, is in army, and the widow depends entirely on the assistance of the state, for all the other children cannot earn anything on account of their being so young. A son sixteen years of age is an apprentice at a printing establishment; all the other children are at the school age, or younger.

A great number of cases might be enumerated, showing into what terrible distress the world war has brought many families, but this would exceed the compass of this letter.

But the great quantity of the petitions received have proved to the committee that the means put at its disposal will be exhausted during the month of April, although the greatest care and economy is exercised, and the assistance granted in each case not exceed the amount of 200 crowns ($30), in order to permit as great a number as possible needy to receive assistance. We, therefore, request you most humbly to ask of your greatly generous readers that they soon make possible a further amount of money for the disposal of the committee so that its activity may be continued according to the spirit and the wish of the Christian Herald.

With the assurance of our greatest esteem, and reiterating our best thanks, we sign in the name of the committee,

The President,

JULIUS ANTONIUS.

The Vice-President,

J. THEMESL, Imperial Councilor.

The Secretary,

KARL IPOLT

GREAT expectations have been held out regarding the Pan-American Conference which meets at Washington May 24. It is a little more than twenty-five years since the first Pan-American Conference was held in Washington. There were great expectations from that conference also. Some of the expectations have been realized. Others are in process of realization, while others have been disappointed. This is true of most international gatherings of this character. The field is a broad one, there is a tendency to spread out too much. Yet there can be no doubt of the good which comes from the nations of the New World so meeting. The present conference is more limited in its scope than previous ones. The subjects to be discussed are finance, trade, and transportation. This does not mean that there is less sentiment than formerly for better relations generally and for encouraging the aspirations for closer action by the different countries. It means, instead, that the general Pan-American tie is no longer recognized as already established, and therefore specific subjects can be taken hold of at a special conference. It means, too, that trade and finance are recognized as legitimate means of drawing the American countries closer together.

There are some distinguished men among the delegates from the different Latin-American republics. The United States asked each government to send the delegates, in addition to its diplomatic representative in Washington, and a majority have complied with this request. There are a number of ministers of finance, or secretaries of the treasury, as they would be called in the United States. There are also men who hold other cabinet positions, and who are prominent in the public affairs of their respective countries. Practical bankers and financiers are likewise included among the delegates, and some of them are what would be called in the United States "captains of finance." Secretary Brin, when he visited South America, several years ago, met a good many of the men who have been chosen by their governments as delegates.

While commerce forms the background of the subject-matter before the conference, finance is in the foreground. Finance and commerce really go together. Many of the delegates have pointed out that the one way to increase the commerce and improve

PAN-AMERICAN CONFERENCE TO MEET

EUROPE'S GREAT WAR BRINGING THE PEOPLES OF THE NEW WORLD INTO CLOSER RELATIONS

BY CHARLES M. PEPPER

the trade relations between their respective countries and the United States is for this country to provide funds which have heretofore been borrowed abroad. All the Latin-American countries are borrowers. Heretofore they have borrowed in Europe. Since their loans were held there, drawing interest, this helped materially to increase trade with Europe.

It is also true that enormous sums of European money have been invested in the Latin-American countries, and especially in South America. This European capital has gone into railways, banks, mines, and a great many other enterprises. Since the money came from Europe, purchases of material were made there. Now, the great war—which the conference have banking systems that will compare very favorably with that of the United States. In fact, in reforming the banking system of the United States, valuable suggestions were drawn from several of the countries south of us.

One of the leading financial institutions of the world is the Bank of the Argentine Nation, the head office of which is at Buenos Aires. It has branches all over the country, just as the great Canadian banks have branches all over the Dominion. There are not more than twelve or fifteen banks in all the world whose deposits equal those of the Bank of the Argentine Nation. A recent report from our consular officer at Buenos Aires stated that the deposits, at the beginning of the present year, amounted to $257,000,000. My impression is that there is only one bank in the United States whose deposits exceed that amount.

While the people of the Latin-American countries have not been accustomed to making savings deposits to the same extent as the people in the United States and in European countries, nevertheless they have got that habit. They are much less inclined than formerly to hoard their small savings. The governments have not provided postal savings banks, so that the people must either keep their money hidden away or put it in a bank, and now they are putting it in the banks. The Bank of the Argentine Nation has nearly $100,000,000 in savings deposits, and the individual depositors are nearly 150,000 in number.

In Chile the banks also are encouraging savings deposits, and the number of this class of depositors increases steadily. In most of the South American countries a distinction is made between ordinary commercial banks and land and mortgage banks. Some of the big banks, such as that of Argentina, make advances for the movement of the crops, just as is now done by banks in the United States; but there is complaint that this does not meet the needs of the farming classes, and there is a tendency to establish mortgage banks with land as the security.

ROOM FOR A FEW AMERICAN AUTO TRUCKS HERE is bankrupting all the nations of Europe—makes it impossible for them to provide further loans for South American countries. It also shuts off the capital for various development enterprises. A good many people in the United States have supposed that banking in all the Latin-American countries is still a very primitive matter. This is an error, which the delegates have been at pains to

HEARD THE CALL TO SERVICE

DR. R. M. WILSON

THE black-lands of Hempstead County, Arkansas, in the heart of which is situated the old Southern village of Columbus, give to the world two products which are unexcelled—long staple cotton and long staple men. A youth of the latter type—R. M. Wilson, or "Manton" as his friends know him—decided early in life to be a physician. Trained at one of the best medical colleges in the West, he worked for several years in large hospitals, and became well equipped for service. But that which the world ordinarily calls success was not what this young man was seeking. His ambition was to be of service to the world. He offered himself as a medical missionary to Korea.

Before sailing, he had occasion to call on an old friend at Washington—a prominent United States senator. The senator knew the sterling qualities of the young man and tried to dissuade him from his purpose.

"Manton," he said, "don't waste your life among the Asiatics. Any one who could put them out of the misery would do the world a service. Don't deceive yourself by thinking you can do any good among them."

His argument, however, was barren of results.

The young physician reached Korea, and took his station at Kwangju. The medical plant he found at this place consisted of one room, with a wooden table in the center for operating. There were no chairs and no cots, so the patient after the operation had to be made as comfortable as possible on the floor. For several years, without being discouraged, he did the best he could with this limited equipment until finally his appeals for assistance were answered and funds were provided for the erection of a modern three-story building with complete equipment. The hospital is called the "Ellen Lavine Graham Hospital," in memory of the daughter of the man who made its erection possible. Here Dr. Wilson, with the assistance of one trained nurse and several native assistants, treats yearly between twelve and fifteen thousand patients, and each year performs five or six hundred operations. It seems as if this might consume most of one man's time, but as a matter of fact it is only part of his duties. Among other things he has charge of a Sunday school of almost a thousand "scholars."

One of the most interesting of the missionary doctor's side-lines is his work among the lepers. The home of which he has charge cares for about ninety of these unfortunates.

After seven years of labor in Korea, Dr. Wilson is now at home on furlough. He tells many interesting facts concerning the Korean people. They have a great respect for anything old. When one wishes to show his gratitude to the doctor for some service by presenting him with a fowl, he selects the most venerable rooster in his barnyard as the gift. One day a patient came to him in great pain, and was found to have a large mass of some heavy material lodged in his stomach. A native "doctor" had recommended as a sovereign cure for indigestion that the patient eat the oldest plow he could find. The man had found a very ancient wooden plow, pounded it into bits and had faithfully swallowed the pieces until he had consumed five or six pounds of the indigestion cure.

"Out of fifty thousand patients treated by me personally," says Dr. Wilson, "there was only one case of appendicitis. The Koreans eat rice. Out of every eight families among the missionaries there were five cases of appendicitis. We Americans eat meat."

Last Christmas he wished to send each one of the leper patients a Christmas present. A missionary is rarely wealthy, and he looked around for something inexpensive for the ninety men and women. He finally bought ninety presents, exactly alike, at a total cost of three dollars and eighty cents. The present in every case was a large bandana handkerchief! The natives especially admire bright colors and use the handkerchiefs to wrap around their most precious of treasures, their Bibles, when they go to prayers every morning.

The young doctor has imparted his missionary zeal to his whole family. A brother, some years younger than himself and an ordained minister, sailed for Korea on February 6, to assist in the evangelical work. Another brother is now studying in a medical college preparatory to taking his place as assistant in the hospital.

"It is only a case of giving one's life where it counts for the most," says Dr. Wilson. "I believe Korea needs my work more than any other place in the world; therefore I did not hesitate in advising my two brothers to invest their lives among these needy people."

S. R. OGLESBY, JR.

THE HARVEST OF SOULS

AN EVANGELISTIC SERMON BY REV. W. H. HOPKINS*

Text: "Jesus said unto them, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, that they are white already unto harvest." John 4: 35, R. V.

SOME years ago I was on a mission tour which began in the mountains of Colorado; it continued through the mountains of Alabama and Georgia and ended among the Cuban cigar-makers of West Tampa, Fla. This tour changed the whole trend of my life; it turned me from the great West to the greater South. For fourteen years I had lived and worked, dreamed and prayed of the West. Much as I loved the West, great as were its bounds, I felt called to a larger field and to a larger work. All the way home one text was singing its way into my soul, it has been singing ever since: "Say not ye, there are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest? Behold, I say unto you, The fields are white already unto harvest."

Again and again you have heard of the whitened harvest-fields in India, where thousands are waiting to be baptized; in China, where a nation, as it were, has been born in a day; in Korea, where they are walking twenty miles to a Bible class. The fields are white at the ends of the earth. Never in all the history of the centuries has there been such an opportunity as there is today in mission lands. Less than a generation ago the church was praying for open doors; today we are not ready to enter the doors that are standing wide open. Sometimes you have heard of the whitened harvest-field in America, where we are building great commercial and industrial empires and where we are also building the most marvelous cities the world has ever seen. The fields are white unto the harvest in America. The other day in Chicago I found the students of the six seminaries holding a meeting, and after prayer, with a rare spirit of consecration, many of them were singing this pledge:

It is my desire to enter the service of Christ in a neglected field under the American flag.

There was as much of heroism, of faith and courage in that band of students as there is in other bands who are pledging themselves to go to the ends of the earth. Oftentimes for the home missionary there is less of material comfort, less of applause and more of hard work than for the foreign missionary. He is dedicating himself to the great work of making America Christian!

No Procrastination

The fields are white in America; in a special sense they are white in the South today—that section of the country which is building up more rapidly than any other part of our great land.

Forever I would have you think of these words as referring, not to the world, nor to America, but instead to that community in which you are living. Some one has said: "More unlikely words at a more unlikely time to a more unlikely people have never been spoken." Yet the marvelous thing about them is the truth they emphasize.

If it had been at the close, in place of the beginning of his ministry; if the words had been spoken in the Jews' country, rather than in a distant Samaritan village, with its low ideals and heathen people, we would say, "They might be true"; but the marvelous fact is that at the very beginning of his ministry, with conditions at their worst, he is saying, "The fields are white unto the harvest." The disciples say, "Wait four months; wait until the work gets started and then there will be the harvest." His reply is, "Not four months, but now."

Just what the disciples are saying is what we are saying nowadays. It is always four weeks or four months or four years or four something. The time is never right. He would emphasize the fact that the fields are always and everywhere white unto the harvest. As an illustration as to how we are to engage in Christian work, study tonight the incidents.

He forgets himself and his own needs; he is tired, weary, footsore; but he utterly forgets himself. He forgets that he is a Jew and the woman a Samaritan; that he is respectable and she an outcast. He forgets everything but her needs and his desire to help her in her needs. There is the great secret in Christian work. When we forget ourselves, our respectability, our culture, our social position, everything, we are ready to reach the real needs of those about us. If that mission worker on the streets of New York had not forgotten himself, there would never have been a Jerry Macauley mission; if Jane Addams had thought of herself there would never have been the angel of the tenements in Chicago; if Graham Taylor had thought of himself there would never have been a Chicago Commons and a work transforming the city of Chicago. If David Livingstone and Wilfred Grenfell and all the other heroes of the Christ had thought of themselves there would never have been a record to inspire and enthuse Christians in every land and clime. The successful Christian worker forgets himself.

Harvests That Go Unreaped

He meets her on the plane of her needs. She is not desirous for and not interested in the things for which he stands; she simply wants a drink and nothing else. He meets her on the plane of her need. There is a lesson for us here. There is but little use of talking about prayer meetings or church services to a good many people; they are not interested. In some way we must meet them on the plane of their needs. It must be by sympathizing with them in the hour of sorrow or bereavement; it may be by reaching the other needs of their lives. You ask how? Sometimes by merely reaching out to the homesickness which takes possession of so many in our American life of today.

Have you never been homesick? If you have not, I doubt if you really know what home means. With all the moving throngs we meet everywhere there are thousands who are literally dying of homesickness. The other day I called in a home. Two years before a young bride had started house-keeping; they had spent all they could on their little home and its furnishings. Shortly after her arrival she began to look for company. Each morning the home was put in order and then in the afternoon she sat waiting for some one to ring the door-bell. She had waited for two whole years, and I was the first caller in the home, and when she told about it tears came. All around about that home there stood the churches, each church wondering why it was not getting the people. If only they had met this woman on the plane of her need, she would have gone to any church which would have ended her homesickness.

The other day the newspapers told the story of a young doctor who attempted suicide in a terminal station. In the hospital they found that he could talk in four languages; that he could recite poetry by the hour. When he was asked why it was that he was tired of living, he recited those dreary lines of Kipling:

The days are sick and cold,
The skies are gray and old,
And the twice-breathed air grows damp,
And I would sell my tired soul,
For the buckling beam's sea roll
Of a black Bilboa tramp.

When they asked him again he said that it was because he had neither a home nor a friend. Thousands of men go to their ruin in all of our cities because there is no touch of home. And thousands of young women, in cold dormitory rooms, go to ruin for want of a home or a home touch.

The church will never reach the people until it begins to think of reaching them on the plane of their needs. There are country churches slowly dying, waiting for some young man to interest them in good roads, or better farming, and in that way to meet their needs. There are in every parish homes in which there is a real and live boy problem. The pastor who, with a boy scout campaign, or a corn club, begins to reach the boys on the plane of their needs, will soon find that his old, dying church has taken on new life.

The Power of Enthusiasm

While Jesus meets the Samaritan woman on the plane of her needs, he does not let her remain there. He leads her from the water she is seeking to the Water of Life she is not seeking. Here again is a great lesson for the church to learn. We are to meet people on the plane of their needs, but we are not to leave them there; we are to lift them to a higher plane. The church social often misses its goal because it is a mere social and has no higher aim. A church can do almost anything in its efforts to meet people's needs, provided it remembers that there are still deeper needs on the plane of eternal age. While we strive to make a heaven on earth, we must not, for a single moment, forget that men are preparing for a heaven that is beyond. There is an eternal destiny for every soul.

What can the church do? There is almost nothing the church cannot do legitimately, if only the aim is on beyond, this higher aim. For those churches which begin this larger program of meeting the real needs of men and women, there is ever danger of forgetting the higher needs of the soul. In the last analysis, men and women need Christ. Give them church suppers, old home week, boy scout campaigns, girls' firelight clubs, give them anything, but do not fail to give them Christ! The ways of approach may vary. They must always be the same. It will be if you keep the love and compassion of Jesus Christ in your soul.

Jesus touches the sore spot in this woman's life. No sooner is the woman aroused and desiring the Water of Life than he puts his finger on the thing in her life that has been wrong. "Go, call thy husband." "I have no husband." Jesus sees that has been wrong in her life, and makes her see before there can be anything good the wrong must be righted. He is ever putting his finger on the sore spot in our lives. It is not so much the sin as it is the little wrong-doing, the sensitivity, the tendency to gossip, the failure to live our best, the love of praise—some little thing which stands in the way of our doing our best work. He puts his finger upon the sore spot and when the Samaritan is ready to seek for a new blessing, he commissions her for the new work. He sends her out as an evangelist for the whole community.

Then a marvelous thing happens. That woman, without prestige, without influence, without friends, without anything, brings the whole of that little community to Jesus Christ! I never read those words without feeling something of the thrill there is in them. You, with your influence and prestige and friends, is it not true that most of you have not brought a single soul to Christ?

The Opportunity Is at Hand

Fields white unto the harvest? They are always white when given the Master's love and the Master's compassion.

Three or four years ago I spent a Sunday in an old, dead church. It was the only church in the little town. They had all the machinery of the church and the Sunday school, the Ladies' Aid Societies and all the regular meetings. The one thing they lacked was converts. For years not a single convert had been added to the church. I said the best word I could to them, and the next morning went down to the depot to take the train. It was two hours late. Standing beside the depot was a pumping station, and a man pumping water for the engine. He told me that he was a Christian, that the church was full of hypocrites, and he had no use for them. I said the best word I could to him and seemingly made no impression. Some weeks later he went home one night to find his little girl lying on her bed and the doctor said, "There is no hope." Night after night he watched, and then one morning before the dawn the little spirit flew away and he was left in his sorrow and his tears. As he paced up and down in his room, he recalled his own Sunday school days and one of the old texts he learned in Sunday school. He dropped on his knees and prayed for cleansing, that he might be prepared to go and meet his own little one who had gone before. And then something happened. In the next two weeks he had baptized every man in the village and had with him a talk about the Christ. The pastor, who had resigned, wrote to the office of his board, saying, "I cannot leave. There is a revival on my hands. The field was white unto the harvest; all that was needed was a man with the Christ-love in his heart—a man on fire for his Master."

The other day on the railroad train I passed through that little town. Standing on the platform there is a beautiful new church, the result of that man's labor. Fields white unto the harvest; the fields are always white when a harvester with the Master's compassion is found. Never has there been such a day for Christian service. Say not, "Four months, and then the harvest." You have waited it long enough. Lift up your eyes unto the fields white already to the harvest.

* Superintendent of the South Congregational Home Missionary Society, Atlanta, Ga.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D.,

REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON S. COOPER

Heavenly Lights on Common Roads

SUNDAY, June 6. Galatians 2: 2. "I went up by revelation." What a journey that would be when the apostle knew that he was walking in obedience to his King! He was on the King's business, and the long road would resound to the music of his song. He had heavenly light upon the way, and the common road became the highway to the Lord.

Our God is willing to light up our ordinary roads, on the byways and back streets of our daily life. If of us spend our days in the main streets. Most of our life is passed in very quiet ways, often in treading along very rough and rutty roads. Well, we can go along them all "by revelation," with God's light of grace falling upon the deep ruts and the sharp stones. In every path of duty we can have these revealing rays, warm and sunny with the very love of God. Every way can be illumined, and in the heaviest and most miry road the place of our feet can be glorious.

We can do everything "by revelation." The divine fellowship can abide unbroken. We can go into sorrow "by revelation," his gentle grace being unveiled at every step of the way. By revelation we can go into the green pastures, and by the still waters; and by revelation we can climb the steep paths of righteousness and walk through the valley of the shadow of death. The light of God's presence and leadership is for ordinary people along ordinary roads, and we need not delay asking for its guidance until our circumstances have become critical and momentous. Our Lord loves the common ways of life, the quiet back streets, where duty is performed without an audience, and exploits are wrought when no one is present to cheer.

J. H. J.

Our Helper in Time of Trouble

MONDAY, June 7. Isaiah 33: 1-12. "Be thou their arm every morning, our salvation also in the time of trouble." Isaiah, the patriot prophet, is describing the march of the Assyrian hosts, led by Sennacherib against Jerusalem. As they cross the northern frontiers the peasantry flee, the highways lie waste, the land languishes, Lebanon withers, the most fertile places become barren, and a long line of fires lie in the wake of the ruthless invaders. Through all these scenes of terror the temple services are maintained without interruption, and we hear the chant of the priests as they recite in prayer the words quoted in this verse. It may have been a bold strain, but when war is in the air and the stability of a nation is threatened, a new seriousness falls on all hearts, and the ancient ritual becomes invested with a new pathos and meaning.

What the priests asked for Israel, we should invoke for ourselves. Each morning brings its new duties and responsibilities, and we need an arm on which to lean, and salvation in the hours of trial, from which none are exempt. An invalid venturing back to life needs the arm of a strong friend to steady his faltering steps; the wounded soldier, fighting through loss of blood, requires a comrade's aid to help him from the fighting line to the ambulance in the rear; the young mountain-climber is glad of the arm of the guide when threading the intricacies of the crevasse; and we need, more than any of them, the arm of our Saviour and Companion—Christ. What heroic stories are these that come from the trenches in Europe, of the manner in which men are adventuring themselves for their flows, daring the rain of iron, to drag them from the field and bear them to a place of safety! The Red Cross nurses, especially, seem to have a charmed life in their holy service. And will not the Lord do as much for us! He will do exceeding abundantly more!

F. B. M.

Forgiveness Greater than Revenge

TUESDAY, June 8. Romans 12: 19. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord." One of the pathetic things brought out in the present war is the presence of revenge in the heart of nations. Imitation of deadly and inhuman forms of warfare and the saving of neutral seas with mines, because retaliation is a principle of the god of human battles—all this is "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." Jesus carried the forgiveness principle so far as to say, "Whosoever smiteth thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also."

There is no place in his kingdom for the gospel of revenge or for hate. When such feelings and motives come out among nations, it reminds us that these same feelings are present in individual human nature. You can hardly expect nations to be Christian and forgiving in their relations until the individuals composing those nations arrive at the lofty ground of refraining to retaliate upon each other, leaving punishment and revenge to Him whose clear, omniscient eye beholds where justice lies, and who alone can adjust the rewards and penalties for wrongdoing. Individual regeneration may be a slow method, but we believe it is the surest method of bringing in peace and good will between states. The fifth chapter of Galatians and the Gospel of Revenge do not agree. Not until we get out of our own hearts hatred of our individual enemies will the earth be filled with the "knowledge of the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea."

Today let me begin concretely to practice the Gospel of forgiveness. Today let me, as far as I am able at least, do my part in clearing up the difference between any personal enemy and myself. Today let me write to one I have wronged, apologizing if necessary and asking forgiveness. Today let me return good for evil to some one who has practiced upon me the lower law of revenge.

C. S. C.

Put Christ First in Your Life

WEDNESDAY, June 9. John 8: 10-24. "I am the Light of the world." On either side of the temple court stood a huge golden candelabra. On the first and on each succeeding night of the week of the Feast of Tabernacles these were lit, and became two immense globes of flame, shedding a brilliant flood of light over the temple and city and the deep shadows of Olivet. It was to these that, almost certainly, our Lord alluded in this similitude. But this feast commemorated the Exodus march, which was led by a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night. Doubtless the darkness only made apparent the fire which was always burning at its heart. Therefore, in effect, our Lord declares himself to be the Leader of the hosts of mankind through the centuries.

What Jesus Christ is universally, he is prepared to be individually. But we must be at the pains to put him first. "He that followeth me." . . . Our one question should be, which way is he taking? and we may generally ascertain by asking: (1) What is the law of Christ? (2) What is the will of Christ? (3) What would Christ do if he were in these circumstances? If we are not sure, we must wait till we are. If we know, we must follow at any cost. They say that lambs are taught to follow at the heels of a shepherd by his dropping savory morsels for them, and we may well follow hard after Christ, because of the blessedness with which he feeds the heart that keeps near him. We cannot walk in darkness, though the night be black and starless, but shall enjoy the Light of life. Follow the gleam, Christian! Follow the Christ! Keep him ever before thee in every path of duty, every sphere of service, and every attack, like Jonathan's on the stronghold of the foe. For where the fiery pillar broods the manna falls, and the rocks gush with water-springs.

F. B. M.

The Way to Soul Peace

THURSDAY, June 10. Isaiah 26: 3. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee." The modern world of machine-made complexity and intricate organization, with its times of confusion and competition and big business, lead us to cry again and again for simplicity and for rest. We like to turn away from all these vast enterprises and huge strivings to read Pastor Wagner's book on the Simple Life. We enjoy reading about Thoreau going off for weeks to live on vegetables and bathe his spirit in the quiet and restfulness of Nature. A novelist has written a popular book in which the character of one "John Senhouse," a man of learning, leaves his inherited wealth and luxury for life on the moors, earning his bread by humble labor and enjoying the free breath of nature and the open sea. Tolstoy in his isolated hut in the freedom of poverty is often alluring to our action-burdened senses in an age when ostentation and extravagance have become real barriers to inner happiness and peace of spirit.

We are continually reminded by our own strivings for possessions that vanish in the using, that, as in the parable of Christ, to be continually tearing down our barns to build greater ones is not in itself a surety to satisfaction and contentment, neither are complex duties and enormous incomes the key to a quiet mind. But this simple and satisfying portion of a contented spirit and a child-like confidence is not discovered as easily as the leaving of our goods and going off alone. The life of the monastery has proved a futile way of solving the problems of the universe. This is indeed to give up the problem. We are in the world, and our religion is in the world, because we and our faith belong there. It is our attitude of spirit that brings real permanent peace. It is the attitude of the child who believes in his father and his father's care, and, whether in work or in play, has perfect assurance that he is being cared for. It is the sentiment of Anna Waring's hymn we need:

Father, I know that all my life is portioned out by thee;
The changes that are sure to come I do not fear to see.
I ask thee for a patient mind, intent on pleasing thee.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee."
C. S. C.

Saved Through the Blood

FRIDAY, June 11. Colossians 1: 13-23. "Peace through the blood of his cross." During the retreat of the British army from Mons, a young lieutenant was left to round up the stragglers and bring them in touch with the main body. Whilst doing this he came on a little French village, and leaving his men on the outskirts, crossed the paved market square and entered the municipal hall, where one hundred wounded soldiers were being cared for by a number of Red Cross nurses. The superintendent was tending a dying lad, who in those last dread moments was startled by the scream of a shrapnel shell from the advancing German army, which buried itself in the adjoining building. "Will they come here, nurse?" he faltered. "No," said the nurse; "this, you know, is a Red Cross hospital; it's all right." "There's nothing I can do for you, nurse, I suppose?" said the young officer, as he turned to leave the place. When he had closed the door, she suddenly ran out after him and said: "You must help me. I forgot. There's the pole and the cord, but we have no Red Cross flag. The Germans will soon begin firing on us, and they won't know it's a hospital; so you must somehow fix up a flag before you go." He thought a moment, and said as he turned back: "Give me a white sheet and some of the bandages you have been using for the stanching of their wounds." She gave him what he asked. He laid the sheet on the ground, smeared the bandages across it in the form of a cross, dipping them in the pools of blood on the floor to make it more distinct, and ran it up on the pole. Thus, as he and his men got away under the shadow of the hill, they were able to look back and see the hospital with its inmates safe and peaceful under the blood. Is not that an illustration of the peace and safety which have been won for us all by the yet more precious blood of Christ? Only we must continue under its folds!

F. B. M.

The Hour When Jesus Says "Come!"

SATURDAY, June 12. Matthew 11: 28. "Come unto me." On the little words "come" and "go" hang vast destinies. "Come" is one of the sweetest words in all language. "Come unto me and I will give you rest," is one of the most precious sayings of Jesus. "Whosoever will, may come" to the wonderful Christ. "The Master is come and calleth for thee." If we heed his call now, he will invite us at the end of the journey, saying, "Come, ye blessed of my Father!" "Come up higher, where I am and those who love you live."

Shall you be among those who will hear the awful words, "Depart, ye cursed"? "These shall go away." It will be either come or go. There is no other choice. Today is the hour for the word "come." The doors are open, the hospitality of Christ is yours, the feast is spread, a vacant chair awaits you. All things are ready—will you come? What a joyful sight to see an immortal getting right with God, being clasped to the heart of his love, living his life in this world, happy in the union with the divine, housed at last in the home of the soul! Shall it be at the last the music of the word "Come" or the dirge of the word "Go"?

E. W. C.

THE WAR IN EUROPE *

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

BOTH in events which have actually taken place and in the beginnings of events which seem reasonably certain to happen in the very near future, the week ending May 20 has been one of the most remarkable of the war.

Perhaps the most important thing politically has been the practical breakdown of the Liberal government in Great Britain and the substitution of a coalition government for the present strict party government, a change which has been settled upon in principle and is now in process of being carried into effect. This political crisis was precipitated, though underlying causes have for a long time existed and have gradually been growing more acute, by the resignation of Lord Fisher from the position of first sea lord of the admiralty. This resignation was brought about by the very serious differences of opinion which have for a long time existed between Lord Fisher, first sea lord, and Mr. Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, as to the war policy of the navy, and as both are aggressive, determined men no compromise was possible. The result was far-reaching, and, coupled with other events both at home and abroad which happened, as it were, simultaneously, involved this drastic reconstruction of the cabinet.

The events abroad were the very severe Russian reverses and the slow and apparently unsatisfactory progress of operations against the Turks in the Dardanelles and at Smyrna. At home the contributory events were the attacks on the War Office and the workmen of the empire for their alleged joint failure to supply the army with sufficient ammunition, and the popular discontent at Lloyd-George's legislative program on the drink question, which, though withdrawn, has left great bitterness behind it, both among the liquor interests and the temperance people.

At the moment it appears certain that Lord Haldane, the chancellor; Mr. Birrell, secretary for Ireland; Lewis Harcourt, colonies, and Lord Crewe, India, will disappear from the cabinet. Winston Churchill will probably also disappear, though it is possible that his fall may be broken by giving him one of the portfolios vacated by one of the gentlemen mentioned above. Lloyd-George will probably be transferred to the portfolio of civil war secretary. Premier Asquith and Foreign Secretary Grey are expected to remain in office. Among the Conservatives who are expected to enter the cabinet are Mr. Balfour, formerly prime minister, and Bonar Law and Austen Chamberlain. There is a possibility that Lord Kitchener may succeed Sir John French in command in the field.

In the military events of the week, the Russian reverses in Galicia and southern Poland stand out, next to the battle of the Marne, as the most important event of the war to the present time. The advance of the Austro-German forces from Tarnow to the east and in the Carpathians continued all the week unchecked, and the close of the week found them not only on the line of the river San, but crossing that important river at several places, which means that the most difficult problem which confronted their commanders in relation to the advance into eastern Galicia, is now solved for these troops. Not only has the crossing actually been made, but the advancing Austro-Germans have held their positions on the eastern bank of the river in spite of all Russian attempts to drive them back.

According to Russian admissions, Przemyśl, which cost the Russians six months of effort and heaven only knows how many human lives, is surrounded on three sides, while to the east, the only side on which the Russians have been able to keep communications open, the Russian position is menaced both from the north and south, and any day now may see the fortress completely isolated.

The railroad from Przemyśl northward to Jaroslaw has been captured by the Germans, and they are making use of it to rush forward heavy artillery. As these lines are written the Austrians claim to have stormed and taken the western portion of the chain of forts protecting Przemyśl. Petrograd announced yesterday that the Emperor Nicholas had gone to the front, and that very important changes are impending among the Russian commanders. General Dimitreff, the Bulgarian who was so successful in the early part of the campaign and so unsuccessful lately, is said to be on the list of those to be removed, and it is

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

AUSTRIA'S TROOPS AT WORSHIP IN POLAND

even whispered that the commander-in-chief, the Grand Duke Nicholas, is also in danger of official decapitation. If this should turn out to be true, it would be a greater blow to Germany than would be the loss of several army corps.

The whole situation at the moment in this campaign in Galicia, south and central Poland is summed up in the telegram of the Petrograd correspondent of the London Morning Post, who writes: "Never since the war began has any one day brought so grave a bulletin as that received last night (May 18). On this occasion, for the first time since hostilities opened, I fail to find any indications that suggest a promising set-off to what on its face seems something like a collapse of the Russian force."

As a result of the latest German tactics, all that had been accomplished by the Russians in the Carpathians has been undone. The Russians have been forced to retreat a distance of well over 100 miles along a front of 200 miles. During this retreat they have lost heavily in men, artillery, supplies, and their defeat has rendered more or less insecure all their remaining positions in Galicia and in Poland west of Brest-Litowsk.

The only retreat in modern history to which it can be compared in size or probable importance is that of Napoleon from Moscow, and curiously enough the plan of strategy employed by the Germans in this movement bears a marked resemblance to the favorite tactics of "Stonewall" Jackson.

One important result of all this is that the Galician oil fields have again all fallen into German and Austrian hands, and consequently, if held by them, the question of the supply of gasoline for motor cars, etc., which has been a problem to the military administration of the Teutonic allies, will be solved.

During the week the political cauldron in Italy boiled over, and Salandra, the premier, by an alliance with Sonnino, the former prime minister, succeeded in forming a combination which has shaken the hold on the Italian Parliament of Giolitti, for twenty years the maker and unmaker of Italian ministries. As Salandra was for war and Giolitti opposed, Salandra's triumph carries with it in all human probability.

The Italian army has passed through many difficult days, and has the advantage of the experience of the campaign in Libya behind it. During the time which has elapsed since the war began, Italy has had opportunities to fit herself out with war material, especially the field artillery equipment and ammunition, in which she was deficient last year. It is probable that there has been some development of reserve formations, and that the defenses in the north are now complete.

The peace strength last year, before the war began, was 14,121 officers, 250,000 other ranks, and 55,727 horses. The approximate war strength is something over a million—namely, 515,000 for the standing army, 245,000 for the mobile militia, and 340,000 for the territorial militia. In war time will probably be formed four armies each of two to four army corps, and one cavalry division. In peace there are 389 battalions of Alpini, grenadiers, bersaglieri and line; 150 squadrons of cavalry, 33 horse, field, mountain and heavy batteries, and 30 companies of fortress artillery and technical troops.

These expand on mobilization into a total, for all three lines, of 824 battalions, 180 squadrons, 360 batteries, and 475 fortress artillery and technical companies. The first line, excluding the garrison of Libya and sea customs guards and Ertz troops, will probably number 14 battalions, 180 squadrons, 30 batteries, 20 fortress artillery regiments and 124 technical companies. The strength of the first line will be about 700,000 men.

The attack by land and sea in the Dardanelles has not made great progress during the war, although the fighting has been hard and the resultant casualties high, particularly in the land attack. This land fighting has all the week centered around Kili, a small hamlet about four miles from the Mediterranean end of the peninsula, neither side seeming to gain any marked advantage, and as a result the fighting has taken on very much the character of the trench warfare maintaining on the Western battle line. By sea there have been several bombardments by the allied fleet of the fortifications defending the straits, with considerable result, according to

Continued on page 590

PREMIER SALANDRA

ITALIAN TROOPS CLEARING STREETS OF ANTI-PEACE MOBS

COINING AGONY INTO DOLLARS

Begin—AMERICAN MACHINIST—Section

Vol. 42, No. 18

May 6, 1915

Begin—AMERICAN MACHINIST—Section

27

Worth Knowing

On the opposite page we show two sizes of high explosive shells which can be produced from the bar on our 4 1/2" PEDESTAL BASE MACHINE (see cut on opposite page).

On this machine we can finish a 13-lb. shell all over as it appears from very tough material from which shells are made, in 24 minutes, and from ordinary machine steel in 17 minutes.

The 18-lb. shell in 30 minutes, or from regular machine steel in 22 minutes.

When you figure about $1.00 per day for operating this machine, you can then arrive at the actual labor cost for producing the piece.

We are going to say a little more—something which might be interesting. The following is a description of the 13- and 18-lb. high explosive shells which are now being used so extensively in the war to replace common shrapnel.

The material is high in tensile strength and VERY SPECIAL and has a tendency to fracture into small pieces upon the explosion of the shell. The timing of the fuse for this shell is similar to the shrapnel shell, but it differs in that two explosive acids are used to explode the shell in the large cavity. The combination of these two acids causes terrific explosion, having more power than anything of its kind yet used. Fragments become coated with these acids in exploding and wounds caused by them mean death in terrible agony within four hours if not attended to immediately.

From what we are able to learn of conditions in the trenches, it is not possible to get medical assistance to anyone in time to prevent fatal results. It is necessary to immediately cauterize the wound if in the body or head, or to amputate if in the limbs, as there seems to be no antidote that will counteract the poison.

It can be seen from this that this shell is more effective than the regular shrapnel, since the wounds caused by shrapnel balls and fragments in the muscles are not as dangerous as they have no poisonous element making prompt attention necessary.

CLEVELAND AUTOMATIC MACHINE COMPANY
Cleveland, Ohio, U. S. A.

PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTION AT NEARLY ONE-HALF SIZE OF A TWO-PAGE ADVERTISEMENT IN THE AMERICAN MACHINIST OF MAY 6, 1915

PEOPLE in New York thought on Friday afternoon, May 21, that they were having a bad dream. Their eyes were looking at certain words in an evening newspaper that simply could not be found in print in the year of grace 1915. But there the words were. One reader after another testified to seeing them. It was no dream. All were wide awake. It could not be true. Yet it was true.

Here is what they saw: An advertisement offering for sale a lathe for the manufacture of certain shells, shells so constructed that upon explosion the fragments are coated with two acids such that "the wounds caused by them mean death in terrible agony if not attended to immediately." The advertisement went on to state: "From what we are able to learn of conditions in the trenches, it is not possible to get medical assistance to any one in time to prevent fatal results." The advertisement appears in full on the upper half of this page. It means that an American firm was offering, as an inducement to purchase its wares, the fact that they would produce an agonizing and inevitable death, and that an American magazine was willing to print for pay this invitation to coin dollars from agony.

In the Christian Herald office the words were first read on the front page of the New York Globe. The Globe declared they were to be found in the advertising pages of the American Machinist for May 6. A boy was despatched in a hurry to get a copy of this issue of the American Machinist. While there was no dream about the words in the Globe, it might be that the man who wrote that article was mistaken. Alas, no! When the boy came back the pages of the magazine were hurriedly turned and there was the hell picture, true, accurate, mercilessly real. And here is a photograph of those two pages from the American Machinist.

Charles Johnson Post had discovered the advertisement in the Machinist and had written up his discovery for the Globe. He states that the Cleveland Automatic Machine Company, who paid for and inserted the advertisement, is a New Jersey corporation, capitalized in 1912 at $1,000,000.

CONFRONTED with the statement that this advertisement was to appear in their magazine the management of the American Machinist took the position that it was a perfectly legitimate advertisement. The Globe telegraphed to its correspondent in Cleveland and learned that Roger Redier, an alleged agent of the French Government, placed large orders with the Cleveland Automatic Machine Company, which has done more than one million dollars' worth of war business since the war began. Mr. Rich, the company's treasurer, tried to evade responsibility by saying that his company did not manufacture the shells themselves but only the lathes for making them. He also stated that the information about what the shells made from these lathes would accomplish was not sent to the American Machinist as advertising copy, but as interesting news matter.

Later Mr. Rich denied that Mr. Redier was an agent of the French Government, but stated that he had come to Cleveland to apply for an agency in the company. He gave the information about the work of the shells which Mr. Brophy, the vice-president, sent on to the American Machinist as news.

Mr. Post remarks: "All of this is quite interesting—and highly altruistic. Few firms spend money for two-page advertisements in order to repeat casual gossip from their agency applicants; such space is ordinarily used to set forth the merits and advantages of their wares. If it was not published for the ordinary purpose of advertising in order to recommend and sell the machine it would be highly interesting to know why it was published."

LET us translate that advertisement. A certain sort of lathe will make shrapnel; ours makes a shell that does better work. What is the better work performed by the shells our lathes produce? They make poisoned wounds; wounds that cause hideous agony; wounds that will kill before medical aid can arrive. Buy our lathes! Make these shells! There's money in it! Forget civilization! Come back to savagery! Here is something better than the poisoned arrows of the savage. Buy our lathes! Make these shells! Every jagged wound, every twist of the agonized muscles, every spasm of the torn nerves, every hopeless glance of the fast-glazing eye for help that does not come, every scream of the death agony, every choking death gasp will mean that our machines have done their work well. Buy these lathes! Make these shells! There's money in it! . . . This is the dream that was not a dream. God help us!

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

As to Counting Converts

THAT God alone can read the hearts of men and "knoweth them that are his," is a tremendous truth which should never be lost sight of in spiritual work. At this time, when a great wave of religious enthusiasm is sweeping over the land, and when pastors and evangelists are jointly striving to win the multitudes to Christ, there is a strong temptation to list as converts all who give evidence of having been strongly moved by the spoken appeal and who respond to the invitation. It has even been suggested that in the present campaign a definite number of conversions should be set up as a goal toward which the workers should earnestly strive. The prospect of winning half a million souls by the united spiritual forces now in the field, it is claimed, would greatly stimulate the work and give new zeal to the churches in the hope of large accessions.

There are five men who may be regarded as the world-leaders in evangelism today, and whose experience in many soul-winning campaigns qualifies them probably above all others to pass judgment on such a proposition. To these workers the Christian Herald submitted the question of the desirability of a definite goal. Their replies are at once an encouragement and a warning.

"The thought of setting a definite number of conversions as our goal," writes Dr. R. A. Torrey, the life-long friend and associate of the late D. L. Moody, "does not strike me as being according to New Testament thought and methods. . . . It seems to me to be very mechanical and an attempt to dictate to the sovereign Holy Spirit, who 'divideth to each one severally as he will.' I hope that half a million will be won, but I recoil from the suggestion that we should set just that goal."

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman believes "it would be a great thing to set up as a goal to be striven for, the winning of half a million souls to Christ, and I am quite confident that if the pastors would join enthusiastically in the movement and call to their assistance their church officers and Sunday school teachers, this could be easily accomplished."

Evangelist W. E. Biederwolf believes it would be "a stimulating feature of the present evangelistic activities to set before us a definite goal, and endeavor to win for Christ the moderate number of half a million souls. . . . It would reflect beneficially, we trust, to some degree at least upon the pernicious system of tabulating results of which present-day evangelism is grossly guilty. It would furnish the needed rebuke to some religious journals that thoughtlessly herald the thousands of 'hand-shakers' as converts, while the world smiles and conservatism steels itself against evangelistic work."

Evangelist W. A. Sunday writes very frankly: "The fixing of a certain number of converts to be reached during the year has never appealed to me personally. . . . I always go ahead and work the limit and leave the rest to the Lord. By placing a total which it is desired to touch during the year, it might possibly lead to 'padding' of the rolls in some instances. . . . However, if more souls can be won by setting a mark and striving to gain it, I would say: 'God bless you; go ahead.' I am in favor of anything that will win a lost soul."

Very thoughtful and impressive is the view expressed in the letter of Dr. James M. Gray, dean of the Moody Institute, Chicago.

"You want me to be frank with you, I know," he writes; "otherwise my counsel or advice is minimized. Therefore I must say that I do not cordially approve of the idea. . . . Do not think me hypercritical if I say that the hope of the churches should not be raised by the prospect of large accessions, but by something higher. The bane of the church and the ministry is the desire for accessions and the counting of numbers, to make a good show at synod or annual conference. As a secondary motive it has power and is not to be despised, but it robs us of the choicest blessings and the richest fruitage. And then why should we set up 'half a million' as a goal to be striven for this year? What New Testament teaching or apostolic example have we for that? When you come to think of it seriously, how paltry it is—half a million, out of a hundred millions, and with God upon his throne and his church supposedly yielded to his Spirit!"

Shall we not include America's whole hundred million and the world's vast multitude in our prayer and hope and striving? Paul considered that "last man" in his work. He spoke of "Christ in you, the hope of glory, whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." "Ask of me," God declares, "and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

But we must not despise the day of small things. Every soul won brings us nearer the goal. While the great evangelists and missionaries are winning their thousands we may be winning our dozens, as we all unite in fervent prayer for the great world ingathering when every knee shall bow to God and every tongue confess our Christ.

A Novel Suggestion

NEW ideas are scarce, and therefore the more welcome when they are of practical application. One which certainly has the merit of uniqueness is put forward by Dr. Charles Edward Jefferson of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, in his latest book, "Christianity and International Peace." Why not, he asks, establish a new department of our government "whose special and exclusive business shall be the cultivating and maintaining of international good-will? If we have a secretary of war, why not have a secretary of peace? If we appropriate $100,000,000 for our army and $150,000,000 for our navy, can we not afford to appropriate say $10,000,000 yearly for a Department of Peace? Are we to go on forever assuming that battleships and fortifications and bayonets are our only lines of defense?" It is an odd thing that this suggestion does not seem to have occurred to any of our peace advocates. Why should not the skill and art of diplomacy be utilized in keeping on good terms with our neighbors, instead of being reserved for patching up quarrels? Such a department would be conducive to international good relations, and would besides be a safeguard against mischief-makers and rumor-mongers. Of course, it must be admitted that we are still far off from the conditions that are the forerunners of world-peace. That can only come with the spiritual regeneration, not of a single nation or a small group, but of all the leading nations. Dr. Jefferson's proposition will doubtless be set down by some as pure idealism; yet it is not difficult to conceive of a department of the kind indicated, which might do more practical service, under skilful leadership, than all the peace societies put together. "Prevention is better than cure" is a proverb not impossible of application, even in diplomacy.

The People and the Laws

A MOST unusual and unconventional statement is reported to have been recently made before the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations, in session at Washington, by Justice Walter Clark, Sr., of the Supreme Court of North Carolina. He declared, according to this report, that the courts throughout the country are slow and uncertain in their views of the rights of labor and that nowhere has the laboring man an equal chance with the employer in the courts. He added: "I think that courts are slow to adopt economic ideas enacted by law. One reason for this is that as a rule judges are elderly men, trained in old principles of law." These were brave words for a judge, particularly for a judge who has to add "Sr." to his name.

Gilbert E. Roe, a prominent lawyer of New York, testifying before the commission at the same time, said in discussing the opportunity of labor in the courts: "The common law was built up at a time when the laboring man was not recognized as possessing any rights. It is plainly wrong to apply principles then established to conditions today."

In striking harmony with these two statements is the following extract from a recent personal letter of a prominent New Jersey lawyer: "The law of landlord and tenant is inherited by us from the old feudal days of England, and of course the lords made the law in their favor, so that a tenant does not stand much chance in our state."

There are something over ninety million Americans who are very vitally and personally interested in such statements as these. Justice Clark added to his statements above quoted this sage remark: "The only remedy is the slow process of forming public opinion."

The law has been kept too much of a mystery. Ordinary people who have to pay rent and buy groceries were not supposed to understand it. But in America it is the people who pay rent and buy groceries who have in their hands the making of the laws. There would seem to be no very good reason why they should live contentedly under laws formulated three thousand miles away and from the six centuries ago by a class of people who do not exist here at all. We are making progress, it might be faster.

The Creeds, the Churches—and Christ

PUBLIC attention has been called again to the strife in the Presbyterian Church over the question whether or not it shall retain its official connection with Union Seminary and the ordination of its graduates. President Brown in his annual address to alumni and students, defending the seminary's position, declared: "We still believe in the Bible." He plead for fairness and a sympathetic understanding of the seminary's efforts. "The time is coming," he said, "when hostilities will cease, and when all will see that our aims are the highest; that whatever may be wrong in our views will be corrected; and that all of us may stand together in Christian confidence and in faith in Jesus Christ."

It is good to remember that creeds are made. The men who made them affirmed they were made from the Bible. But interpretations of the Bible differ as widely as men themselves differ. So of the points insisted upon today by certain branches of the church had not been thought of until centuries after the church was founded.

One is sometimes tempted to envy Enoch, who "walked with God" before there were any books, councils or prelates or professors. A scheme that will sweep the souls of the church back to the heart of God will be welcome. Love for him can and must unite us all; and service for our neighbor in his name will make life rich and heaven sure.

Heaven is a place where the friends of God dwell forever with him. A faith that does not bring us into fellowship with God can hardly be trusted to bring us into heaven. But the acceptance of Christ's message and Christ's spirit, the acceptance of his plan of life, the acceptance of his call to love God and service for others, the acceptance of his abiding grace of forgiveness and his gift of the Holy Spirit will make us useful here and safe hereafter. We all may well join in heartfelt prayer for the quick coming of that day President Brown preaches when "all of us may stand together in Christian confidence and in faith in Jesus Christ."

The President and the Navy

IN EULOGIZING the American Navy, after reviewing the parade of the men of the fleet as they marched past him in New York on May 17, President Wilson paid a high tribute to its efficiency. His address was an answer to those critics who have lately been attempting to discredit the naval power of this nation. He spoke as one whose life had been contemporaneous with our real growth and development. "I like to imagine many thoughts," he said, "this ideal. These quiet spots, lying in the river, have no suggestion of blarney about them—no intimation of aggression. The interesting and inspiring thing about America is that she asks nothing for herself, except what she has a right to ask for humanity itself. We want no nation's property; we wish to question no nation's honor; we wish to stand selfishly in the way of the development of no nation; we want nothing that we cannot get by our legitimate enterprise; and, standing for these things, it is not pretension on our part to say that we are privileged to stand for what every nation would wish to stand for, and speak for those things which all humanity must desire." To him the fleet in the Hudson was a symbol of the spirit of the nation—that spirit of moral principle which every American heart carries as a hidden treasure and which, at a single touch in time of crisis, responds with the swiftness of a dynamo and sets all pulses beating as one. And this inward force of moral principle, he reminds us, is the one thing above all others which the nation values and for which alone it will contend.

When President Wilson speaks on such occasions we are well satisfied to miss the familiar old-time oratory, with its swelling passages and its flood of patriotic platitudes; we get something instead that the listener can appreciate. His figure of the American spirit is one that will remain in the minds of his hearers, and will set them to thinking about that precious heritage which we should guard and prize—the spirit that is the best guarantee of a united nation, working, living and thinking with a single purpose.

The BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Beavers Destroy Forest Trees

THE State Board of Claims handed down a judgment the other day against the state of New York for $1,900 for allowing beavers to roam over the camp lands of William G. Baett and William A. Guineaud on Fourth Lake, in the Adirondacks, destroying 350 valuable trees. This is said to be the first claim of this kind ever tried in the state. The beaver cuts down a tree with his long, sharp teeth by chewing a ring around the base, and then cutting it up into convenient lengths for the various uses he has for it. Some of these trees that caused the suit were utilized in building beaver dwellings over or in the stream; others were used in constructing dams to deepen the river near the settlements, but the largest number of the trees were gnawed down, cut up and stowed away in their homes as a bark food supply for the winter. They eat grain and fruits in season, but their main article of food is tree bark. The beaver is a marvel of intelligence, of engineering skill and of inevitable industry. The destruction of the forest trees, already disappearing with such fatal rapidity, will provoke serious opposition on the part of the state, and likely lead to placing a bounty on the heads of these bark-feeding, tree-cutting creatures. There is this mention of the destruction of forest trees in olden times: "Evel, fir tree; for the cedar is fallen; because the mighty are spoiled: howl, O yeaks of Bashan; for the forest of the vintage is come down." (Zech. 11: 2.)

Ward, Noted Artist, Dead

EDGAR MELVILLE WARD, one of the foremost American genre painters, and brother of the late J. Q. A. Ward, the sculptor, died in New York May 15, at the age of seventy-seven years. He graduated from Miami University and then spent eight years in Paris studying art under the great painter, Cabanet. Mr. Ward's "Spot-Maker" received a medal in the Paris Salon, and was later bought by the French Government. Among the best European canvases of the artist are "The Bitany Washerwoman," "Paternal Pride," and "The Blessing." In 1883 Mr. Ward was elected a member of the National Academy of Design of this country and for over thirty-five years was professor of painting and drawing in the academy's school. Mr. Ward's "Coppersmith," one of the best-known American works, hangs in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, while his "Back-Maker" is in the National Gallery in Washington, D. C. In his influence over many students he taught, and on the hearts of lovers of art in many countries, illustrates the immortality of influence: "He being dead yet speaketh." (Heb. 11: 4.)

Sunday Invited to England

HENRY E. RANDALL, chairman, and J. T. Smith, secretary of the Business Men's Prohibition Committee of England, closed the ocean midst perils to officially invite "Billy" Sunday to go to their country and hold evangelistic meetings, especially in the interest of the warfare against the drink traffic. "The prohibition movement has had little support from English newspapers, because the liquor interests there are all powerful. The purpose of Bert Hubbard in sailing for Europe was to collaborate with George E. Sims, the English novelist, in writing a pamphlet on the liquor traffic. It was hoped that Mr. Sunday could adjust some dates already made to answer this important and imperative call, but instead he declares that the work in this country demands his full services at present, singing with St. Paul: "This one thing I do." (Phil. 3:13.)

Bride and Groom Suicides

At a hotel in one of the great cities on a beautiful May day recently, a groom of only eighteen and a bride of nineteen committed suicide. Each wrote a careful note to relatives, giving an excuse for their terrible deed. It seems that the husband's business had kept him away from home for a period, and the young wife had fallen sick from lonesomeness, and he had suffered also from the separation, so they decided to die that they might "never be separated in this life or the life to come." The letters indicated that they were silly young creatures, totally unfit for the responsibilities of married life. In fact, the letters have a wildness in them that indicates insanity, in such words as "life's tragedies have been such that the future has nothing for us." What a pity they did not have Christ to comfort them in their imagined ills, and lead them out into a life of beauty and love! Suicide before your court and before the entire world. One thing I want to ask, and that is that the good Lord will give me strength to serve out the sentence which you will impose, and that I may be spared to make full restitution to those whom I have robbed." In giving the reasons for his downfall he said: "Gadding and guzzling marked the beginning of my moral ruin; afterward the night life of the city, particularly tangoing and drinking, completed it. There are thousands of young business men whose habits are leading them along the same path I took. To them I say: 'Cut out the saloon and patronize the library.'" The man said he could not sleep, and in the agony of his guilt he went to God in prayer and Christ forgave him, and told him he must also confess his sin to men, which he did to the judge the next morning. His confession gave him an inward peace that was like paradise, and led him to pray for length of life to make good every loss caused by him. Confession to men may lead to the sentence, and iron bars, but confession to God brings pardon and complete liberty. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (1 John 1: 9.)

300 Methodist Men Dine

EIGHT hundred Methodist ministers and laymen sat down at a banquet in New York the other night, under the auspices of the Laymen's Association, and in the interest of the world's evangelization. Colonel Elijah Halford, formerly private secretary to President Harrison, now a retired paymaster of the army, presided at the banquet in a happy manner, and made an introductory address. Bishop Oldham gave a world view of the mission field. Bishop Luther B. Wilson made an eloquent appeal to the diners and the nation to back up President Wilson in his wise and patriotic note to the German Government. Ex-President Taft made an address, with much more humor than usual, called out by the old friendship between Colonel Halford and himself, and their associates in service together in the Philippines. Mr. Taft paid the highest tribute to the missionaries and missions in the far East that had come under his observation, and expressed a hope of the salvation of the world by the spirit of love and sacrifice. The meeting, by a unanimous standing vote, sent the President a telegram of congratulation and loyal support of his note to Germany, promising to stand by him in any step he saw fit to take in the future. Mr. Taft drafted the resolution with his own pen. All the speakers breathed the hope and belief that war would be averted, but all stood for the contention of the note that every American life anywhere on earth should have the shelter of the Stars and Stripes. It was a memorable banquet, and the cause of foreign missions was promoted. The keynote of the banquet was obedience to this call: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." (Mark 16: 15.)

Christian Prisoners Pardoned

COUNT OKUMA has secured the pardon of the Japanese Emperor for six defendants, found guilty in October, 1913, of conspiring to kill the governor general of Korea. Among the 105 Christian converts implicated were Yui Chi-Ho, a former cabinet minister, and Yan Ki Tak, a journalist, connected with the Korean Daily News. This pardon rights what the Christian world, home and foreign, counted a great wrong, owing to the haste and the undue suspicions of officials in Korea, and an unjust verdict. It restores the belief many have held that Japan will allow religious liberty in her own land, and in the territory over which she rules. The excellent feeling between Japan and the United States will be strengthened by this act of grace to the Koreans. Whatever may be the measure of guilt, the King of earth and heaven will grant pardon to all who ask it. "Let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." (Isa. 55: 7.)

Mrs. Paul Crompton; Steven, 14; Alberta, 12; Catherine, 11; Ronnelly, 9; John, 5; Peter, 1; the Nurse, Miss Dorothy Allen

LUSITANIA TRAGEDY WIPES OUT FAMILY

MR. PAUL CROMPTON, his wife and their six children sailed as first-class passengers on the Lusitania, and all are reported as lost. It is likely that they all kept together till they went down into their watery grave, and into the other life. A photograph of Mr. Crompton and the six children reveals the intellectual, moral and spiritual culture of the family group so cruelly destroyed and suddenly translated. The names of the children are Steven, John, Ronnelly, Alberta, Catherine and the baby. How natural for the baby to be on the mother's lap and the children gathered about her! Mother is the center and circumference, the soul and the substance, of the family circle. According to the old legend, Ceres, angry at Jupiter at having allowed the theft of her daughter, abandoned the society of the gods and came to the earth disguised as a nurse. She anointed the boy given to her care with ambrosia, held him under the fire at night and breathed into his face the breath of a god, which caused him to grow manaciously. God has made mother a nurse Ceres-like, and there is a divinity about her task. Her arms are the shelter that angel wings would furnish, and she sinks her sweet spirit of love into the soul of her child with an influence well nigh divine. One can easily conceive of this father, mother, and children as dwelling, an unbroken family circle, in our Father's house. Christ had this sacred institution of the family in mind as he thus described heaven: "In our Father's house are many mansions, it is as if I say, I am here, I have told you." (John 14: 23.)

cide is an awful sin against man and God, an infraction of this express commandment: "Thou shalt not kill." (Ex. 20: 13.)

Remarkable Confession of Guilt

A TRUSTED $6,000-a-year manager of a large business house, a man high in the social circle of his city, was arraigned in the criminal court on the charge of having robbed his employers as well as others. In the midst of the trial, with some he had defrauded as his strongest defenders, he made a clean breast of his guilt. The staggering blow came hardest on his devoted wife. The man said: "Your Honor, I want to confess my guilt and shame

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

ANOTHER ARMENIAN MASSACRE. Cable dispatches bring the news from Asiatic Turkey via Russia of the slaughter of six thousand Armenians in the neighborhood of Van, although no details are given. It is stated, however, that for several weeks past the persecution of the Armenians has been going on unceasingly, the aggressors being principally Kurds, who have been roaming the country in large armed bands. The message, which is dated May 15, does not state when the massacre took place. Some of the Armenians have armed themselves and made a stout resistance; but it will probably prove unavailing unless help comes speedily. The city of Van has about 30,000 population; many nationalities are represented. The American missionaries, who have a large establishment there, are endeavoring to protect the Armenians as far as possible. The massacres have been on a scale which recalls the outbreaks against the Armenians in 1895-96, when almost every important city in Anatolia was a scene of bloodshed. It would seem that, taking advantage of the fact that a majority of the civilized nations are engaged in the great war, the lawless Kurds have wreaked vengeance on the unfortunate Armenians, with little danger of being interrupted.

BRYAN PEACE PLAN BEARS TRANSPLANTING. The twenty-one nations of the Western Hemisphere which constitute the Pan-American Union have been invited by the minister of Honduras to the United States, Alberto Membreno, to enter into a general treaty the essential feature of which is that all disputes which have failed of adjustment by diplomacy shall be referred to an international commission for investigation, and pending the report the disputant nations cannot declare war or begin hostilities.

NEW FISSURE IN MEXICAN HOMOGENEITY. The Yaqui Indians in the Mexican state of Sonora have declared war against Mexico; all white settlers, among whom are some Americans, may be attacked. One outbreak was quelled and endangered Americans rescued by troops sent for the purpose by Villa, according to reports, before the declaration of war. Washington is not over-confident of the safety of the whites. If press reports are reliable, Carranza and Villa are still vigorously and effectively whipping each other in daily battles.

REVOLUTION IN PORTUGAL. Portugal has suffered a sudden revolution not altogether bloodless. Many conflicting rumors found their way from Lisbon. The revolution, long planned, seems to have broken out in naval circles and to have been precipitated by a mutiny on board one of the Portuguese warships anchored in Lisbon Harbor. It was not a monarchist disturbance, but a purely republican outbreak against the cabinet of President Arriaga. The leader was Dr. Costa, an agitator in internal Portuguese affairs and opposed to the policy of General Castro, head of the cabinet, suspected of endeavoring to embroil Portugal in the European war. It was also feared that the military policy of the cabinet might lead ultimately to the restoration of the monarchy. General Castro and two other members of the cabinet were made prisoners on board the war vessels, and the capital was bombarded May 15 with considerable loss of life. For the most part, the army remained loyal to the government. Land troops were finally put at the disposal of the revolutionists and co-operating with the war vessels overcame the loyalists. Joao Chagas, selected by the revolutionary committee to head the new cabinet, on his way to Lisbon was shot but not fatally by Senator Freitas, an ally of General Castro. The revolutionary committee deposed the former members of the cabinet, and President Arriaga has accepted the new appointees.

TO REST UP ALL SUMMER. The carpenters of Chicago, by voting not to accept an increase of 2½ cents an hour, offered by the Carpenters Contractors' Association, have practically made certain that 150,000 workmen will be at leisure for the summer months and possibly into the fall, according to the Chicago Tribune. The trouble seems to be over a provision in the proposed agreement which union men believe would eventually disrupt unionism.

ILLINOIS CONCERNED FOR OUR SEABOARD. On May 18 the Illinois senate adopted a resolution requesting the state's representatives in Congress to work for the adoption of a stronger naval policy "to maintain our international rights and to protect us against the encroachments of any nation in the world."

BUSY LITTLE ISLANDS. The Department of Commerce states that our Pacific archipelago, Hawaii, having less than 6,500 square miles, with a population of but little over 200,000, has nearly doubled its trade with the United States and other countries since 1904, in which year exports totaled $40,000,000, but in 1914 amounted to $75,000,000. Hawaii was annexed to the United States in 1898, and the preceding year our shipments there had amounted to $6,800,000, jumping to $21,800,000 in 1914; the group's imports from the United States in the same period grew from $16,000,000 to $48,300,000. Hawaii's trade with other countries is comparatively very small, vehicles and kindred property, $14,694,000,000; furniture, vehicles and kindred property, $8,463,000,000; manufacturing machinery, tools, etc., $6,091,000,000; privately owned electric light and power stations, $2,099,000,000. New York state leads in total wealth, $25,011,000,000, Illinois and Pennsylvania coming next with about $15,500,000,000 each. Besides these only Ohio, California, Iowa, Texas, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Jersey, Minnesota, Michigan and Kansas are rated over $5,000,000,000.

A NETHERLANDS FAMILY OF 17 DONATED TO US BY WAR CONDITIONS

ITALY DECLARES WAR

The press of Monday, May 24, published Italy's declaration of war against Austria-Hungary, and stated that the respective ambassadors had been recalled and had left their posts and that the first clash of arms was imminent. The text of the declaration follows below:

"VIENNA, May 23, 1915.

"Conformably with the orders of his Majesty the King, his august sovereign, the undersigned Ambassador of Italy has the honor to deliver to his Excellency the Foreign Minister of Austria-Hungary the following communication:

"Declaration has been made, as from the fourth of this month, to the imperial and royal government of the grave motives for which Italy, confident in her good right, proclaimed annulled and henceforth without effect her treaty of alliance with Austria-Hungary, which was violated by the imperial and royal government, and resumed her liberty of action in this respect.

"The government of the king, firmly resolved to provide by all means at its disposal for safeguarding Italian rights and interests, cannot fail in its duty to take against every existing and future menace measures which events impose upon it for the fulfilment of national aspirations.

"His Majesty the King declares that he considers himself from tomorrow in a state of war with Austria-Hungary.

"The undersigned has the honor to make known at the same time to his Excellency the Foreign Minister that passports will be placed this very day at the disposal of the imperial and royal Ambassador at Rome, and he will be obliged to his Excellency if he will kindly have his passports handed to him.

"AVARNA."

excepting imports from Japan, which amount to $2,500,000. Sugar, pineapples, coffee, and rice are Hawaii's staples, and it imports practically every other commodity.

A $60,000,000 GRAFT. Dishonest retail dealers in foodstuffs in New York state are charged by the Weights and Measures Association with stealing $60,000,000 annually from the people the total amount of soil removed was only about one-half as much again as that shifted by the armies in digging trenches in Europe since last August, the gross length of which, taking in all connecting cuts, etc., is estimated at 8,500 miles. The earth removed would weigh over 29,000,000 tons, and would require about 60,000 big construction trains such as were used on the Panama Canal to haul it away if it had to be shifted far.

BILLY'S

WE'VE got them yet, you bet we have, we're thankful for them, too; They're frayed around the bottom and their color's rusty; They're hanging in the closet where they've been ten years or more, The first and only pair of jeans a kid named Billy wore.

I never shall forget the day I brought them home with me That youngster was the proudest boy a man could hope to see The pockets tickled him a lot, those jeans were his delight; He loved them so he wouldn't let us take them off that night

Perhaps you think we're two old chumps; but, mister, if you do, You never lost a baby boy, now did you, honest true? We've got them yet, you bet we have, to keep them is our pride; Although he's gone we sort of feel they're Billy just the same. J. Mc

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

BILLY SUNDAY AND THE CHILDREN

By RUTH G. WINANT, Extension Secretary of the New York Evangelistic Committee

THERE were 8,000. Poor children, well-to-do children, children glowing with life and health, crippled children; one little boy in an improvised wheel chair sat directly in front of me, one of the most eager little faces in the room. When Mr. Sunday appeared the applause was almost deafening, and I looked at the little crippled boy. His face was beaming and he was clapping his little thin hands as hard as he could. What happened was so simple. Mr. Sunday undid a package of five flags. "The red flag is the sign of—?" "DANGER," was the answer. "The yellow is the sign of quarantine, of something catching." It was difficult to get the boys and girls to guess that the black flag represented death or the white flag purity, while the last to be unfurled was the Christian Conquest flag. "Listen, boys and girls, I want to tell you a story. Once upon a time there was a boy, and one Sunday morning as he was putting on his best clothes for Sunday school the devil said to him, 'Say, put your marbles in your pocket!' 'I won't,' said the boy. 'I don't play marbles on Sunday.' Conversation followed and finally the devil said: 'Of course you don't play with them on Sunday, but just put them in your pocket. It will be just to be able to put your hand in and feel them there.' And the boy did!" The eager expression on the faces of the children showed their perfect understanding of the situation. "The boy started for Sunday school, and he met another boy, and soon— somehow or other—soon they were playing marbles, playing them 'for keeps,' too. The marbles ran in the gutter, and as he fished them out the boy got his hands muddy, and as he placed them in the pocket of his Sunday trousers, he got mud on them. He hurried to Sunday school. Pshaw! 'I am late.' How he hated that sign! He didn't want to walk in late, so he hung around until the children came out, and then begged a lesson leaf from another boy and started for home. He didn't move very fast. What was the matter with the day, anyway? The birds weren't singing, and it looked like rain. At last he reached the door. His mother was there. He was a bit annoyed to have her there smiling at him. "Well, son, were you in time for Sunday school?" "Yes, ma'am," said the boy. "And did you have a nice lesson?" "Yes." "Why, how did you get your suit all muddy?" Johnny was cross. "Aw, I fell on the curb, and I put out my hand to save myself, and I put it right in a puddle." He put his hand in his pocket, and it rested on the marbles he had won from the other boy. "And what was the golden text?" persisted his mother. Johnny rubbed one leg against the other in confusion, and said he 'just forgot.'" On the table at Mr. Sunday's side were ten vases, all of them, I think, from the five and ten cent store, representing the Ten Commandments. Mr. Sunday leaned over the pulpit: "Say, boys and girls, how many commandments do you think Johnny broke? Let's find out. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me.' Did he break that one?" Chorus of "Yes, sir." Mr. Sunday took a vase in his left hand and broke it with a hammer which he carried in his right hand, dropping it to the floor. "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.' Did he break that?" "No, sir." "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' Did he break that?" The children roared their affirmative answer. "Honor thy father and thy mother.' Did he break that?" A sea of voices: "Yes, sir." "Thou shalt not steal.' Did he break that?" Some controversy here, until Mr. Sunday made clear the point that playing marbles "for keeps" was stealing. "Thou shalt not bear false witness.' Did he break that?" "Yes, sir; he lied."

"Thou shalt not covet.' Did he break that?" "Yes, sir." Four unbroken vases remained on the table. Mr. Sunday placed the red flag over his shoulder, saying as he did so: "I think Johnny ought to have walked about his town with a red flag on his shoulder. He was a dangerous boy. I think he ought to have carried a yellow one, too, for his badness was catching." "Let me tell you a story," said Mr. Sunday. "It was in mid-ocean, and a great ship had struck an iceberg, and was going down. There were not enough life-boats for all the passengers. The captain made the passengers draw lots; those drawing a numbered card were to have a place in the life-boats, those who drew a blank card—those were to go down with the ship. A father drew a card with a number, his wife drew a blank card. The husband exchanged with her, kissed his little baby good-by as he placed her in his wife's arms, saying as he did so: 'When she is twelve years old tell her about this day, and tell her that father died to save her.' "Eleven years passed by, and on her twelfth birthday the little girl was told the story of her father's death. She climbed on a chair that stood below his portrait, and stood looking into his face for some minutes; then she said: 'I love, I love you, because you died to save me.'" Mr. Sunday leaned way over the pulpit, his soul in his eyes, intense earnestness in his voice, as he said: "Boys and girls, Jesus Christ died to save you. He died that you might never need to die. He died for you because he loved you. Don't you want to love him? This is his flag (Christian Conquest flag); don't you want to enroll under its colors? How many of you want to enroll under Jesus' flag? Stand!" It was a wonderful sight! All over that great auditorium children rose. I felt as though I knew something of the joy of the Lord who rejoices over each lamb safe in the fold.

The Bride

She is anxious to start her house-keeping right. Especially in her cooking she is eager to have the best utensils, use the best food products and employ the best methods.

To her we commend a trial of Crisco for all frying and shortening purposes.

She will find that Crisco makes food as rich, as palatable, as easy to digest as the best of creamery butter, and that it is more economical the year round than better grades of lard.

CRISCO
For Frying—For Shortening
For Cake Making

When properly used for frying Crisco does not give off any smoke—and thus helps to remove one of the most disagreeable features of cooking in the home.

In ordinary kitchen temperature, Crisco neither melts nor hardens, but remains conveniently firm, without taking up valuable space in the refrigerator or near the stove.

In the better homes, hotels and hospitals of the nation Crisco is being used in ever-increasing quantity.

Crisco Batter Cakes

3 eggs 1/2 cupful melted Crisco 1/2 teaspoonful baking soda
1 cupful flour 1 teaspoonful baking powder
1 cupful buttermilk 1/2 teaspoonful salt
(Use level measurements)

Beat up yolks of eggs, add milk, Crisco and flour mixed with salt, soda and baking powder and beat till smooth. Fold in whites beaten to a stiff froth. Drop in large spoonfuls on ungreased skillet or griddle. Serve hot with butter or maple syrup. Sufficient for fifteen cakes.

If you would care to know more about Crisco, write for a copy of the "Calendar of Dinners," addressing your request to Dept. 5-6, The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, and enclosing five 2 cent stamps. You will receive a book of 615 new cooking recipes and a complete account of what Crisco is, how it is made, and what it will do to simplify and improve your cooking.

IN THE FRONT LINE TRENCHES

BY EDWARD LYELL FOX

Conclusion of Mr. Fox's vivid narratives of personal experiences at the front in Europe, the first of which appeared in the Christian Herald May 5, the second (in the Western Zee), here continued, May 19.]

AS WE motored in Vis en Artois the sun broke through the gray-ringed dreariness of sky. Up a narrow hill street, with a powerful car waking the echoes along the low white stone houses, two or three peasants in wooden shoes flattening themselves against the walls to escape the muddy spray from our tires, and we stopped in what seemed to be the village center. Down the street I could see the low, hooped roof of a transport caravan, and from a stealthy creaking in the house across the street I had an idea that shutters were being slowly opened and that there were frightened bewildered eyes behind. With Lieutenant Herrmann, whose French is better than mine, I crossed the street to read the proclamation—As!—pasted to the wall of a church. Ordered by the Germans and signed by the French burgomaster of Vis en Artois the signs told the inhabitants what to do if they would keep out of trouble; and as we read passages here and there I had a feeling that they were indeed watching us from each of the little houses on the street, and that there were whispers behind those partly opened shutters, saying we must be great people to have come in a motor, and that of course our visit could mean a new proclamation, more of the hated Avis! We walked from the church wall to a tall gray stone square-turreted building that loomed above everything else in the village, and passing through a wide archway we came into a courtyard filled with drilling soldiers. New troops, I was told, getting a hard-disciplined drill before going under fire for the first time. I wondered what the yard could have been before the war; for the stacks of hay and the manure piles were wholly incongruous. Clearly it was being utilized as a transport station; for at the end of the yard I saw four empty gray, canvas-covered wagons. Turning to the soldiers you were instantly struck by the fact that they were smaller than any you had ever seen in uniforms. All of the same size divided into squads, each in the hands of a drill sergeant, I watched them doing the goose-step to the proud clapping of their boots on the cobbled court, while others marched briskly by in twos, saluting. It was the barest rudimentary drill that they were being put through, and even as they were thus stiffened, these raw troops, I could hear the distant drumming of the guns. It seemed to electrify these stocky little fellows in the new uniforms, for their feet stamped the louder, and their saluting hands snapped up like automatons; and I wondered if it were hard to content yourself with harmless drilling in a manure-strewn yard, with the music of war playing for you to march. "They are all Saxons," the lieutenant explained, and I remembered that a German Socialist had told me that the low laboring class of Saxony is notoriously poor and short-lived, their years taken by work in the mines. No wonder they had pranced at the roll of the guns! You were thinking of it as being a deliverance . . . into what? We walked under the gray arch and across the muddy street into a paved schoolyard where evergreen hedges bloomed in pretty red tubs. The sun, as though to make it up to those rain-soaked men who crouched in the trenches but six kilometers away, streamed down in a glory before sunset; and as the schoolyard rang to the fall of our heavy boots, it seemed for a moment as though the brown door must open and children come pouring forth. WE entered the schoolhouse; and, turning into a classroom on the left, I saw twelve cots made of rough boards and twelve wan unshaven men who lay upon them as men dead, although their eyes turned in a disinterested stare at the sound of our approach. I saw one, a German obviously, from the regulation field-hospital sign above his head, who seemed to tremble under the covers; and as I walked beside his bed I observed that the sweat was standing out on his face. "How high is his fever?" I asked the surgeon. "He has no fever. He is sweating with pain."

I turned to go out. I think the surgeon was offended that I did not make the rounds with him; for with true German consideration and thoroughness it was doubtless his plan to show me every detail of his little hospital. "Eight weeks ago," he was saying, as I walked back toward the door, "we had two hundred wounded in here; but now—" and his tone was almost apologetic.

I ASKED how far the wounded had to be transported before they could be placed in a hospital train.

"Thirty-five kilometers," he said, "that is, to Cambrai," and he was explaining something about his interesting cases, and doubtless wondering why I did not write them down in the memorandum that stuck from my pocket. Two weeks before I would have done so, but as you come to see the wounded in this war you feel—rightly or wrongly, I do not know—that it is the grossest banalism to draw a notebook before their eyes and write of their sufferings. Unthinking, I did it once in the hospital at Gleiwitz, and I shall never forget the way a wounded Austrian looked at me.

Close by the door I noticed a black-bearded Frenchman, his leg heavily bandaged, and over his head on the schoolroom wall hung a cheap copy of an etching of Friedland with the victorious cuirassiers galloping by. What a world of sadness looked out from that wounded Frenchman's eyes!

As we walked out into the schoolyard, you could hear the cannon more plainly; a steady crashing, seeming ever to grow in violence, as though one new battery after another was being unlimbered to make work for the surgeons in little schoolhouses the countryside round. In great indignation the surgeon drew a fragment of metal from his pocket and explained that two days ago an English aviator had dropped the bomb, of which that was a part, only eighty meters from the hospital. But I scarcely heard him. From the manure-strewn yard across the street floated a cheer. Had the soldiers been told they were to be sent to the trenches? And then you wondered if this was to be their deliverance—the beds of unpainted wood, where I had seen a man sweat with pain. . . .

The yard in front of the white-steeped church of the Annunciation of the Virgin in Houtem was filled with the now familiar little wooden crosses, fitted in, it seemed, between the old tombstones of the Belgian inhabitants. As an officer swung back the heavy door, I was amazed to see that the interior of the church was filled with soldiers. A confusing clash between the instincts of religion and of military necessity—and I walked among the soldiers. They were recruits receiving a last drill in the use of arms—a drill to stiffen them before they were sent down into the trenches.

ALMOST in a daze, I stared up at the gaping holes the shells had made in the roof. Broken slates stuck down from out the smashed plaster ceiling, and you thought of them as being a stricken personality. And I saw a cross—a great French cross with a drooping figure of the Christ—and the white plaster body was pockmarked with the balls of shrapnel. There was no miracle here—only the miracle of Death—and that lay pooled in blackish red on the church floor. . . .

In the inky darkness of a clear, cold morning our automobile left the Hôtel d'Europe and roared away through the streets of Lille. One challenge upon another came ringing out of the night.

As we plowed through a heavy road to N— and came out on the highway to Arras, we saw a German battery. The last stars had withdrawn, and in the grayish morning light the clanking fieldpieces lumbered by, a ghostly company with vague, gray, ghostly men, riding ghostly horses. I imagined they were moving parallel to the firing line, changing position. How close were we now? Probably six kilometers. . . . miles riding up the road to Arras, the battlefield of October 1, the muddy, desolated fields on either side. It was up this road that the French artillery made its retreat, across those fields that their infantry poured with the Duke of Altenburg's Saxonians in hot pursuit. Oberleutnant Herrmann told me that the French had given away all along the line here before the German second drive, retreating to Arras, which they now held. I remembered that he had spoken of Arras rather objectively, and that the Germans were constantly drawing nearer. How close were they now? How far from the French would we be in the trench? You begin to feel a tremulous excitement.

When our motors stopped, the officers told me that this was as far as the cars dared go. To approach closer than two kilometers to Arras with automobiles would mean to be discerned by the French artillery observers.

WE descended into an approach trench that dug into a plowed field and led away at right angles from the road. This was more than a thousand meters from the French trench, and with rifle-fire yet to begin; I, shielded by the very fact that you walked in a narrow pit seven feet under ground, comparatively less in danger than you had been in the morning from Mouchey le Preux, you nevertheless tingled with a strange exhilaration. Keeping one eye on the top of the trench, prepared to duck lest it suddenly become uniform in height and expose your head to the open air, gazing the rest of the time at the bottom of the pit lest you slip in a hole and go sprawling in the yellow liquid ooze, we followed the officers, childishly imitating their movements of progress, until we came to another trench that made a right angle with our own. His passage advanced toward the firing line, parallel to the road we had left as unsafe. But as I trudged on, splashing now and then through water to my knees, I saw that the officers walked as before, unconcerned and erect, while I was following and ducking, for shrapnel was beginning to fly in a neighboring field, and pinging in the mud on all sides.

It was light now, although a fiery white moon still hung in the sky; and as it grew brighter, one after another the batteries began the forenoon cannonade. As I heard the burning shrapnel ever growing more numerous, I guessed it was the same as at that other point on the line where I had been two days before, where the French cannonaded before and after luncheon, always beginning at the same time. And then, directly afterwards, I heard the disconcerting burr of shrapnel, and I saw the pretty billowing white clouds which the explosion always makes, and knowing that the danger was directly under shrapnel is to be of danger—for the little balls spray the stream of a watering cart—I fled with peace of mind watch the strike until it drifted away, thinning like blown silk.

From the field the trench slope up into a deserted house. Obviously a part of the trench, I saw that the wall of the house had been pierced to make a passage the same width as the ditch, and that in the far wall there gave a similar passage, doubtless leading down into the trench again. I walked through the ground-floor ruins of the house, it reminded me of something I had seen from the window of the military train that had brought me from Metz to Lille. There the survey of the German pioneers had cut through the middle of certain villages, and I had seen houses with the track, their side walls torn off so that the trains might pass without smashing into cornices; and I had seen everything in the disordered room of those houses. Here it was the same, only this time war had invaded the trench instead of a train. . . .

Continued on page 588

This Red Woven Label MADE FOR THE B.V.D.
BEST RETAIL TRADE
Assures Cool Comfort giving
UNDERWEAR

Copyright U.S.A. 1915, by
The B.V.D. Company.

"That's Your Friend, The B.V.D. Label, Boys!"

"TAKE a mental snapshot of that Red Woven Label, Tom, and you won't be fooled as I've been once. Now, they can't sell me anything but B.V.D. Underwear. I'm just as particular about my underclothes as I am about my outer clothes.

"I prefer B.V.D. because it feels so soft and fits so good. Take my word for it, it's certainly cool and comfortable, washes up like new, and gives me no end of wear. I don't buy, if the B.V.D. Red Woven Label is missing."

On every B.V.D. Undergarment is sewed This Red Woven Label

B.V.D. Union Suits
(Pat. U. S. A. 4-30-07)
$1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $3.00
and $5.00 the Suit.

B.V.D. Coat Cut Undershirts and Knee Length Drawers, 50c., 75c., $1.00 and $1.50 the Garment.

(Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. and Foreign Countries)

The B.V.D. Company, New York.

London Selling Agency: 66, Aldermanbury, E. C.

UNMATCHED SPEED
EXTRA POWER—NO VIBRATION
"Some speed! Drives a 16 ft. boat 12 miles an hour," writes Mr. Sanders, Madison, Wis. Has power to spare. Does not shake the boat.

THE GREAT 2-CYLINDER
KOBAN
ROWBOAT MOTOR

Battery Ignition or Built-In Magneto

Fine record—absolutely reliable—easy starter—easy to handle. Reverses by pressing a button. Both cylinders fire simultaneously—that's what removes vibration—3 H. P.—speed propeller. Best constructed rowboat motor on the market.

Koban Mfg. Co., 207 So. Water St., Milwaukee, Wis. Agents Wanted

$39.00 BUYS THIS

SIMPLEX
WATER WORKS SYSTEM

guaranteed to do your work. Sixty days free trial. Other sizes as cheap. Pumps, motors and engines. Write for our New Way Selling Plan No. 39 Do It Now

The Baltimore Co., Baltimore, Md.

TYPEWRITERS SUMMER PRICES

Look at these bargains! Typewriters Rebuilt in our own factories. Every machine is guaranteed for one year.

Remingtons $20 to $55	Smiths $18 to $40
Underwoods $35 to $60	Royals $25 to $45
L. C. Smiths $30 to $50	Olivers $20 to $35

We have others. Send for catalog describing them, and address of nearest branch office.

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO., Inc., 345 Broadway, N. Y.

Try My Rapid FIRELESS COOKER
30 Days In Your Home At My Risk

A big saving in food bills, fuel, work—and food tastes better. I am making Special Price On 10,000 to introduce cooker into new neighborhoods quick. Cooker is aluminum lined throughout. Complete outfit aluminum utensils free. Write for Free Book and Bargain Prices direct from factory.

Wm. Campbell Co. Dept. 2, Detroit, Mich.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Our method of selling direct from factory to congregation enables us to quote lowest prices on highest quality Church Furniture of all kinds. We can save money for your church. I. L. Jackson, Toronto, W. Va., says: "I received at last $5.00 by purchasing from you. Our 36-page Church Furniture Catalog mailed on request. Write for it today. Ask for Catalog No. 65-219"

SEARS, ROEBUCK AND CO. CHICAGO

Whitcomb's "Flexsole" Shoe

Can Be Bent Double

Most comfortable shoe made for Women. Soft, perfect fitting, and handsome. No seams—no cracks—no lacing. Perfect fit guaranteed or money refunded. Send outline sole of foot and state size usually worn.

Postpaid—Lace $3.00
Oxford $2.50 Button $3.25

Agents wanted Everywhere Special Inducements

EASTERN SHOE COMPANY
14 Broadway Beverly, Mass.

THE MONTH OF BRIDES AND ROSES

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

A LITTLE letter fluttered breathlessly to my desk this morning.

"I'm going to be married," said the little letter happily, "in June!" And then as I read the signature, "One of your girls," I smiled. I wonder how many of my girls are going to be married in June. I wonder how many of them are planning fluffy tulleseaus, choosing bridesmaids and picking daisies and roses and sweet fern for decoration. I wonder how many of my girls are turning over a new page in the book of life. I wonder how many of my girls are going to be married in June? For June is the month of brides and roses.

Quite a few of my pen-and-ink friends are going to be engaged, or are planning a wedding day. At quite a few of these girls have asked me questions relating to the wedding, with its old customs and twentieth century ideas. A girl from a small Ohio town sends me a little question that looms very large on the horizon of the prospective bride.

"I am going to be married soon," she says; "what shall I wear for a wedding dress?"

The question is not exactly an easy one to answer when you don't know what the girl looks like, or how large the wedding is going to be, or whether the ceremony is to be performed in the church or at home; but personally I think that white is the most beautiful and fitting for a bride's gown. There is an element of romance and purity and sweetness about the flowing veil and long train and shimmering material. The gown may be of white satin, crêpe de chine, or some soft silk. Many brides wear veils that have belonged to their mothers or grandmothers; but many have to buy new ones. In this case a lace veil is always very beautiful, but either tulle or maline makes a dainty substitute. Slippers and gloves should be white, too.

For a smaller and less formal wedding, any white lingerie dress can be used with or without a hat. If a bride is married in the minister's house, and wishes to start at once on her wedding journey, a pretty tailored suit is entirely good taste.

From California a friend of mine writes rather frantically: "Will you please tell me soon how wedding invitations should be worded?"

THE newest thing in formal wedding invitations should be engraved on stiff white paper in about this word-

MR. AND MRS. JOHN GARDNER will give in marriage their daughter MARY JANE

to
MR. HAROLD FELIX JONES
on Wednesday, the second of June, nineteen hundred and fifteen at high noon in Saint James' Church
Ferdale, North Dakota
the honor of your presence is requested

After the wedding, announcements should be sent out to all casual acquaintances of the bride and groom. A merry little girl from up in Connecticut sends me quite a long letter. "Do you," she asks, "know any of the old customs observed at weddings? I could rather like to know them if you do."

Some of my old friends tell me that in long past days it used to be said that a bride should wear "something old, something new, something borrowed and something blue."

There is a saying that a bride should never wear pearl jewelry on her wedding day, as pearls stand for tears. Also that a wedding should not be postponed, and that when the bride throws her bouquet at her guests, the one who catches it will be the next bride. These quaint notions have somehow become associated with the wedding day, although I doubt if any one really believes in them.

"What," questions a correspondent, "is the custom in regard to a bride's bouquet? How should a wedding ring be engraved? And should the bride give gifts to the groom and the bridesmaids?"

The bride's bouquet and the flowers carried by her mother and the bridesmaids are provided by the groom. The bride usually carries white roses, orchids or lilies of the valley, made into a shower bouquet with white ribbon and fern. Lavender orchids are the most beautiful for the bride's mother, and the bridesmaids may carry anything from daisies to roses in accordance with the color scheme. The wedding ring is engraved on the inside with the initials and the date. Sometimes a text or some little personal verse is also engraved.

The groom should give a gift to his new wife. It may be either some small, inexpensive trifle, or some large, showy present. The bride, however, usually gives a souvenir to each bridesmaid. A simple piece of jewelry, such as a bar pin, a brooch, a chain, a lavalier or a bracelet is in good taste.

It isn't only brides who are anxious to know about weddings. One maid-of-honor sends in a question.

"My dearest friend," she confides, "is to be married this month. I want to entertain her in some way. What can I do to give her the very best time?"

There are many ways of entertaining a bride-to-be. A dinner can always be given to the wedding party, or a luncheon to the bridesmaids. These functions may be very elaborate, with many flowers, hand-painted place cards, and favors, or they may be very simple and informal. However, I think that the best and simplest, and probably the most satisfactory way to entertain a bride is to give her a "shower." Almost all of them are fun, but the three I will mention are perhaps the most useful. They are the linen shower, the kitchen shower and the stocking shower.

"BUT," you ask breathlessly, "you say the Month of Brides and Roses; what about the roses?"

Oh, friends of mine, don't roses and brides belong together just as the blue skies and sunshine of June fit each other? Aren't the houses decorated with them and bouquets made of them and breezes perfumed with them? And if you are a bride or a bridesmaid, a groom or—an onlooker, just glance into the face that shows mistily through the flowing white veil, and see if a whole garden of roses doesn't smile there!

Month of brides and month of roses,
Month of hearts that beat in tune,
Month of smiling skies and sunshine
Why that's June!

The Meal That Changed a Summer

This is how one family was won to Van Camp's.

The man asked the chef at his downtown lunch how he baked the new-style Beans. The chef said he didn't bake them—he couldn't bake them. The Beans he served were Van Camp's.

So the man brought some home, and they were served one night at supper on the lawn.

That meal changed the summer. It showed the wife how good Baked Beans could be. It pointed a way to save hot-weather cooking. Van Camp's became the hearty dish most frequently served at that table.

That home, like a million others, graduated then forever from old-style Pork and Beans.

VAN CAMP'S
PORK & BEANS BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE
Also Baked Without the Sauce
10, 15 and 20 Cents Per Can

Here is a dish more nutritious than meat, much cheaper and ready-baked. Everybody likes it. It's our national dish, in fact.

It was for years neglected, because home-baked beans were very hard to digest. They were never more than half-baked. They were crisp or mushy. They lacked zest.

Then came Van Camp's, baked in modern steam ovens, mealy yet unbroken. And a matchless sauce was baked into them. Since then, the popularity of beans has been multiplied by five.

Go now and order a few meals of this new-style dish. Compare it with the kinds you know. Learn how our chefs have changed Baked Beans to a delicacy.

It means a meal in a minute. It means easy digestion. It will change a rarely-served dish to a frequent delight. All these things mean much to you, especially in summer. And they mean much to those you serve.

Buy a can of Van Camp's Beans to try. If you do not find them the best you ever ate, your grocer will refund your money.

(378)

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.D.

"Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered." Ps. 32: 1

For a year David palliated and excused his sin; but he must have winced as he condemned to punishment the sins which he had himself perpetrated, but which remained unconfessed. His conscience must have scourged him with the fabled whips of the Furies. It was a blessed moment when Nathan's lance pierced the swollen flesh and let forth the flood of corruption that had gathered beneath. His agonized confession was followed by a instant assurance of pardon. "David said unto Nathan, I have sinned against the Lord. And Nathan said unto David, The Lord also hath put away thy sin." 1 John 1: 9. His sin had been transgression, i. e., rebellion against rightful authority, but it was lifted from him. The burdened pilgrim, Bunyan tells us, lost his load at the Cross. God's love had buried that foul thing so deep out of sight as to render its resurrection impossible. "I will no more remember thy sins." Can we wonder that the psalmist began abruptly with the joyful exclamation, welling from long-closed lips: "Oh, the blessedness!"

Forgiveness—and the Other Man

By Arthur H. Howland

INFIDEL writers have a strange way of ignoring one of the most fundamental facts of life, the fact of the sense of guilt. They seem to have no conception of this dreadful thing which grips a man and twists his soul in a spasm of agony.

A few weeks ago a young business man of New York was accused as a thief. There had been nothing about his conduct at home, among his friends, or in the office to give the slightest intimation that he was anything but a thorough-going, upright, honest man. But before his trial was over he changed his plea of "not guilty" to "guilty," and declared that he had done so after spending the night in prayer in his cell. And he said further that the peace that followed this full confession was the only peace he had known for years. He took his sentence bravely and has gone to prison with a stout heart to bear the punishment for his sins. He can endure that and the separation from his family and friends, to say nothing of the bitter disgrace, because he has found the peace of God's forgiveness in his soul.

Now infidelity has no explanation of this sort of thing. It is an unnecessary, unreasonable thing to do unless we bring God into the account. But because God must be dealt with by the human soul; because the voice of conscience will not let us go; because the voice of conscience means that God is on hand, that God knows, that God is taking account, that God must look after life's balances—because of these things the soul of a man demands that he confess his sin and find pardon.

But pardon is a hard thing to find unless we know about the grace of God. Many people in foreign lands are willing to confess and eager to forsake their sins, but they have not heard of the grace of our God, who is ready to forgive.

I remember hearing Professor Herrmann, in his class-room at the University of Marburg, telling the story of the sinful woman whom Jesus forgave, and using it as the basis of his theory of "The Redeeming Power of Jesus." It was a very simple story, the feast at the rich man's table, the crouching woman, the anointing of the feet, the tired Teacher, and at last the startling words to the scorned woman: "Thy sins are forgiven." The value of the incident, Professor Herrmann said, is that when Jesus told the woman her sins were forgiven, she knew that it was true. Other people might say it, but there would be no power in the words. Jesus had "power on earth to forgive sins," and he has that power today. When he says to a man, "I forgive," the man knows he is forgiven. This is our message to others, as servants and friends and ambassadors of Jesus: "He is ready to forgive if you will ask."

Two things might well be emphasized in our study of forgiveness. We ought to remember that although God forgives us, there are some kinds of hurt produced by sin that cannot be healed. Not the hurt to self; that God's grace can usually take care of.

But the hurt to others; that often goes even beyond his reach. The harm we did to others, the pain we caused, the tears that were shed because of our wrong, all the many things that have happened because of our sin—not even God can "unhappen" these sad and terrible things. This is the view we ought to have more and more to take about sin, that it is a thing which hurts others. This is what makes a thing sinful, the fact that it does hurt others. While we rejoice in God's free forgiveness for ourselves, the memory of the harm and grief and wrong our sins have caused should be one of the most important factors in keeping us from sin in the future.

Another thing about seeking forgiveness. The church has perhaps overemphasized the obligation and the opportunity of seeking forgiveness each man for himself. It is blessed to be forgiven; it is necessary to be forgiven, but it is also necessary that others should be forgiven. And our forgiveness and their salvation should really concern us more than our own. After all, the greatest value in our own forgiveness and salvation is that it puts us in a position in which we can help others to be saved. There is a wonderful prayer among the rituals of the Buddhists in which the supplicant states that he will not ask for salvation unless all can be saved; that he does not care, even, to be saved unless all others can also be saved. Jesus touched this high point in his public career when he asked God to blot his name if necessary out of the book of Life in order that the erring people whom he was trying to lead might find life. And Paul declared that he would wish himself "accursed from Christ" in order that his brethren might be saved.

We must seek God for his own sake because we need his love, his help, his guidance, his companionship, but all our seeking him and in all our work and in all our worship we must remember that other man, that last man who needs the salvation we are seeking or have found.

God's Grace of Forgiveness

By Rev. Edwin Whittier Casul

THE very name of Jesus means forgiveness, "for he shall save his people from their sins." Moses was a murderer when he struck down the Egyptian, but forgiveness made him the meekest, mightiest leader among the chosen people of God. I vividly cringed as a criminal when Nathan said to him, "Thou art the man, but when the glory of pardon flashed upon his penitent spirit, he wrote the most inspiring words in all the Psalms. Paul, who consented to the stoning of Stephen, became the grandest Gospel preacher that the early church produced. If these three murderers were transformed by forgiveness and the impartation of the divine nature, every sinner can be restored.

The anguish of remorse is a soul-saving symptom. The poet-martyr cries:

Guilt and shame my soul assailing,
Where shall I find friend availing,
When the sinful man is quailing?

REGAL

Motor Car Sanity

TODAY shrewd car buyers consider neither claim nor name.

Motor cars must now pass the acid test of actual, practical performance. They must not only give pleasure but satisfaction; not only comfort, but service.

They must do these things, economically—not extravagantly, for the best service is the economical service.

Motor cars have reached the level of efficiency, by which standard this age passes final judgment on human nature and human ingenuity.

By this standard judge this year's three splendid Regals, the refinement of more than eight years of successful car building.

Among this year's Regals there is one sure to meet with your ideas of service and price.

A Light "Four" at $ 650
A Standard "Four" at 1085
A De Luxe "Eight" at 1250

All of these models are five passenger capacity, fully equipped, including electric lights and starter—have crown fenders, demountable rims and one man tops. Send for complete literature and name of nearest dealer.

Regal Motor Car Co.

666 Piquette Ave.
DETROIT, MICH.

Light Four $650

A "Weatherbest" Roof Is Always Weatherproof

A white house with dark green "Weatherbest" Roof.
"Weatherbest" Stained shingles are made of only the best Red and white Cedar Sticks, are completely stained from tip to butt, under our special thorough process, with efficient wood-preserving, extremely durable, stain.
In "Weatherbest" Shingles you get the highest quality shingles, stained exactly the shade you desire, extreme durability in both color and wear resistance, yet they cost you less than if you bought plain shingles and attempted to stain them yourself.

Ask For This Free Packet
simple single strips showing color on the natural wood. From it you can get a scale you desire. If you tell us size and character of construction of your house, we will advise quantity shingles necessary and suggest color combinations.
TRANSFER STAINED SHINGLE CO.
172 Main Street - North Tonawanda, N. Y.
Makers also of the superior quality
"TRANSFER BRAND" RED CEDAR SHINGLES
Demanded by knowing builders—sold by best dealers everywhere

Your Undeveloped Child

A hundred to one, is starving for want of the essential organic elements that are either milled or cooked out of its food. Try Tyler's Macerated Wheat. Immediate and lasting improvement guaranteed. Send 2c for Raw Food Book and Health Guide or 10c for sample can of the food prepared to any address.
BYRON TYLER, 50 Syndicate Bldg., Kansas City, U. S. A.

WE TRUST YOU

Buy from Mills—Big Saving
Let us send you two pairs of high quality hose on approval. Send no money. Just mention size and color wanted and give names of a few friends who might be interested.

Lawrence "Flexible" Hose
Two Pairs $1

Made from fine Sea Island cotton yarn, imported from England—most expensive cotton yarn made—mercerized—extra heavy garter top—high spliced heel—double sole. Write today for catalog—order two pairs on approval—and send names
LAWRENCE KNITTING COMPANY
4 Charles St., Methuen, Mass.
Agents wanted everywhere. Elaborate outfit furnished, showing 84 styles.

Agents wanted everywhere. Elaborate outfit furnished, showing 84 styles.

Lunch Outdoors
This Basket Keeps Things Fresh

Pack your lunch, go for a ride in the motor over country roads to some wooded spot. What greater pleasure than dining with Nature as host? Put in the lunch, bottles and all.

"A Rest and a

Hawkeye

Refrigerator Basket
Add Zest to the Trip

The basket will be ready to serve fresh and delicious at your journey's end. A small piece of ice in a sanitary compartment keeps the contents cool. Does not drip. Dirt, germs and insects cannot touch the food. Write for illustrated folder.

BURLINGTON BASKET MFG CO.
Burlington S E, Iowa

Fits tonneau of car. Priced as low as $4.00

When conscience was playing its rge on the harp of David's spirit, he claimed, "Day and night thy hand is avy upon me." His whole body was sympathetic sorrow with the mind of ch excruciating pain, when the eyes God like blazing stars look down on the guilty heart, either send the al to the pleading prayer of confes- on or to suicide.

"Can I be forgiven?" is the secret of all mankind. The way to par- n is to gaze by faith upon the "love at will not let you go"; the love that ed up Mary Magdalen, that looked ngly for prodigal Peter to return. e soul's confession is "Against thee d thee only have I sinned." The ntial prayer is, "Blot out all my equities." "Hide thy face from my ; cast me not away from thy pres- ce. Create in me a clean heart. ash me and I shall be whiter than ow." "I am no more worthy to be led thy son. Make me one of thy ed servants." Then, in everlasting ns, the penitent finds the bosom of e loving Father and cries with yvid, "Blessed is the man whose tngression is forgiven, whose sin is ered," and gets the answer, "I will ide thee with my counsel and after- rd receive thee to glory."

Oh, the ineffable joy of pardon and rity! It is a flight from hell to ven. All our sins are behind God's k and he never looks backward. I casts our sins into the depths of t sea, and the sea will not give up e dead. He blots them out as a thick ud, that never returns. God writes all over his universe, "Forgiveness Forever!"

It is a perfect forgiveness; a salvation flowing from the perfect love of the perfect God. When we come to walk with him in white, we shall be as the angels who have never sinned, without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, for our Father will not let his redeemed children go limping through eternity because of past, pardoned sins. Holiness means wholeness, completeness. To be holy is to be wholly saved from all sin. He who has separated our sins from us as far as the East is from the West—an infinite distance—will not allow any one to shame us, even at the judgment day. The past is settled; the present is blessed, the future is glorious.

An English statesman was once gazing in meditation out of his window. A friend said to him, "What are you thinking about?" He replied, "I was thinking of the first five minutes after death, and what it is to be good friends with God." What exultation must have filled his being at the prospect of eternal friendship with God and his children! Rev. Archibald Brown, of London, when he, as a boy, realized that God had spoken peace to his soul, threw his cap into the air and shouted "I am forgiven!"

What an hour for an immortal being when he realizes that he is "unsinned." Not may be, or will be, but is now, Godlike in his heart and in loving harmony with his heavenly Father, who longs to bring his prodigal son to his own home forever.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

OUR readers seem to have had unusual difficulties with the questions of List 4. Only ten reach the Honor Roll. We shall soon be starting the social half-year contest, and this will give all a chance to make a fresh start.

Honor Roll for List No. 4

Miss Ethel Barber, Miss E. E. Cammack and daughters, Troia E. Campbell, Mrs. R. Marek, M. Charles F. Martin, Miss W. Nicholson, M. Etta Rippel, Miss Effie L. Ritecy, Mr. and M. J. P. Rodgers, Annie G. Stine.

Answers to Question List No. 4

I Cor. 7: 2-5, 10-16.
(a) Gluttony and drunkenness. (b) "What! he ye not houses to eat and drink in?" 11: 22: "If in your eating each one taketh before other his own supper," 11: 21: "If any man is hungry, let him eat at home," 11: 34.
(c) Apostles, prophets, teachers; wisdom, knowledge, faith; gifts of healing, working of miracles, prophecy, discernings of spirits, gift of tongues. (d) "For as the body is one, and he many members, and all the members of the body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ," 12: 12. (e) To possess love.
(a) Sounding brass or censing cymbal. 12: 1. (b) Prophecy, knowledge, faith. (c) Love endureth long, is kind, envaith not, vaithen not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly—seeketh not its own, is not provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things, never faileth.

5. (a) Prophecy. (b) Gift of tongues.
6. (a) To edify the church. 14: 12, 26. (b) The Spirit and understanding. 14: 15.
7. (a) "If there be no interpreter let him" [the speaker in an unknown tongue] "keep silent," 14: 28. (b) 14: 26.
8. (a) Cephus, the Twelve, 500 brethren, James, all the apostles, Paul. (b) It must die. 15: 26. (c) The differences among various forms of life, the differences between heavenly and earthly bodies and different degrees of splendor in the heavens. 15: 39-41.
9. (a) "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law; but thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." 15: 55-57. (b) "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not vain in the Lord." 15: 58. "Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory upon their children. And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it." 15: 59: 16, 17.
10. (a) First day. 16: 2. (b) Ephesus. 1: 1. (c) Macedonia. (d) Stephanas.

THE PRAYER LEAGUE

THERE has been some correspondence with friends who are members of the Prayer League but who are not yet members of the Christian Herald Family. In answer to the many inquiries which have been made, we wish to say again that there are no requirements whatever for membership in the Prayer League. Any one, whether a subscriber to the Christian Herald or not, is at liberty to send in a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer. We trust that the many friends who have written in to ask us this question will consider this a personal answer to the letters.

A happy mother writes from a town in Maine: "Last week I wrote a request that you would pray for me that my dear little son might be better, also that my two sons would find Christ. Last Saturday the younger son came home for a little while (he is a telegraph operator). When I was preparing supper he came out where I was, put his arm around me and said: 'Mother, I made a request for Christ last night at a meeting.' Such a thrill of joy went through me and I could not thank my heavenly Father enough for having answered prayer." Another mother writes from Indiana: "I want to acknowledge God's answer to my prayer that my son accept Jesus as his Saviour. He did so, and also his two little sons." A Subscriber writes from Grayslake, Ill., thanking God for a revival in that community. Mrs. M. K. writes: "A few months ago I asked prayer that a man might be kept in time of temptation and that a Spirit-filled minister might be sent to a little town in New Jersey. God has answered both prayers." R. S. writes from Ohio: "I asked prayer for the conversion of my son and wife; they were soon converted." A letter from China brings news of a "wonderful" answer to prayer to the Christians of the Tsingtau field.

Together with the news of answers to prayer for spiritual blessings and for healing come testimonies of help in financial and other material matters. A friend writes from Iowa:

Keep a

Kodak Baby Book

THE first journey downstairs for exhibition to that secondary consideration—father. The toddling nursery days! That all important epoch when the baby first trudges off to school. In all these great events are limitless opportunities for the Kodak.

And with the school days come pictures by, as well as pictures of the children. Pictures they take of each other, free from constraint or conscious posing. Spontaneous pictures that reflect simplicity and weave into the Kodak Book the touch of naturalness.

It is such pictures as these that add the delightful side-lights to the more formal studio pictures that must be made of little John and Mary. Just as they must have "dress up clothes" for Sunday School and parties, so, too, you will want them in "dress up pictures." But you love them as much in their soiled pinafores as in their party best. And, too, you will love the Kodak pictures that hold the charm of homeyness.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,

ROCHESTER, N. Y., The Kodak City.

Ask your dealer or write us for free illustrated booklet, "At Home with the Kodak."

In response to a very wide demand we respectfully offer ANOTHER CYPRESS HOUSE PLAN FREE

The artistic, cozy and strictly modern CYPRESS SHINGLE HOUSE shown below meets completely and delightfully the desires of people who need more room than most bungalows contain, yet who wish to "keep the cost down." This CYPRESS house has 9 rooms besides the basement, and should be built complete for close to $3,800. Complete WORKING PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS (sufficient for any competent carpenter to build from) are YOURS WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS in VOL. 29 OF THE CYPRESS POCKET LIBRARY, SENT ON REQUEST. WRITE TODAY.

"Stop Depreciation BEFORE IT BEGINS—BUILD WITH CYPRESS AT FIRST!"

"Everything
CYPRESS except the window glass."

MR. GUSTAV STICKLEY, the well-known Craftsman, writes: "In my experience, CYPRESS is the best American wood for all exterior use, such as shingles, timbers, pergolas, and all woodwork subject to weather. Its slight natural oil makes it practically impervious to moisture, so that it does not shrink or swell like other woods, and is very durable when protected merely by a coat of oil. In this it is similar to teakwood, in my opinion is quite as durable, and of course much more practicable." ASK our "ALL-ROUND HELPS DEPT." any question about Wood. Our reply will be frank. We recommend CYPRESS only where CYPRESS can prove itself "the one best wood" for your use.

SOUTHERN CYPRESS MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION
1226 Hibernia Bank Building, New Orleans, La., and 1226 Heard Nat'l Bank Building, Jacksonville, Fla.
We produce CYPRESS—and talk it—but do not retail it. INSIST ON IT NEAR HOME.
Probably your Local Dealer sells CYPRESS; if not, WRITE US, and we will tell you where you CAN get it.

From Factory to Wearer
Send $2.00 (money order or stamps, no checks) for 3 Guaranteed Fine-Ceraleaf bosom Coat Shirts. Laundered, attached Cuffs; Blue, Black and Purple Stripes. State size, 14 to 17½. Delivered Free. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Reference: Metropolitan Bank, N. Y. Furnish names and addresses of 5 friends and receive necktie free. Write today.
PRESTON SHIRT CO., 467-A Broome Street, New York

Thousands have successfully used this formula to remove traces of age, illness or worry: 1 oz. of pure Powdered SAXOLITE dissolved in ½ pt. with hazel; use as a face wash. The effect is almost magical. Deepest wrinkles, crow's feet, as well as finest lines, completely and quickly vanish. Face becomes firm, smooth, fresh, and you look years younger. No harm to tenderest skin. Get genuine Saxolite (powdered) at any drug store.

30 DAYS FREE TRIAL
and freight prepaid on the new 1915 "RANGER" bicycle. Write at once for our big catalog and special offer.
Marvelous improvements. Extraordinary values in our 1915 price offers. You cannot afford to buy without getting our latest propositions. WRITE TODAY.
Boys, be a "Rider Agent" and make big money taking orders for bicycles and supplies. Get our liberal terms on a sample to introduce the new "RANGER."
TIRES, equipment, sundries and everything in the bicycle line half usual prices. Factory prices on Motorcycle and Automobile Supplies.
MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. F-71 CHICAGO

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Positively the cheapest and strongest light on earth. Used in every country on the globe. Makes and burns its own gas. Casts no shadows. Clean and odorless. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 100 to 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.
THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

Your Cemetery needs an IRON FENCE
Write for Free Catalogue
CINCINNATI IRON FENCE CO.
Dept. H, Box 724, Cincinnati, Ohio

EVERY LADY who sends us ten cents for postage and packing, and the name of three or four persons who keep boarding houses in her town, will receive, prepaid, one large package of Chocolate Orange Fruit candy and one of Chocolate Raisin Peanut candy FREE. Don't miss this rare chance as this is the most delicious chocolate fruit and nut candy made. Send ten cents TODAY, and get two big packages FREE and a money making plan.

AGENTS WANTED
Wholesome Sweets Co., 1328 Broadway, New York City

Splendid summer seller. Stops the bang and saves the door. Easy Sales. Big Profits. Big demand. A sale in every home. Dozen can be carried in pocket. Demonstrating sample free to workers.
THOMAS MFG. CO., 1324 Rome St., DAYTON, OHIO

Send for free catalog telling all about our Neat, Noiseless Flexible Comfortable, in-lined Vel Kid O'Sullivanized PILLOW SHOE. New shoes easy as old ones. No breaking in required. Fit and feel like a kid glove. O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on all styles.
$3.00 Postpaid
PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept. 3
184 Summer St., BOSTON, MASS.

"When it seemed we were ruined financially God opened up a way for my husband to find work, and he has never been idle a day since." An Alabama friend writes: "I am on the government land, trying to prove up a farm, and many a time did not know how I was going to get the next sack of flour, but prayed for God to help me and he did." A touching letter comes from Tennessee. "At the time I wrote the Christian Herald I was working hard to keep from starving and did not have half enough to eat. In a few days I was offered a place where I could get plenty to eat and clear over two dollars a week." The writer of this letter is a woman, and she asks prayers that God will put it into the heart of a man who tricked her out of some money to pay it back and that God will pardon his sins and make him a useful Christian. She also asks prayer for relief from deafness, saying: "I have to labor with my hands for support, and deafness is such a drawback."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

H. L. S., Springfield, Ohio; Mrs. G. F., Cambridge Springs, Pa.; A. M. T., Economy, Ind.; Miss G. B., Asheville, N. C.; Miss H. E. J., Washington; Mrs. W. W., Cutler, Maine; Mrs. E. J. H., Oakland, Calif.; M. E. W., Steubenville, Ohio; C. A. C., Crete, Neb.; C. E. H., South Strafford, Vt.; Mrs. M. E. C., Waxahachie, Texas; Mrs. S. L. S.; B. F., St. Joseph, Mo.; Mrs. J. F. E., Benton Harbor, Mich.; T. D., Scranton, Pa.; E. D., Pittsburg, Ala.; A Texas Reader; Mrs. W. H. R., Gastonia, N. C.; Mrs. A. Y. K., Penryn, Pa. (for religious awakening in the community); Mrs. K. R. S., Crestline, Ohio; G. A. L., Wyalusing, Pa.; Dr. G. A. F., Gering, Neb.

E. Z., Blue Mound, Ill.; Mrs. F. O., Hampton, N. J.; Mrs. W. H. G., Allentown, Pa.; A Believer, Litchburg, Va.; Mrs. H. C. S., East Fairfield, Vt.; Mrs. W. S. P., Huntsville, Ala.; Mrs. E. J. W., North Rose, N. Y.; Reader, Chester, Vt.; Mrs. M. E. A., Marion, N. C.; L. B. H., Belmar, N. J.; Mrs. P. M., Lynchburg, Va.; M. H. W., Smithfield, Ohio; M. D., Tuscola, Ill.; Mrs. L. M. N., Tilton, N. H.; Mrs. C. M. McC., Cranston, R. I.; E. McD., Maryville, Mo.; C. E. C., Warren, Ind.; An Anxious Mother, Bloomington, Ind.; A Subscriber, Cuba, N. Y.; M. I. K., Bridgeport, Conn.; M. K., Jackson, Mich.; W. O., Chicago, Ill.; M. F. S., Oxford, N. Y.; E. H., Elizabethtown, N. Y.; Mrs. L. T. B., Fairmead, Calif.; J. Z. H., Faison, N. C.; Mrs. P. O. B., Duluth, Minn.; Mrs. S. J. K., Mitchell, S. D.; Mrs. G. W. B. J., Chillicothe, Mo.; Mrs. F. I. McC., Sheridan, Mont.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at Lytton, Iowa; Red Oak, Okla.; Middlebourne, Ohio (in the M. E. Church); Hagerstown, Md. (special blessing upon the campaign now being conducted); Dennison, Minn.; Trent, Ore.; the section of Pennsylvania near Shenandoah; Montpelier, Vt. (in the People's Church); St. Joseph, Mo. (special blessing upon the Ebenezer A. M. E. Church); the neighborhood of Central Point, Ore.; Grayslake, Ill. A. E. L. asks prayer that nine friends may be saved; A Reader, that eight friends be converted; a mother, that two daughters may be saved; three mothers ask prayer each for the conversion of two daughters; another mother asks prayer that her daughter and family may all be converted; others, that their daughters with their husbands may be saved; another mother asks prayer that her daughter, with her husband, family and other relatives be converted; four other mothers ask prayer for the conversion of their daughters; thirty-five friends ask prayer for the conversion of other relatives or friends.

J. McE. asks prayer that twenty-five churches in Korea may become self-supporting, may experience a deeper work of grace, and be blessed with a great ingathering of souls during the present year. Mrs. C. I. I. asks prayer that the whole church may have more faith in the healing power of Christ and be roused to greater spirituality. Mrs. A. P. N. asks prayer for the salvation of the soldiers who are dying on the field of battle. Mrs. S. R. H., for a world-wide revival.

F. W. M. asks special prayer at eight Jews in New York City who accept Christ. Miss S. R. H., that the members of fifteen families may be saved. Mrs. E. H., that a minister be sent to the town of Delia, Kan. M. F. requests prayer for a minister who is disheartened that he may not leave the ministry and that God will bless, guide, and strengthen him in his work.

Ten readers ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for relatives or friends, or for themselves.

Seventeen friends ask prayer for ritual restoration or strengthening for relatives, friends or for themselves.

Twenty friends ask prayer that relatives or friends may be delivered from the drink habit. Three for deliverance from the drug habit for themselves or others.

Fifty-four friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

One hundred and five readers ask prayer for the conversion of relatives or friends.

Nineteen friends ask prayer for special ritual blessing for relatives or friends.

Eighty-two friends ask prayer for the healing of relatives or friends; sixty-eight for the healing of themselves, including one that he may be cured of lameness, and another that a sick heart may be strengthened.

Thirteen friends ask prayer for healing of hearing for themselves or other friends.

Fifty-two readers ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Sixty-six friends ask prayer for grant of varied desires and needs, including one that may come clear of all false accusation under which he is laboring, another that divinity may be given for guidance in regard to a very unhappy marriage that God will show him will as to what course to take, and another that a physician may vindicate himself of false reports.

A friend from Salem, Ore., asks special prayer that a little boy who disappeared from his home in May may be found. His father has recently died, presumably from grief because of the little fellow's loss, and his mother can hardly endure the anxiety and sorrow.

CALLED HIGHER

The following poem, which first appeared in a newspaper some years ago, was written by a talented member of the Christian Herald Family who died on January 4, this year, at Buffalo, N. Y., Mrs. Mary Emma Jackson, a one-time resident of Wilmington, Del. Her mother, Mrs. Victor R. Pyle, of Wilmington, writes that Mrs. Jackson would, on Sundays, go about the home seeing that each one had something good to read, pointing out especially (we take great pleasure in learning) interesting things in the Christian Herald. Mrs. Jackson's father was Rev. Simeon L. Jocelyn of the Congregational church:

When Baby Wakes

By Mary E. Jackson (Written When Her Baby Girl Died)

When baby wakes, our sweetest one,
Call me at the first murmuring coo,
When smiles and joyous gurgles run
O'er lips like roses wet with dew.

Before the violet eyes unclose,
Call me their gladdening light to greet,
Let love that bright as morning glows
Be first her happy gaze to meet.

When baby wakes! She stirs no more!
The violet eyes, the perfumed breath,
The smile our beautiful darling wore
Sealed with the icy touch of death!

In that blest morn when she shall rise,
And God's own voice her slumber breaks,
To smile once more in her sweet eyes,
Call me, dear Lord, when baby wakes!

Another member of the Christian Herald Family, who has been called higher, Mr. L. H. B. Headley, chaplain in the United States army, possessed the gift of poetry. Mr. Headley died late last October, aged 61, and was buried with military honors at Fort Lee, N. J. Ten days before his death he wrote a stirring verse, Be Not Afraid, from which we quote the following stanzas:

But when the clouds are thickest,
And gloom o'erspreads the way,
We know the sun is shining
And somewhere, Perfect Day.

Who will not doubt his power to save
Or willingness, as well;
They are the ones who glorify
The great Emmanuel.

Mrs. E. Nuckles, Chrisman, Ill., 87.
E. Sisson, Aultville, Mo., January 17, 1915.
Judge Reuben A. Fennell, Bentonville, Ark., March 9, 1915, 89.
Mrs. Mary Pauline Lake, Lake Charles, La., March 26, 1915, 86.
Mrs. N. M. Whiting, Frankfort, S. D., March 16, 1915, 85.
Henry A. Crawford, Olympia, Wash., January 11, 1915, 83.
Mrs. C. H. Brower, Los Angeles, Calif., April 19, 1915, 79.
Mrs. Mary C. Clements, Schenectady, N. Y., March 25, 1915, 78.
Eliza Melinda Schettler (Mrs. E. J.), Muskegon, Mich., March 23, 1915, 74.
James H. Sceva, West Jefferson, Ohio, March 11, 1915, 72.

Chalmers Motor Cars

Quality First

Every Chalmers Motor Car is manufactured in the great Chalmers plant at Detroit.

This plant covers 30 acres;
employs 4,000 trained, skilled workmen.

Quality

On this Rock-Quality-I mean to build my Business

Hugh Chalmers Nov. 22 1907

Quality First

This "Quality" is exemplified in three models of Chalmers Motor Cars,— the New Six-40 at $1,400; the Light Six-48 at $1,650; the Master Six-54 at $2,400. See them at your nearest Chalmers dealer, or send to us for information and literature.

CHALMERS MOTOR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICH.

Let your next Car be a Chalmers

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can I know you can, because I have reduced 32,000 pounds and have kept it that way.

...scientifically, naturally, without drugs, in the privacy of their own rooms.

You Can Be So Well!

If you only knew how well! I build up your vitality—at the same time I strengthen your heart action; teach you how to breathe, to stand, walk and relieve such ailments as Nervousness, Torpid Liver, Constipation, Indigestion, Etc.

One pupil writes: "I weigh 83 pounds less, and I have gained wonderfully in strength."

Another says: "Last May I weighed 100 pounds, this May I weigh 125, and oh! I feel SO WELL."

Won't you sit down and write now for my interesting booklet? You are welcome to it. It is FREE. Don't wait, you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience and I should like to tell you about it.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Boulevard, Chicago

Miss Cocroft is a college-bred woman. She is the recognized authority on the scientific care of the health and fitness of women.

Don't expose your family to draughts, cold and dampness

Open or close your shutters from inside

The Mallory Shutter Worker enables you to open, close, bow or lock your shutters at any angle, by turning a crank on the inside of the window sash. Simple and easy to install— you yourself, or any carpenter can put them in place on old or new houses, whether brick, frame or stone.

Write today for further information
MALLORY MANUFACTURING CO.,
310 Moore Street, Flemington, N. J.

Out go old fashioned dusters as fast as housekeepers learn that they can pick up and hold the dust instead of scattering it, by using a dust cloth with just a few drops of

O-Cedar Polish

on it, thus making dustless. Besides, it completes the job at one operation—dusting, cleaning, polishing and bringing out the beautiful grain on pianos, furniture and woodwork all at the same time.

Send for Liberal FREE Sample

All dealers sell O-Cedar Polish in sizes from 25c up and any dealer will return your money if not delighted.

CHANNELL CHEMICAL CO.,
Chicago — Toronto — London — Berlin

Cleans Corners

The Reeves Vacuum Cleaner differs from any other you have ever before used or seen. Differs in operation, in cleaning power, in price. Unlike ordinary hand-power vacuum sweepers.

THE REEVES VACUUM CLEANER

takes ALL the dirt from rugs, carpets, mattresses and furniture easily and quickly. Cleans the corners and under furniture. The Reeves sells for only $5 and is guaranteed for two years. Send to-day for free booklet describing this wonder-worker in detail.

THE REEVES VACUUM CLEANER CO.,
136 Broad St.
Milford, Conn.

IN THE FRONT LINE TRENCHES

Continued from page 582

one room, then through a doorway into a second room of utter disorder. I saw the concentric holes that mark the passage of a shell, and the confusion of turmoil and pillage—a bureau with the drawers emptied out, clothing strewn on the floor, a baby's high chair overturned, a crucifix lying broken in a heap of fallen plaster; these rooms seemed to be a contrast, a chaos, a picture of the illimitable desolation of war in one home. Into the trench again, up another slope, through another silent house, through a stable-yard, vile with blackish typhus-looking water, and so on along a path of ruin, if not where the trench led through farmhouses, where it pierced unharvested beet fields, with the panging of shrapnel and now the sucking whistle of rifle balls about us, until we came to another and wider trench. Getting my bearings, I realized that this pit, at right angles to our own, crossed the road to Arras.

"This is the line," the captain explained. "The French are only two hundred meters away. Don't expose yourself, and when you hear shrapnel close, it is best to stoop down a little. Come." And turning into the pit, he led the way toward the highway. We were walking parallel to the French, and they were only two hundred meters away. And I thought then of its being the great ditch, burrowed under Europe for three hundred miles. I was soon to feel that I was among the inhabitants of a new and terrible and strange world.

YOUR pulse quickened. Back where you left the road and the brown, muddy walls grew about, there came a thrill; as you floundered on up through the approach trenches, hearing the burst of shrapnel and the spatter of the balls on the soaked field, you were uneasy; but now, as you gazed up and down the trench which you had thought of not in so commonplace a way as to call it "trench," rather "firing line"—as slowly its impressions came upon you, they left you amazed. This goal that you had been striving for during a whole month was a place where by day men looked bored!

You have read that trenches have changed war; that the life of a soldier is regarded as so precious by those who devise the war machines that everything is done to protect him. "Digging in" and "trenchwork"—reassuring phrases for those who do not know, or for those who do not think. By statistics I tried to show how "safe" the trenches are. Yes, everything is done to safeguard the soldier; he is valuable to the state. But if trenches were devised to save the soldier, modern artillery and explosives were devised to kill him; and the only thing that makes you wonder about the trenches and their relative value to life is how a man can go into them and be alive at the end of the war. At La Bassée I learned that in one day "the English fired a hundred and fifty granatens over a little strip of trench. One hundred and forty-eight burst harmlessly. The other two dropped into the trench and killed fifteen men. It took one hundred and fifty shells to do it, but fifteen men were gone. I observed that the moral influence of shells in breaking courage is terrific—which is why a heavy cannonading always precedes the storming of a trench. Especially is this so at night, when, with an enemy creeping up, rockets light the ground between the trenches. For during the day the soldiers sight their rifles on different points, and at night they simply sweep those points with fire. Machine guns are used only to repel attacks, but on some parts of the line the French will waste ammunition firing a machine gun for hours, apparently satisfied if they can kill only one man.

I had seen the men in the trenches, and it was at Commines that I saw them out. I walked along the cobbled street of the old French border town until I came to a gray stone factory.

Through the paling of a picket fence I saw soldiers moving about in the yard, and, going in, we walked along a narrow cobbled driveway between dingy workshops until the other opened a door, and we went into what had been a storeroom. I saw rows of pens, each as wide as a cot and lined with straw, and in the straw lay men. You thought of them as being exhausted, upon coming back from the trenches, to take off their uniforms and wash before lying down. I saw their cartridge belts, knapsacks and guns strewn in the straw beside them, and I became conscious of a faint, ening odor that grew stronger, minute by minute, in that stuffy room; the stench of men who had not been to as much as unloosen their clothing for days at a time; and I thought of the trenches, and that it was because they were in the open air that I had noticed it before.

AS I walked between the pens I saw farther on that some men were awake. I saw their faces; the ones seemed all to sleep with their heads buried in the straw; and they were wild unshaven faces, yellowish with mud, and bleary with sleeplessness that somehow could not sleep now. There was one munching on a big chunk of black bread, and another, who had been leaning on his elbow, writing a letter, jumped up as I passed. "You're an American, aren't you?" he called after me. I saw from the blue and white button on his cap that he belonged to one of the Bavarian regiments. "I lived in the United States," he told me, "until the war came. Then I joined my regiment. I was the cashier of a bank in Juarez, and I lived across the river. I used to take my money in Mexico."

He went on telling me of his experiences and obligingly answering certain questions that must have sounded foolish to him.

"We work here in the army," he said, "in nine-day shifts. We're in the trenches forty-eight hours and then out for twenty-four hours' rest; again for twenty-four, and then out for three days."

I asked him what the men did during the last three days, and he told me:

"Today, for instance, we get laid. Then we wash up and go out and buy cigars and cheese and things, though I'm afraid some of the boys will be laid up this time with the typhoid vaccine. We're fresh troops, you know, and haven't had it yet. I suppose when spring comes on, they'll have us working as farmers when we're not on duty."

I asked him what he meant, and he told me that all the captured farms and of Belgium and France that could be planted during the fall had been taken by German soldiers, and that when the crops were ready the soldiers would harvest them. And again the marvelous details of this German machine amazed me.

I said good-by to the Bavarian who had made his money in Mexico, sent it in America, and did his fighting in France, and went down the cobbled alley where, you thought, wagons used to drive into these mills with their supplies. The officer told me a thousand soldiers rested, bled and were fed every day in the factory. We saw the room where they bled, one tub running the entire length of the machine room—overhead the motionless belt-wheels look self-conscious and absurd—this tub for the legs, another for the toes, while in the middle of the stone floor the many barbers, daubed white with hair, were shaving the soldiers and clipping their hair to the scalp.

"There are three companies of the Bavarian Infantry who have the room for this hour, and they must be bathed and shaved within that time."

Outside I saw three soldiers piling mud off their uniforms; and when we returned to the street, waiting for our car, three of them passed with shiny shaven faces. It was their duty.

June 14th is Flag Day!

Our 1915 Flag (6 feet long by 4 feet wide) is made by the Dunkards of Pennsylvania, within sight of Valley Forge, where Washington and the Patriots once struggled for liberty.

Here is your chance to own one of these large American Flags, the same as those shown in the picture below. Not a little flag, but a large-sized "Old Glory," 6 feet long by 4 feet wide—bigger than the top of your dining-room table—real red, white and blue, with stripes double-stitched together, and guaranteed not to fade, run or shrink, no matter what the weather.

Here is an opportunity to keep faith with your patriotism. You will not only have use for a flag on every holiday for years to come, but you can also use it constantly for decorative purposes in public and private sociables, in the club-house, in the church and in the home. Memorial Day is almost here. You will be able to celebrate it properly with this flag.

HOW TO SECURE ONE OF THESE FLAGS

We will send the large American Flag described above and The Christian Herald for one year, all for only $2

Or, you may secure the Flag FREE. To any old subscriber who will send us one new eight-months' subscription to The Christian Herald (remitting $1.00 with order) we will send one of these large American Flags

FREE

ACT NOW

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

10 DAYS
FREE TRIAL

This Iron
Burns Safe

KEROSENE OIL!

THE IMPERIAL SELF-HEATING IRON

Removes the drudgery out of ironing day Produces elegant finish. Nothing to get out of it. No cords or wires to bother. Use indoors out. Fine for traveling. No odor, no danger easily cleaned. Always ready. Burns ordinary kerosene or gasoline—Combination complete, no attachments required. Heats 10 hours for 1 cent. Price
low. Liberally guaranteed. Use it on 10 days FREE Trial.
The Imperial Self-Heating
Iron quickly pays its low cost in the saving of time, health, work, worry and fuel. Every housewife, mother and seamstress should have one. It saves steps, prevents headache, backache and tired feet.

Don't delay—write us
now for FREE Booklet
"Ironing Comfort" and particulars of 10 Day
Free Trial Offer.
Dealers & Agents wanted.

IMPERIAL BRASS MFG. CO.
P.O. Box 886, 1210 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

CLEAR-HEADED
Head Bookkeeper Must Be Reliable.

The chief bookkeeper in a large busi-nesshouse in one of our great Western cities speaks of the harm coffee and tea did him:
"My wife and I drank our first cup of Postum a little over two years ago, and I have used it ever since, to the entire rejection of tea and coffee. It happened in this way:
"I had an attack of pneumonia, which came with dyspepsia, or neuralgia of the stomach. My 'cup of cheer' had always been coffee or tea, but I became sickened, after a time, that they aggravated my stomach trouble. I happened to mention the matter to my grocer one day and he suggested that I give Postum a trial.
"Next day it came, and we liked it so much that we will never change back;
I am a well man today and have no need of medicine.
"My work as chief bookkeeper in our branch house here is of a very confidential nature. During my coffee drinking days I was subject to nervousness and
'jitters' in addition to my sick spells.
He has left me since I began using Postum and I can conscientiously recommend it to those whose work confines them to long hours of severe mental effort."
None given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Well-being" in pkgs.
Postum comes in two forms:
Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.
Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and,
with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.
Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.
"There's a Reason" for Postum.
—sold by Grocers.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

Christ's Call to the Young Men of Today
Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U.
Topic for June 13. Mark 1: 16-20
(Led by Three Young Men)

WHILE so many nations of the world are calling their young men to war it is good to come back to the New Testament and to the thought of Christ and ask just what call he is making now to the young men of America. When the Lusitania was sunk many of our young men felt a sudden impulse to go to war.
It seems safe to say at this writing that such an impulse was ill-advised and that more sober judgment will prevail. Certainly it will be hard to look fixedly at Christ and believe that his call today would be a call to war.

Christ's call to young men never sounded out more clearly, more majestically, more heroically than today.
"Come with me," he said to Peter and his brother, "and I will make you fishers of men." "I will show you how to catch men for heaven, how to catch them for holiness, how to catch them for the best and strongest and most helpful kind of service to their fellows.
I will show you how to catch men who shall be my friends, who shall preach the Gospel of friendship throughout the world, who will accept deliverance from sin and selfishness and strife and will follow me to immortal life." This is the call to the young men of today—the call to heroic service for the welfare of others, the call to spread the spirit of love, the call to lead men to put an end to strife and to work together in the interests of world-wide brotherhood. A call to be like Christ and to win the world to him.

The Kind of Living and Thinking That Makes Leaders

Epicurean League Topic for June 13.
Daniel 1: 8-17; 2: 26-28, 48

DANIEL understood the necessity of taking care of his body. He looked at life from the point of view of an athlete, and went into training determined to keep himself in trim. It is strange how slow society has been in putting away the deadening curse of strong drink. The pleasures and excitement of drink have crept into literature and song; social customs have perpetuated the habit; the church has often been either on the wrong side or else half-hearted in its efforts on the right side—and it has remained for science and economics to come into the front of the battle and lead the last charge against this ancient enemy of the race.

Daniel saw the truth long ago that a man who would be at his best for life must leave strong drink alone. He considered also that the matter of food had much to do with a man's efficiency.
He found out the things that would agree with him and insisted upon eating them even though in so doing he went against the king's command.

But there was doubtless a deeper reason than this for Daniel's brave stand. He felt that by drinking the king's wine and eating his meat he was entangling himself with the gods of Babylon. Daniel looked at life as a gift from God and at life's work as a task assigned by God himself. So he felt that it was fundamentally necessary to keep on good terms with Jehovah and to refuse in any way to ally himself with any other gods. And God honored this kind of loyalty with a rare sort of help. God will give every man a chance who gives him a chance.
The men who let God do most for them are the men whom God calls to do most for him. We see also that Daniel not only insisted upon giving the best of his body, but insisted also upon making an obedient servant of his mind. He studied; he learned how to think. He mastered the history of his people and the ancient oracles of their religion.
Mind and soul went together in reaching out for God. So he found God, and God used him.

OLDSMOBILE SETS THE PACE WITH AN EIGHT

Alive with Power——Light in Weight Exquisite in Beauty

August Deliveries

IT looks good to the eye, and when you step on the accelerator you experience a thrill you never dreamed a car could give you. You feel a sensation of resistless power —smooth, velvety, unbroken and strong, like the flow of a mill race.

An OLDSMOBILE through and through—it is a radical turning, an almost startling departure, from the usual idea of eight-cylinder motor efficiency. Oldsmobiles have this attraction always—they are quite out of the ordinary.

So with this Eight. It is light in weight.
In addition, it is simple mechanically and as reliable as a watch. There is nothing perplexing under the hood. The car requires very little attention and very small expense to operate.

In a group of cars it impresses you at once as having distinction. Driving on the road you feel a satisfying difference between this and all other cars you meet.

So quickly does it win your friendship you think the car half human.

A Most Surprising Thing is the Price, $1295.

For Immediate Delivery

AS a companion piece to our Eight we announce for 1916 a new Oldsmobile Four, Model 43 very distinctive, with 120-inch wheelbase and a correspondingly ample body. Everything about the car attracts—a powerful Oldsmobile valve-in-head motor; long and buoyant springs; fascinatingly attractive cabinet work; clear, thrifty, live hickory wheels in natural finish; seats delightfully deep and soft—and the surprisingly moderate price, $1095.

Booklet No. 116 on request.

OLDS MOTOR WORKS, LANSING, MICH.
ESTABLISHED 1886 INCORPORATED 1899

Many of the geniuses of the automobile industry are the product of the House of Oldsmobile—a school where men are trained to be thorough and accurate.

This country recognizes three grades of truth

—the truth
—the whole truth
—nothing but the truth

"The Truth" by itself may be false because of what it leaves unsaid, or because while technically correct it is designed to mislead.

"The whole truth" may be ineffective because it leaves one asking—"Well, what are you going to do about it?"

"Nothing but the truth" involves a grasp and expression of right fundamentals, rounded knowledge, fair play—an irresistible appeal.

You are Invited to Attend

No adult in this country but uses or is affected by advertising. The convention in Chicago will give you ideas for application to your own business and your own life. You will come in contact with the discoverers and pioneers in the development of the economic force of advertising—a force which will grow with your support as you will grow by contact with it and its workers.

For special information address CONVENTION COMMITTEE, Advertising Association of Chicago, Advertising Building, 123 Madison Street, CHICAGO

Associated Advertising Clubs of the World
Eleventh Annual Convention

In Chicago from June 20th to 24th there will be a convention of The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. The standard under which this convention assembles is "Nothing but the Truth in Advertising"

This is not a sentimental standard. It is a commercial standard maintained by the contact of idealists, enthusiasts, and hard heads.

It is the only standard under which the annual expenditure of $600,000,000 for advertising can be made to pay. It is the standard under which 2,000 people met last June in Toronto and, before that, in Baltimore, Dallas, Boston.

It is the standard under which every reader of newspapers, magazines, outdoor signs, booklets, novelties—the printed or painted advertising message—has come to believe what he reads.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

Continued from page 576
reports from one side, and with none at all according to those of the other.

The British lost an old battleship, the Goliath, late in the preceding week. She was acting as the night guard-ship of the left end of the allied land forces on the peninsula, and was torpedoed by a Turkish destroyer. The loss of the ship was not of much consequence, as she had passed her prime, but the resultant loss of some five hundred lives is regrettable. There has been some little activity at Smyrna during the week, and also in the campaign between the Turks and Russians in the Transcaucasus, but we have not been apprised of any results of consequence.

In the early part of the week, in the Western battlefield, the French continued their successful attacks on the western end of that line on the German position at Neuville, northward, and gained considerable ground, besides taking a number of prisoners and capturing some German artillery.

During the latter part of the week, however, this movement ceased on account of a very severe storm, torrential rains rendering military movements impossible. North of Richebourg-l'Avoué, the British made an advance of importance, and captured about two miles of German trenches on a section of eight mile front. The fighting on this portion of the line was very desperate, hand-to-hand conflicts taking place at many points, and the casualties are reported to be very high.

Farther to the westward, around Ypres, though there was considerable fighting, both sides kept the position held by them last week, with very little change. In the eastern part of the line, the only fighting of even secondary importance was in the fort of Ailly, and in the wood of Le Melle, between the Meuse and the Melle. This fighting was more or less indecisive.

On the whole, on this Western front, during the whole of the week, the fortune of war has favored the Allies.

WHEN YOU EAT POTATOES

[We are indebted to a correspondent, Mrs. Howatt, for the following interesting extracts from a comprehensive article upon the nation's staple side-dish.]

THE solanum tuberosum is a native of South America. Sir Joseph Banks considers that the potato was introduced into Europe from the mountainous region about Quito, where they were called papas, in the early part of the sixteenth century. Spain first received the new vegetable, thence it traveled to Italy, and thence to Austria, in 1588. But Ireland got the tuber from Virginia via England, where they introduced by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1584. Sir Walter also planted them on his Irish estate.

The sweet potato, according to Sir Joseph Banks, was a delicacy in England before the white potato was known there, being imported in large quantities from Spain and the Canaries, and supposed to possess the power to restore decayed vigor. But the white potato was cultivated in Ireland, and was taken up in England not as a common food, but as a special "dish." They were sometimes roasted, and steeped in "sack" and sugar, or baked with marrow and candied by the comfit makers.

Galway, Ireland, has a tradition that a ship carrying some potatoes was wrecked off that coast, and the children found and roasted the strange roots and found them tasty, and the natives then planted others, and thus Ireland first got its national vegetable.

As early as 1633 the Royal Society encouraged the growing of potato.

toes to prevent famine in Ireland. Seemingly the potato had now fallen from its high estate as a "dish" and had become, as one writer of the time put it, "an article to be propagated with advantage to poor people." By the middle of the eighteenth century they were generally understood to be their true worth.

Nevertheless great ignorance prevailed in parts of the United States about the potato even in recent years. In a railroad coach sat two men on a journey to the Pacific coast. The train passed through a potato section and one of these men remarked to his companion: "What a fine field of potatoes!"

Said the other: "Oh no, you ain't stuff me with that. Potatoes grow on trees just the same as pears and other such fruit. When I return I am going to the State University at Alabama to see them growing, and to see the sort of tree it is." His fellow replied: "Well, all I know is, when traveling here last time some one said, 'What a fine field of potatoes'; perhaps you are right, Bill; they must grow on trees; some country bumpkins tried to fool me."

The potato is indigeneous to this country. A nurseryman of Philadelphia waited on a lady purchasing plants. As she selected, she asked the nativity of each and how to treat them. She came to a fine lot of plants in flower. "Oh," she exclaimed, "I have seen in twelve of them; they are the handsomest plants and flower I have ever seen; of what country are they native?"

"Those," explained the dealer, "are natives of America and easily tated. They are the potato."

AMONG THE WORKERS

—THE 1915 SEASON of the Missionaries' Rest Home near Goshen, Mass., among the mountains, opens June 15. Missionaries of many denominations enjoy delightful seasons of rest and recuperation here, while home on furlough. Information regarding it can be obtained of the International Medical Missionary Society, Room 532, No. 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

—A CONFERENCE on inter-church activities of denominational and inter-denominational organizations has been arranged by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, to be held at Atlantic City, N. J., June 3 and 4, at which many leaders in Christian work will discuss important divisions of the general theme before delegates representing most of the denominations and their subsidiary organizations and such bodies as the International Sunday School Association, Y. M. C. A., etc.

—DR. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN and Dr. Charles M. Alexander have been conducting a wonderfully successful campaign in Charlotte, N. C. Since the beginning of the year 6,438 people have united with churches in cities where the two evangelists have labored; 155 young men have offered themselves for the Gospel; 2,500 young women have offered themselves to work in foreign mission fields. Although of 2,000 signed the inquirers' cards in the tabernacle meetings in Atlanta, Ga., 4,612 people have united with the churches, and the work is still going on. A noted sporting man was converted in the Charlotte meetings, and his family and many friends have since yielded themselves to Christ. He is now conducting meetings in schoolhouses and chapels of the surrounding country with considerable success.

—THE LEMON HILL ASSOCIATION of Philadelphia announces its fourteenth year of religious work with the remarkable record of an established of bringing more than a million a quarter people in direct contact with the Gospel. The services conducted at Lenox Fairmount Park, demonstrates that evangelism can be made attractive and interesting. Last year, 150,000 people attended the services. Philadelphia provides the pavilion, which is crowded at the services, a large proportion being non-churchgoers. Many national churches are represented. All the evangelical churches back of this movement and each denomination has a representative on the Advisory Board of the association.

Polish Your Car With JOHNSON'S PREPARED WAX

It cleans, polishes and finishes in one operation. It will keep the body, hood and fenders of new cars bright and good looking for an indefinite time—and will make old cars look as well as a coat of paint and varnish.

Does Not Gather Dust

Johnson's Prepared Wax imparts a perfectly hard, dry, glasslike finish that cannot collect dust. It forms a thin, protecting film over the varnish—greatly prolonging its life. It prevents checking and cracking—covers up small scratches and

"Sheds Water Like a Duck's Back"

There are dozens of uses for Johnson's Prepared Wax—you will find it splendid as a polish for

Floors
Linoleum
Woodwork
Desks, Golf Clubs, Gun Stocks, etc.

Johnson's Prepared Wax gives perfect results over any finish—varnish, shellac or oil.

For 10c we will send you postpaid enough Wax for polishing an automobile, a piano, several pieces of furniture or a small floor.

S. C. JOHNSON & SON, Dept. CH Racine, Wis.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES
Prices $15.00 up. SOLD or RENTED anywhere at 1/4 to 1/2 MANUFACTURERS' PRICES, allowing RENTAL TO APPLY ON PRICE. Free Trial. Installment payments desired. Write for catalog 71. TYPEWRITER EMPORIUM, 34-36 W. Lake St., Chicago

BLMYER B. CHURCH BELLS
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

STOP BUYING ICE Every Day Save money
The new Economy Ice Blanket cuts your ice bills in half. Made of pure sterilized vegetable fibre. Clean and sanitary. Lasts all summer. Postpaid, 10 cents. Agents wanted. UTILITY MFG. CO., 425 Tuttle Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

6% NET
For 36 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 709. $25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving investors. PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES
For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for Asthma (Inhalation) All Druggists; or by mail, 35c. STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

YOU CAN AFFORD
Familiar Songs of the Gospel (No. 1 or 2). Round or shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 84 songs, words and music. E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen patents. Send for 3 free books: inventions wanted, etc. I get patent or no fee. Manufacturing facilities. RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services. WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, WASHINGTON, D. C.

WANTED
In every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl to represent The Christian Herald. This is an opportunity to build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address: Agency Dept., THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use nom de plume to identify the question, but letters must contain name and address of sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

Ref. "I am not a Christian worker as I used to be. Pray for me." (From letter to the Prayer League.)

Thousands of professing Christians could make this same complaint. Removal to a new home, the death of consecrated Christian friends who encouraged and guided us in other years, gradual yielding to the influence and pressure of other interests and desires—these are among the countless causes of inactivity and concern on the part of those who were once zealous Christian workers. Further, one's views or one's tastes may change with passing years; and the tasks one once delighted in may not be so congenial as before. Or, more serious, one's faith in some of the details of the creed of earlier years may have been weakened, and this weakened faith has caused a hesitancy about trying to guide others. What shall we do? In the first place we must come resolutely back to Christ. Whatever may have happened to our old faith we are still sure that he is the Master of our souls. We must confess our shortcomings, ask his forgiveness, and ask him to set us at work again. We must be strenuous and uncompromising in making right whatever wrongs have crept into our lives during these years of neglect. He will freely forgive. He will give us a new vision of himself, a new vision of old truths. He will show us where he wants us to do now. Opportunities will open—it may be to take up the very tasks we laid down; it may be to take up new tasks more in line with our present interests. But we must begin at once to do some definite thing for Christ, and when that is done another task will surely be at hand. We dare not delay another hour to return to our fidelity and our zeal. We must think not only of Christ's disappointment during the faithless years and of the loss to our own lives, but of the burdens we might have lifted, the heartaches and tears we might have prevented, of all the people who have had sad hours or wrong hours that we might have saved them from, or who are wrong now because we were unfaithful. We dare not add another moment to those unfaithful years.

M. S. D. T., Dresden, Kan. Luke 12: 45 is the verse of the picture in the parable of the faithful steward. It shows what would logically happen if the steward had proved faithless at the end, and thus undone all the good work he had previously performed. Confident that the Lord's return would be delayed, he assumes the management of the house, and degenerates into a brutal, drunken despot, intending apparently, after he had had his fill of dissipation, to resume his task of fidelity and again be the model servant in time for the Master's coming. The reverse tells of the punishment that awaits such a faithless and wicked time-server. 2. In the verse of the same chapter, the One who is to be feared is the divine Judge, who has the power of punishing sin as it deserves.

G. S. D., Bonsall, Calif., writes: "We are constantly solicited to feed the hungry at home, and now America is attempting to feed the world's hungry ones, who are made poor by the wicked ambition of kings and cabinets. Suffering is the fruit of the war, and the workers must feed the drones. Will the drones ever become workers? Why do not the poor of the cities go out on the soil and do some work? I know I could find a good permanent home for my healthy children in this place, but my experience is that they would rather starve in the city than live in the country. My benevolence is strangled by this condition." Our correspondent's experience is like that of many others who have found little disposition, on the part of the unemployed, to accept work in the country. They cling to the city, where there is very little prospect of their condition improving, but rather the reverse. It is a difficult task to make those who have been accustomed to struggle in the city understand that, with the same effort, in the country they would have more comfort, better health and a measure of independence and self-support.

R. G., Bloomington, Ohio. 1. Professor W. Morey, in his Outlines of Ancient History, shows that the idea of representative government in central and northern Europe was first developed in Germany. He writes: "The unit of their political society was not the city, as in the case of the Romans, but the village community ('mark' or 'pagus'). The land upon which the people settled was for the most part held in common. The arable land was divided into strips and allotted yearly to households for cultivation; land for house gardens was assigned permanently to each family. The village community was governed by an assembly composed of freemen capable of bearing arms, and as presided over by a headman or village chief ('reeve') chosen by the people themselves. A group of villages was called a 'hundred,' and each 'hundred' had its democratic assembly or 'moot,' and its chief. A tribe consisted of several 'hundreds,' and it, too, had a tribal assembly and a head chief. The whole political system from the third or fourth century A.D. was of this democratic character." 2. Robert Fulton invented the first steamship, the Clermont, and John Ericsson was the designer of the first ironclad, the forerunner of the modern battleship.

Even the poets have taken up the theme of neutrality in the war, and are asking, in melodious verses, whether we are really neutral after all. A lady in Williamstown, N. Y., a "Daughter of the Revolution," who is intensely interested in the nation's welfare, sends a poem of which the following is the closing stanza:

"And now, another horrid thing
To shame us while we pray
For peace to come and war to cease,
Are shipments on the way
From neutral shores to help the war.
Neutral? This is not true!
When we assist to murder men,
What shameful things we do!
The price of blood is in our hands;
We are in league with sin,
And what we sow will yield a crop
That we must gather in."

A Reader explains. We have received the following interesting letter: "I noticed in the Christian Herald of March 17 an item 'Texas Kills Wolves.' If you would remember the vastness of our great Lone Star state, it would not seem incredible that we could kill 98,000 wolves and cats in eighteen months. The area of Texas is 265,780 square miles, and it contains 167,865,600 acres of land, 39,960,000 acres being in forest. Millions of acres are covered by the chaparral brush, which is the best shelter that a wolf wants.—L. A."

Miscellaneous

Reader. Write to the chief organizer or director of the Boy Scouts in your state. Tell him your plan and he will doubtless be glad to advise you.

Mrs. N. F. C., Leavenworth, Kan. J. Quincy Adams, the descendant of the famous Massachusetts family of that name, died several weeks ago.

M. H. S., Haddonfield, N. J. Pastor Sheldon's story was a work of the imagination. He had no special date in mind for the incident you mention.

C. F. R., Washburn, Iowa. We know very little about the speakers you mention beyond what is printed in the daily newspapers, hence we cannot judge of the character and value of their work.

S. L. E., Deposit, N. Y. Esperanto is not dead by any means. The Esperantists of Germany, for instance, are issuing reports of the progress of the war in the new language for distribution outside of their own country. The Esperantists of Switzerland and France have not been heard from much owing to the present European commotion.

Mrs. M. K. C., Atlanta, Ga. The mite-box is supposed to have had its origin in the suggestion furnished in the New Testament story of the widow's mite. (Mark 12: 42.) A mite was equal to about half a mill; hence the idea of furnishing a receptacle for offerings of the smallest denomination. Just when mite boxes were first used is unknown.

J. H. T., Ipswich, Mass., answering the request of A. R. Parker as to the author of the lines beginning "One of the sweet old chapters," gives the name of Walter S. Martin as the writer. On finishing the hymn, Mr. Martin gave the manuscript to Dr. Tenney, who set it to music, and it has appeared in "The Sabbath Male Choir."

Mrs. R. E. K., Anderson, Mo. Many literary women prefer to use their own names in authorship instead of the names to which they are entitled by marriage. This was the case with Fanny Crosby, who, in private life, was Mrs. Van Alstyne. She left a number of unpublished hymns, but which of them was the last written it would be impossible to decide.

M. B., Irvington, N. J. You will find in Rom. 2: 12-14, the passage you have in mind, which explains that those who have neither the law nor the Gospel "may be a law unto themselves." This obviously means that men and women who have never heard of Christ are not beyond the reach of the divine mercy, if they have lived good lives even under natural law, and have been a blessing to those around them. John Wesley wrote towards the close of his ministerial career: "He that feareth God and worketh righteousness according to the lights he has, is acceptable to God." In Romans 4: 9 it is clearly stated that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. The Judge of all will not judge unjustly. For those who know the Gospel, there is the immediate responsibility to accept it, and live it in their lives.

The First Breakfast

"This is how I like it"

You can have your husband say this not only at your first breakfast together, but morning after morning.

If you should discover that every woman in your town used the same coffee, you would never rest until you had tried it.

A great many more women than live in your town are using Arbuckles' Coffee. In millions of homes throughout the country, Arbuckles' is considered necessary to make breakfast complete. So rapidly have its sales increased, so popular has it become, that today more of it is sold than any other packaged coffee.

Get a package from your grocer today—either the whole bean or the ground. Notice the smiles of satisfaction at the breakfast table. Try it. Give your family the enjoyment of drinking the most popular coffee in America.

Make your coffee earn lovely gifts for you

Save the signature on every Arbuckle wrapper. Get beautiful, useful gifts—articles you have always wanted.

Arbuckles' premiums are almost as famous as Arbuckles' Coffee. In one year we gave away over a million of one premium alone! Send for our big Premium Catalog showing 150 of our most popular premiums. Write today to

Arbuckle Brothers

71-A3 Water Street, New York

Better than ever

The COUPON of Ready Redemption and Guaranteed Value

Hamilton PROFIT SHARING COUPONS are redeemable for over 4,000 items of Standard Merchandise in nearly 600 Premium Stores in the United States.

They come with goods you buy every day and if you are saving U.S. Green Stamps are Doubly Valuable. The Hamilton Coupon marked "1" exchanges for (2) U.S. Stamps and other denominations on the same basis.

WRITE US FOR A LIST OF GOODS THAT BRING YOU Hamilton COUPONS AND THE ADDRESS OF PREMIUM STORE NEAREST YOU

The Hamilton Corporation
George B. Caldwell, Pres.
2 West 45th Street New York City

A New Type The "Pocket Self-Filler" Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen

This announcement introduces the most important development in Self-Filling Fountain Pens—the new Pocket Self-filler that is distinctly Waterman's Ideal throughout. It possesses all the superior qualities of the Regular Type plus the convenience of automatic filling direct from the ink supply.

Simply raise and lower the lever and it fills.

"The Lever Locks"
Made in a wide assortment of sizes.
$2.50, $4.00, $5.00, and up
At the Best Stores Everywhere

Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen

Illustrated Folder on Request. Avoid substitutes. Look for the Trade Mark.
L. E. Waterman Company, 173 Broadway, New York
Boston Chicago San Francisco Montreal London Paris Buenos Aires

Ingersoll

DOLLAR WATCH

Waste Not—Want Not

Remember this when buying a low price watch; there is no more excuse for wasting a dollar on a watch than $100.

In either case you should get your dollar's worth.

This you are not apt to do unless there's a name you know on the dial.

The name "Ingersoll" on the dial of a watch means guaranteed timekeeping.

W. H. INGERSOLL & CO., NEW YORK

"Tea—that's only half a word
—the other half is Lipton's"

Iced tea or hot tea—you get it at its best when it's made with Lipton's Tea

LIPTON'S TEA

Tea is the most hospitable of all beverages, and tea drinking is the most pleasantly intimate social act that we have.

You can be certain that your tea—whether it's iced-tea for the summer months or hot tea for any month at all—will be all it should be in flavor, strength and palatability if you make it with Lipton's Tea.

There are ten delicious blends of Lipton's Tea, each one intended for a particular tea taste. Your kind of tea at your price: Choose from Ceylon, India Black, English Breakfast, Black and Green, Mixed, Formosa Oolong, and Ceylon Green.

For iced-tea Lipton's Yellow Label Tea is used by more people than any other. Send for a trial size tin. None genuine without the signature of Sir Thomas J. Lipton, thus—

No Advance in Prices
25c, 30c, 35c (in full size standard packages ½ lb. net). Also in ¼ lb., 1 lb., and 10c trial sizes. Ask your grocer for Lipton's Coffee, Instant Cocoa, and Jelly Tablets, too.

Thomas Lipton
TEA and COFFEE PLANTER, CROFTON
148 Franklin St., New York City
LONDON - CEYLON - INDIA - CHICAGO - MONTREAL

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER YEAR
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JUNE 9, 1915

VOL. 38—NO. 23. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

*The cows are in the pasture land, the sky is all aglow,
The evening breeze among the trees is crooning sweet and low!*

Studebaker

SIX 1385

See how wide and easy-opening the doors are—hinges and catches cunningly hidden

And sit on the deep and restful cushions—glove-soft leather of highest quality

Note the room in the driver's seat—room for the tallest man to sit in COMFORT

Every detail of the motor simple and readily ACCESSIBLE

And then feel the satiny finish that's put on to stay BRIGHT with 20 finishing operations

And study that famous Studebaker FULL-floating Rear Axle with its extra strong pressed steel housing

Look for Quality EVERYwhere —not just in "spots"

You can find many cars that excel in this or that detail of construction. One will talk POWER steadily—because it has paid most attention to power—developed that one quality more highly than others.* Another, perhaps, will talk of its light weight—because its engineers have devoted especial attention to doing away with useless weight. Others will tell you of this or that BIG excellence. But Studebaker emphasizes no ONE excellence in this Studebaker SIX to the exclusion of all others. For the simple reason that Studebaker has built this Six to be 100 per cent. quality from "stem to stern."

It's the "evenly built" SIX

Straight thro' the car you can go and find QUALITY in every detail. No one feature over-developed. But every one as highly developed as Studebaker's $45,000,000 resources permit.

And that is why men who have in the past paid high prices for Sixes—twice, thrice the price of this Studebaker SIX—now are buying Studebakers. They find that at $1385, this Studebaker SIX gives all that formerly they paid much higher prices for.

They want BEAUTY—and they find it in this SIX. They find a long and massive car—a car that sits close to the road. With long, unbroken lines sweeping back in graceful curves.

A satiny lustre that STAYS bright

And a finish that few cars at any price can match—a smooth and satiny lustre that STAYS new—because it is worked on thro' 20 operations during the two months the car stays in the paint-rooms.

And not a detail is overlooked to enhance the beauty of the car, either. Handsome CROWN fenders and running-boards free of tires and tool-boxes, hidden handles of the doors—all lend grace to the looks of the car.

They want COMFORT—and they find it in this SIX. They find a big, inviting car—with room enough in the driver's seat for the tallest man to sit in comfort, even thro' long days of touring. Plenty of room in the tonneau, too.

Deep, restful cushions of high-grade leather

And the wide, roomy cushions, so deep and restful, are alluring to the man who has owned the costliest of cars.

The doors, too, are wide and easy to open. The hinges and the catches are cunningly hidden so that no latch lies in ambush to rip even the fluffiest of summer dresses.

But what of POWER? comes the query. And merely a glance at that simple motor suffices to convince any man who knows motors of the silent and flexible power this SIX has.

See how simply and cleanly designed it is—marvelously accessible in its every detail—built to develop power—but ECONOMICAL power that takes you uphill and down, over any roads, always making every drop of gasoline PULL.

Silent and Flexible Power

And then, the simple, RELIABLE-at-any-speed Battery ignition system that Studebaker uses in place of the magneto. Most of the leading cars have discarded the magneto—but Studebaker is especially fortunate in having done so THREE years ago—and in having had THREE extra years' experience of over 100,000 Studebaker owners to work on in the development of this Electric System.

And then, as you study the rest of the car's make-up, that Studebaker FULL-floating Rear Axle for example, catches the eye of every man who has ever driven a car. Simplicity itself in design it says at a glance to the man who knows cars "SAFETY" and "ACCESSIBILITY."

The EASIEST-riding Car you ever sat i

The radius rods and torque arm say that the car rides freely and smoothly on ANY roads. For they take the driving thrusts off the long, fl springs that you find in the rear. Wonderful springs they are, too—a marvel to the man who knows the difficulties of spring-designing. For they are the outcome of THREE long years' experiment with designs and steels of a hundred alloys. Three-quarter elliptic, with spring shackles at both ends to take up end-play, they make the car marvelously EASY-riding.

You find a brake equalizer such as only one the $5,000 cars uses. Oversize brakes, too, to insure SAFETY. You find a deft balance of the chassis that makes the car EASIER-riding—easier-driving—easier on tires, too.

Can you get more—even tho' you pay more?

And so you can go from stem to stern of this Studebaker SIX and find QUALITY—in every little detail. And when you stand it side by side with other cars, even at twice its price, you will have to answer a very decided doubt in your own mind as to whether you CAN get more the $1385 will buy in this Studebaker SIX. See it, your local Studebaker dealer's—and EARLY you hope for prompt delivery

Order NOW

—if you want a Studebaker

That's our advice on the day this issue of the Christian Herald goes to press. With 148-acre plants, the largest in the industry, most of them running overtime, we aren't going to be able to fill anything like the orders we're getting. We built 25,000 cars during the last six months—the winter months at that—and even then, there's a Shortage of SIXES in sight. Your local Dealer may have a few left—but not for long. Better see him NOW.

Studebaker Prices

Studebaker ROADSTER $ 985
Studebaker FOUR - - - 985
Studebaker SIX, 7-passenger, 1450
F. O. B. Detroit

STUDEBAKER — DETROIT

Canadian Plants, Walkerville, Ont.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

Medallion of Huss, Prague Museum

JOHN HUSS, MARTYR

THE 500TH ANNIVERSARY OF WHOSE TRIUMPHANT DEATH
THE CHRISTIAN WORLD WILL CELEBRATE NEXT MONTH

BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. DAU

Medallion of Huss's Martyrdom

WHAT evangelical Christianity will celebrate this year is the five-hundredth anniversary of the heroic death of Hus. July 6 is not the birthday of the Czech reformer.

Nobody knows his birthday; even the year of his birth is in doubt, the preponderance of expert opinion being in favor of 1369. In accordance with an old Christian custom—which has been misunderstood by some writers—the day of a confessor's martyrdom was called in Latin his dies natalis, his birthday, viz., unto the life everlasting. In the case of Hus this day was July 6, 1415. The peculiar significance of the life-work of Hus is aptly shown by marginal drawings in an old Hussite hymn-book. The drawings serve as illustrations for a hymn, "To the memory of Master Hus." They consist of three medallions: the first represents John Wyclif in the act of striking sparks from a rock, the second shows John Hus catching the sparks and igniting coal with them, the third displays Martin Luther brandishing a flaming torch which he has lighted from Hus's fire. This symbolical representation, exhibiting the connection of cause and effect in the life-work of three great men who had to oppose Rome, is true to history. The research of Loserth has conclusively shown that Hus's reformatory movement received the strongest impulse from the study of Wyclif's writings, which had been brought from England to Prague. In fact, the strictest of Hus's utterances are almost verbal reproductions from writings of Wyclif. That Luther in his progress as a reformer was ultimately drawn—chiefly by events during his debate with Eck at Leipsic in 1519—to espouse the cause of the Bohemian confessor, whom at first he had piously admired as a great heretic, is known today to every student of Luther's life. N. Hauri, a Swiss author, who has just published a popular biographical sketch of Hus, is right when he says: "The three medallions assign to each of the three men his correct place. Hus indeed kindled, with the spark which Wyclif drew from the flint, the fire which Luther fanned into a world-conflagration. To be sure, God has caused the light of his Gospel to shine with greater brightness by other agents than by Hus. Still Hus will remain dear to us as one of those who have peeled for us the evangelical truth of salvation from the husks and wrappings of Roman ecclesiastical and papal arrogance, permitting, without hindrance and in full confidence, to enjoy again the power of the Gospel of Christ Jesus, among means of it recover from all our fears and injuries."

The name of Hus is an abbreviation of his birthplace, Hussinecz, a small village of southern Bohemia near Prachaticz, on the Bavarian boundary. Following a custom of the times, Hus called himself Johannes Hussinecz, and, for short, Johann Hus. The double "s" which appears in English spellings does not occur in the Czech original; it was adopted by English writers to aid in the correct pronunciation of the name, which should be Hooss. His first name he spelled Jan.

Early Life and Training

Very little is known of Hus's childhood. He seems, like other great men, to have grown up in very humble circumstances. Lessons of self-denial were held to learn early, and these lessons seem to have stamped upon his life a seriousness that sometimes borders on melancholy, and that "gave a subdued tone to his bearing." His parents secured for him such education as was available in those days, most likely at the cloister school in the neighborhood.

JOHN HUSS

The Famous Portrait from the Herbarium Archives

At an early age—one biographer says, when he was sixteen years old—Hus entered the University of Prague, which ranked almost equal in prestige with Paris and Bologna in those days. Hus's biographer in the Catholic Encyclopedia (Vol. VII, p. 584 ff.) states that at Prague "he supported himself by singing and serving in the churches. His conduct was exemplary and his devotion to study remarkable." From E. de Schweinitz, the late editor of The Moravian, we learn that "the development of his mind was slow, but his behavior was distinguished by the strictest probity and the most genuine godliness. In his intercourse with others he was modest and kind. . . . He was a tall man, with a thin, pale, sad face." The beard which appears on many of his pictures is declared to be an artist's license: Holbein is responsible for it. The real Hus is said to have been beardless.

The student life of Hus is singularly free from moral excesses. That is all the more remarkable because the morals of his age, especially as regards the relations of the sexes, were notoriously low. Shocking tales are told about the vices of the Bohemian king Wenceslaus, and if I were to reproduce here what Hus preached and wrote about the immorality of priests, this issue of the Christian Herald could not be sent through the United States mails. There is a curious remark recorded which Hus made to a friend as he was about to start on his journey to the Council of Constance, which put him to death, and in which he deprecates the errors of his youth. Vanity in dress and a passionate love for playing chess is what he charges himself with. "Poor me!" he says; "I am now to be chastised because, being misled by the fashion of bad men and the applause of people, I have worn beautiful and superfluous garments. In this respect I have been tempted by the spirit of pride to act contrary to the will of God. I pray thee by the mercy of Jesus Christ: Do not follow me in the levity which you have noticed in me. You know that before I became a priest, I, alas! frequently and passionately used to play chess, wasting my time in this game, and often rousing others and myself to anger thereby." But even against these foibles of his youth he fought sternly. It seems almost as if he must have had a presentiment of his death when we read of the following incident: Hus had been reading the account of the martyrdom of St. Laurentius, who was roasted to death on an iron grate. The story excited the imagination of Hus to such an extent that he put his hand into the fire and held it there until his friend made him withdraw it. He said he wanted to make a test how far he himself would be able to endure torture by fire.

During his studies at the university Hus received some support from Sir Nicolaus, a noble landed proprietor of his home village. While he does not seem to have distinguished himself greatly as a student, his success was pronounced and rapid as soon as he entered upon a public career, which shows that he must have been a gifted scholar. In 1393 he received his first academic degree, that of Bachelor of Arts, in 1394 he became Bachelor of Theology, in 1396 Master of Arts, and in 1398 professor in the Philosophical Faculty of the university. During the next year he advanced to the office of examiner of applicants for the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in 1400 he became dean of the philosophical faculty. In the same year he was ordained to the priesthood.

All this time Hus was a devout Roman Catholic, strict in his observance of every law of the church and scrupulous in the mechanical performance of acts of worship. An incident may illustrate his spiritual condition at this time. In 1393 the city of Prague celebrated a jubilee, and abundant indulgences were offered the worshipers at the churches on this occasion. Hus marched in the prescribed procession and spent his last four groschen for a letter of indulgence. Remembering this episode later, he exclaims in one of his sermons: "Oh, those are deceived who prostrate themselves before the Pope and consider all that the Pope does good, as I did myself before I had learnt to know the Holy Scriptures and the life of the Saviour."

The Dawning of Spiritual Liberty

BOHEMIA had not been Christianized, except in a few localities, by missionaries from Rome, but from the Greek Church, and its people had enjoyed a degree of autonomy in their church affairs that was not accorded to other parts of the Roman Church. Down to the beginning of the fourteenth century there had been preaching in the native tongue in Bohemian churches, Bohemian priests had married, and the chalice was given to laymen at communion. Bohemia had also enjoyed special privileges in a spiritual way. About the time when Hus was born the learned knight, Thomas von Stitny, who had learned by the study of the Scriptures and of the writings of St. Augustine what true piety means, had begun to teach the Bohemians by many writings, which he published in their language, to lead godly lives. A German preacher by the name of Conrad von Waldhausen was traveling through Bohemia about the same time, and despite the opposition of the Mendicant friars succeeded at many a huge mass meeting in arousing the people to a sense of shame because of the vices prevailing among them. A distinguished Czech priest by the name of Milic had abdicated all his civil and ecclesiastical titles in order to minister to the poor, the strayed, the fallen, many hundreds of whom he led back to a clean life. In his scathing invectives he would not spare even the great, the archbishop and the emperor. His work was carried on by his pupil, Matthias von Janow, the son of a Czech knight, who cast away the relics and bones of saints which he had been in the habit of carrying about with him as amulets; and for them substituted the Bible, which henceforth he called his "bride." As confessor to Emperor Charles IV, who was at the same time king of Bohemia, he sought to convince this monarch of the need of a reform of the church. A sister of Charles IV, the famous "good Queen Anne," was the consort of Richard II of England, and a secret adherent of Wyclif. Through her connection with Bohemia it happened frequently that young students of Oxford would continue their studies at Prague. By them the doctrines of Wyclif were disseminated in Bohemia, and in 1402 Jerome of Prague, who later became the intimate friend and successor of Hus, brought copies of Wyclif's writings to Prague and communicated them to Hus.

A new world opened up for Hus as he sat poring over the writings of the British reformer. Not only did Wyclif's wonderful knowledge of Scripture attract him, but at the same time the strong national undercurrent which he felt in Wyclif's writings. Also among his Bohemians Hus knew that the love of the Word of God went hand in hand with love of Bohemian state independence, and both had to be defended against Roman encroachments. What painful sensations crowded the mind of Hus, and to what momentous decisions they led we can gather from the following statements: "I too had once upon a time been lulled into the sweet slumber of carnal security, until it pleased the Lord to save me, a miserable slave of my lusts, against my will, as he saved Lot from the fires of Sodom, and to guide me where suffering, shame and contempt dwell. Not until then did I become poor and contrite. With fear and trembling I meditated the Word of God and began to admire the treasures of wisdom which are stored therein. Not until then did I see how firmly Satan has closed the eyes even of the great sages of the world. Through my whole heart there was now diffused a powerful fire, and with it came a sense of blessedness which is still active in me, and becomes the more intense as I rise in prayer to God and to the crucified Lord Jesus. Only when I forget Jesus, this fire disappears. Then I become forthwith dark and unfit for any good work, until I turn to him again with my whole heart, who alone is the true Physician, but also the stern Judge of our lives, even to every useless word and every useless thought of ours." Again he says:

He Makes the Great Decision

"I HAD reached the point where two roads part, one of which is narrow and leads to eternal life, while the other is broad and ends in destruction. The latter is now beautiful, level, adorned in every possible manner, and comfortable, so as to lead people to believe that it is the right way. Raising my Bible to God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, I prayed: Do not give me over to the thoughts and schemes of the wicked; do not give me that which pleases my eyes." Both these citations are taken from Hus's tract on "Carnal-minded Priests and Monks," and show with what earnestness he entered upon the path of holiness which had been shown him. His clean living and stern self-discipline have been attested even by his enemies; for the Jesuit Balbinus, one of his prosecutors, has acknowledged: "Besides great eloquence, John Hus possessed still greater acumen. But his modesty, his moral severity, his unimpeach-

THE HOUSE IN WHICH HUSS WAS BORN

able life, his pale, emaciated face and long, lean figure, his courtesy and affableness, even toward the most lowly, served to convince the people more powerfully than the greatest eloquence. The people were persuaded that such a man could neither deceive them nor be in error."

All this goes to show that despite the religious lethargy of the nominally Christian masses there was still a high degree of spiritual life stirring in some Bohemians, and this life was now to be manifested by strong public efforts at a reformation of all ranks of society, from the highest to the lowest. In 1391 a merchant of Prague, by the name of Kric, had, with the aid of the royal counselor, John von Mühlheim, erected a "chapel," which had a seating capacity of three thousand. They called this chapel "Bethlehem," that is, "the house of bread," for the Bread of Life, Jesus, was to be dispensed from his chapel by his Word being preached here to the Bohemians in their vernacular. Bethlehem Chapel of Prague may be said to have been founded as a protest against the dead, lifeless and deadening formalism of Roman Catholic worship. In 1402 two great honors came to Hus: he was made rector of the university, and he was appointed pastor of Bethlehem Chapel. Here Hus lived some of the greatest days of his life; here he scored some of his greatest victories; Bethlehem Chapel became to him and his followers a spiritual home, and even in his dungeon at Constanza his thoughts went back in grateful reminiscence to this scene of his triumphs.

HUSS ON TRIAL BEFORE THE COUNCIL OF CONSTANCE

Preaching a Moral Reformation

WHEN he began preaching, Hus did not aim at correcting the doctrinal errors of his church. He himself remained addicted to the end of his life to some of those errors. It is a curious fact that in Bethlehem Chapel, where Hus denounced the superstitions of Roman worship, there was preserved the traditional corpse of one of the infants whom Herod slew at Bethlehem. The cardinal doctrine of Christianity, moreover—justification by faith through faith, without the deeds of the law—was not preached with such apostolic clearness and by Hus as by Luther a hundred years later. Hus aimed chiefly at a moral reformation. He assailed with pitiless frankness the vices, the levity, the spiritual torpor, the injustices of the people. Striving to relate, the more unsparingly he exposed the sins of all classes of society, the greater crowds flocked to hear him. Even the clergy looked favorably upon his efforts at reform. Zbynek (Sbir), the archbishop of Prague, a Bohemian nobleman, well educated as regards secular knowledge, but wholly incompetent as a theologian, hoped that Hus's preaching might galvanize his moribund diocese into spiritual life.

Now it happened that near the border of the Brandenburg country there occurred one of those strange delusions which were frequently practiced in the Middle Ages, and that through this Hus was led to attack also the clergy. At Wilsnack, in the district of Priegnitz, a church had been destroyed. A priest claimed he had found on the altar table bleeding wafers, such as are used at communion. The "bleeding host" evidently being blood of Christ, miraculous healings were forthwith taking place at Wilsnack. From all quarters people began to flock to Wilsnack; pilgrimages from distant regions were arranged; and to render Wilsnack still more attractive to the pious dupes, an indulgence was proclaimed for every visit to the place. Archbishop Zbynek, moved to action by the great commotion that was spreading over Bohemia, sent a delegation to Wilsnack to investigate the miracle of the bleeding host. Hus was one of the delegates. The results of his investigation he deposited in a treatise, which was

Continued on page 613

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD RELIEF FUND IN FRANCE

THE second report from our committee in Paris has been received from Pastor Wagner, its chairman, and is given below. Each section of Europe which has been mauled and pummeled by war has its own peculiar problems of distress to meet, and in France, where practically the whole northern section has been pre-empted by cannon and trench, thousands upon thousands of peasants, workpeople and others, thus fearfully evicted, have fled to Paris and other large centers seeking refuge, and our committee is dealing with a most complex and heartbreaking situation.

When we consider that the war in Europe is not decreasing, but is on the increase, and that the numbers of the widows and orphans are added to daily, we will understand how necessary it is that all of us do our part toward keeping these committees well supplied with funds. The fund to Tuesday, May 25, amounted to $155,324.79. This very large sum has been given with remarkable spontaneity, and is a wonderful testimony to the generous character of our readers.

Please address your gifts to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Report of the French Committee

Dear Christian Herald:

My time is so taken up that I have less and less leisure, but I must write to tell you how I bless you every day for your thoughtfulness in sending us the funds for the widows, orphans and other victims of the war.

Our committee, whose composition I have already described, has been joined by Mr. Mark Baldwin, the American writer. We meet regularly, and the applications, more and more numerous, are examined with great care. We have gone into the applications from Paris and its precincts; from Rheims and its environs, recommended by Pastor Govin and the mayor of Rheims; from Nancy, Lunéville, Raon l'Etape, St. Dié, Chalons sur Marne, Toul.

We tell all recipients that the Christian Herald has thought of them, and they are touched.

Some situations are terrible, in particular those where the father is on the firing-line and the mother dies in the house and there are no grandparents to care for the little ones. The state, the municipalities and the church, at last do what is necessary. But in the beginning there is great distress, especially when children are very young. Whenever possible we leave the children in the family, and give a monthly stipend based on the number of children. We shall continue this aid for three months until the pensions of the state are established.

Some very sad cases are those of old persons who have lost their support in losing their sons. Some old women, inmates of houses of shelter in Rheims, whom the bombardments scattered in destroying their shelter, have come to us. We are giving to their support.

We have aided widows to leave Paris with their children to go to their former homes. We have furnished nurses to poor women with children who daily expect another, the nurse to care for them and do their housework.

We shall examine at our next meeting the case of the society of Friends of Blind Soldiers. We shall vote a sum for that society, in which we have become interested, and of which I am an administrative member.

There are at present two hundred orphans and some sixty widows and about twenty old persons supported. In Paris we ourselves give out the gifts. In the provinces, the mayors or the pastors are our intermediaries. We act with prudence, and never give much money at a time.

And we have intervened in case of misfortune more lamentable consisting that the persons were refined; during before the war by teaching only some established industry, and now reduced to absolute want, without the help which the municipality gives to the indigent. If war is prolonged and a larger number of persons their savings disappear, the condition of the educated classes will be all more grave.

We have disposed of nearly half of the funds sent by the Christian Herald. But the second half will be distributed faster than the first, as we are day by day better known. Recognizing the great good that the money sent by the Christian Herald has done, we address to you and your readers thanks and our kindly gratitude—it is particularly sweet to me to thank that friends in America who know your works have thought of me and my people in our terrible situation.

The suffering multiplies around France is comforted by the testimonies of affection which come from afar, and what America sent to us is very precious to our heart. Thanks to the Christian Herald in particular. Bless you and your great people.

[Signed] CHARLES WAGNER

GERMANY'S REPLY TO THE LUSITANIA NOTE

THE FOLLOWING PRELIMINARY REPLY TO PRESIDENT WILSON'S NOTE OF MAY 15 WAS RECEIVED AT WASHINGTON ON MAY 31:

BERLIN, May 28, 1915.

The undersigned has the honor to make the following reply to the note of His Excellency, Mr. Joes W. Gerard, Ambassador of the United States of America, dated the fifteenth instant, on the subject of the impairment of many American interests by the German submarine war.

THE Imperial Government has subjected the statements of the Government of the United States to a careful examination and has the lively wish on its part also to contrite, in a convincing and friendly manner, to clear up any misunderstandings which may have entered into the relations of the two Governments through the events mentioned by the American Government.

With regard, firstly, to the cases of the American steamers Cushing and Gulfight, the American Embassy has already been informed that it is far from the German Government to have any intention of ordering attacks by submarines or flyers on neutral vessels in the zone, which have not been guilty of any hostile act. On the contrary, the most explicit instructions have been repeatedly given the German armed forces to avoid attacking such vessels.

Neutral vessels have come to grief through the German submarine war during the last few months by mistake it is a question of isolated and exceptional cases which are traceable to the misuse of flag by the British Government in connection with carelessness or suspicious actions, on the part of (the?) captains of the vessels. In all cases where a neutral vessel through no fault of its own has come to grief through the German submarines or flyers according to the facts as ascertained by the German Government, this Government has expressed its regret at the unfortunate occurrence and promise indemnification where the facts justified it. The German Government will treat the cases of the American steamers Cushing and Gulfight according to the same principles; an investigation of these cases is in progress, its results will be communicated to the Embassy shortly. The investigation must if thought desirable be supplemented by an international commission of inquiry pursuant to Article III of The Hague Convention of October 18, 1907, for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

In the case of the sinking of the English steamer Fabia, the commanding officer of the German submarine had the intention of allowing passengers and crew ample opportunity to save themselves.

It was not until the captain disregarded the order to stop and to take to flight, sending up rocket signals for help, that the German commander ordered the crew and passengers by signals and megaphones to leave the ship within ten minutes; as a matter of fact he allowed them twenty-three minutes, and did not fire the torpedo until suspicious steamers were hurrying to the aid of the Fabia.

With regard to the loss of life when the British passenger steamer Lusitania was sunk, the German Government has already expressed its deep regret to the neutral Governments concerned that nationals of those countries lost their lives on that occasion. The Imperial Government must state for the rest the impression that certain important facts most directly connected with the sinking of the Lusitania may have escaped the attention of the Government of the United States. It therefore considers it necessary in the interest of the clear and full understanding aimed at by either Government primarily to convince itself that the reports of the facts which are before the two Governments are complete and in agreement.

The Government of the United States proceeds on the assumption that the Lusitania is to be considered as an ordinary unarmed merchant vessel. The Imperial Government begs in this connection to point out that the Lusitania was one of the largest and fastest English commerce steamers constructed with government funds as auxiliary cruisers and is expressly included in the navy list published by the British Admiralty. It is, moreover, known to the Imperial Government from reliable information furnished by its officials and neutral passengers that for some time practically all the more valuable merchant vessels have been provided with guns, ammunition, and other weapons, and reinforced with a crew specially practiced in manning guns. According to reports at hand here, the Lusitania when she left New York undoubtedly had guns on board, which were mounted under decks and masked.

The Imperial Government furthermore has the honor to direct the particular attention of the American Government to the fact that the British Admiralty, by a secret instruction of February of this year, advised the British merchant marine not only to seek protection behind neutral flags and markings, but even when so disguised to attack German submarines by ramming them. High rewards have been offered by the British Government as a special incentive for the destruction of the submarines by merchant vessels and such rewards have already been paid out. In view of these facts, which are satisfactorily known to it, the Imperial Government is unable to consider English merchant vessels any longer as "undefended territory" in the zone of maritime war designated by the Admiralty staff of the Imperial German Navy, the German commanders are consequently no longer in a position to observe the rules of capture otherwise usual and with which they invariably complied before this. Lastly, the Imperial Government must specially point out that on her last trip the Lusitania, as on earlier occasions, had Canadian troops and munitions on board, including no less than 5,400 cases of ammunition, destined for the destruction of brave German soldiers, who are fulfilling with self-sacrifice and devotion their duty in the service of the Fatherland. The German Government believes that it acts in just self-defense when it seeks to protect the lives of its soldiers by destroying ammunition destined for the enemy with the means of war at its command.

The English steamship company must have been aware of the dangers to which passengers on board the Lusitania were exposed under the circumstances. In taking them on board in spite of this the company quite deliberately tried to use the lives of American citizens as protection for the ammunition carried, and violated the clear provisions of American laws, which expressly prohibit and provide punishment for the carrying of passengers on ships which have explosives on board. The company thereby wantonly caused the death of so many passengers.

According to the express report of the submarine commander concerned, which is further confirmed by all other reports, there can be no doubt that the rapid sinking of the Lusitania was primarily due to the explosion of the cargo of ammunition caused by the torpedo. Otherwise, in all human probability, the passengers of the Lusitania would have been saved.

The Imperial Government holds the facts recited above to be of sufficient importance to recommend them to a careful examination by the American Government. The Imperial Government begs to reserve a final statement of its position with regard to the demands made in connection with the sinking of the Lusitania until a reply is received from the American Government, and believes that it should recall here that it took note with satisfaction of the proposals of good offices submitted by the American Government in Berlin and London with a view to paving the way for a modus vivendi for the conduct of maritime war between Germany and Great Britain. The Imperial Government furnished at that time ample evidence of its good will by its willingness to consider these proposals. The realization of these proposals failed, as is known, on account of their rejection by the Government of Great Britain.

The undersigned requests His Excellency the Ambassador to bring the above to the knowledge of the American Government and avails himself of the opportunity to renew, etc.

VON JAGOW,
Minister for Foreign Affairs.

PRESS OPINIONS ON THE GERMAN NOTE

An Invitation to Debate

THE reply of the German Government to the American note of May 13 is less a response than an invitation to debate. The document is in the nature of a pot parlor. Germany has succeeded in raising points which, in consideration of the very advanced position taken by our government with respect to arbitration, especially by the present administration, we should find some embarrassment in refusing to discuss, and perhaps, even referring to The Hague.—Chicago Tribune.

Misses the Point

From Germany's standpoint and from ours, if we were in the German shoes, the German note is a valid and strong document. From the standpoint of the neutral idealist the note is an evasion and misses the point.—Tama News.

Should Keep Out of the Quarrel

There is any talk of fighting Germany it comes from resentment and indignation, and not from serious consideration. We can question whether there is anything to fight for, but we cannot question the solemn fact that we have practically nothing to fight with. We ought to keep out of the quarrel.—Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

Germany Misapprehends Us

Germany does not want war with the United States. The reply to the President's note, whatever its other defects, is upon that point clear and unmistakable. Had she been bent upon provocation she would have used quite other means and very different language. We must attribute the very disappointing nature of the reply to her failure to understand the depth of the resentment her lawless and inhuman acts have aroused among our people and to the lack of insight and sound judgment so characteristic of her recent diplomacy.—New York Times.

Germany's Note "Dignified and Cautious"

There is certainly nothing in the German reply leading to the supposition that it is the deliberate intention of the German Government to provoke the United States to war. A dignified reproach has been met, if with caution, certainly with dignity. Let it be ours to receive the reply in the same spirit.—Boston Globe.

Does Not Satisfy American Opinion

Germany's answer to our government's protest against the slaughter of its citizens, peacefully and lawfully going about their business on the high seas, will not satisfy American opinion. It is likely to inflame feeling here instead of moderating it.

Germany consents to discuss our grievances with us, admitting the substantiality of many of them. But the manner in which she consents shows too slight an understanding of the gravity of the offenses of which we complain. Her too evident desire to make the wrongs done us and done the ideals of humanity and international morality which we cherish a matter of technical and obstinate negotiation will not be reciprocated here.—New York Tribune.

No Occasion for Hysterics

People familiar with the tortuous ways of international diplomacy hardly expected a direct, uncompromising and final pledge or promise or answer from Germany as the first response to the President's note following the destruction of the Lusitania. There is no occasion for excitement or hysterics because Germany has answered promptly and satisfactorily every question in the President's note save the most important one. That is diplomacy.—Indianapolis Star.

Germany Desires Peace With U. S.

The reply of the German Government shows conclusively that Germany is most anxious to live at peace with America. That she desires to be shown where she is in the wrong is but natural. While the Lusitania catastrophe has caused great sorrow here and is certainly much to be regretted, still an investigation may uncover sufficient material to clear Germany of the charges public indignation has hurled against her since the day of the destruction of the steamer.—New Yorker Herald.

Canadian Opinion on the Note

Canadian editors condemn the German answer. The Toronto Mail says:

"It evades the vital issue." The Telegram says: "The German reply adds insult to injury." The Star says: "The reply sent by Berlin to Washington is not a reply at all. It is, instead, a recital framed up not for the United States, but to misinform the German people."

Opinions of State Governors

A number of state governors are quoted upon the note. Governor Manning of South Carolina calls the reply "absolutely unsatisfactory," and says: "But our people should maintain calmness and wait the President's action with patience." Governor Alexander of Idaho declares that "although the note has not given direct reply . . . it does . . . give hope that further deliberation between the two nations may bring about an understanding between both." Governor Carlson of Colorado believes our government "will be guided by what appears to be a deliberate judgment of the people of the nation, and it is my hope," he says, "that until the last effort made to obtain honorable peace proves in vain, nothing shall be done and no word uttered that is likely to precipitate war." Governor Philipps of Wisconsin: "Our country can settle no question of human liberty, nor will we gain any desirable end by participating in the European war." Governor Withycombe of Oregon declares that the note savors of evasion and insincerity. He says: "President Wilson's contentions are absolutely justified, and all Americans stand behind him."

THE BIBLE IN HUMAN LIFE

A REVIVAL SERMON BY REV. JAMES M. GRAY, D.D.*

THE world is in a state of flux. On what shall we lay hold for ourselves and for others?

Here is a man of learning, eminence, wide experience and deep piety, to say nothing for the moment of his inspiration by the Holy Spirit, who is advising a young minister or Christian worker what to do in such a case. The conditions he has to meet and the problems he has to solve are described in the opening verses of the chapter, where Paul says: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come."

The "last days" are not the end of the world, but the end of the age. The end of the world is a whole millennium away, but the end of the age may be very near for all we know. The conditions and the problem therefore are ours even more than Timothy's, and we ought to have the keenest interest in them. "For men shall be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, haughty, railers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, slanderers, without self-control, fierce, no lovers of good, traitors, headstrong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof."

The Faith Once Delivered

WHAT shall we do in such a case? What was Timothy to do? "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned, and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them." The things he had learned and had been assured of were those of Holy Writ, and he had learned them of his mother and his grandmother, as Paul tells us in another place. Better and more potent teachers than these, when their feet are in the way of God, no man ever had.

Recently I read a letter from a minister who was trying to deflect the path of a modern Timothy from the truth of the Gospel to the "scientific phases of Christian thought," and he urged him not to go on "blindly holding the nursery faith." But the nursery faith is the very thing to which this inspired apostle urges us to hold on, and as between him and a twentieth-century apostate from the faith, the wise ought to know which to choose.

But the reason Timothy was to continue in the Scriptures was because they were able to make him "wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Note the last remark. The Scriptures themselves cannot save a soul; only the Lord Jesus Christ can do that, through faith in his Name. But the Scriptures can make one "wise unto salvation." They can show him his need of it, point to Christ as the ground of it, awaken faith to lay hold upon him for it, and, when a man is saved, they can show him how to make the most of it and bring forth the fruit of it. Timothy did not need the Scriptures in the earlier particulars, for he was already saved; but he did need them in the later ones. He needed to know how to make the most of his salvation and to bring forth the fruit of it, and Paul goes on to tell him how to do it.

Things Spiritually Discerned

BUT let us see how the Scriptures can make a man "wise unto salvation" in the primary sense, for after all that is the most important for most men. A young man once called on me about his spiritual state. He came from a distance and by appointment, and I remember that it was the Fourth of July, and a very hot day. I soon saw his trouble; he was not saved, or at least had no assurance that he was. Therefore I brought him face to face with Christ's words in John 5: 24, and asked him carefully to read them aloud, which he did. "He that heareth my word, and believeth him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life."

I then began to question him. "You have heard the words of Jesus?" "Yes." "You believe him that sent him; that is, you believe God?" "Yes." "Then what have you got?" He hesitated, began to explain, perhaps to argue; but I held him to the text, and repeated the question, "What have you got?" Timidly he replied, "I have eternal life."

Dr. Gray is dean of the Moody Institute, Chicago, and one of our leading expositors.

"Thank God," said I, "but now, what else is true of you?" Again he hesitated and endeavored to explain, but I held him to the text. At length he answered, "I shall not come into condemnation." "Thank God," said I, "but what else is true of you?" The hesitation this time was not so long or so pronounced, and he exclaimed, with a look of wonder in his eyes, "I have passed from death unto life!" "Now," said I, "are you not ready to kneel with me and praise God for this salvation?" "I am," he answered; and we knelt there together, and returned thanks to God for what he had done for him. And when he arose, taking my hand between his two capacious ones, for he was of giant stature, he cried out, "I thank God, and I thank you, Dr. Gray; oh, this has been for me an independence day indeed!" This is the way in which the Scriptures can make a man "wise unto salvation," who has not yet been "saved." God grant that the miracle of grace may be repeated in some other soul as he hears these words.

But let us see the further sense in which the Scriptures can make Timothy, or any other man, "wise unto salvation." "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God," Paul continues, "and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Note "the man of God." "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." But when a man is converted, regenerated by the Holy Spirit, saved through faith in Christ, he is no longer a "natural" but a "spiritual" man; he has ceased to be the man of the world, and has become "the man of God." Now he can appreciate the Scriptures, is enlightened to understand them, and they begin to influence his heart and mind.

A Lamp Unto Our Feet

ALL Scripture is God-breathed," for that is the real sense of "given by inspiration of God." Is it any wonder, therefore, that it should be "profitable" for such results as these? And are not these results just what are needed by "the man of God," if he is to be "perfect"? Not perfect, of course, as God is essentially perfect; but in the sense that he may be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

In the first place, the "man of God" is taught what "good works" really are. There is a fatal ignorance on this subject on the part of the man of the world. His waste of effort is tremendous, and with all his working he is not bettering conditions very materially or resolving the problem of these "perilous times." And he is laying up nothing in eternity, either for himself or others. Only "the man of God" can know what good works are. But he must not only know them, but receive the equipment to perform them, and this is what Holy Writ supplies. Here he is taught, rebuked when he goes wrong, corrected when in error, and instructed or built up in the way of righteousness, which is the way of God.

These were the reasons Timothy was to "continue" in the things "he had learned and been assured of." The "modern view of the world" need not disturb him, nor "the scientific phases of Christian thought." He was to believe the Bible and believe in the Bible, as he always had believed. He was to abide in the "nursery faith." The trouble with some is that they have not done this. They believed once, but have now ceased to believe, like a college professor of whom I knew. He said his mother believed in the virgin birth of Jesus, and that God made Adam and Eve and placed them in the garden of Eden, and that Moses wrote the Pentateuch, etc., but he was happy that he had progressed since his mother's day, and no longer believed these things. He had left the nursery faith, in short, and, poor fellow! had fallen into the category of those of whom Paul speaks in another place: "professing themselves to be wise, they become fools."

It is not to be wondered at that some have turned away from the truth when there are so many of this kind of people around. In the atmosphere of infidelity it is hard to retain their faith, especially when they themselves do not open their Bible, or hear it expounded on the Lord's Day, or read the books that illuminate its pages or confirm its truth. Timothy could not continue in the things he had "learned and been assured of," if he had remained passive. He had to "follow on to know the Lord."

"Till I come," said Paul in his earlier letter, "give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. . . . Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them, that thy profiting [progress] may appear to all."

Here is a hint for pastors. Who believes that Timothy was admonished to "give attendance" to anything like the latest word on evolution, or the scientific aspects of Christian thought? These things have a place, of course. The warrior needs to know the shifting maneuvers of his enemy, a reconnaissance should not become a truce. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. But shun profane and vain babblings," which is the correct title for nine-tenths of the "new thought" of today.

Transforming Faith Into Deeds

BUT Timothy could not continue in the things he had "learned and been assured of" unless he did something more than read and meditate. He must act! "I charge thee therefore before God and the Lord Jesus Christ . . . preach the Word. Be instant in season, out of season." This does not necessarily mean "prepare and deliver sermons." Seven years in college and seminary are not required as a preparation to "preach the Word." After the martyrdom of Stephen "there was a great persecution against the church at Jerusalem, and they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." What scholastic training did they for this work? The women preached it, I do not, and the children as well as the adults, for it meant telling "the old, old story of Jesus and his love," and the proclamation of the great redemption growing out of the death, resurrection and ascension of our Lord.

Preaching the Word is a layman's task quite as much as a clergyman's. "Be instant in season, out of season," suggests it. It is a fireside duty, a social duty, the duty of the street and the shop, to create an atmosphere for God in which his Spirit can save and cleanse men.

Revival is in the air today, but the real revival will only come when preaching the Word becomes dominant in the pew, as in the pulpit. I suppose the greatest revival of modern times was that of Ulster, Ireland, in the late '50's, which spanned the canal and kindled the fire at the old Fulton Street prayer-meeting. It awakened Moody and Sankey, by whose ministry it spanned the ocean a second time and blessed the whole of Great Britain. But it was a layman's revival; that is to say, able pastors and faithfully indoctrinated their flocks with the teaching of Holy Scriptures for more than a decade or two. They had built the altar, piled the wood and laid the sacrifice upon it, but when the fire from heaven fell, it kindled the laity, who "went everywhere preaching the Word." In church, chapel and meeting-house, in town-hall and public market-place, on the village green and in the home of the cottager, by day and by night they proclaimed it, and oh, what a work of God followed! To read about it is to cry out with a great longing for its return.

If the Watchman Warn Not

AND yet preaching is more than proclaiming the simple Gospel. "Reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine," is the admonition of the apostle. It is always the duty of Christians not only to evangelize, but through the Word to "consider one another and provoke unto love and to good works."

We talk of social service. Blessed be God for all there is of it in the world! But let not its emphasis be too strongly laid on the externalities of it. Better their bodies, their homes, their schools, their playgrounds and their shops, but do not leave them there, lest, after all, they perish. What difference does it make whether a man goes into perdition from the sleeping-porch of an apartment house or the vile bunk of a Chinese opium den? "I charge thee . . . before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, not to shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the Word." "Ponder the urgency of the apostle's appeal," says Bishop McIlwain. "As he looks death in the face, what is it which lies so heavy on his heart? What is it over which he thus recalls the presence of the Father and the Son, and summons up the prospect of the coming and the judgment and the kingdom? It is the preaching, the proclaiming of the Word of God."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON S. COOPER

The All-Sufficiency of Grace

SUNDAY, June 13. II Corinthians 12: 9. "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is perfected in weakness." This Gospel was given to an ambassador of grace whose work was apparently being hindered by "a thorn in the flesh." He had prayed for a removal of the blemish, but the thorn remained. His prayer was answered in a more abounding gift of grace. The blemish was left, but more strength was given to carry it. The good Lord eases our yoke by increasing our strength. He giveth more grace, and so transforms the sigh into a song.

That is always a great witness to the power of the Lord when the onlooker hears singing from beneath the burdens, and sees infirmity irradiated with a smile. It is when graciousness is seen in fellowship with praise, or serenity in the company of sickness, or cheerfulness walking with deformity, that the world is held in arrested wonder. To behold the spirit of confidence in conditions of peace or plenty is nothing; but to see it when sickness is in the house, and the wolf is at the door, makes us think about the good Lord who made it possible. We can make our very thorns the ministers of his peace.

When, therefore, an infirmity remains, even when we have prayed for its removal, we must not assume that our prayer has been overlooked by our God. He is calling us to distinguished service. He is giving us opportunity to win brilliant honors. He wants us to glorify his name in difficult places, against heavy odds to magnify the power of his grace. The thorn may remain, but so does the grace, and with the grace we can convert a crown of thorns into a crown of glory. J. H. J.

God a Defense and Shield

MONDAY, June 14. Isaiah 33: 13-24. "The Lord will be with us . . . a place of broad rivers and streams." As a matter of fact, Jerusalem had no river. Thebes had her Nile; Babylon her Euphrates; but the Holy City was situated high among the hills, and the nearest river was the Jordan, some fifteen miles away. We may almost imagine the citizens assembled in the public places lamenting that there was nothing to break the front of the foe. "Would that we had a broad river, on the far side of which Sennacherib's army must wade; but now they can run their battering-rams and scaling-ladders immediately against our walls." If Isaiah had been within hearing-distance, he would at once have broken in, saying: "River? We need no river. The Lord will be to us all that a river is to others, and surely it were better to have him as the barrier between us and the foe than any river that ever spread its brimming waters from bank to bank. The Lord is with us as a place of broad rivers and streams." The river stands for the irrigation of the gardens and fields. The same thought occurs in Psalm 46, written at this time, where the psalmist sings of the river that should make glad the city of God.

We may lack the river, which would supply us with defense, or water our lands, but we need not envy others, because the glorious Lord—the risen, glorified Christ—will more than compensate us. Listen to his strong, clear accents: My grace is sufficient for thee! F. B. M.

Discipline and Faithfulness

TUESDAY, June 15. Deuteronomy 32: 11. "As an eagle that stirreth up her nest, . . . he is to them, he bare them on his pinions." Such is the description of God's dealing with his people, as described by Moses in his immortal song just before his death. An old man, looking back upon the track of his forty years of wandering as the leader of the children of God in the wilderness, this great lawgiver and statesman likens his experience to that of the eaglets in the crag of the mountain, whose nest the mother stirs and destroys in order that the young birds may be taught how to fly. As the mother eagle does not leave her own, but always hovers near to bear up her young upon her strong wings when they are about to fall, so he sees in memory the way in which the Lord had always encamped round about his people and had never left them to strange gods.

It is the story of life, discipline and often disaster; and then the strong support of the arms of God about the soul who really trusts him. Today as in the days of Moses, God is near to his people. He knows the way we take. He gives us hard tasks to test our strength. Character is formed in the storms of life, says Goethe. Success or failure is determined not simply by the daring with which we try our wings against the unaccustomed and often antagonistic air of unknown experiences, but also by the attitude of our confidence toward God and our own souls.

One ship drives East, another drives West,
While the selfsame breezes blow;
The one is of the south, and one the north,
That sends them where they go.

C. S. C.

The Christian's Heritage of Freedom

WEDNESDAY, June 16. John 8: 25-40. "The truth shall make you free." Truth always frees. The villagers cease to dread to pass the haunted glen when they learn the truth that there are no such things as goblins or fays. The slave-girl refuses to remain longer in the house of her oppressor when she discovers that he has no longer any claim on her. The dying are set free from fear when they are told the blessed truth that Jesus waits for them on the other side.

So when Jesus reveals the truth of all that he has done for us—how that in him we are accepted and triumphant; that through him we sit in heavenly places sharing his ascension-power; that we are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, then the whole aspect of life alters. We see our position and take it. We learn our power and use it. We realize that the prison-doors, which we thought were locked, are only on the latch, and we pass forth into freedom. This is the prerogative of the sons of God. The apostle describes it as "the glorious liberty of the sons of God." They are free from the lash of a broken law, because Jesus paid their penalty and satisfied its last demands. Free from the weary gnawing of remorse, because their iniquity is forgiven, and their sin covered. Free from the bondage of corruption, because the chains have been struck off by his mighty hand. Free from the love of sin, because they dare not grieve their dearest Lord whose Spirit strives within. Free from the dread of death, since he has died. And this is their indissoluble heritage: "The Son abideth in the house for ever." F. B. M.

The World the Christian's Field of Service

THURSDAY, June 17. John 17: 15. "I pray not that thou shouldest take them from the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil one." A Brahman of one of the highest castes said to us while we were in India not long ago: "I am getting my worldly affairs in shape to go to the jungle of North India, where I shall devote the remainder of my life to meditation. My great ambition is to become a Sanyassi, and to leave the world with its material strife and care."

The Brahman of India believes that emancipation from the sin and sway of the world is to be brought about only by the most complete abandonment of the everyday life of men in the school of austerity, far away from worldly affairs. He leaves his home and his responsibilities and goes into the forest or jungle, living only upon what is placed in his beggar's bowl, spending large portions of his life meditating upon the mystery of God and the universe.

This world-flight has tended to withdraw from active participation in public life some of the best minds of India. No community or state can afford to allow its highest ability to retire from participation in everyday life. In present-day India, these men are needed to be the intelligent fathers of the coming generation, to take the lead in municipal activities, in education, in social reform, in journalism, philanthropy and every form of public enterprise.

Christ gave a different message than this of departure from the duties and privileges of citizenship in the real world. His Gospel is only effective, or chiefly so, in an environment of struggle and discipline and toil. To him the world is, as Brown-ing said, "Just the stuff to try the soul's strength on," a school for the education of man. He bids men emancipate themselves from the sway of the world; he warns men regarding the delusion of the world's pleasures and things that perish in the using, but he does not bid them abandon the world of men; he rather sends them into society and business to serve men there. If we examine Christ's words, we find that they apply peculiarly to those who till the soil, who work for and with money, men who buy and sell, and who are enjoined to invest and properly use their talents.

This is God's method of working out his purpose. Every one of us who learns God's wishes and obeys them becomes a real co-worker with God in his great world plan. "Ye are the light of the world," said Jesus. When we share this light in kindly sympathy with those in trouble, in loving thoughtfulness to family or friends, we are following our great Leader. In his thought lies one of the great incentives for bearing burdens and doing hard things in the daily routine. We are workers together with God in the world. C. S. C.

When Christ Is in the Heart

FRIDAY, June 18. Colossians 1: 24-2: 5. "The riches of the glory of this mystery which is Christ in you." We will suppose that a widow's only son has gone to sea. After a time the rumor comes to her little home that he is dead, and she goes her lonely way broken-hearted. The years pass, and a stalwart seaman asks if he may lodge with her. She gladly consents. His weekly payments will ease her burden; but in addition, she is conscious that something in his presence opens a new joy in her soul. Ah, her eyes are holden. If she only could recognize her boy what an ecstasy of joy would be hers. He is there, though she knows it not. Christ is in your heart, but you fail to realize his literal presence there. It is a mystery—a secret!

One day as they sit at the midday meal, he lets fall some word, makes use of some gesture, and suddenly the scales drop from her eyes, she springs to her feet and rushes to embrace him with many a tender kiss. There you have the glory of the mystery. The secret breaks in her rapture, her smiles and tears, her irresistible exclamations, as she rejoices over her new-found son. Then they talk together, and he extracts the story of her poverty and privation. Her hands are hard with toil, her back bent, her dress worn and faded. But he assures her that all these are finished with. promises that she shall be provided with comfort to the end of her life, thrusts his hand into his pocket and draws it forth filled with gold, as the proof that his words are true, and the earnest of all that is to follow. Here are the riches of this glorious secret. Christ is within, but if we only realized it, and drew on him, and allowed him to carry out his purposes of love, we should find ourselves more than capable of meeting all the demands of life, and these supplies of grace would be the pledge of glory to be revealed. F. B. M.

Doing His Will Day by Day

SATURDAY, June 19. Matthew 24: 36. "But of that day and hour knoweth no man." We know not when we shall die, nor when Christ will come again. We only know both are on the way. Our duty is to live on from day to day, doing the Master's will until he comes and calls us. Knowing the times and seasons is not a factor in human character. Today is ours; tomorrow belongs to God. Had we not better be working than idly looking for signs of his coming? If it should be announced that Jesus is coming tomorrow at two o'clock, many would live on till the half-hour before his coming in pleasure-seeking and heedlessness. It was so at the first coming. When he came unto his own, his own received him not. They had none of the Gospel oil in the lamps of their hearts to illuminate the way to the wedding feast of the Bridegroom.

Opportunity is long enough to prepare for eternity. Its hour is today; tomorrow does not belong to mortals. Christ is coming to judge the world. When, where and how are small questions beside the colossal fact of his coming. What we have done with Jesus will decide what he will do with us.

Is the candle of life a good one?
Are but nobly spent today;
For tomorrow's light is gone,
And the waiting win no bays.

E. W. C.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

The Sting of Sin

TERROR struck the heart of New York's circle of vicious pleasure-seekers when the case of a young woman, who had lost or pledged large sums of money, was brought into court lately. That sudden lifting of the curtain of a certain phase of New York's night life revealed startling facts.

It is all very well, people may say, for young women and young men and older men to plunge headlong into follies and vices, but when some one's money is stolen—Halt! Let the courts investigate.

The same thing has happened many a time in deeper or at least in less respectable dens of iniquity. Vice goes on unchecked and unnoticed till, suddenly, a pistol shot, a shriek, an ambulance, or an undertaker's wagon—then the courts see what is to be done.

But many a darker tragedy than the loss of a fortune or even the loss of a life takes place where sin reigns. The real tragedies are the loss of innocence, the loss of opportunity, the loss of pure loves, the loss of honor, the loss of eternal hope, the loss of a soul. The law courts record only the loss of property or reputation, the damage to life or limb. Upon the eternal records are put down these deeper spiritual disasters.

This is always and inevitably what sin means—that some one is getting hurt. There may be no present pain; there may be no apparent loss; death itself may be far away—but sin stings, sin hurts, sin maims, sin will bring agony and loss and doom at last.

Popular amusements have been running with furious speed toward the depths of filth and shame. The public has been unconcerned except to join, in greater and greater numbers, in the frivolities or to read with milder or greater interest of the doings of "Tangoland" and the cabaret. Life after life, home after home, has been swept into the vortex. It has been matter for humor, for the shrugging of shoulders, of contempt for those who still hold "old-fashioned" views. But suddenly the public is told that girls are being robbed; is led to suspect that some are being lured first to pleasure and then to slavery. Then the public acts.

Already life is quieter at night along Broadway. Detectives are on the watch. Officials are alert.

But why not stop sooner? Why not realize that where sin is going on some one is surely being hurt? Why not turn aside from the life that means harm and hurt to the life that means health and helpfulness and hope? The Bible does well to make sin and folly one. There is always that inevitable "at last." "At last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." "Be sure your sin will find you out." The only kind of pleasure to take is the pleasure that has no poison in it. The only way to avoid the sting of sin is to let sin itself alone.

The Moral of the Becker Case

AFTER a long and costly fight to set aside the decision of the lower courts and grant a new trial, the end of the famous case of ex-Police Lieutenant Charles A. Becker, of New York, accused of procuring the death of Rosenthal, the gambler, has at last been reached. The higher court has affirmed his conviction and sentenced him to be executed during the week beginning July 12. Becker's case carries a lesson of unusual importance. His was a double criminality. An officer of the law, he not only failed to detect crime, but leagued himself with the very worst class of criminals in New York, the gunmen, to commit a crime of his own planning. Trusting to his official position and the influence which he believed would make him immune to punishment, even if detected, he brought shame and disgrace upon a body of public servants who were the paid guardians of the lives and property of the citizens.

Three years have passed since the murder of Rosenthal. During those years, almost every expedient known to criminal law has been employed to defeat the ends of justice and to save Becker. Four of the gunmen who were his tools and accomplices were convicted of carrying out his murderous plans, and paid the penalty of their crime in the electric chair over a year ago, while the principal criminal, by the use of money and influence, was granted a new lease of life and enabled to keep up the fight. But the end of the law's delays, remarkably elastic in his case, has been reached at last. Becker must now face the same grim punishment as his associates, unless the slender hope of executive clemency should be realized. His crime should stand as a perpetual warning to the police of every American city, admonishing them to be true and faithful in the performance of duty and never to strike hands with criminals, no matter how great the temptation.

Peace vs. Militarism

IT IS beginning to be widely recognized that the influence of this war upon the people of America will be determined by our own attitude. It will be good or evil as we make it. If we keep no higher ideal before us than the increase of our commerce and the mere making of profit through Europe's misfortunes, this mercenary attitude will react upon ourselves. If, however, the nobler ideal rules—the purpose of serving humanity and of exemplifying this by our kindness and justice to all—we can firmly rely upon divine wisdom being given to strengthen and guide us safely through.

That this view of the situation is in disfavor with the militarists and the advocates of increased armaments is made evident by their latest public deliverances on the subject. At the recent meeting of the Lake Mohonk Conference, the delegates found themselves compelled to listen to several addresses which must have sounded strange to ears long accustomed to the talk of international arbitration and the cultivation of world-harmony. President Hibben of Princeton was the first to bring the war spirit to the platform. He vigorously assailed the educational work of the peace societies, especially in the schools, where the horrors of the economic losses of war were impressed upon the minds of the children. He urged the preparedness of the nation's forces, not for war but against war; yet his whole address was a call to arms. Militarist officials and those who are personally interested in arms production would have been delighted to hear him, as his attitude was precisely what they desire to popularize. If the majority of our people were of the same opinion as the Princeton professor, the militarists and jingoists would have everything their own way. With a nation fully armed and prepared, the blow usually comes first, the sober second thought afterward.

Rear Admiral Chester was another of those who struck a discordant note. His plea was for a big navy. Taking his cue from Colonel Roosevelt's energetic vocabulary, he warned the mothers of America not to bring up their sons as mollycoddles. We must be prepared for the inevitable that is certain to come. With these speakers it counted for nothing that the peace program does not exclude adequate preparation for defense against possible aggression, and that the administration has made it clear that such is its purpose.

Fortunately, there were other speakers at Mohonk who had given the subject far more thorough consideration than either the admiral or the professor, yet who had reached quite a different conclusion. John Bassett Moore, one of our most distinguished authorities on international relations, advocated international co-operation as the best means of establishing the reign of law. Other clear-headed speakers held that this nation should be willing to make sacrifice to demonstrate its right to a place in the councils which will eventually settle the war. After the war, Europe will still be an armed camp. Are we to be in that category? Ex-Governor Baldwin of Connecticut urged a policy of "avoiding occasions for war." President Mitchell of Delaware College believed "the moral judgment of America may prove to have more weight than armies and navies in deciding the colossal issues at stake." President Woolley of Mount Holyoke pointed out that it was the great and inspiring task of the United States to let the other nations understand how fear, suspicion and hatred may be replaced by sympathy, co-operation and the spirit of kindness. These remarks were in harmony with the spirit of the conference, as expressed in its platform, which was adopted without a dissenting voice. It cordially approves the policy of President Wilson and points out that the present war furnishes the most logical and convincing proof of the superiority of methods that make for peace and justice, over those that call for the resort to violence.

There has been a great deal of needlessly sharp and somewhat foolish criticism expended against the peace organizations for their attitude on the European war. This has been accentuated since the despatch of our note to Germany. One of these organizations, which is affiliated with the New York Peace Society, has been challenged by Congressman Gardner on the ground that the use of a publicity fund for the dissemination of peace principles at the present time might be regarded as an attempt to bribe and pollute the sources of public information." This is nonsense. This country is not at war, and we believe the overwhelming majority of our citizens desire no war with any nation. If we accept the sentiments expressed by President Wilson in his public addresses on recent occasions as representative of the feeling of the country—which we can sincerely believe them to be—there is nothing further from the national mind than a desire to have the United States embroiled in the European conflict. If these societies, by their present course, are influencing public opinion in all, they are doing it in the right direction. It may seem otherwise to Colonel Roosevelt, Congressman Gardner, Rear Admiral Chester and others of a class who take a lurid view; but we are content that if the question were to be submitted to the whole people, the result would favor, not the hot-headed, reckless policy which would plunge the country into turmoil, but the sane attitude which believes that nations, like individuals, should live unselfishly for the highest good, and that there is no international question incapable of being settled by the principles of reason and justice.

We trust that the peace societies will stand to their colors, and demonstrate to the country that they have the courage of their convictions in the controversy with the advocates of militarism.

Eden in the War Zone

ONE of the novel developments of the great war is the fact that it has been carried into Lower Mesopotamia, at the head of the Persian Gulf—the traditional site of the Garden of Eden. This region, which laterographers now include in the Chaldean of the Bible, is identified with the "Sealand" of the chronicles of ancient Babylonia. While there are many different sites claimed for Eden, this, by the general agreement of students of Bible history, is regarded as the most authentic, and as having most in common with the description in Genesis. The Assyrians called the region "Kardunyash," or the "Southland," giving reference to its attractiveness and fertility; but the name which has clung to it most closely is that which was given to it by the Sumerians who possessed it in "the morning of the world," and who called it Edinu (Eden). Among the Sumerian tablets only recently deciphered, there is found the oldest written story of the Creation, from which were probably derived all the other narrative: Assyrian, Babylonian, Egyptian, and possibly Hebrew. The Sumerian was a non-Semitic tongue and was spoken and written in the Euphrates Valley at a time that reaches back to the beginnings of history.

Much of the land of this ancient region is now undrained marsh, and where there doubtless were in some remote age, cities and considerable populations, there is now an unwholesome desert, dotted with crumbling ruins. Like all the rest of that territory, it belongs to the Turk. Now, the struggle for the control of the Persian Gulf has brought European troops on the scene, and gunboats from the inland sea have passed up the channel of the Euphrates, and the old Edinu, with its palm and flowers, its luxurious vegetation and its clinging marshes, has echoed to the sound of modern cannon. On a smaller scale, it is participating in the struggle that is shaking Smyrna and Ephesus and other Biblical cities. One reads with a strange feeling of the forced marches, the rattle of machine gun and hard fighting in a place which the whole world has regarded as sacred and mysterious, and which the mind naturally associates with peace and harmony and every beauty that nature bestows. Science has declared that modern engineering can redeem the ancient land which, under Turkish rule, has been reduced to a wilderness and that it can be made once more the garden spot of Asia. Old Sumerian Edinu, restored to something of its former well-being and productiveness, may become one of the unexpected results of the great war.

SEEING AMERICA FIRST. "Going abroad" will be a phrase but little heard this summer, for the great war has taken away all the charm of European travel for the present. We learn that less than thirty per cent. of the usual trans-Atlantic bookings are recorded thus far, and these represent almost exclusively imperative business travel. It is estimated that the money spent in Europe by tourists in recent years aggregated between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000 annually.

The BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Sunday Closes Paterson Campaign

BILLY SUNDAY closed his seven weeks' Gospel campaign in Paterson, N. J., May 23, with memorable exercises. It is estimated that thirty-five thousand people heard him at the three services held, and that at least five thousand more were turned away, unable to get into the building. Eleven hundred and twenty-five men and women "hit the sawdust trail" at the evening meeting, the greatest number of trail-hikers at any meeting Sunday ever held anywhere. Added to the number at the morning and afternoon meetings, it brought the total for the day up to two thousand and ninety. The committee estimated that the total attendance in the tabernacle during the seven weeks was 775,000. Seventeen thousand "hit the sawdust trail," about 13,000 of whom signed cards pledging themselves to lead Christian lives. The sum of $31,482.71 was collected for current expenses and $658.78 for local charities. It was officially announced Sunday night that Mr. Sunday's compensation will be about $25,000. The committee on Monday handed him a check for $24,000, and other amounts will be added to the free-offering. Billy Sunday's parting words were: "Farewell, fellow sinners; I am free from your blood. My messages are all delivered. I leave you with God. I have pleaded, I have entreated, but could not compel; and until the judgment day breaks I bid you farewell." Billy Sunday has many critics, some of them harsh, but those who invite him to the cities, and work with him in his meetings who are closest to him, and ought to know him best, believe in him, in his sincerity and his faith. And these same persons declare that the work is singularly permanent in building up the churches, toning up the public conscience, and tearing down the institutions of evil. Mr. Sunday preaches conviction of sin and faith in a crucified Christ as the evangelist's prisoner did when the question was asked: "Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And Paul said: Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." (Acts 16: 30, 31.)

Volcano in Activity

By a telegram from Redding, Calif., it is learned that Lassen Peak has been in a state of dangerous activity. Fortunately the torrent of mud and volcanic substance from the crater was diverted into the old lava fields, and the lower part of the fertile Hot Creek Valley was saved, at least for the present, from destruction. Ranchers took advantage of the mountain's temporary somnolence to return to their fields and drive their stock to the highlands. Fifty refugees were camped at Lassen, waiting for provisions before seeking a safe haven on higher ridges. Hope that the volcanic flood would fertilize their lands was abandoned when the thick substance hardened almost to the solidity of cement. The lava lies over the farms and meadows from two to four feet deep, and it is feared the soil can never be uncovered. There is the manifestation of severity as well as of mildness in nature. The Scripture has this reference to God's omnipotence in the volcano: "Bow thy heavens, O Lord, and come down; touch the mountains, and they shall smoke." (Ps. 144: 5.)

Dog Kills Guinea Pigs

AULLDOG broke through the wire netting of a window to the animal room in the medical building of the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor the other day, and killed 120 guinea pigs. The pigs were being used for research work in lead poisoning and their death rendered practically useless two years' work by the pathology department. The 120 pigs represented two generations, the first of which was inoculated with lead poisoning two years ago in an effort to trace the effect, mentally and physically, of lead poisoning through several generations. We have a spirit nature, made in God's image. It carries about with it a mixture of clay called the body, with a physical constitution much like that possessed by the lower animal tribes. It is medical modern science which has discovered the many points of similarity between the body of man and that of the lower animals, and has taken advantage of it in the tracing and treatment of human diseases. The slaughter of the guinea pigs may have delayed important discoveries; but the bulldog did not know any better. It is a question whether modern science has anywhere made more rapid progress than in the cure of human diseases. Christ was the Physician of the body as well as of the soul, and of him it was said: "And great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all." (Matt. 12: 15.)

BIBLES FOR MEN OF THE FLEET

AS GIFTS of the New York Bible Society, nearly 20,000 volumes of the Scriptures were distributed to the sailors of the Atlantic fleet while it was in New York Harbor recently. The distribution was made on the last Sunday morning that the fleet was in port by one hundred and forty-five young women and young men. Parties made up of two young men and four young women visited each of the ships. The young men carried the books and the young ladies presented them to the sailors. These young people were representatives from the Evangelistic Committee, the Bible Teachers' Training School, and a large number of the churches of the city. Dr. Carter, of the New York Bible Society, presented Admiral Fletcher with a handsomely engrossed copy of the Bible. All the books were received with appreciation and gratitude. Underneath our farms, our mines, and our railroads, and ships there is deep down the nation's faith in God's holy Word, and intense loyalty and love to the Christ which it reveals, and this is the secret of America's greatness. It was a wise, a beautiful, a dutiful thing to plan the gifts of Bibles on so large a scale to the sailors of the fleet, and to execute it so well. Each book speaks this personal word to the twenty thousand men receiving it: "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." (John 5: 39.)

General Thomas H. Hubbard Dies

GENERAL HUBBARD, wise and brave officer of the Civil War, died recently. He was a patron of science, took a great interest in the Arctic explorations of Robert Edwin Peary, and did more than any other man in furnishing the money for these explorations, and hence became a full partner in the achievements of the latter. Money is as necessary as men in any good enterprise for the promotion of literature, science, art, benevolence, government or religion. It is the love of money that is the sin. Money given by the plain people and the poor is just as sacred as that of the rich in performing duty for this world, and in preparing for the next. In the mastery of the earth, the soul, or the spirit-life, giving is an indispensable factor. The necessity of money in missionary and church enterprises is thus recognized: "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." (1 Cor. 16: 2.)

America's Greatest Flower Garden

ONE hundred and fifty acres of park land were recently added to the two hundred and fifty already possessed, making the New York Botanical Garden the largest in the United States or Europe. The annual spring inspection recently was a notable affair. Much attention is paid to the plantation of rhododendrons along the line of the conservatories facing the museum building. The perforated rail enclosing the gardens at the front of the conservatories sprinkles these gardens with water. The garden contains specimens of plants from about all climes. The fig, the date, the cocoa, the coffee, the tea and other tropical products can be seen growing. The largest Japanese cherry orchard in the country has been in bloom, delighting the visitors with the blossoms of pale pink, deep rose and white. One of the most exquisitely beautiful features of the May inspection was forty thousand tulips, representing over a hundred varieties, in full bloom. They ranged from the rarest Dutch blooms to the Sir Thomas Lipton, which is a tall, upstanding plant with a vivid, deep flower, fading to yellow at the stalk. Tulips are found wild on the northern shores of the Mediterranean, in the Levant, Armenia, Caucasus, Persia, Central Asia and Afghanistan. They were introduced into Holland in the sixteenth century from Constantinople. Holland today furnishes many of the finest tulip bulbs that beautify the gardens of the world. The wealth of beauty in the Bronx Botanical Garden reminds one of these words: "For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come." (Sol. Song 2: 11, 12.)

Steals Blind Man's Coins

IN a city street the other day a blind man was seated on the pavement on a corner playing an old-fashioned accordion, much out of tune, and singing solos with a cracked voice, while a little cup was displayed for pennies which he was trying to earn, and which he hoped the benevolent people would give him. At a time when no one was near, a miserable fellow slipped up, stole the coins in the cup and was walking rapidly away, when a woman, who had witnessed the theft, halted him. She called a policeman and had him taken into the criminal court to testify against him. Theft usually looks for an eye asleep or turned away, but to take the pennies from a blind man is the limit of meanness and deserves public contempt and a severe verdict. Fortunately the case is an exception, as most men, women and children are good to the blind. The petty larceny was an infraction of the commandment: "Thou shalt not steal." (Ex. 20: 15.)

Edison Links Phonograph to Telephone

THOMAS A. EDISON announces his latest invention, the telescribe, a combination of telephone and phonograph, by which he claims telephone conversations may be perfectly recorded on a wax record though the persons conversing be 3,000 miles apart. A generation of invention and scientific development is centered in the new apparatus, which Mr. Edison says "the world will soon recognize as a great commercial asset." The latest invention of the great scientist reveals not only his intellectual penetration into the secrets of Nature, but his enormous energy and sustained application, which are a part of his genius. With such marvels revealed in the natural world, there ought to be no hesitancy in believing in the indestructibility of human thought and word, or of records of words and deeds kept in memory and conscience, and in the book of the Judge, to be unrolled at the Last Day. This solemn fact it is worth our while to consider: "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." (Eccles. 12: 14.)

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood
JANE ADDAMS
President of the Congress

WHAT THE WOMEN DID

BY JANE ADDAMS
Chairman American Delegation

THREE facts stand forth pre-eminently as I look back upon the International Congress of Women held at The Hague, Holland, April 28 to May 1, to formulate and express the responsibility of womanhood with reference to the world cataclysm that is becoming more terrible every day:

First—Though the nations are engaged in a titanic struggle, the solidarity of woman has held. Delegates from five of the warring and ten of the neutral nations met in solemn conclave for three days with never a sign of national hatred.

Second—The 1,150 women, assembled from fifteen nations, conducted their debate with a restraint and decorum that sorely disappointed a score of newspaper correspondents who came in the hope of witnessing an hysterical outburst, but that made possible the perfection of a conservative, forward-looking program for which we can firmly stand.

Third—Deep though the emotion of the women was, and heartrending though the scenes were that some had themselves witnessed in conquered sections of the war area, their sympathies were those born of revulsion against the whole war system and its attendant wrongs to humanity at large, rather than of mere selfish concern for their own kin.

Only those who have been close to the theater of war and have learned at first hand something of the constant fear of the smaller states lest they, too, be engulfed, can appreciate the magnitude of the undertaking. It was not difficult for the American delegation to speak and act. We are the enfant terrible, as it were, in the family of nations. Even this world war has not put any particular restraint upon us. Not so with the people of Norway or Sweden or Holland or Denmark. With both parties to the European conflict constantly trying to draw the smaller powers into the maelstrom, every neutral citizen must weigh carefully every word that he says that bears upon the international situation.

Then, too, there was the ridicule which many of the "peacettes," as certain British papers contemptuously called the splendid English women, 180 in number, who tried in vain to get to the congress, had to face on every side.

It was not surprising, then, that the first day of the conference concerned itself more or less with platitudes protesting against the barbarity of war, pledging woman's support toward the creation of a better world-order and demanding that women be enfranchised in order to bring their forces to bear against the savagery of warfare. The delegates hesitated to discuss specific problems. They were timid in their utterances. We of America, accustomed to unbridled speech, had, because of four days' delay off Dover, England, arrived later than the other delegations and had not yet become acclimatized.

But pretty soon one delegate would venture a bolder assertion, and then another and still another, until by the end of the congress such intricate problems as commerce and investments, world-organization, armaments, and the terms of settlement had been discussed and disposed of with ringing resolutions that stirred the hearts of all. Never before have I attended an international meeting in which the participants so visibly grew in breadth of view, in bold assertion of the truth and the recognition of wrong, even though that wrong be committed by one's own country. To cite but a single instance, our American delegates did not hesitate to denounce the pernicious activities of investors who now for over a year have tried to draw us into a conflict with Mexico, nor did they hesitate to assert that the Panama Canal, together with other high-ways of world communication, should be neutralized.

One of the delegation proposed to submit a general resolution against the shipping of arms from the United States to belligerent nations, but the chair was obliged to rule the matter out of order, as it fell under the standing orders adopted at the opening of the congress that neither the causes of the present conflict nor its conduct should be discussed at its meetings, and this ruling prevailed.

Copyright, International News Service
THE AMERICAN DELEGATES TO THE WOMEN'S PEACE CONFERENCE

The educative value of the conference is beyond estimate. The evening sessions were thrown open to the general public, and one saw the vast galleries of the "dierentuin" sprinkled at first with a lone man here and there, who had probably come out of sheer curiosity, the second night filled with a larger and less skeptical male attendance, and finally, on the third night, crowded to the limit with earnest, eager men, some of them in military uniforms, but for all that ready to applaud vigorously as the system of force was assailed.

The congress was not lacking in touching incidents. The heart of the delegates was revealed when, amid high feeling, the generous offer of the Dutch women was accepted to send shiploads and carloads of the beautiful hyacinths, tulips and flowers for which Holland is famous to the wounded soldiers in French, English, Belgian and German hospitals. The Dutch Government franked these flowers, sent with the card of the International Congress of Women as far as the frontier of Holland, and formal arrangements for their reception had been made with the various countries to which they were sent. This secured from every belligerent nation a certain official recognition and at the same time ensured that they knew that such a body as the International Congress of Women was meeting at The Hague. We have already heard from friends of the pleasure given by these flowers in various countries.

Again, a tremendous ovation was given to the five Belgian delegates, who arrived a day late, after delays along the frontier, and a German delegate—in fact a recognized leader of the German group—moved a special resolution of welcome and requested that the Belgians be given a place of honor on the platform. Impressive also was the moment of absolute silence during which the great assemblage rose in tribute to the departed soldiers and to the millions of mothers and wives left behind.

The congress was not satisfied with resolutions and pious wishes. It acted. It voted to detach delegations to the capitals of Europe and of the United States, to label before the governments the following program adopted by the congress:

"This International Congress of Women of different nations, classes, creeds and parties is united in expressing sympathy with the suffering of all, whatever their nationality, who are fighting for their count or laboring under the burden of war."

"Since the mass of people in each of the countries now at war have themselves to be fighting, not as aggressors, but in self-defense and for their national existence, there can be no irreconcilable differences between them, and their common ideals afford a basis upon which a magnanimous and honorable peace might be established. The congress therefore urges the government of the world to put an end to this bloodshed, and to begin peace negotiations. It demands that the peace which follows shall be permanent and therefore based on principles of justice, including those laid down in the resolutions adopted by this congress, namely:

"That no territory should be transferred without the consent of the men and women in it, and that the right of conquest should not be recognized."

"That autonomy and a democratic parliament should be refused to any people."

"That the governments of all nations should come to an agreement to refer future international disputes to arbitration or conciliation and to bring social, moral and economic pressure to bear upon any country which resorts to arms."

"That foreign politics should be subject to democratic control and women granted equal political rights with men."

"This International Congress of Women resolves to urge the neutral countries to take immediate steps to create a conference of neutral nations which shall without delay offer continuous mediation. The conference shall invite suggestions for settlement from each of the belligerent nations and in any case shall submit to all of them, simultaneously, reasonable proposals as a basis of peace."

NEWS OF THE KINGDOM

—TWO HUNDRED AND FIVE medical students have joined a Pocket Testament League at Atlanta, Ga., agreeing to read a chapter in the New Testament every day. A Y. M. C. A. has been organized at this medical college. A total of nearly 5,000 persons joined the Pocket Testament League in Atlanta, as a result of the Chapman-Alexander evangelistic campaign.

THE LEVERICH MEMORIAL CHURCH was recently dedicated at Corona, L. I., as a testimonial to Mr. C. P. Leverich, who, while president of the Bank of New York many years ago, gave to Corona the Union Evangelical Church as "a free and forever undenominational church." The memorial church is now given by a son, C. D. Leverich, one of the board of managers of the American Bible Society, and will be regarded as the north branch of the Union Evangelical Church, of which latter Dr. W. J. Peck has been pastor for over a third of a century.

—THE RECENT CONVENTION OF ITALIAN CHRISTIAN workers in New York, under the auspices of the American Waldensian Aid Society, brought together over 100 men and women, representing churches of eight denominations working among the Italians east of Chicago, to organize a permanent Italian committee on this side of the ocean, with the object of acting as a link between the churches in Italy and the Italian churches in America, and taking a practical interest in helping the missionary work of the native Protestant Church of Italy, the Waldensian Church. Of the workers assembled, 43 were Presbyterians, 9 Episcopalians, 2 Italian Dutch Reformed, others Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, Y. M. C. A. and United Presbyterians, but of the whole number fully one-third were Waldensians either by birth or adoption, now working in connection with the various denominations in this country. There were 16 women missionaries or teachers. The new association starts life with 124 charter members. The prayers of our readers are asked for this organization, which will do much for the work of the Lord in Italy and among the Italians in America. Heb. 13: 24.

—MISSIONARY G. H. MALONE, Advent Mission, Nanking, China, sends an interesting account of a prayer meeting with some of our orphan boys. "At half past three," he writes, "we gathered in the big room in the orphanage. After prayer and Scripture reading and a short address, the meeting was opened for prayer for the so-called Christian nations who are at war. One boy prayed: 'O Lord, is it not wicked for men to kill each other? is it not considered murder? and will any murderer be allowed to enter thy kingdom? Please, God, destroy the devil in the hearts of Europeans now doing the devil's work.' Another prayed: 'Our loving heavenly Father, you sent your Son, Jesus Christ, to save men. Many who say they are Christ's followers are committing murder. Isn't there some righteous way to stop this great work of Satan? Send Jesus to put an end to this bad business.' The above is only a sample of some of the prayers offered by these orphans. With suffering and sorrow all around us, and these boys having passed through some sad experiences themselves, their little hearts go out in sympathy for the suffering children in Europe.

IF ADAM were still alive he would be about the same age as R. E. Morse. Adam met him after he was banished from the Garden of Eden, Eve also knew him after she ate the forbidden fruit. Pharaoh must have been well acquainted with him, as he met him repeatedly. He was with Joseph's brethren a long time after they sold Joseph into Egypt. Saul, David, Solomon and all the kings of old knew him well. And in the New Testament we find men who also knew him. Judas who betrayed the Lord and afterward killed himself, Peter who denied his Master. And so on all the way through the Bible and up to the present time. We allow him or have met him. Could we by any means annihilate R. E. Morse, how happy we would make the world! But no one cares to do so by the experience of others, and therefore all must learn by the one teacher, whose lesson is bitter in the extreme.

Experience! If our conscience were not hardened, and we would listen to its dictates oftener, we might become less familiar with R. E. Morse. Looking back is the time to see him. R. E. Morse is always right there and so we could see him as he is, we might gain his acquaintance: the outlaw, REMORSE.

C. L. GOOD

Called Higher

T. B. Garoutte, Merkel, Texas, April 2, 1915, 88.

Robert B. Justus, Carnegie, Pa., Mar. 26, 1915, 48.

Mrs. John Millett, of Reynolds, Ill., recently, Aged 70.

Mrs. Addie Slawson, Howard, Ill., Apr. 24, 1915, 66.

Miss C. R. Atkinson, Des Moines, Iowa, February 9, 1915, 75.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; a literary critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

THE important political event of the week ending May 27, the reconstruction of the British cabinet, continues to occupy a large share of public attention. The composition of this cabinet did not appear in the first numbers of the Christian Herald of June 2, so is here given:

Prime minister and first lord of the treasury, Mr. Asquith; minister without portfolio, Lord Lansdowne; lord high chancellor, Sir Stanley O. Buckmaster; president of the council, Lord Crewe; the seal, Lord Curzon of Kedleston; ex-quer, Reginald McKenna; secretary of state for home affairs, Sir John A. Simon; secretary for the colonies, Andrew Bonar Law; foreign affairs, Sir Edward Grey; India, J. Austen Chamberlain; war, Lord Kitchener; minister of munitions, David Lloyd-George; first lord of the admiralty, Arthur J. Balfour; president of the board of trade, Walter Runciman; president of the local government board, Walter Hume Long; chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, Winston Spencer Churchill; chief secretary for Ireland, Augustine Birrell; secretary for Scotland, Thomas McKinnon Wood; president of the board of agriculture, Lord Shelburne; first commissioner of works, Lewis Harcourt; member of the board of education, Arthur Henderson; attorney general, Sir Edward Carson.

The old cabinet was entirely Liberal, but the new coalition cabinet contains thirteen Liberals, eight Unionists and one Labor member, Mr. Henderson. One new ministry is created, that of war munitions, the portfolio of which is taken by Lord George, chancellor of the exchequer in the old. Of the old cabinet, Viscount Haldane, Earl Beauchamp, Herbert Samuel, Lord Lucas and J. A. Pease disappear completely, while Lord Crewe, Reginald McKenna, Lewis Harcourt, Winston Churchill, Sir J. A. Simon are retained, but have their portfolios changed, the most noticeable case being that of Winston Churchill, who, holding one of the most important portfolios in the old cabinet, first lord of the admiralty, which corresponds to our secretary of the navy, is given the purely honorary portfolio of chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in the new. Balfour, who was once premier, enters this cabinet as first lord of the admiralty. Lord Lansdowne, who was once minister of foreign affairs, becomes a minister without portfolio and will probably aid Sir Edward Grey.

Mr. Edward Carson represents the Ulster faction of Ireland, and there is regret that Mr. Redmond declined to enter the cabinet and make the representation embrace all political parties. The cabinet undoubtedly includes the strongmen in public life. Whether they will prove correspondingly strong as a working body is a question, the answer to which the country will anxiously await.

In spite of the attack on Lord Kitchener by Lord Northcliffe and his chain of papers in Great Britain and abroad, he retains his portfolio in the new cabinet, with divided responsibilities through the creation of the post of minister of munitions, to which David Lloyd-George is appointed. Admiral Lord Fisher will not retain his post of sea lord in the admiralty under Mr. Balfour.

On Sunday, May 23, the kingdom of Italy formally declared war on the Austro-Hungarian empire, which was followed on May 24 by a formal declaration of war on Italy by Germany. On Monday, the 24th, the ambassadors left, and diplomatic relations between these countries were at an end. At this writing the status of affairs between Turkey and Italy has not yet been defined formally, though undoubtedly a state of war between these two countries will eventually be proclaimed.

Since the declaration of war, little of importance has happened. Austria made an air raid on various towns, including Venice on the Italian Adriatic coast, doing little damage, and also made a torpedo boat attack on Ancona, where she claims to have sunk an Italian destroyer. The Italians countered by throwing a considerable body of troops across the northeastern frontier, occupying a stretch of Austrian territory along the River Isonzo. The Italian advance occupies a front of 100 kilometers (about 66 2/3 miles), and has as extreme points Caloretto on the north to the Gulf of Trieste on the south. The first contingent penetrated into Austrian territory distances ranging from two to four miles.

It is, in brief, summarizes the first thirty-six hours of the new stage of the ever-widening European conflict, which, being new, appeals to the popular imagination, rather sated by the seemingly unending struggle in the other theaters of the war. It may be a week or more before real serious hostilities begin.

It is reported, I do not know with what authority, that Marshal von Hindenburg will be relieved of command on the Russian front and placed in supreme command of the Austro-German forces in the campaign against Italy. Whether this or not, we may look for a Teutonic offense in the direction of Verona

GREECE MAY ENTER WAR

THE KING OF ITALY

RUMANIA MAY BE INVOLVED

THE EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA

within a comparatively short time, as Germany has always in her wars acted on the principle that the best defensive is a bold offensive, and it hardly seems that she will change her usual procedure in the present instance, particularly as, in this case, there is a military reason of importance that will very possibly be potent in pushing her to adopt this course, namely, the longer she defers attack the stronger Italy will probably grow.

There are vague rumors that Sweden is growing restless and may attack Russia, with the object of conquering Finland, thinking that the situation of Russia in her campaign against Germany and Austria is such that she would be unable to spare troops to defend the grand duchy. Probably all the Finns would be pleased if such an event took place, as they claim that Russia has not lived up to her agreements in her treatment of Finland.

It is very doubtful whether people on this side of the ocean have any real idea of the extent and frightfulness of the slaughter of human beings that is taking place on the other side. We can get some idea of it by taking the casualty lists among officers daily published in the London Times. Taking the last nine numbers which have reached us, those from May 5 to May 14 inclusive, but not including that of Sunday, the 9th, there fell in action, all told, 1,035 British officers alone.

Now, the British army is the smallest army, except the Belgian, Serbian and Montenegrin, in the field; and if, during a period of eight days, they lost more than 1,000 officers, how many must the much larger armies of France, Russia, Germany and Austria have lost in the same period? The period chosen is not abnormal. Preceding periods of a like number of days show a considerably larger loss.

A recent attack on the Ulster volunteers in the streets of Limerick, Ireland, has once more raised the most acute phase of the Irish question.

The land campaign in the attempt of the Allies to force the Dardanelles has developed some of the fiercest fighting of the war. The Allies were reinforced on May 18 and 19 by 30,000 fresh troops, which brought their total effective force up to about 75,000, about twenty-five per cent. of the force originally landed having been lost through casualties and sickness.

Almost as soon as landed, these troops were thrown against the Turkish positions. On the 21st the French made considerable progress and reached positions within a comparatively few yards of the Turkish trenches. On the 22d the Turks took the offensive and made a violent attack on the left of the Indian brigade. Very severe fighting ensued and lasted for several hours. Finally the Turks were driven back with heavy losses. A violent fight took place the same day between the Turks and the Australians and New Zealanders, which had an indecisive result, though the losses on both sides were heavy. On the 24th an armistice was agreed on for the purpose of burying the dead that were killed in the fighting of the three previous days, and, according to the British accounts, the Turks buried over 7,000 of their men during this suspension of hostilities. How great the losses of the Allies were has not been stated, but as the first list of casualties of the Australians alone totals 919, we are justified in assuming that they were very heavy.

The next day was comparatively quiet, but during the night of the 24th fighting on a large scale was resumed, and continued throughout the night and the next day, but resulted in very little change in the position of the contending forces. The Turks are putting up an extremely stiff defense, and it looks as though it would be a considerable time before the Allies will be able to carry out their plan of campaign.

During this land fighting, naval operations went on without intermission, the allied fleet maintaining a continuous bombardment of the forts defending the straits, but with what effect it is difficult to say. Both sides claim advantages, but as the fleet continues to bombard and the forts to reply, it does not seem as though either side had inflicted serious damage on the other.

During the week a desultory bombardment of Smyrna continued, and here, too, the bulletins are in direct conflict as to the results achieved.

The Russian Black Sea fleet once or twice attacked the defenses of the Bosphorus at the entrance to the Black Sea. However, these efforts were more in the nature of a demonstration than a serious bombardment.

The British submarine E 14, which, as will be remembered, penetrated into the Sea of Marmora a little while ago, it now appears sunk two Turkish torpedo

Continued on page 614

Copyright, International News Service

TRIESTE, AUSTRIA, INCLUDED IN ITALY'S TERRITORIAL DEMANDS

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

PRELIMINARY NOTE FROM GERMANY. In reply to President Wilson's note to the German Government upon the Lusitania affair and Germany's submarine activities in general, a courteous and entirely friendly request has been made that both governments first come to an agreement as to the facts in the various cases involved, namely, the sinking March 28 of the Britisher Paluba with an American, Thrasher, aboard; the aeroplane attack, April 24, on the American vessel Cushing, the sinking on May 1 of the American oil ship Gulflight with the resultant deaths of the captain and other Americans, and last, the sinking of the Lusitania, May 7. Upon reaching an agreement as to the facts, particularly as to the real character of the Lusitania and whether, as an auxiliary cruiser of the British navy, she not only was carrying a cargo of arms and ammunition but was also armed, Germany will make specific reply to the President's note. This course is not only in the interests of an accurate understanding between the two governments as to the points at issue, but possibly opens the way to submission of the whole subject to an international tribunal at The Hague. It seems possible that Germany's more definite reply will be in Washington by the time this issue of the Christian Herald is received by our readers.

COLLISION AT SEA. Just out overnight from New York, bound for Rotterdam, the Holland-America steamship Ryndam, with 230 souls and a million-dollar foodstuffs cargo aboard, was rammed head on by the Norwegian frigate Joseph J. Cuneo, bound from Boston for the West Indies, at 4 A.M., May 25, in a fog, both vessels being badly damaged, the Ryndam dangerously. The 78 passengers were transferred to the Cuneo, and wireless calls brought several of the battleship fleet now at practice in that neighborhood to the scene, the South Carolina taking off the passengers from the Cuneo and most of the crew from the Ryndam, afterward convoying the two damaged ships, the Ryndam in a sinking condition, to New York.

WILL WAIT THE SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST. Duval West, who has been looking Mexico over on behalf of President Wilson, reports that none of the belligerent factions impressed him as equal to the task of governing the country. Despite a rather pessimistic report, the President seems to believe that Mexico may yet gain a ruler through the test of arms, and so will continue his policy of non-interference.

THE A, B, C, OF SOUTH AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT. Preliminary to that rapid and great advance which South American countries expect to achieve as one result of the European war, a peace treaty was signed on May 25 between Argentina, Brazil and Chile. Recently it was proposed that all South American nations enter into a common relationship on the basis of the Bryan peace treaty.

ANYHOW, THEY WON'T SHOW DUST SO EASILY. Owing to the shortage of indigo dye because of the war, a familiar spot upon our industrial landscape will be missing, as overalls, which from time immemorial have been blue, will now be gray, according to the president of the National Garment Makers' Association. President Miller, at the annual convention of the association in Chicago recently, declared that garmentmakers have been filling enormous general orders in Europe.

CHINA AND JAPAN STRIKE HANDS. The lengthy negotiations initiated by Japan in order to obtain extraordinary powers in Chinese affairs were brought to a conclusion May 25 by the signing of treaties which give Japan practically all she demanded, the five articles known as Group V being reserved for future argument. Apprehension of an anti-Japanese movement in South China is prevalent in Tokyo, according to reports.

TO TAKE NEW YORK FOR CHRIST. Episcopalians of New York City have entered upon a revival campaign which is planned to continue until next March, summer evangelistic services in a huge tent pitched upon the Cathedral grounds being one of the features. The committee in charge believe this will be the beginning of a sweeping advance by the whole Christian church in New York.

TORPEDOED IN THE HEADLINES. The American freight steamer Nebraskan was torpedoed, in big headlines in the afternoon papers, on May 26, but the report of her captain states that the vessel was "struck by either mine or torpedo," and which it was still a matter of official inquiry. The American-Hawaiian vessel was homeward bound empty, after delivering a general cargo at Liverpool, and was struck about forty miles southwest of Fastnet on the coast of Ireland, and the crew (there were no passengers) took to the boats, but returned aboard when it was seen that the Nebraskan was not seriously damaged, and the ship returned to Liverpool under convoy of an armed trawler, which had responded to her wireless call for help. Washington refuses to comment on the incident until the facts are in. The ship will be examined for evidence of the nature of the injury. Her flag was down, but name and nationality appeared on side.

A WAR CHECK THAT DOES NOT CHECK WAR. It has been announced that the Bethlehem Steel Company recently received an order from the British war office for 8,000 cannon, accompanied by a check for $16,500,000, part of which applied on earlier contracts. This corporation is also reported as having received an order for 1,000,000 lyddite shells, to be delivered 4,000 a day, for use of the British army, and that this new order brings the total war contracts of the Bethlehem Steel to over $100,000,000. The news despatch states that 50,000 shrapnel shells and 12,000 one-pounders are being turned out daily for the Allies by Bethlehem and subcontractors. New buildings are still being erected and equipped to handle the enormous war business.

A FIVE-YEAR REVIVAL CAMPAIGN. The Northern Baptist Convention at Los Angeles, Calif., proposes that Baptists endeavor to win one million converts to Christ within five years; and also to increase the number of Baptist home and foreign missionaries from 3,700 to 5,000 and to aim at a $6,000,000 annual missionary fund.

Anti-German riots in different parts of England, following the sinking of the Lusitania, were put down, and the leaders punished by the authorities. Our pictures show a victim of the Lusitania aftermath fleeing from her home, and one of the street mobs demolishing property of German residents.

"CULERRA CUT" WIPED OUT. By executive order of President Wilson, Culerra Cut, as the name given to the widest known section of the Panama Canal, has been superseded by the name Gaillard Cut in honor of the late Lieutenant Colonel D. D. Gaillard of the United States army engineers. Colonel Gaillard was in charge of the work at that section from March, 1907, until illness terminated his life on December 5, 1913, the period of his service including the years of most active construction work in the cut.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY AND UNION SEMINARY. The precise relation of the Presbyterian General Assembly to Union Seminary is made clear by the assembly's adoption of its special committee's report. The crux of the whole matter has been purely legal. Presbyterians wished the assembly to exercise some control over Union because the seminary had in its early history received gifts on condition that it would always be an exclusively Presbyterian institution. But legal advisers pointed out that there was no way by which the General Assembly could enforce this. Any person undertaking to would have to claim that he was an heir to the estate of a donor. When Union decided some years ago to make the primary interdenominational, it secured the consent of all factors still living and all the heirs of demised benefactors, setting its directors free to conduct the institution as they please. The Continent sums up the situation as follows: The upshot is that Union Seminary is an independent, independent school of theology just like Yale, Hartford, or Andover. The Presbyterian Church is not responsible for it, and has no cause to desire to be; and Union does not want any church to be responsible for it. Union's graduates can continue to go to the Presbyterian presbyteries for examination, licensure, and ordination whenever they choose, just as graduates from other independent seminaries do, and when they please the presbyteries they will be accepted, and when they do not they will be rejected."

THE UBIQUITOUS WIRELESS. From the middle of the Sahara desert to the middle of the Atlantic (when a ship happens to be there); from Greenland's icy mountains to Italy's coral strands; from the jungles of Africa to the top of Mount Wananmaker's in New York; in China, in Siberia, in Austria, all over the Pacific, everywhere, in fact, there now are wireless stations: 7,000 on ships, with 15,000 men to operate them; 1,000 on land, with 3,200 operators; and any number of amateur stations, 2,000 of which are licensed. So, at least, a new signal book states.

ONE MAN'S MEAT ANOTHER MAN'S—LUXURY. The olive oil, which some American families manage to do without the year through, while others consider their dinner tasteless without it, is regarded abroad as better adapted than butter for any purposes because of its concentrated food value, and consequently its exportation has been prohibited by the Italian and Spanish Governments, though our Department of State obtained an exception in favor of the United States, provided importers give bond that none of the product so imported shall be exported.

ILLNESS OF GREEK KING. Constantine I, king of Greece, who has been in the shadow of death through illness, necessitating the calling of a special physician from Berlin, was reported on May 27 as decidedly improved, and hopes for his recovery, which had been almost abandoned, were revived. The ikof of the "Holy Virgin" from the church at Tinos, believed to be people to possess miraculous qualities, was taken to Athens and placed in the sick chamber, and to its presence is attributed the king's improvement.

AGAIN AMERICANS SAIL ON MUNITIONS SHIP. The Americans are among the 296 passengers who sailed on the White Star liner Adriatic May 27 from New York bound for Liverpool, despite the fact that the ship is subject to submarine attack because of her cargo of arms and ammunition shield, seemingly, in contravention of our shipping laws. In her hold are 15,000 tons of materials consigned to the British war effort, including 5,500 cases of cartridges, 3,577 cases of empty projectiles, and great quantities of brass, copper, etc., according to the press. Very elaborate preparations have been made to safeguard the lives of the passengers and crew in case of attack, lifebelts to be spread out in readiness when the boat approaches the danger zone, and her small boats partly lowered.

MASONS TO OPPOSE MUNITIONS TRAFFIC. The Masonic fraternity in New York State, numbering 200,000, as called upon by the grand master of the order at its recent 7th Annual Communication to take a firm stand against the exportation of arms to Europe, and all Masons were advised to engage in a campaign to bring this traffic to an end on the ground that the Masons are "a world fraternity . . . teaching the brotherhood of man." "The time is ripe," declared the grand master, "not only to prevent the killing of men by other men with arms, but to prevent also the speculators or so-called neutrals from supplying deadly weapons with which the murder shall be accomplished. The command 'Thou shalt not kill' applies equally to him who has the weapon and to him who holds it for use by another. . . . The world has been led too long by men and the ideas responsible for this horrible conflict. Let us join with the church of God and all other forces for good in spreading better, nobler and more exalted ideas."

ENGLAND LOSES LINER AND BATTLESHIP. The English battleship Majestic, an old-type vessel, by submarine in the Dardanelles, nearly all the officers and men being saved. The Triumph, which was sunk in a similar manner previously, was of 11,800 tons. On the same day, May 27, the new Canadian Pacific Railway's liner Princess Irene, a passenger ship of 10,000 tons, was blown to atoms with the loss of over 300 lives on the Sheerness, the disaster being compared to that of the Bulk, which was destroyed November 26 with the loss of 800 lives at about the same place, and the exact cause of which is, as in the present instance, as yet unknown.

BURNING UP OUR MONEY. The fire insurance people at their forty-ninth anniversary conference just held, learned that 191 companies operating in this country received $333,641,616 in premiums in 1914, or about $9,000,000 increase over the preceding year, and paid out in losses $200,720,782, or at $28,000,000 more than in 1913. Taxes and operating expenses consumed more than the difference between premium income and loss payments, entailing a 4.21 per cent. underwriting loss, the income from investments alone yielding dividend to the business as a whole.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year, in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE. For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the writer, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

J. H. I am in a dark state of mind. I do not know how to meet the conditions necessary to win God's forgiveness. He forgives "as we forgive." It has always been my practice, no matter how I feel about a wrong received, to do good in return, with the desire that all wrong or unkind feelings lie out of my heart. Just here in the inner life is the trouble. One may return good for evil and yet feel unkindly. I have tried to cease from all kinds of evil and do Christian duties. I call it outside Christianity, lacking the power. I lack love to God. My motives seem selfish, trying all his for my own good and the good of others. If I can only receive the new birth! Sometimes it seems wrong to do Christian works without a real Christian experience.

has probably not occurred to you that the root of all your trouble is lack of faith, but this is evidently the case. You speak about the "conditions" of forgiveness, but there are really no conditions. God forgives us freely. All we need to do is to trust him. You are stumbling at some words of Jesus which he must be a help, not a hindrance. If he had meant that God would not forgive us until we had our hearts the Christian grace of full forgiveness for others, that would have made an insurmountable condition. Only his power can make us useful toward others as we should. We ask his forgiveness, saying that we will put away all thoughts or plans of revenge, of retaliation, of unkindness. Then, as we trust him, he forgives us and puts his love into our souls. It makes us love others in an entirely new way. We look at people with his eyes and love to help them for his sake. As you trust Christ to forgive you, you must also trust him to cleanse you from all sin. Read the gracious promises of cleansing and claim them as your own. It is sad that you are so troubled during life late evening. Can you not stop all worry, anxiety and enter into the sweet rest of which Jesus offers? He longs to call us no servants but friends. You speak of being ill. Physical conditions cloud and affect our spiritual and mental states. But he abideth faithful. He is the solid Rock. Put all your trust in him and he will give you peace. Do not give up your Christian works; but do not depend on trust Christ so completely that you will really experience the comforts of his love.

J. G., Bridgeport, Wash. Should a church change as the people change, to keep along with the times?

Some respects a church must change as the times change. For instance, its members change their mode of dress with the changing centuries; they change their language, its new words are discovered and the races mingle and develop. The Roman Catholic Church has made a great mistake in clinging to a dead language for so much of its ritual. [Paul made clear the advantage of talking in a language the people understood. I Cor. 14: 6-11, 19, 27-31.] The essential truths and principles of Christianity do not change, but the church must adapt itself, so far as it can without violating any of its changeless principles, to the changing conditions of civilization in order that it may win the greatest possible number to the fold of Christ. The apostles walked; Wesley rode his back. If they were alive today they would use trains. We light our churches by electricity, not with candles or crude lamps. We use newspapers to advertise our services, sending thus the Gospel invitation. As better musical instruments are manufactured the church uses them for its work. All the modern help in Sunday school work and church life came made a means of grace if the old power of the truth is not surrendered. It is pitiful to see church trusting to these new appliances and methods for results when it has lost the glory and power of God's Spirit, but a Spirit-filled church can make use of these things to forward the progress of the "everlasting Gospel." Paul said: "I am become all things to all men that I might by all means save some." (I Cor. 9: 19-22.) The other questions you ask were discussed in the Mail-Bag of May 19, 1915.

J. P. A. M., Winston, N. C., and W. S., Georgia. The passage in Mark 16, from the ninth verse to the end of the chapter, are regarded by some eminent scholars, including Tischendorf and Tregelles, as not belonging to the original text of Mark's Gospel, but as added by later hand. They are not found in the Vatican MS. nor in the Sinaitic MS., which are the oldest Gospels yet known. They are, however, found in all the published Greek MSS. except the two above mentioned, and especially in the Alexandrian MS., which is admitted to be less than half a century later than the two oldest and by no means of less authority. They are accepted by Irenaeus (second century) and by other eminent church fathers in the third and fourth century as an essential part of Mark's Gospel and they are accepted and defended by many scholars of our own time.

A. F. C., Oswayo, Pa. Many men prominent in American history were of obscure origin. Lincoln, Garfield and Grant were among the number. The first was a rail-splitter on a little farm; Garfield cut wood to pay for his own schooling, and Grant was a tanner. Horace Mann, founder of the common school system of Massachusetts, was a poor boy who braided straw to earn his school books. John Adams, the famous statesman, was the son of a shoemaker. You might add indefinitely to the list by spending an hour among the biographical books in the nearest public library.

A. R., Bradley, S. D. We will answer your question by telling of an incident bearing on the problem of Sunday observance. A minister in a country parish was preaching a sermon, when the sky became suddenly overcast, and a violent wind began to blow, with every indication of a storm approaching. The old pastor was weather-wise. He closed his discourse sooner than usual, and made announcement from the pulpit that widow So-and-So's grain was lying in the field, cut, and would be ruined if it were left out in a thunderstorm, which would be a heavy loss to her and her little family. The men in the congregation took the hint, and almost before the first drops of rain fell, the widow's little crop was gathered in the barn. That was a work of mercy; but no one would be justified in using it as an argument for Sunday labor which could and should be done on week-days.

S. B. B., Wadden, Ky. 1. Your question is regarded by many as being answered by John 3: 5; Gal. 3: 27; Acts 19: 3-5; John 4: 1, 2. As some at least among the disciples had been followers of John the Baptist (see John 1: 35-40). 2. Various reasons have been advanced to account for the omission of the tribe of Dan in Rev. 7. Dan was peculiarly given to idolatry (Judges 18: 1-31.) In the days of John the Apostle, it had disappeared altogether as a tribe. Others have surmised that as the tribe of Dan had chosen a serpent for its emblem, that fact, taken with John's allusion to the "old serpent" (Rev. 12: 9), and Dan's leaning to idols, may have decided the revelator on its omission and on the substitution of a tribe more worthy. 3. The price of "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered," without subscription, is $1.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. C. L. Petersburg, Pa. The verses you mentioned are not in our collections.

M. J. H., Orange, Calif., J. S. M., Madison, Wis., and others. The question you mention was no doubt discussed in the diplomatic negotiations now under way.

H. C. B., Pearl, Ill. The present depression in business and the consequent unemployment are largely due to the war, but more favorable conditions will return when it is over.

W. T. A., Greenville, Pa. 1. The forts of Alexandria were bombarded by the British on July 11, 1882. 2. Admiral Seymour commanded the fleet. 3. The rebellion of Arabi Pasha.

L. A., Alberta, Canada. It is a mistake to try to make the lives of children too rigorous, and to deny them the innocent enjoyments of childhood. There are many children's games that should be encouraged to keep the little ones from dullness and moping.

G. B., Binghamton, N. Y. It is a matter in which no stranger should interfere. Your friend should learn the lesson of forgiveness; no matter how serious he may hold the offense to be, it is his duty as a Christian to forgive and to let it be known to the other that he has forgiven. Let him read Matt. 5: 44-48; Luke 6: 27-35; Luke 17: 4; Mark 11: 25; Matt. 18: 21, 22. As a friend, you can take the privilege of advising him without giving offense.

J. S. D., Deer Creek, Okla. The whole Christian world is praying that God in his infinite wisdom will make this great war a means of bringing back the nations to their spiritual allegiance. Our own land stands ready to take the initiative in helping to restore peace, but we must await the right opportunity, with firm faith that it will come in God's good time. The Christian Herald stands loyally by the President in his efforts; but partisan discussion will not help but rather hinder him.

Mrs. A. W., Toronto, Ont. The story you mention is told of a king who presented a staff to his court jester, who had been amusing the guests. He told him that it was for the "greatest fool in the world." One day long afterward, the king lay dying, and the jester came to him tearfully and asked him whether he was going. The king replied that he did not know. "Oh, master," said the poor fellow, blinded with his tears, "the staff is thine. Take it; for as thou knowest not whether thou art going, thou must be the greater fool."

"What luck to find
This Campbell 'kind'
Right in the Milky Way!
'Twill make a bisque
Worth all my risk.
I'll eat some more today!"

And there's no higher to go—

When you've had Campbell's Tomato Soup prepared as a bisque or cream of tomato you've enjoyed a soup that cannot be excelled for quality and flavor.

And it is so easy to prepare! A child could follow the simple directions on the label, and have this delightful nourishing tomato bisque ready to serve in three minutes.

Besides this, there are many other tempting ways to prepare this wholesome Campbell "kind," so many, in fact, that practical housewives now-a-days order it by the dozen or the case, so as to have it always on hand.

Don't you need another dozen today?

21 kinds

10c a can

Asparagus
Beef
Bouillon
Celery
Chicken
Chicken-Gumbo (Okra)
Clam Bouillon

Clam Chowder
Consommé
Julienne
Mock Turtle
Mulligatawny
Mutton
Ox Tail

Pea
Pepper Pot
Printanier
Tomato
Tomato-Okra
Vegetable
Vermicelli-Tomato

Campbell's SOUPS

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

THE BRYCE REPORT ON ATROCITIES

MUCH has been printed on the violation of the provisions of the Hague Convention and the usages of civilized warfare in the present European conflict, but the most specific publication on the subject yet was issued May 12 by the Macmillan Company, New York, for His Majesty's Stationery Office, London.

Last December the Right Hon. H. H. Asquith, first lord of the British treasury, appointed a committee with Viscount Bryce as its chairman, "to consider and advise on the evidence collected on behalf of His Majesty's Government as to outrages alleged to have been committed by German troops during the present war, cases of alleged maltreatment of civilians in invaded territories and breaches of the laws and established usages of war; and to prepare a report for the government showing the conclusion arrived at on the evidence now available."

The findings of this committee have been published under the title, "Report of the Committee on Alleged German Outrages, Appointed by His Britannic Majesty's Government." The men under whose signatures the material is made public are: Lord Bryce, the Right Hon. Sir Frederick Pollock, the Right Hon. Sir Edward Clarke, Sir Alfred Hopkinson, Mr. H. A. L. Fisher, vice-chancellor of the University of Sheffield, and Mr. Harold Cox.

The report consists of two parts: First, an analysis and summary of the testimony regarding the conduct of German troops in Belgium toward the civilian population during the first few weeks of the invasion; and second, an examination of the testimony relating to alleged breaches of the rules of war, and also inhumanity by German soldiers during the first four months of the war, whether in Belgium or in France. In the foreword to the report the committee says:

"WE began the inquiry with doubts whether a positive result would be obtained, but the further we went and the more witnesses we examined, so much the more was our skepticism reduced. There might be some exaggeration in one witness, possibly delusion in another, inaccuracies in a third. When, however, we found that things which had at first seemed improbable were testified to by many witnesses coming from different places, having had no communication with one another and knowing nothing of one another's statements, the points in which they all agreed became more and more evidently true, and when this concurrence of testimony, this convergence upon what were substantially the same broad facts, showed itself in hundreds of depositions, the truth of these broad facts stood out beyond question. The force of the evidence is cumulative."

From such the committee draws the following conclusions: "First, that there were in many parts of Belgium deliberate and systematically organized massacres of the civil population, accompanied by many isolated murders and other outrages; second, that in the conduct of the war generally innocent civilians, both men and women, were murdered in large numbers, women violated, and children murdered; third, that looting, house-burning, and the wanton destruction of property were ordered and countenanced by the officers of the German army, that elaborate provision had been made for systematic incendiarism at the very outbreak of the war, and that the burnings and destruction were frequent where no military necessity could be alleged, being indeed part of a system of general terrorization; and fourth, that the rules and usages of war were frequently broken, particularly by the using of civilians, including women and children, as a shield for advancing forces exposed to fire, to a less degree by killing the wounded and prisoners, and in abuse of the Red Cross and the white flag."

Speaking of its method of obtaining the evidence upon which it rests its report the committee says that for some three or four months before the appointment of the committee the Home Office had been collecting a large body of evidence (taken from Belgian witnesses, some soldiers, but most of them civilians, from those towns and villages through which the German army passed, and from British officers and soldiers). More than twelve hundred depositions made by these witnesses have been considered by the committee. . . . The depositions were in all cases taken down in England by gentlemen of legal knowledge and experience, but with no authority to administer an oath. They were instructed not to lead the witnesses or make any suggestions to them, and also to impress upon them the necessity for care and precision in giving their evidence. They were also directed to treat the evidence critically, and as far as possible to satisfy themselves by putting questions which arose out of the evidence that the witnesses were speaking the truth. They were, in fact, to cross-examine them so far as the testimony given provided materials for cross-examination. . . . In many cases those who took the testimony have added their comments upon the intelligence and demeanor of witnesses, stating the impression which each witness made and indicating any cases in which the stories told appeared to them open to doubt or suspicion.

IT IS unfortunate that in a matter of such importance the testimony could not have been taken under oath, as would be required in much less grave cases in even ordinary courts of law; and that the committee, having but one witness to each alleged crime, bulked all similar cases and by that process obtained "cumulative evidence" to prove each case, though the case itself, by itself, would have been obliged to stand or fall by the unsupported testimony of one person, or possibly the members of one family. That no witnesses were heard in "rebuttal," and that witnesses were cross-examined, not by attorneys for the "defense," but by investigators in sympathy with their stories, awakens the American sense of justice and fair play, and causes a suspension of judgment on the part of the public. (It will be remembered that atrocity tales, fully equaled in all previous wars, not excepting our own Civil War, were generally found untrue upon calm and unprejudiced investigation.)

This serious indictment of one great nation by another will not be dismissed on these grounds by the American public, yet neither can it be accepted as the final word nor as full and legal proof of the charges. It will be interesting to hear what answer Germany will make, and not surprising if she makes none at all, since, under the circumstances, she cannot possibly confront these witnesses with her own. Despite this seemingly strong showing against Germany, we of America will do well to apply to all atrocity charges, against whomever made, our national hesitancy to believe evil reports until proved beyond the peradventure of doubt.

been at work. It was decided last September, in response to many insistent calls from the missionaries all over the field, to hold a general conference on the missionary program of all Latin America, in the city of Panama. The date set is February 10-20, 1916.

Over thirty American and British missionary societies, including practically all the agencies doing work in Latin America, are actively co-operating in the preparations for the conference. The Panama gathering will thoroughly study the work and the need of Latin America. The great missionary leaders from the field will be there.

Eight commissions, composed of 218 members from the field as well as the home base, are well along in their task of studying the problems to come before the Panama Conference and in preparing reports on which the conference discussions will be based. Some of the papers already in hand are of unusual worth. A single paper from Ecuador, for instance, contains more information concerning the missionary situation of that nation than all the printed literature about it in existence.

The most important pre-conference gathering is the meeting of the commission chairmen and picked representatives on the 9th and 10th of June. Information will be furnished by the Secretary, Latin America Missionary Conference, Room 806, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

W. Simpson, Bridgeport, Conn.; Oliver C. Elliott, Boston; Obadiah Dugan, Charleston, S. C.; George L. Search, Sioux City, Iowa; Miss Catherine Leonard, Worcester, Mass.; Louis Bernhardt, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Maurice Ruben, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Miss Ruth Angel, New York; Philip Sidersky, Baltimore, Md.; Obadiah Becker, Allentown, Pa.; Mrs. A. C. Steele, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Mr. C. M. Stocking, Minneapolis, Minn.; P. E. Cull, Boston; Rev. Fred W. Davis, Portland, Oregon; E. I. Goodwin, Syracuse, N. Y.; James Goodeheart, Denver, Col.; Jacob Fritz, Boston; R. D. Murphy, Worcester, Mass., and Frank Dippel, Philadelphia, Pa.

The convention re-elected all of its present officers, with the exception of Rev. John Callahan of New York, who had resigned from the executive committee. His place was supplied by Ernest G. Randall of Newark, N. J.

It was decided to hold the next annual convention at Toledo, Ohio.

D. R. CRAIG.

The Latin-American Field

INTEREST in missionary work in Latin America has been growing steadily in the last few years. A conference on this work was held in New York in March, 1913, and since that time a permanent "Committee on Co-operation in Latin America" has

Don't Waste Time doing work the long way
Don't Waste Strength doing it the hard way

Are your clothes ready for spring? The washing right after lunch? They should be—and you needn't get up extra early either.

Fels-Naptha Soap will do it for you—not only washing but all kinds of housework. It will get a big wash all on the line in the morning when the sun's the hottest and best for bleaching.

Don't do this way, though. Don't hard-rub your clothes,—they wear them out as well as you.

Don't boil or scald them, either. When you use Fels-Naptha you can forget the old hard way of washing and learn the new easy way.

For brightening the colors in your cloth or linoleum, and for cleaning heavy rugs and carpets, there's nothing so good as Fels-Naptha.

It takes the greasy scum off of tubs, bowls and basins easily, with no hard scrubbing or rubbing. Just pass a wet cloth soaped with Fels-Naptha, around the ugly dark ring and it is gone.

Every day in the year Fels-Naptha Soap will save your time, strength and money.

Fels & Co., Philadelphia

Gospel Missions Convene

THE second annual convention of the International Union of Gospel Missions was held at Norfolk, Va., May 16-20. Twelve hundred citizens assembled to greet the convention at its opening meeting in Wells' Theater for the five days' session. In behalf of the state Governor Henry Carter Stuart, for the city Mayor Mayo, and for the church Rev. Sparks W. Melton extended public welcome to the mission workers.

Mrs. E. M. Whittemore, president of the organization and founder of the Door of Hope, made an address in response to the formal welcome.

Subsequent business meetings of the convention were held at Epworth M. E. Church and big, attentive audiences gathered. Among the speakers were many superintendents and leading workers in Gospel Missions, including Mrs. E. M. Whittemore, Thomas A. Noonan, John H. Wyburn, Miss Sara Wray, F. Murray Oliphant, Rev. T. C. Roberts and Horsefield Gardner, all of New York; Rev. G. F. Spring, Toledo, Ohio; Mr. George Simmons, Brooklyn, N. Y.; John Thompson, Pawtucket, R. I.; Rev. Thomas B. Ironside, Morristown, N. J.; Rev. Warren H. Dennison, Norfolk, Va.; Rev. Frank K. Ward, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Clemmie Ellis White, New York; Philip I. Roberts, Rev. W. E. Ramseyer, Duluth, Minn.; Ernest G. Randal, Newark, N. J.; Rev. Charles

A TRANSIT REVOLUTION

THE trolley car is a great blessing to the human race—when you can get aboard one at the right time and place, find a seat, and get off near where you want to go. It appears that there are times when the trolley doesn't happen along just when it's wanted most, or else refuses to approach your neighborhood, or is overcrowded when you squeeze in, or goes only within seven blocks of your friend's house for which you are bound. And just when the public began to find out these exasperating limitations in trolley service, along came the revolutionary jitney.

The jitney is a footloose automobile that is glad to tote you here and there for a nickel. Where and how the word originated, or the idea either, for that matter, I haven't had leisure to find out. But probably our rapidly growing jitney service is an importation from England, where motor busses have been utilizing the tram lines (electric street cars) for some years. In fact, the two modes of transit have fought a battle royal for transportation rights, but the individual motor bus service had the public as its ally and won the right to carry passengers every which way, without the restraint of rigid routes and time schedules.

THE TROLLEY CAR IS A GREAT BLESSING—SOMETIMES

Not the cities alone, but the whole countryside is enjoying this form of automobile convenience over there.

And now we ourselves are witnessing war between the established street car lines and the jitney, and the automobile makers show which way they think the issue will fall by planning to turn out cars especially designed for jitney service. Chiefly second-hand cars and old-timers are holding the fort meanwhile.

The thing has already become commonplace in most of our big cities. Boston was initiated on May 12. Brockton, Mass., has a lot of them. Philadelphia curbs are lined with them. You will find them all the way to the Pacific Coast, and there you will find them thickest. New York has been experimenting with regulations for them. They have become a problem in city traffic; I guess they have also become a necessity.

The scheme of the jitney is to run up alongside the curb where you are standing, you step aboard, pay your five cents—for that is the jitney fare—state where you wish to get off, and the jitney drops you again at the curb. At first the jitneys go practically anywhere within reason for five cents, but as rapidly as the territory becomes occupied, each individual jitney selects a route along which it operates.

T. L. FREELAND.

ESPECIALLY DESIGNED FOR JITNEY SERVICE

PROBABLY HALF THESE CARS ARE JITNEYS

AN OLD PROVERB ILLUSTRATED

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

FEW days ago I was starting leisurely toward home. I had reason to be leisurely, for I had more than enough time to catch my train. Yet, when I saw the cathartan ran from the office to the railroad station stopping on a far corner, I broke into a run and stepped breathlessly on to the platform.

The car was very crowded. I realized that as I paid my fare and stepped into the stuffy aisle. Men, women and children jostled each other rudely, and smileless faces glared at each other. Feet stepped heedlessly on other feet, and harsh newspapers rattled against harsher bundles. Wedged between a short fat woman and a tall man with an elbow that stuck out perilously in the region of my nose, I tried to breathe easily and naturally.

The car jolted on, and although the way to the station was not long, it seemed an eternity to me. When I finally reached the station platform I looked rather ruefully at a vanishing train, and then at the reflection of myself that I saw in a tiny mirror.

My hat was on one side (very much on one side), and a long wisp of hair styled lonesomely across one cheek. My dress—which had been rather well pressed—was very much creased. As I gazed before the mirror trying to repair as much of the damage as I could, another car (the car that I would have caught if I had taken my time) thudded in. It was a nearly empty car with no swaying strap-hangers, no crowded aisles, no sharp-elbowed men. As I walked toward the end of the station where my later train was standing, I found myself soliloquizing on the foolishness of hurry.

IT'S the great fault of this generation, I think, this craze for speed! It lays its nervous hand on young and old alike, and leaves a trail of victims everywhere. Some of the victims have tired eyes, and weary lines beside their mouths; some of its victims go far away to take rest cures, others keep going on—until it comes time to take the great rest cure.

If folk have shining dollars and crisp green bills—plenty of them—the craze for speed works out in the shape of high-powered cars, and death-defying motor boats, and, sometimes, aeroplanes. If they—well, if they don't own many shining dollars, they get their taste for speed in wild races after trolley cars and trains and people and work and ideals!

I was standing on a perfectly serene and peaceful little street corner a few days ago, waiting for a long line of traffic to pass on before I crossed. Not far from me stood an old lady, deep in peaceful conversation with a middle-aged lady. They seemed perfectly absorbed in each other, utterly oblivious to the rest of the city.

Suddenly a car swung down the street. It was a commonplace car, and the ladies were continuing their low-voiced conversation without looking up, when all at once something happened.

Dashing down the street came a volcano—a volcano in the form of a young and attractive-looking man. He swooped between the two ladies (with never a "beg-your-pardon"), and dashed madly into the street. I saw him fling himself triumphantly onto the moving car, and then he was borne swiftly out of sight. He was a victim of the craze for speed.

On the corner the two erstwhile peaceful ladies stood shaken by his swift coming and going.

"My dear," gasped the middle-aged lady (for she was rather stout, and stout folk gasp when they have been pushed violently out of the way), "my dear, what a whirlwind! How rude!"

But the little old lady smiled, though her face was a bit pale, and her feet were a bit unsteady.

"Times," said the little old lady, "have changed."

TIMES have changed. When the little old lady was young, a man would have passed politely behind her, lifted his hat, missed his car, and waited for another. Cars didn't go very often then, and now they run every minute or so. The man of fifty years ago had more excuse to hurry, but—times have changed.

Rudeness isn't the only result of this craze for speed. Sometimes a little unnecessary haste to get somewhere ends in the loss of life or in very grave danger. There is a very old proverb (you probably all know it) that rings through my mind very often in these hurried days of ours:

"Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." I often think of it when I see folk dart across the crowded avenue, narrowly missing the heavy wheels of motor trucks and horses' steel-shod

Stories of Old Elgins

A Watch that Has Outlived the Locomotives of Two Generations

"I have one of your B. W. Raymond movements, No. 739, which I have carried nearly 50 years, and am yet carrying and it is still keeping good time. I have never paid out for repairs but $1.00 for one new jewel."

I am a machinist on locomotive engines and have carried my Elgin many thousands of miles. I have carried it as long as three months without moving a hand."

(Original letter on file at Elgin Headquarters.)

B. W. RAYMOND
(R. R. Watch)
$4.50 to $7.50

Every Elgin Watch includes sturdiness, accuracy and beauty. The accuracy of Elgin Watches made today will be as noteworthy in times to come as the Elgins of 50 years ago are now. The refinement and beauty of the Elgin makes it a handsome gift for commencement presentation, birthdays or weddings.

Ask your Elgineer

Write for the Elgin book about the Elgin Observatory, where the exactness of star time is translated into Elgin time. Send stamped and addressed envelope for set of Elgin Poster Stamps.

ELGIN

Watches

KEEP TIME

LORD ELGIN
(Extra thin model)
$100 to $115

G. M. WHEELER
$25 to $50

LADY ELGIN
A wide range of prices

Putting the "Eat" in Whole Wheat

THE whole wheat grain is without doubt the most perfect food given to man. But you don't want to eat raw wheat—it would be imperfectly digested if you did eat it. Whole wheat bread made of so-called "whole wheat flour" is not much better. It serves to stimulate peristalsis (bowel exercise), but the body gets little or no nutriment from it. All the nutritive elements in the whole wheat grain are supplied in a digestible form in

SHREDDED WHEAT

It is the whole wheat steam-cooked, shredded and baked. It not only supplies all the body building elements of the whole wheat in a digestible form, but presents the bran-coat in such a way as to stimulate bowel movement without irritating the intestines. It is the shredding process that put the "Eat" in Shredded Wheat. Try one or more of these crisp, delicious little loaves of baked wheat for breakfast with milk or cream.

The Shredded Wheat Company
Niagara Falls, N. Y.

NO EUROPE THIS YEAR!
VISIT FOREIGN AMERICA

12 DAY All Expense $ 60.00
A Grand Vacation UP

equal in interest, novelty and healthfulness to a European cruise. Visiting HALIFAX, Nova Scotia, the land of Evangeline, and ST. JOHNS, Newfoundland, the Norway of America, via the

RED CROSS LINE

New tourist steamships, STEPHANO and FLORIZEL fitted with every convenience and safety device. Cost of trip includes every essential expense. 7 days at sea and 5 in port. Splendid cuisine, orchestra, sea sports. Ship is your hotel for the entire trip. Reduced rates for superior accommodations—June, Sept. and Oct. Write today for illustrated booklet 41.

BOWRING & COMPANY, 17 Battery Pl., N. Y.

"Don't-Snore"

Stops Snoring and Mouth Breathing.
Money Refunded if it Don't.

Ask for Booklet.
THOS. B. MORTON CO. (Inc.)
4 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

FREE "Linene" COLLAR
State size on postal and whether you want collar like cut or low turnover style.
REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO.,
Dept. T. Boston, Mass.

feet. I often murmur it to myself when I see men, yes, and girls, too, jump onto the swaying steps of moving trains. Of course, nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand escape death and injury; but, friend of mine, there is just a chance that your life may be the thousandth.

There are other ways than chasing trains of being affected by the speed mania. There are people who rush through their work, never taking the time to do it well. I used to go to school with a rather brilliant girl, who, like a great many brilliant folk, was inclined to work spasmodically. She would dash through one lesson, give a wonderful recitation, and go on to the next without stopping to take a mental breathing space. Teachers marveled at her cleverness, but failed to understand her. The plodders, who took time to get each lesson firmly in their minds—taking time because they had to take time—envied her as they gave their commonplace recitations and asked their every-day questions.

At the end of the year came the dreadful examination day. And then, in a week, came the more dreadful reports. Absorbed in our satisfactory but unastonishing marks, we forgot to ask our brilliant classmate how she had fared. It was a day later that I met her on the street.

"How did you get along in the examinations?" I asked, although I felt that the question was unnecessary.

The girl looked at me quietly for a moment, and in that moment I realized how thin and pale and burned-out she was looking.

"Why," she told me finally, "why, I—didn't—pass—anything!"

"But, but," I stammered, "but—I don't understand!"

"Neither did I, at first," said the girl slowly; "then it came to me. I had hurried so all year that my mind was a perfect jumble of unconnected facts. I hadn't been able to get anywhere."

THAT, friends of mine, is the usual result of this craze for speed. You burn out the spark of vitality that makes your brain a useful, living thing—and you don't get anywhere. You chase a car—and when you arrive at the destination you find that it was unnecessary, that you haven't (figuratively) gotten anywhere.

Take time to do a thing carefully, and politely, and thoroughly. Think before you run after the elusive something that seems desirable. And, if it really—after you have thought hard—still seems desirable, try to catch it. But, if you have considered carefully and realized that it is the craze for speed that possesses you, take your time. The folk who take time to do each task well are the folk who arrive.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

Christ's Call to Young Women of Today
Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U.
Topic for June 20. Luke 10: 38-42

JOEL BLAU, in a recent article in the Hebrew Standard, expresses the hope that woman will some day put an end to the crime of war. He writes: "I fancy that the day is approaching when she will tire of waiting; when she, in the newly gained sense of her sovereignty, will rise up in her just wrath and declare that the life which is hers to give is no one's to take! In that day the thrones of kings will totter and fall."

In "War Brides," Marion Craig Wentworth's terrible play, the young bride chooses death rather than bear a son who will follow his father's trade of war.

These sentiments and convictions indicate something of what woman's place is to be in the next years of the world's life. She must set herself against the ancient wrongs of society and compel their undoing. If the need of the world ever cried out for heroic women souls it is crying for them now.

And the call of the world for help is the call of Christ. He calls the young women of today to new fearlessness, to new sacrifices, to new determination, to new consecration. Women are to be women still. We need the sweetness and gentleness and patience of the wife and mother of other days, but with the old home faithfulness there must be a new interest in the lives and homes of others, a new zeal in spreading peace and justice and joy over all the world.

God's Spirit Directing the Soul-Winner
Epworth League Topic for June 20.
Acts 8: 26-38; 16: 6-10

A QUAKER sitting near John Wesley at a religious service asked him if he were planning to speak if the Spirit moved. The energetic John replied: "I shall speak that the Spirit may move." It is true that the Holy Spirit will guide us in our work, but it is not safe nor wise to wait for special leadings. If special leadings come, follow them, but in the absence of these go ahead strenuously trying to save and help everybody you can reach. Paul's leadings in the incident recorded in our second Scripture passage were first of the negative kind. He and his friends were forbidden by the Spirit to preach in Asia and in Bithynia. Then at Troy came the positive message: "Come over into Macedonia and help us."

It is glorious to live so near to God that his Spirit can keep us off from unfruitful expeditions and guide all our efforts so that they shall tell for the most. A flaming zeal is the chief requisite. Yet we are not to wait even for this. Wesley said again that we should "trample under foot that enthusiastic [fanatical] doctrine that we are not to do good unless our hearts are free to it." After all, our duty is very plain. We have the Word of Life. We must take it to all whom we can reach; we must try to go where we can reach the most; and where we can reach those over whom our peculiar gifts and temperaments and training and experience will give us the greatest influence.

MISSIONARY LABORS IN GUAM

GUAM has had Protestant missionaries for fourteen years, and in our efforts in giving the open Bible to the Chamorros we meet with many encouragements. The antagonism of the Spanish priests of the Roman Catholic Church is our great drawback. The people fear the priests' presence and anathema.

A short time ago, I appealed to the governor of the island, Captain W. J. Maxwell, U. S. N., who is a zealous Roman Catholic, for the privilege to hold divine services in the open air. My request was granted, but with so many restrictions that it would be almost an impossibility. The Stars and Stripes waves freely over our heads, but American Protestant missionaries do not have the full liberty to preach the Gospel in Guam. The natives who buy Bibles or Testaments or accept tracts from missionaries, are very careful to keep them out of sight of the priests lest they lose them. Many have had their Testaments taken from their homes by the priests. The people want the Bible to read for themselves and are anxious to hear the preaching of the Gospel. On Sunday evenings, when the weather will permit, a crowd gathers on the outside of our little mission church during Christian Endeavor and preaching services, listening to the singing and preaching. They would come in only they are afraid. Recently, all have been forbidden to attend the mission school. If they should come, they are denied any ordination of their church.

ARTHUR W. LOGAN,
Guam, M. I. Missionary.

GOLD DUST

really works for you

The woman who washes dishes with Gold Dust knows what this means—knows how Gold Dust itself takes off the dirt and grease, saving actual effort and tiresome labor.

The active principle of Gold Dust is so remarkably thorough that you rinse away the dirt and grease from everything, leaving a newness, cleanliness and brightness that delight you.

The small quantity required is quickly taken up by hard or soft, hot or cold water—forming the perfect cleaning solution.

Use Gold Dust all over the house—in the bathroom, on linoleum or oil cloth, for cleaning and brightening pots, pans and cooking utensils, for giving luster to glassware, etc.

5c and larger packages sold everywhere

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY
MAKERS

"Let the GOLD DUST TWINS do your work"

That "velvety" quality in ice-cream comes from the action of the Automatic Twin Scrapers and Famous Wheel Dasher which are found only in the

LIGHTNING FREEZER

Saves Ice and Salt, Too

Your dealer can supply you with Lightning Freezer Recipes for Frozen Desserts, by Mrs. Rorer, sent free.

NORTH BROS. MFG. CO., Philadelphia

New York City

Invites you to invest in its

Transfers of Tax Lien

Investments made through us yield more than six per cent per annum.

Tax Lien Co. of New York
68 William St., New York C.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use clean and sanitary method? Send for catalog and sample. Offer, Outfits on trial.

THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO. Box 150 LIMA, PA.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.

DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54, Greenville, Ill.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 1. THE C. S. BELL CO. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, O.

NEW YORK SEES A FAR EAST WEDDING

AFTER ceremonies consummated nine days and the larger part of nine nights the tiny Ou Shee is last the wife of the Ling You. The bride and groom are an attractive young Chinese couple. He is a student in his senior year at the DeWitt Clinton High School and she was a belle of the Chinese colony in Boston. Both of an age that made the consent of their parents necessary to obtain the marriage license. Among the Chinese, it is not good form for the young man to do the wooing. The parents select the bride and arrange the dowry.

THE BRIDE AND GROOM

For the prospective husband has to do to be delighted with their choice and marry her. So, after the parents Lee Ling had decided that he was old enough to marry, they made a trip to Boston, sought out the parents of the demure Ou Shee, and arranged the tails. The bride came on to New York, accompanied by a retinue of relatives and friends, and when the party arrived in Chinatown, Lee Ling, in rich Oriental robes, ran down the stairs from 39 Mott Street, rapped a welcome to his bride on the taxicab window, and then ran back into the house without seeing her—all according to immemorial Chinese usage!

The Chinese wedding ceremony was simple. The couple took their places in the midst of a circle of relatives and friends, who were resplendently attired in vari-colored embroidered silk robes. The bride sipped a little rice wine from a tiny cup and passed it to the bridegroom, who did likewise, and the Chinese ritual was over.

As Lee Ling is a Christian youth, he assisted upon a Christian ceremony in addition, and the writer had the privilege of marrying this happy young couple according to the forms of the Christian Church. This ceremony took place at 39 Mott Street. Chinese women and children and young men friends of the bridegroom crowded the rooms and halls and stood on the stairways, and pushed into every point of vantage to view the ceremony. Before the wedding the bride sat in a rear room, her face turned to the wall and veiled by the never-absent fan. Her hair was loaded with ornaments of red yellow gold set with jade, and a beautiful embroidered robe of peach-colored silk covered her down to the ankles, the shoes that peeped out from under the robe.

With the necessary religious and gal ceremonies performed, the customs dear to the hearts of the Chinese began. The term "marriage" with the Chinese, signifies "joyful event." For the days the bride submitted to all sorts of jovial chaff and badgering. His ordeal is supposed to be good discipline, and enables her tormentors prophesy as to the patience and good nature of the newly-made wife. Banquets were the order of the day. They were held morning, noon and night. They invariably began with the highly esteemed birds' nest soup, which was followed by eight or ten other courses. The banquet which the writer attended commenced at five o'clock on Saturday evening, when three hundred sat down to an elaborate course dinner. The guests completely filled two floors of a large Chinese restaurant. At the same time, two other banquets were in progress in other parts of Chinatown to accommodate wedding guests who could not be seated at the main banquet. Another, quite as elaborate as the foregoing, was held in the same restaurant, beginning at midnight that same evening. At all of these feasts the groom, accompanied by friends, visited each table. Later, the wife came in, accompanied by a kindly-faced Chinese chaperon. She, too, visited each table, making three very low and graceful courtesies to her guests. She walked very slowly, balancing herself with much skill on the high heel that is set in the center of the fashionable Chinese shoe. With her was the indispensable fan, with which she covered her face, and which was never removed save as she passed tiny cups of tea with her own hands to each guest. When the guest replaced his cup on the tray, he placed in it a piece of money invariably enclosed in a scarlet-colored paper, the red hue signifying good fortune. After this tea-drinking, custom compels the timid girl-wife to stand with face covered and submit to all sorts of good-natured verbal torture. The bride then passed a tray heaped with a bitter-flavored nut. This is an essential accompaniment at a Chinese wedding. These nuts are regarded as symbols of good fortune; and as each guest accepted one, he showed his appreciation by dropping more scarlet-covered money upon the tray.

The Chinese show good judgment in their wedding presents. They confine their gifts almost exclusively to money. The newly married couple are not burdened with unusable gifts, which might include a score of identical articles. Herein the East makes a useful suggestion to the West.

After nine days of continuous banqueting, that kept the Chinese children from school, the merchants from business, and the young Chinese men from studies and stores, Lee Ling and Ou Shee were considered fittingly married. They have now settled down to practice domestic economy after the Chinese fashion, accompanied by the good wishes of their many American and Chinese friends.

(REV.) JOHN R. HENRY.
Church of All Nations, New York.

THE FIRST TALKING MACHINE

THE first invention connected with the phonograph was the phonautograph of Leon S. M. in 1857, which recorded sound vibrations on a hand-rotated carbon-coated cylinder. The record could not be reproduced, but was used merely to study sound waves. Its stylus vibrating diaphragm became, however, important features of the talking machine. Mr. Charles Cros, in 1877, first suggested the use of mechanically reproducing speech. He sent a paper to the Academy of Sciences in Paris in 1877, but this paper was not read till Thomas A. Edison had reproduced speech. In the course of some experiments in 1877, conducted with a telephone transmitter, Edison discovered he could reproduce articulate speech. But it was not until one of his collaborators, Mr. Edward H. Johnson, in a lecture, mentioned the telephone repeater invented by Mr. Edison that any one realized what the discovery meant. The papers, in reporting the lecture, announced the invention of the talking machine by Mr. Edison. Mr. Johnson returned home to assist in perfecting the device, and with Mr. Edison produced a machine consisting of a little revolving cylinder turned by a crank, a simple vibrating diaphragm and needle, and a piece of tin foil which they wrapped around the cylinder. The words, "Mary had a little lamb," were spoken into the machine, and then it was immediately set back and the cylinder revolved again to see if it would repeat the words, which it did quite distinguishably.—From Smithsonian Institution Bulletin.

WHAT STOVE SHALL I BUY?

TWO million housewives have solved this problem by buying a NEW PERFECTION Oil Cookstove. They have a stove that is always ready—like gas. They are now working in cool comfortable kitchens. Their cooking is done better. They are finding their work pleasant. They are saving money. You can place implicit confidence in the NEW PERFECTION. We are the largest manufacturers of oil stoves in the world and we back the NEW PERFECTION with our reputation and guarantee.

After 12 years of experimenting with all kinds of oil stoves, we have found the NEW PERFECTION to be the most satisfactory oil stove for all kinds of cooking. It overcomes all the objections found in other types of oil stoves.

It will operate year in and year out with continuous satisfaction and great economy. Five to ten cents a day is the fuel cost for the average family. Its flame control is positive—low, medium or high—any size desired. The flame never creeps, adjusts instantly, giving just the required heat for any kind of baking, roasting, broiling or toasting.

It is our belief that the NEW PERFECTION is the best oil stove on earth.

Adopted by the Standard Oil Company as the standard.

NEW PERFECTION stoves are made in 1, 2, 3 and 4 burner sizes, with or without oven or cabinet tops. Also 2 and 4 burner models with Fireless Cooking Ovens.

Sold at moderate prices by hardware, furniture, general and department stores, or wherever you see the picture of the NEW PERFECTION GIRL. Send to Department E for our free illustrated catalogue or send 10 cents in stamps for the famous NEW PERFECTION Cookbook containing 227 prize recipes.

NEW PERFECTION
OIL COOK STOVES

"NOW SERVING 2,000,000 HOMES"

MANUFACTURED AND GUARANTEED BY
THE CLEVELAND FOUNDRY COMPANY
7609 PLATT AVENUE, CLEVELAND, OHIO

MADE IN CANADA BY THE PERFECTION STOVE COMPANY, LIMITED, SARNIA, ONTARIO

AMERICAN FLAG) FREE

and a facsimile copy of the DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

In these days of world wars you should proclaim your patriotism with a large American flag. Let us send one and with it a facsimile copy of the Declaration of Independence—an exact photographic reproduction of the precious document that hangs in Independence Hall, Philadelphia.

You will need both for the 4th of July

Our 1915 Flag (6 feet long by 4 feet wide) is made by the Dunkards of Pennsylvania, within sight of Valley Forge, where Washington and the Patriots once struggled for liberty.

Here is your chance to own one of these large American Flags, the same as those shown in the picture below. Not a little flag, but a large-sized "Old Glory," 6 feet long by 4 feet wide—bigger than the top of your dining-room table—real red, white and blue, with stripes double-stitched together, and guaranteed not to fade, run or shrink, no matter what the weather.

Here is an opportunity to keep faith with your patriotism. You will not only have use for a flag on every holiday for years to come, but you can also use it constantly for decorative purposes in public and private sociables, in the club-house, the church and the home. Independence Day is almost here. You will be able to celebrate it properly with this flag.

The Tabernacle at Medina, N. Y., decorated with The Christian Herald Flags Described Herewith

The flags used in the illustration herewith are actual Christian Herald Flags which were sent to Messrs. Burgess and Butts for the purpose of decorating the tabernacle during the "Good News" campaign in Medina, N. Y., recently. The photograph of the tabernacle interior was sent to us by Mr. Benjamin F. Butts, Director of Music, during the revival.

HOW TO SECURE ONE OF THESE FLAGS

At this time of the year, the Christian Herald usually puts forth extraordinary efforts to increase the membership of the Christian Herald Family. YOU are a member and we know you will help us. But we have no right to accept your good offices for nothing, so we make the following proposition:

We will send the large American Flag and Declaration) described above and the Christian Herald for one year, all } $2 for only

Or, you may secure the Flag and Declaration) FREE. To any old subscriber who will send } us one new eight months' subscription to the } Christian Herald (remitting $1.00 with order) }
we will send one of these large American Flags } and Declaration of Independence

FREE

ACT NOW

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

A PRAYER FOR THE TEMPTED

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JUNE 20. PS 41.
(TEMPERANCE LESSON)

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.D.

"Keep me from the snare which they have laid for me." Ps. 141: 9

Life's ocean is sown with floating mines, any one of which will secure our destruction. God only knows the lanes through these treacherous snares, with which Satanic and human foes beset the way of the righteous. We are deeply conscious of our ignorance and weakness, and are equally anxious not to bring disgrace on our Lord. We therefore pray for prayer with unaffected earnestness. The reclaimed drunkard dreads the attempt of depraved companions to allure him to his former habits, or awaken the old appetite pouring alcohol down his throat. Is it not reasonable to claim deliverance from the snare which the fowler hides in the grass? A snared bird, or gazelle, or lion, loses its liberty ever; and the snared soul becomes a slave. For my part, the prayer which I continually myself and recommend to all tempted souls is: "Cleanse the thoughts of my heart by inspiration of thy Holy Spirit, that I may perfectly love thee, and worthily magnify thy holy name." Live in the spirit of that prayer, and a subtle instinct will warn you when a snare is near.

The Flumed Torrent

By Amos R. Wells

WE MAY well believe that David's life, after his terrible fall, became one long prayer. Prayer is the one means of restoration, and it is the one preventive of the necessity for a restoration. David compares prayer to incense, rising from earth to God, fragrant and pleasing to the Father. Dr. J. L. Gordon, in the modern scientific spirit, compares prayer to vibration. "The entire universe, seen and unseen," he says, "is nothing more than a great whispering gallery. All recent discoveries emphasize the sovereignty of the law of vibration. The terrible earthquake which shook south Italy was registered in Washington during twenty-three seconds of uninterrupted vibrations. The earthquake experts of the American capital knew 'when' and 'where.' All vibrations are universal in their sweep and never fail to reach the outermost limit of the realm in which they move. The greatest realm is the realm of thought. No thought vibrations emerging from the mind of man ever failed to reach the mind of God."

David's fall had been brought about through a misuse of his eyes in the first place, and through a misuse of his tongue in the second place. What words he had used to persuade Bathsheba to commit the great sin with him we do not know, but they lay sadly on his conscience; no wonder he prayed that God would thereafter keep the door of his lips. Quarles, in his quaint way, writes a somewhat similar metaphor: "Give not thy tongue too great liberty lest it take thee prisoner. A word unspoken is, like the sword in the scabbard, thine; if vented, thy sword is in the hand of another. If thou desire to be held wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue."

But after all, eyes and tongue not forgotten, "out of the heart are the issues of life"; and we are not surprised that David goes on to pray, "Incline not my heart to any evil thing." David does not pray to have his heart freed from desires, his natural inclinations stifled, but that they should be inclined into the right channels. Dr. J. R. Miller illustrates with the story of a man who found a wild torrent in the mountains, working only destruction. "He built a flume for it, and carried its wild flood in quiet streams down into the valley, where they watered the fields and gardens, gave drink to the thirsty, and turned many a wheel of industry. This was far better than if he had dried up the torrent. That is what God wants to do with the cravings, the desires, the passions, the longings, and all the mighty energies of our nature."

David was grateful all his life to Nathan, the righteous prophet who had so kindly smitten him with rebuke. A wise man always regards a just reproof as the greatest kindness. The Earl of Rochester, riding in disguise, overtook a poor preacher and began to assail him for winning so few souls. The minister excused himself by pointing to the wicked life of the Earl of Rochester, whose powerful influence availed to turn men from the Gospel. The next day the earl summoned the preacher to his castle and sternly said, "What do you think of the Earl of Rochester today?" "Would to God that I had occasion to change my opinion," said the clergyman stoutly. The earl thanked him, and his reformer returned from that hour.

David, in his repentance, did not expect to be freed from troubles. Indeed, his life from the time of his moral downfall was one long succession of trials. Truthfully he described it, "Our bones are scattered at the grave's mouth." But he had learned to accept whatever God sent, and to be at peace. Francis de Sales puts the lesson beautifully for us: "Make friends with your trial as though you were always to live together, and you will find that when you cease to take thought for your deliverance, God will take thought for you."

This one hundred and forty-first psalm is pre-eminently the psalm of the drunkard. It is a summons to temperance—temperance in speech, temperance in food, temperance in all else in desires. It is a picture of temptation—the snares and net of the evil one. It is a recommendation of stern measures, the rebuke of friends, the harsh hand of retribution. Especially it points the way to the only safety in temptation, the ceaseless watch and the trustful prayer.

Temptations and Temperance

By Arthur H. Howland

THIS is a two-part lesson. It is a study of temptation: it is scheduled here in the year's course as a study in temperance.

As a study of temptation we need that the psalmist recognizes the fact that his bulwark against temptation is God. "Lord, I cry unto thee." That is the thing to do in every time of temptation. Sometimes the temptation seems great, but God is always greater. You remember Browning's "Inns of Tyranny," which tells the story of the man whom the king hated. He laid the most diabolical, intricate and far-reaching plans to destroy him, running mines of explosives under his dwelling and altogether surrounding him with death-threatening dangers. But when the moment of destruction drew near, the man, realizing his helplessness, Caught at God's skirts—and prayed.

God saved him by an earthquake. So God will come to the deliverance of any man who asks to be saved from sin in time of temptation.

But with the prayer must go watchfulness. Jesus said "Watch and pray." "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth. Keep the door of my lips, O God will set a guard at our lips, and we, too, must watch. To ask God to keep us does not relieve us from responsibility. We must constantly be on guard, alert, quick to keep wrong, the unkind, the harmful But, deeper still, the heart. That must be right. Jesus locates human trouble there. Evil things, he declared, proceed from the heart. And it is precisely there that God has provided remedy and help. As the heart naturally is inclined to evil, so God by his supernatural grace will cleanse it and incline it toward righteousness.

 "In thee is my trust." "Keep me from the snares."

Since Jesus has lived and died and risen again we understand even better than this psalmist did God's method of a God's purpose in helping us in time of temptation. He helps us so that we can help others; and his method of helping us is to make us care for others, to make us so interested in them that we shall shrink from the thought of harming them and shall try to help them in every possible way. This is what his cleansing means—that he takes the unkind spirit out of our hearts and puts the spirit of love and helpfulness there.

The last verse of this psalm hardly sends Christian: "Let the wicked fall in their own nets whilst that I withal escape." Christ wants us to have a spirit which yearns to save the wicked.
 We wish to escape the nets of temptation they lay for us, but then we want them to escape, too.

Active, intense, self-forgetful labor for others is the surest guard against the power of temptation. Always remember that a temptation to sin is a temptation to harm some one else.
 Even the temptation to self-indulgence means that some one else may be influenced by our acts to injure himself as that we ourselves, by our indulgence, lessen our own capacity for helpful service.

Now as to temperance. Better spend the time available in recounting the tremendous temperance victories of recent months—the vote in Congress which showed a majority in favor of the prohibition amendment, the new states which have gone dry, the sudden and amazing transformation of Russia into a temperance nation, the exclusion of absinthe from France, the advanced temperance ground taken in England.

And some other news items like this,
 for instance—that the Brunswick-
 Blake-Collender Company, of Kansas City, Mo., the largest manufacturers of bar fixtures, has turned its entire plant at Dubuque, Iowa, over to the work of manufacturing talking machine cabinets and piano cases. The company's secretary, H. F. Davenport, said: "We have discontinued the manufacture of stock bar fixtures because there is not now a sufficient demand."

 The saloon is doomed. Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor societies, other church organizations are shouting the slogan for America: "A Saloonless Nation in 1920!"

Echoes from the Holy Land

INCENSE and frankincense—incense ascending in a fragrant cloud was symbolical of prayer. Incense was one of the savor offerings and used mainly for its sacrificial smoke, and does not necessarily represent the fragrance of any particular substance. Frankincense was a mixture of several odoriferous vegetable products mixed with some salt in equal portions.
 Only when thus mixed could it be used in sacrifice. Used as a perfume it was a sign of luxurious living. Its modern use today in the Orient is confined to Christian places of worship, and forms no part of the religious customs of Islam. When a mother-in-law welcomes her son's bride to the family home she receives her with a burning censer of incense. The bride accepts the tribute and makes a gift of gold in response. "Lifting up of hands." While the Oriental honors the right hand above the left, the lifting up of both hands is the Oriental attitude of prayer, and is a dignified and appropriate form of approaching God.

"Door of my lips." Both Hebrew and Arabic abound in figurative expressions connected with human symbols. The "eyegate" and the "ear-gate" to the soul.

Evil words lead to wicked deeds and wicked deeds to judgment. Long before Rome had her Tarpeian Rock over whose precipice condemned criminals were hurled the Edomites had their high rock in Petra from whose top ten thousand of their own people were thrown to instant death. (II Chron. 25: 12-14). I stood on the top of that same rock, which was plainly a place of execution, and can testify to the terrifying nature of the remote reference in verse 6.
 (See "Jordan Valley and Petra," Libbey and Hoskins, Vol. II, p. 64.)

Snare, gins, nets—were used to catch both birds and quadrupeds. The ancient Egyptians had traps to catch even large birds alive, consisting of network strained over two semi-circular flaps moving on a common axis. This was laid on the ground, and when the bait was touched the two flaps closed, like the action of a steel trap, and entrapped the bird.

Every boy in Syria knows how to make little nooses or snoods of horsehair and fastens them to wooden pins. A dozen of these on a grassy slope, strewn with grain as bait, catch not a few small birds, each by the foot, in a day.
 Most common of all is the use of birdlime, a sticky substance made from the berry of the mistletoe. This is smeared on small rods two or three feet long and laid across the limbs of trees in elevated spots where birds fly and are apt to light. Birds in cages are used as decoys, and woe to the other birds who are lured to resting on these attractive branches! Gazelles are driven into narrow valleys where converging lines of thorn bushes come together over a concealed pit, at the bottom of which are sharp stakes on which the timid creatures impale themselves.

Snares, gins and traps are bristling with smiles and metaphors describing the temptations which allure the young and the old to destruction.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS' ROUND TABLE

Conducted by FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How can we hold older boys to the Sunday school?

(1) By dignifying the exercises so that the right appeal may be made to their years.
 (2) By the use of such illustrations in the lesson application by superintendent or teacher as shall fit the advance in their experience and intelligence. (3) By organizing the class with the usual officers and committees, so that the older young men may be given some responsibility. (4) By giving them something larger than passing the song books. They should be for special service. (5) By a wholesome attention to their employment, recreational and social life. (6) By praying with them and for them that they may know Christ as Saviour.

How would you plan now for a teacher-training class to be ready in October?

If you have a class of sixteen-year-old girls or boys put a teacher-training book now in the hands of the teacher of that class, say Hunt's "Normal Outlines," or Oliver's
 "Education of the Teacher," or your denominational training book, and ask him or her to be prepared to take the class through the course, beginning with the first Sunday in October, the lesson to be given during the Sunday school hour. Supply books in October for each member of the class. Or with the help of the pastor and the co-operation of the teachers, select from several of the classes of young people, say, 16 to 18 years of age, the best material and form these into a training class to be taught by the pastor or superintendent or some one else. This class can meet together, if needed, for the lesson period only, and the members can then return to their regular class.

This would preserve their relation to their old teacher and class, which in many cases it would be well not to break.

If you select your training material from those over twenty, there is a probability that social and other duties may interfere with regular preparation of the lesson, and study, as such, becomes more difficult after passing the teens.

Q. What is a good motto for a Junior Department and what is the motto of your Sunday school?

A. A good Junior Department motto for the live nine to twelve-year-old boys and girls is the motto of Mr. Lawrence's Sunday school:
 "Go, Glow, Grow." Our own motto for the whole school is "We seek the best."

Q. With a class of seventy-five adults should the lecture method be used?

A. This depends somewhat upon the make-up of the class and the class surroundings. If the class finds it difficult to hear the teacher or class members because of its situation the question method should be used with caution.
 And if the bulk of those in the class are those with little or no acquaintance with the Bible it would be an embarrassment to them to ask them questions as to the Bible. In that case a general question may be asked of all the class, any one to answer. Or a few individuals may be posted in advance that a certain question will be asked so that they may have opportunity to prepare. In one large class at Wichita, Kan., the leader prepares the ground with a few good questions to arouse attention and get a setting for the application, and then brings the lesson down in his talk to present-day life and needs.

The Gillette on Tour

ALL roads lead to San Francisco this year.

Machines being groomed for the tour—traveling kits overhauled—packets of Gillette Blades and new Gillette Sets being bought by the thousands all over the country.

Your tourist, perhaps better than any other man, can appreciate the quick, clean, cool

Gillette Shave, and "no stopping—no honing."

He may be willing to camp
 by the wayside, and rustle his meals from likely-looking farm houses—but he is not taking chances with his daily shave.

You too like your own kind of shave and the Gillette ensures it—$5 to $50—Blades
 50c. and $1 a packet.

GILLETTE SAFETY RAZOR COMPANY
 BOSTON, MASS.

Never be without the handy little tube of "Vaseline."

 It is the safest and most useful of all home "remedies."

Vaseline

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

"Vaseline" soothes and heals cuts, burns, and bruises. It has a hundred uses for every member of the family—
 "Your friend in a hundred troubles."

In tubes and bottles, at drug and department stores. Write for illustrated booklet describing the various "Vase-line" preparations and their many uses.

CHESEBROUGH MFG. CO.
 (Consolidated)

13 State Street, New York

Runs on Alcohol

at cost of less than one-half cent an hour, anywhere without electricity, springs or batteries. Superb construction, 12-inch blades. Adjustable roller bearing. Reliable. A proved comfort. Prompt delivery.

Keep Cool

Write for price and free circular
 Lake Breeze Motor, 118 N. Jefferson St., Chicago

Boston Garter

Velvet Grip

"Everybody
 in the world
 wears 'em"

From Cohen & Harris
 successful play

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

STOP BUYING ICE Every Day Save money

The new Economy Ice Blanket cuts your ice bills in half.
 Made of pure sterilized vegetable fibre. Clean and sanitary.
 Lasts all summer. Postpaid, 10 cents. Agents wanted.
 UTILITY MFG. CO., 425 Tuttle Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

THE RIGHT OIL FOR RIGHT OILING

3-in-One lubricates best because it works out dirt from fine bearings and spreads evenly over contact surfaces. Doesn't gum or dry out. Contains no acid or grease. Has sufficient viscosity to wear long. Most satisfactory of all oils on sewing machines and other fine mechanisms.

3-in-One oil

is sold in drug, grocery, hardware and general stores: 1 oz. bottle 10c, 3 oz. 25c; 8 oz. (1/2 pt.), 50c. Also in Handy Oil Cans, 3 1/2 oz. 25c. If you do not find these with your dealer, we will send one by parcel post, full of 3-in-One for 30c.

A Library Slip with every bottle. FREE—Write for a generous free sample and the 3-in-One Dictionary.

THREE-IN-ONE OIL CO.

42 CS Broadway
New York

Crooked Spines Made Straight

by the Sheldon Method

Thousands of Remarkable Cases

An old lady, 72 years of age, who suffered for many years and was absolutely helpless, found relief for the rest of her days through the Sheldon Method. A man who was helpless, unable to rise from his chair, was riding horseback and playing tennis within a year. A little child, paralyzed, was playing about the house after wearing a Sheldon Appliance 3 weeks.

We have successfully treated more than 20,000 cases in the past 14 years.

30 Days' Trial at Our Risk

We will prove its value in your own case. There is no reason why you should not accept our offer. The photographs show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjustable the Sheldon Appliance is—how different from the old torturous plaster, leather or steel jackets.

Every sufferer with a weakened or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate thoroughly. The price is within reach of all.

Send for Our Free Book

If you will describe the case it will aid us in giving you definite information at once.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
207 6th Street, Jamestown, N. Y.

30 Days' Free Trial

Direct to you at factory prices. Beautiful, sanitary. Enameled snowy-white inside and out; revolving shelves, cork cushioned doors and covers; porcelain drinking water reservoir and cooling coil—attachable to city water system if desired.

White Frost Refrigerator

SANITARY

Guaranteed 25 years; lasts a lifetime. Adopted and used by U. S. Government. Easy payment plan. Freight prepaid. Write today for handsome free catalog.

WHITE FROST REFRIGERATOR CO., Dept. C1, Jackson, Michigan

Christian Health Movement

led by W. Earl Flynn, America's great Christian Health lecturer and teacher. Brightens intellect; renews ambition; lengthens life; adds beauty to face and form. Information FREE, together with simple health menus for child and grown-up.

W. EARL FLYNN, Dept. 6, Lincoln, Neb.

THE PRAYER LEAGUE

OUR friend from Mukti, India, Manoramabai, sends this message to the Christian Herald: "With feelings of deepest gratitude we write to thank you for your check. It comes as a direct answer to prayer, and we praise the Lord and thank you. We should be glad if your readers would especially remember the Gulbarga branch of the work in prayer. It is among high caste girls in a Mohammedan walled city, and God has in a wonderful way given us an opportunity there. We have been cheered of late by letters from some of our married girls, who seem so very grateful for all they have been taught here, and for all the spiritual help received. They are now telling out the Gospel in the villages round their homes, and a recent letter from one says, 'Please do not forget to pray for us.'"

A sad letter comes from a father and mother in Pennsylvania: "Our only son," they write, "was taken from us and we are in agony of mind, with our support cut off and the prospect of losing our home. We know not which way to turn." A mother asks special prayer for the conversion of all her children. She writes: "They are sound morally, and have fine minds, well cultivated, and are filling their positions in life worthily and faithfully, but not one of them is a devout Christian." A distressed father writes from Texas to ask prayer for his wife, who has been afflicted with paralysis for six years, his oldest daughter, who is ill, and his youngest daughter, who lost her hearing about five years ago.

Mrs. S. L. S. writes to express gratitude for the answer to prayer for a revival in Marysville, Pa., and community. She says: "Almost five hundred people have been brought to Christ. I am specially thankful to God for the conversion of two grandsons and their father." Mrs. L. writes: "My brother was cured of the drink habit in answer to the prayers of the League." A friend from New Mexico writes: "You can not imagine what the Prayer League has done for me; it saved me from becoming a bankrupt. Some three years ago I became heavily involved through the failure of a bank; about one and a half years ago I was very ill with pneumonia. My health is restored; business is improving; the future looks brighter."

A reader of North Carolina writes: "I wish to acknowledge answered prayer for the young man in prison. He has been free some time and protected in time of great danger." A wife writes from Missouri: "I wish to acknowledge answered prayer for my husband's recovery and for a very great blessing. The Lord has answered my prayer by making him a Christian." A friend writes from Louisiana: "Early this year I asked that I might be spared from despair and suicide, and asked the League for its prayers. I have been saved."

A Georgia friend writes: "Some time ago I asked your assistance in prayer for a certain thing, and I should feel like one of the 'other nine' if I did not turn back to tell you that the answer came." A friend from Virginia writes: "About a month ago I wrote the League asking them to pray that I might be able to endure a trouble which at that time seemed greater than I could bear. I want to thank God and the League for the blessed peaceful feeling which came over me yesterday, and I know it has

What She Thinks the Best

I LIKE first the corner where the nuts are cracked. I find in the precious Book, there are hard things to fathom; some are in shells, and men like Dr. Jowett and his associates are used by the Holy Spirit to break these, so we can get the real meat. And it is so sweet that one each morning is enough for a day's tonic. Second, I like the sermon, for I am a shut-in with an invalid boy, and I feast on this Sunday dinner. Then Pollyanna comes tripping in, and "I am so glad" to see her. There are lots else I like—but you only asked for our best.

May God bless all the Herald Family.

M. B. G.

come from my Father, who heard my prayer."

A wife writes from a town in New York state: "About a year ago I asked for prayers and they proved to be a help. My husband stopped using tobacco and stopped swearing. He was saying to me in the winter that he did not know the reason, but found that he did not care for his tobacco any more. I told him that I had asked the Christian Herald readers to pray for this. He replied, 'That accounts for it all. Write and tell that paper I am thankful.'"

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

Miss L. R., Maple Valley, Wis.; M. G., Marshville, N. C.; Mrs. N. S. C., Stanford, Ky.; Mrs. M. L., Avondale, Ala.; Mrs. T. Y. A., Elkhart, Ind.; A. Friend, Upper Sandusky, Ohio; Mrs. R. A. H., Stockbridge, Mich.; E. E. J., Cuba, N. Y.; R. Covington, La.; Mrs. C. E. W., Protection, Kan.; Mrs. S. M. F., Murfreesboro, Tenn.; Mrs. B. A. C., Seabrook, Lake, Me.; D. A., Eubanks, Texas; M. A. F., Woodsville, N. H.; M. S. L., Cleveland, Ohio; S. A. S., Emporia, Kan.; C. E. S., Illinois; Mrs. C. E. M., Maysville, Ga.; Miss S. T., Pine Hill, R. I.; Mrs. J. A. H., Norris City, Ill. (for a revival in the community); Reader, S. C.; Mrs. E. K. L., Fulton, Ohio; Mrs. C. S., Norridgewock, Me.; O. S. T., Farmington, Me.; Mrs. E. C., Russell, Idaho; Mrs. J. L. S., Dale, Ind.

Prayers are asked for revivals at Marietta, Ga.; Protection, Kans.; Mora, Minn.; Rossville, Ga.; Georgetown, N. Y.; in the M. E. Church in a suburb of Los Angeles, Calif.; Cedar Springs, Mo.; Yackinville, N. C. (in the M. E. Church); Carlinville, Ill. (in the M. E. Church); Lemont, Ill.; Woodsville, N. H.; Hollis, N. H.; Mrs. E. P. requests prayer that we may have an outpouring of the Holy Spirit in our country churches; Mrs. S. C. H., that loved ones may be converted during the revival in Lynhams, Va., and also for a gracious revival there. A Reader asks prayer that the society ladies of our towns and cities may be saved; Mrs. E. T. W., that there be an outpouring of the Spirit in the church; Mrs. J. H. N., for a spiritual work in Rough and Ready, Calif.; N. C. B., for a great spiritual awakening of Ebenezer A. M. E. Church, and for closing of saloons in St. Joseph, Mo.; M. E. M., for the conversion of fifteen friends, also for a spirit of love among the members of the church, and that the wanderers may return; Mrs. M. H. E., for the conversion of the people of East Liverpool, Calcutta and Cannons, Ohio; Mrs. C. C. Z., that the right minister may be sent to a church at Charles City, Iowa; Mrs. F. E. B., that men will be made to feel their need of a Saviour and that the Holy Spirit may so work upon people's hearts that they cannot resist. Prayers are again asked for a world-wide revival.

Fifteen friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for friends, relatives, or themselves.

Seventeen friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for relatives, friends or for themselves.

Twenty-three friends ask prayer that relatives or friends may be delivered from the drink habit. Six friends ask prayer that relatives, friends or themselves may be delivered from the drug habit.

Fifty-two friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing, including one mother that she may be reconciled to the death of her son, another that an old lady's faith may be strengthened and know sins are forgiven.

One hundred and six readers ask prayer for the conversion of relatives or friends, including one that sons may be saved and that one may return home, and another that son may be converted and return home.

Sixteen friends ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends, including one who requests prayer for the safety and welfare of a dear brother who is a volunteer in the British army.

Ninety-two friends ask prayer for the healing of relatives or friends, including one that mother's speech may be restored; sixty-seven for the healing of themselves.

Eight friends ask prayer for healing of hearing for themselves or other friends.

Sixty readers ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Sixty-three friends ask prayer for granting of varied desires and needs.

A Veteran Prohibitionist

I AM in hearty sympathy with the good work the Christian Herald is and has long been doing for the cause of prohibition. I have for thirty years been writing, talking, praying and paying for city, state and national prohibition of the accursed government-licensed traffic, and am still at it and expect to continue until I can neither write nor pay. Before my state had prohibition, I spent hundreds of dollars to help secure it and today I believe I never spent money to better profit.

I read your excellent Herald and then place it in a reading room in a suburb of our city, accessible to 5,000 people.

J. E. R.

White Mountain Freezer

THE "WORLDS BEST" ICE CREAM FREEZER

Saves Time Worries

Ice cream made the right way with a White Mountain Freezer is easier to make than a pudding or a pie.

BY ACTUAL TEST—Two apple pies made ready to put into the oven in thirty-five minutes (to say nothing of the baking). Two quarts of delicious ice cream mixer frozen and packed ready to serve in twenty-one minutes and no hot fire to fuss over. We have proved it—so can you. If you don't know the right way ask your dealer for our folder or write to us direct.

The White Mountain Freezer Co.
Nashua, New Hampshire

GET POWER

The Supply Comes From Food.

If we get power from food, why not strive to get all the power we can. That is only possible by selecting food that exactly fits the requirements of the body. "Not knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach trouble," writes a lady from a little town in Missouri.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me. Hardly anything that I did eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heart-burn and led my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton and in time was compelled to keep to my bed."

"A few months ago I was persuaded to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had a good effect from the very beginning. I kept up its use. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed."

"All my unpleasant symptoms—the heart-burn, the inflated feeling which gave me so much pain, disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 116 lbs., my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. Grape-Nuts did it."

A ten days' trial will show anyone the facts about food.

Name given by Postum Co., 1111 Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

HEALTH STRENGTH and PERFECT FIGURE

I have a common sense message, and clearly told to send you Free. You can learn without cost how to get that high type of health, strength and figure in both sexes, which can be obtained only by having every internal organ in the right place, doing its proper work. 100,000 men and women have proved themselves the wonderful health, strength and comfort giving product.

The NATURAL BODY BRACE

overcomes the many ills and weaknesses peculiar to men. A brace to both men and women as it supports and corrects misplaced internal organs—reduces enlarged abdominal—straightens and strengthens the back—corrects stooping shoulders—develops lungs and bust—stops backache and nervousness—makes work easy and walking a pleasure. Not sold in stores. You can secure one only by sending to us direct, as we give 30 Days' Free Trial cost the special and exclusive Howard C. Rash Individual Service—explained in our Free Book.

Write today stating whether for lady or gentleman and get full information from inventor and manufacturer.

HOWARD C. RASH, President
The Natural Body Brace Co.
171 Rash Bldg. Salina, Kansas

Make This 4th of July, 1915
Americanization Day For Every City
in the Nation!

Use Sam's Fable-- What Shall
the Answer Be?

3,000,000 immigrants in the United States.

What can we do to help them become Americans first?

We must give them more than citizenship.

We must make them feel that they are part of American Institutions.

We must give them the national consciousness which is the inheritance of the native-born American.

We must do something that will make them one of us---Americans at home.

But what Shall This "Something" Be?

$25 FOR THE BEST ANSWER
$10 FOR THE SECOND BEST

What America Means and How to Americanize the Immigrant, with a Program for a Fourth of July Citizenship Celebration. Your answer must be forwarded before June 25, 1915.

For particulars address

The Immigrants in America Review

5 Madison Avenue, New York City

DON'T SHOUT

DEAF
The Morley Phone for the DEAF is to the ears what glasses are to the eyes.
Invisible, comfortable,
weightless and harmless.
Over one hundred thousand deaf people adjust it.
Write for booklet and testimonials.
THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Bldg., Phila.

Genuine All Hand-Woven Unblocked PANAMA

can be worn in this country by Men, Women and Children. Easily blocked and unblocked. Light Weight.
Portable. All hand-woven.
Brushed from 2 to 6 inches.
Sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00. Money back if not satisfactory. Write for Catalog.
Panamas from $1.00 to $100.00
ANAHAT CO., Dept. C, 830 Broadway, New York City

Ride a RANGER

bicycle and know you have the best. Buy a machine you can prove before accepting.
DELIVERED FREE on approval and 30 days' trial. NO EXPENSE to you if, after trial you do not wish to keep it.
LOW FACTORY COST, great improvements and values never before equalled.
WRITE TODAY for our big catalog showing our complete line of 1915 bicycles, tires, sundries and parts, and learn the wonderful new offers and terms we will give you. Auto and Motorcycle Supplies at factory to user prices. Do not buy until you know what we can do for you. A postal card brings everything.
HEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. F-71, CHICAGO

Do you want our patented "In-Door Wash Line?"
and the addresses of ten cleaners using Faceage Line and ten cents. Perma-Hair-Sheen, 30 Third Street, New York, N. Y.

JOHN HUSS, MARTYR

Continued from page 596

approved by the archbishop and the university. In this treatise he takes the ground that all the blood which flowed from the body of Christ was glorified in this same body in the moment of Christ's resurrection. It is a weirdly mystical argument which he attempts in this treatise, but the practical conclusions which he reaches are excellent. He expresses his indignation at the diabolical tricks with which the common people are being deceived and misled into superstitious beliefs. Christians, he declares, should not base their faith on pretended miracles but on the divine revelation. The Gospel of Christ must manifest its power in the hearts and consciences of men. If the priests would only teach the people the word of the Lord rather than fictitious miracles, the faithful Redeemer would turn priests and people from their evil way, namely from error and sin and from their mean scheming to find new lies which they might palm off on the simple folk.

This Wilsnack incident caused the archbishop to forbid other idolatrous practices in his diocese, and a reform of the clergy was begun in 1405, when Hus was appointed the preacher at the synods which were held annually in Bohemia. Relentlessly Hus upbraided the clergy for neglecting their pastoral office, frequenting taverns, leading unchaste lives, and for their greed and avarice. "Tell me, ye clergymen," he says in one of these sermons, "do we not inflict a more grievous tyranny on Christians than pagan kings on their people? . . . We oppress the people because we assert our authority over them, not from love of righteousness, but because we have become angry at them and delight in inflicting hard punishments on them. That is the reason why the people have invented this vicious saying against us: 'If you have insulted a clergyman, slay him; otherwise you will never have peace.' Tell me, furthermore, ye clergymen, how do you comply with the word of Christ: 'He that is greatest among you, let him be as the youngest, and the most exalted as a servant'? Do you do it by occupying the front seats in the synagogues, the place of honor at the table, by receiving public salutations and demanding that people address you 'Father,' or 'Master,' or 'Sir'? Do you do it by your almost absolute unconcern about the true spiritual treasures of the church, and by your greedy concern and scheming to secure worldly goods? Do you do it by looking for fat charges and church offices, not that you may render faithful service in them, but in order that through them you may secure authority and live like heathen? Or do you do it by your boasting how many horses, superfluous mansions, costly furniture, heaps of money you have, by your oppressing the lowly and fawning before the rich and great, by your despising those who tell you the truth and by loving those who flatter you; in brief, by every kind of worldly pride and love of distinction? St. Bernhard and another teacher, Gilbert, have said that the clergy have become an abominable monster on earth. In the highest places we find the most low-minded men; in the most eminent positions there is vulgar living; a bragging tongue goes with a lazy hand; there is much talking and no fruit, serious faces and frivolous actions. Many among the clergy are blind spies, dumb watchmen, lame fencers, physicians who know not the disease. . . . There are many among you who shamefully soil themselves, worse than laymen, with intemperance and drunkenness. When you come out of the taverns you can hardly walk, much less speak, and least of all know what your priestly dignity demands of you."

At the king's court this sort of preaching was applauded, however, for rather selfish and worldly reasons. When the priests began to complain to the king about Hus, he said: "As

Try this easy way to clear your skin with Resinol Soap

Bathe your face for several minutes with Resinol Soap and warm water, working the creamy lather into the skin gently with the finger-tips. Then wash off with more Resinol Soap and warm water, finishing with a dash of cold water to close the pores.

Do this once or twice a day, and you will be astonished how quickly the healing, antiseptic Resinol medication soothes and cleanses the pores, removes pimples and blackheads, and leaves the complexion clear, fresh and velvety.

If the skin is in bad condition through neglect or an unwise use of cosmetics, apply a little Resinol Ointment and let it remain on ten minutes before the final washing with Resinol Soap.

Resinol Soap is not artificially colored, its rich, brown being entirely due to the Resinol balsam it contains. Sold by all druggists and dealers in toilet goods. For a guestroom size trial cake and miniature box of Resinol Ointment, write Dept. 10-C, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

Physicians have prescribed Resinol for over twenty years in the treatment of skin and scalp affections.

Ask Your Physician for the Hygeia

Every New Mother Gets The Hygeia

NURSING BOTTLE

It is next to mother's nursing. The non-collapsible rubber breast with the "Hidden Shield" has the natural shape of a mother's breast. Breast can be turned wrong side out to clean. The wide-mouthed food cell is easiest of all to keep sanitary.

If you are a new mother, your physician can obtain for you, from us, one complete Hygeia Nurser Free. At druggists, 35 cents.

To Physicians: We will supply you Free a book of cards, entitling every new mother to the Hygeia Nursing Bottle with our compliments. Write for it on your professional stationery.

Hygeia Nursing Bottle Co., 1341 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Have You Seen the Three New Regals?

Include the Regal in the list of cars you are thinking of investigating. Ask the Regal dealer to demonstrate these three splendid models.

A Light "Four" at	$ 650
A Standard "Four" at	1085
A De Luxe "Eight" at	1250

If you will do this you will endorse Regal claims as faithful reflections of the Qualities and Merits of these cars. Do this and we are satisfied that, side by side with cars of equal or even higher price, one of the Regals will be your choice.

All three Regals have the same handsome streamline, roomy bodies, complete equipment, including self starting and lighting, one-man top, demountable rims and speedometer. Remember, while examining the Regal, that it has been in the field for more than eight years.

Remember, too, that each year's Regals have increased their reputation for sturdiness, endurance and power, and that each year has brought a larger demand for them.

For strength—which means practical working service, day in and day out, the Regal is unsurpassed. See the Regal before you buy.

Regal Motor Car Co.

6660 Piquette Ave.
DETROIT, MICH.

Light Four $650

HAVE YOU READ ABOUT BILLY SUNDAY

You will get the truth about this remarkable man in "Billy Sunday, the Man and His Message." In this book, Wm. T. Ellis, LL.D., not only tells the story of Sunday's eventful life, gives a keen analysis of his manner and methods, traces his remarkable success as the most conspicuous Christian leader in America, but he also gives the heart of his message arranged by subjects and published by special agreement with Mr. Sunday for the use of copyright material and photographs which could be used only with his permission.

Preaches Religion in Homely Phrases

"I never preach a sermon until I have soaked it in prayer."—BILLY SUNDAY

"Billy Sunday, the Man and His Message," is an intensely interesting book because it deals with a subject of the greatest human concern in a new way.

Bound in cloth. 496 pages. 32 chapters. Illustrated.

—HOW TO OBTAIN THIS REMARKABLE BOOK—

We will send you a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," and The Christian Herald for one year, for..... $200

OR, We will send to old subscribers a copy of "Billy Sunday, The Man and His Message," as a reward for sending a NEW eight months' subscription, accompanied by..... $1 10

Address: The Christian Herald, Bible House, N. Y.

long as the magister preached against us laymen, you were delighted with him; now that your turn has come, you create a great hullabaloo." Moreover, King Wenceslaus was still smarting under the humiliation which he had suffered at the hands of the Pope, who had deprived him of the imperial dignity because of his profligate living: the king considered the attacks of Hus on the Pope's minions a fine retaliation. But Wenceslaus' Queen Sophia seems to have given Hus her royal protection and goodwill from sincere faith in the truth which he preached. Among the people Hus was even regarded as the queen's professor.

Conrad Baer has pointed out that about the year 1405 Hus had reached the zenith of his power. By his office at the university he was in constant touch with the students, as preacher and pastor he could exert his influence on the people, and his relation to the queen opened a wide field for usefulness to him at the court.

We shall now have to follow him to his decline and ruin.

To be continued

THE WAR IN EUROPE

Continued from page 603

boats and two transports, one of which was loaded with troops, of whom it is said over a thousand were drowned.

On May 26 the British admiralty announced the loss of the battleship Triumph, sunk by a submarine in the Dardanelles while operating in support of the land forces on the Gallipoli Peninsula. Whether the submarine which torpedoed the Triumph was Turkish or German is not at this writing certainly known. Most of the officers and men were reported saved.

The feature of the campaign in the west has been the continued hard fighting around Ypres, and southeast from that town to just north of Arras. Late last week the French and British to the west of Ypres succeeded in driving the Germans out of their positions on the west bank of the Yser Canal, and also out of their advanced positions on the east side of the canal between it and Steenstraete and Het Sas, two villages which have been quite prominent in the previous fighting here. Early in this week, however, the Germans recovered a portion of the lost ground. Very severe fighting also occurred to the east of Ypres, a little to the north of the road between that town and Meinn. Here the Germans succeeded in making a not inconsiderable gain, as gains are measured in this fighting, at the expense of the British, and at the end of the battle had nearly reached the village of Hooze, just a couple of miles farther to the south. Hill No. 60 was also the scene of much fighting, but here the British succeeded in repulsing the repeated German assaults.

From Richebourg l'Avone, south as far as Neuville, just north of Arras, the French had all the best of the intense fighting, and all along this line drove the Germans steadily backward.

Repeating the names of captured villages would hardly convey much idea of the extent or importance of this advance, which is really the most important that the French have gained in the past six or seven months and puts them within striking distance of that very important strategic point, La Bassée. If this advance should continue until La Bassée is captured, it would finally compel the evacuation of Lille. Farther eastward, the fighting was much less intense, though in the region between the Meuse and the Moselle there was more or less of tactical fighting all the week, which, however, was without decisive results.

In the fighting on this line during the week, the son of Marion Crawford, the well-known American novelist, was killed, as was also the grandson of Darwin, the great naturalist.

On the eastern line of battle the army of General von Mackensen continued its victorious advance north of Przemyśl, and, crossing the river, in a couple of days succeeded in driving the Russians out of their positions to the east of that river for a distance of about fourteen miles.

The effect of this victory is believed to lay open the road to Lemberg and to make the closing of the circle around Przemyśl a comparatively easy matter, but necessarily some time will be required for the completion of the movement.

In south Poland there has been heavy fighting during the week east of Kielce and south of Opatow, and, too, the Germans have gained ground besides taking several thousand prisoners. Near Kielce there is a coal mine of some importance, which had fallen into German hands as the result of last week's advance, which, in view of the comparative scarcity of coal in Germany, is of some importance.

INFORMATION FOR INVESTORS

CHRISTIAN HERALD readers who desire to become familiar with investment securities, the principles governing their issuance and with elementary finance, with a view to making investments of amounts from $100 up, would do well to send for the various booklets and other advertising literature financial advertisers offer Christian Herald readers free of charge. These booklets, while free, have been prepared by experts, and the information contained therein, conveyed to the reader in simple terms and in engaging style, is valuable.

Peabody, Houghteling & Co., 10 South La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill., with fifty years' experience in Chicago investments, offer to send to our readers circular "C," describing 5½ per cent. and 6 per cent. bonds on Chicago property in $100 and $500 denominations.

A. H. Bickmore & Co., 111 Broadway, New York City, publish for free distribution an interesting booklet of $100 public utility bonds and notes which you can purchase today to yield 6½ per cent. A copy will be sent to any Christian Herald reader requesting it.

The Tax Lien Company, of 68 William Street, New York City, will send you information about New York City tax liens, which many investors buy on account of the high income yield.

Rensdorf, Lyon & Co., 33 New Street, New York City, will send Christian Herald readers an "Investors' Manual," containing quotations and other information about listed stocks and bonds.

Gas and Electric stocks and bonds have proven to be one of the soundest forms of investment. P. W. Brooks & Co., 115 Broadway, New York City, offer in their booklet "Bond Talk A" to tell you all about the attractive securities.

Many investors are buying listed stock and bonds today on the partial payment method. This plan permits a small investor to own a single share of stock upon the payment of $10 down and $10 a month. The partial payment plan is fully explained in Booklet 31, which Harris, Winthrop & Co., 15 Wall Street, New York City, will send free to our readers.

Many persons like short maturity investments for amounts of $500 and up. Mr. Franklin Escher, the eminent financial writer, has prepared a number of interesting booklets on short-term notes which may be had free by addressing the author, care of Commercial Security Company, 437 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

The American Real Estate Company, 534, 527 Fifth Avenue, New York City, will send any inquiring reader information about New York real estate as it applies as security for their 6 per cent. coupon bond and 6 per cent. accumulative bonds, which are issued in denominations of $100 and up.

E. J. Lander & Co., of Grand Forks, N. D., advertise 6 per cent. farm mortgages that "withstand depression." They tell all about these mortgages in "Booklet O," which will be sent free upon request.

Readers living in the smaller cities do not find it easy to keep posted on the securities market. For 30 cents in coin or stamps they may obtain the "Investor's Pocket Manual," advertised by the Financial Press, of 124 West Street, New York City. The manual contains 280 pages of condensed information, including the market prices of securities for the past ten years.

Let Us Cook Your Meats this Summer

Libby's Luncheon Meats

Consider the wonderful white tiled Libby Kitchens as your own—the famous Libby force of chefs and food specialists as your servants—and your summer meat problem will be solved.

The discerning housewife will appreciate the convenience and economy of buying meats ready cooked—the whole family will testify to the distinctive excellence of each Libby product.

Libby, McNeill & Libby Chicago

Hupmobile for Nineteen Sixteen

$115 Lower in Price—$200 Greater in Value

These two facts about the 1916 Hupmobile make this the most important announcement this company has ever made.

The 1916 Hupmobile is priced at $1085—$115 less than our 1915 model.

Yet we have gone to greater lengths than ever before to maintain the Hupmobile reputation for quality. The new Hupmobile has twenty per cent more power, giving a quicker pickup, an even stronger pull on hills and in sand, and slower running on high speed. We have made many refinements throughout the chassis; increasing the quality and improving the workmanship everywhere. Note these mechanical features: Tungsten steel valves, disc clutch with 16 hardened steel plates, bronze-shell motor bearings, spiral bevel gears in rear axle, nickel steel axle shafts, vanadium steel mainleaf in springs, tubular propeller shaft. Compare these features of the $1085 Hupmobile with any car on the market.

The 1916 Hupmobile maintains the reputation of earlier Hupmobiles for economy. The total repair expense of 54,000 Hupmobiles now in service, including breakages due to accidents, is less than one-quarter cent per mile. The 1916 Hupmobile will probably reduce this average. Though twenty per cent more powerful the 1916 car is a fit companion for our earlier models in gasoline mileage, tire service, and oil consumption.

We have been told countless times that the 1915 Hupmobile is the easiest riding car ever built. The 1916 Hupmobile is more comfortable. The upholstery is deeper. Genuine high grade hair and improved cushion construction give the comfort of an old shoe. Springs are even more flexible and easy riding. We have moved the control levers forward to add roominess, and changed their shape to give easiest operation. Tires are large in proportion to weight. The 119 inch wheelbase cradles you over bumps and smooths rough roads.

We know you will be charmed with the perfect performance and the luxurious ease of the 1916 Hupmobile.

The upholstery is genuine high grade leather. The open bodies are lined, with no highly polished surface exposed to scratches or mars. Floor-boards and clear running boards are best linoleum. The tonneau is richly carpeted.

The new bodies have a depth of color and luster of finish you have heretofore seen only in highest priced cars. Fenders, radiator, and motor bonnet are enameled by a new process—beautiful and long wearing.

The 1916 Hupmobile has the famous Bijur system for electric starting and lighting. This equipment is used on some of the highest priced cars. Latest improved battery ignition—surest and simplest built—is used. In our own shops we build the genuine Goldie one man top and Collins quick-acting curtains. Five demountable rims, complete electric lighting equipment, latest and best speedometer, an exclusive design rain vision and ventilating windshield, Hupmobile patented tail light, genuine crown fenders, non-skid tires on the rear wheels, are regular equipment on the 1916 cars. You will find nothing that makes for completeness missing from the Hupmobile.

These many improvements in style and refinements in design we give you in the 1916 Hupmobile at $1085 for the five-passenger touring car or roadster. You considered the 1915 car a big value at $1200. Compared with our previous cars the 1916 model is not only a bigger value but it is offered you at a reduction of $115.

We have accomplished these two results so important to you—first, by pledging ourselves to a fifty per cent increase in production for 1916, which means we buy better materials cheaper and greatly reduce overhead cost per car; second, by increasing our factory facilities and improving factory methods—new machinery and new processes enable us to build better at lower factory cost; third, we are confident that no car on the market is sold on a narrower margin of profit than the 1916 Hupmobile.

In a word, in our 1916 cars we are giving you the saving we effect through reduced factory costs, reduced material costs, and an unusually low profit per car.

For 1916, too, we offer you a complete line of Hupmobiles. We are now prepared to give you any type of car your needs or your tastes may demand—five-passenger Touring Car, two-passenger Roadster, All-Year Touring Car or Coupe, seven-passenger Touring Car, seven-passenger Limousine, five-passenger Sedan. We have absolute confidence that each of these types is the best value at the price on the market—certainly the best value ever built by this company.

All types retain the Hupmobile steady-riding, low-hung chassis; all bodies are racy and distinctive in appearance; all models are highest quality in every detail of construction.

In considering the 1916 Hupmobile please remember that the Hupp Motor Car Company is one of the few manufacturers in the United States that have never built a poor car or had an off year. Wherever you go you will hear the Hupmobile spoken of as a car of most unusual value at its price. That is why “we believe the Hupmobile to be the best car of its class in the world.” That creed of ours is fact to Hupmobile owners.

The reputation of quality in our cars is the biggest asset of our business. And we guard it most jealously.

So when we tell you the 1916 Hupmobiles are the best cars this company has ever built, and when we offer you our best cars at a reduction in price, you may well take our word for it that you will make no mistake in selecting a Hupmobile.

But we don't ask you to accept our word alone. We do ask you to see the 1916 Hupmobile—to ride in it—to drive it if you will.

Write for your copy of our new catalog which illustrates and describes in detail all the 1916 cars.

And won't you please ask the Hupmobile dealer in your city to prove to you every statement we make in this advertisement. Let him show you in an actual merit test that the 1916 Hupmobile is just what we say—truly “the best car of its class in the world.”

1916 HUPMOBILE PRICES

Five-Passenger Touring Car, $1085
Roadster, $1085 • Sedan, $1365 • Limousine, $2365
All-Year Touring Car, $1185 • All-Year Coupe, $1165
Seven-Passenger Touring Car, $1225

PLEASE MAIL THIS COUPON

Hupp Motor Car Company, Detroit, Michigan:
Send me your complete catalog of 1916 cars.

Name _____

Address _____ City and State _____

HUPP MOTOR CAR COMPANY • DETROIT, MICHIGAN

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JUNE 16, 1915

VOL. 38—No. 24. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

*Alone, in God's own peaceful wood,
All thoughts should be serene and good.*

Quality First

Beauty

THE lines of beauty are unmistakable whether in sculpture, painting, typography or a motor car.

"Those things are beautiful which are completely adequate," says John Ruskin. It's the complete adequacy of the Chalmers motor car which make it beautiful.

The lines of the Chalmers are such as to make them note worthy even when contrasted with finest foreign models.

Their streamline bodies possess a distinctive grace.

There are no fenders built—whether flat or merely crown—that are as handsome as the Chalmers molded oval fenders. They conform with exquisite harmony to the clean-cut sweep of the body lines.

The doors are wide and flush-fitting, the running boards are clear. The tires are carried in the rear.

It is a woman's car in beauty, a man's in performance, a child's in safety. But there is only one way to observe beauty and that is to observe it.

We invite you to call at the nearest Chalmers dealer to observe: The Chalmers New Six-40, $1400; Light Six-48, $1650; Master Six-54, $2400.

Chalmers Motor Cars

Let your next car be a Chalmers

ALL other news was for the moment forgotten in the keen interest created by the resignation of Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan on the eve of the reply by President Wilson to Germany's note of June 31 on the American protest against the country's submarine warfare. That Mr. Bryan was not in accord with the President and cabinet on the character of the second note to be sent by the American Government, was well known; but that he felt the issue to be so grave as to warrant a refusal to sign the note as drawn up by the President, came as a tremendous surprise to the country. The note, immediately cabled abroad, was received with equal surprise in the capitals of Europe, an everywhere speculation began as to the effect upon the situation of this almost unprecedented act. That one result would be a popular expression in the United States on the issues at stake, such as had not as yet been heard, was taken for granted on all sides. Immediately the second note to Germany was despatched on June 9, Mr. Bryan's resignation took effect and he issued to the public the formal statement printed below.

Copyright, Harris & Ewing
WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN
Secretary of State 1913-1915

Mr. Bryan's Formal Statement

MY REASON for resigning is clearly stated in my letter of resignation, namely, that I may employ, as a private citizen, the means which the President does not feel at liberty to employ. I honor him for doing what he believes to be right, and I am sure that he desires, as I do, to find a peaceful solution of the problem which has been created by the action of the submarines.

Two of the points on which we differ, each conscientious in his conviction, are:

First, as to the suggestion of investigation by an international commission, and Second, as to warning Americans against traveling on belligerent vessels or with cargoes of ammunition.

I believe that this nation should frankly state to Germany that we are willing to apply in this case the principle which we are bound by treaty to apply to disputes between the United States and thirty countries with which we have made treaties, providing for investigation of all disputes of every character and nature.

THESE treaties, negotiated under this administration, make war practically impossible between this country and these thirty governments, representing nearly three-fourths of all the people of the world.

Among the nations with which we have these treaties are Great Britain, France, and Russia. No matter what disputes may arise between us and the treaty nations, we agree that there shall be no declaration and no commencement of hostilities until the matters in dispute have been investigated by an international commission, and a year's time is allowed for investigation and report. This plan was offered to all the nations without any exceptions whatever, and Germany was one of the nations that accepted the principle, being the twelfth, I think, to accept it.

The treaty was actually entered into with Germany, but I cannot see that that should stand in the way when both nations indorse the principle. I do not know whether Germany would accept the offer, but our country should, in my judgment, make the offer. Such an offer, if accepted, would at once relieve the tension and silence all the jingoes who are demanding war.

Germany has always been a friendly nation, and a great many of our people are of German ancestry. Why should we not deal with Germany according to the plan to which the nation has pledged its support?

THE second point of difference is as to the course which should be pursued in regard to Americans traveling on belligerent ships or with cargoes of ammunition.

Why should an American citizen be permitted to involve his country in war by traveling upon a bel-

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood
THE PRESIDENT AT HIS WHITE HOUSE DESK

Secretary Bryan to the President.

Washington, June 8, 1915.

My dear Mr. President:

It is with sincere regret that I have reached the conclusion that I should return to you the commission of Secretary of State, with which you honored me at the beginning of your Administration.

Obedient to your sense of duty and actuated by the highest motives, you have prepared for transmission to the German Government a note in which I cannot join without violating what I deem to be an obligation to my country, and the issue involved is of such moment that to remain a member of the Cabinet would be as unfair to you as it would be to the cause which is nearest my heart, namely, the prevention of war.

I, therefore, respectfully tender my resignation, to take effect when the note is sent, unless you prefer an earlier hour.

Alike desirous of reaching a peaceful solution of the problems arising out of the use of submarines against merchantmen, we find ourselves differing irreconcilably as to the methods which should be employed.

It falls to your lot to speak officially for the nation; I consider it to be none the less my duty to endeavor as a private citizen to promote the end which you have in view by means which you do not feel at liberty to use.

In severing the intimate and pleasant relations which have existed between us during the past two years, permit me to acknowledge the profound satisfaction which it has given me to be associated with you in the important work which has come before the State Department, and to thank you for the courtesies extended.

With the heartiest good wishes for your personal welfare and for the success of your Administration, I am, my dear Mr. President,

Very truly yours,

W. J. BRYAN.

The President to Secretary Bryan.

Washington, June 8, 1915.

My dear Mr. Bryan:

I accept your resignation only because you insist upon its acceptance; and I accept it with much more than deep regret, with a feeling of personal sorrow.

Our two years of close association have been very delightful to me. Our judgments have accorded in practically every matter of official duty and of public policy until now; your support of the work and purposes of the Administration has been generous and loyal beyond praise; your devotion to the duties of your great office and your eagerness to take advantage of every great opportunity for service it offered have been an example to the rest of us; you have earned our affectionate admiration and friendship. Even now we are not separated in the object we seek, but only in the method by which we seek it.

It is for these reasons my feeling about your retirement from the Secretaryship of State goes so much deeper than regret. I sincerely deplore it.

Our objects are the same and we ought to pursue them together. I yield to your desire only because I must, and wish to bid you God-speed in the parting. We shall continue to work for the same causes even when we do not work in the same way.

With affectionate regard,

Sincerely yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

To Hon. William Jennings Bryan,
Secretary of State.

ligerent ship, when he knows that the ship will pass through a danger zone? The question is not whether an American citizen has a right, under international law, to travel on a belligerent ship; the question is whether he ought not, out of consideration for his country, if not for his own safety, to avoid danger when avoidance is possible.

It is a very one-sided citizenship that compels a government to go to war over a citizen's right and yet relieve the citizen of all obligations to consider his nation's welfare. I do not know just how far the President can legally go in actually preventing Americans from traveling on belligerent ships, but I believe the government should go as far as it can, and that in case of doubt it should give the benefit of the doubt to the government.

But even if the government could not legally prevent citizens from traveling on belligerent ships, it could, and in my judgment should, earnestly advise American citizens not to risk themselves or the peace of their country, and I have no doubt that these warnings would be heeded.

President Taft advised Americans to leave Mexico when insurrection broke out there, and President Wilson has repeated the advice. This advice, in my judgment, was eminently wise, and I think the same course should be followed in regard to warning Americans to keep off vessels subject to attack.

I THINK, too, that American passenger ships should be prohibited from carrying ammunition. The lives of passengers ought not to be endangered by cargoes of ammunition whether that danger comes from possible explosions within or from possible attacks from without. Passengers and ammunition should not travel together. The attempt to prevent American citizens from incurring these risks is entirely consistent with the effort which our government is making to prevent attacks from submarines.

The use of one remedy does not exclude the use of the other. The most familiar illustration is to be found in the action taken by municipal authorities during a riot. It is the duty of the mayor to suppress the mob, and to prevent violence, but he does not hesitate to warn citizens to keep off the streets during the riots. He does not question their right to use the streets, but for their own protection and in the interest of order he warns them not to incur the risks involved in going upon the streets when men are shooting at each other.

The President does not feel justified in taking the action above stated. That is, he does not feel justified, first, in suggesting the submission of the controversy to investigation, or, second, in warning the people not to incur the extra hazards in traveling on belligerent ships or on ships carrying ammunition. And he may be right in the position he has taken, but as a private citizen I am free to urge both of these propositions, and to call public attention to these remedies in the hope of securing such an expression of public sentiment as will support the President in employing these remedies, if, in the future, he finds it consistent with his sense of duty to favor them.

Mr. Bryan's Plans

MR. BRYAN took official leave of the President with every mark of keen regret on both sides, and many expressions of unaltered friendship. But it is inevitable that these two great public leaders will now be opposed to each other on the most important issue before the American public. Mr. Bryan insists that his work will consist of arousing the public sentiment in the interests of peace with honor. He believes that when the American people speak out upon the events which are now occupying the attention of the government, it will be seen that the vast majority of our citizens believe that the issue with Germany can and ought to be settled through the medium of arbitration. This is not to be understood as meaning that the American people would arbitrate a question palpably a matter of clear right or wrong; but the country at large believes there is so much of right on both sides in this case as to leave no occasion for war until the possibilities of honorable diplomacy have been given every opportunity to adjust the grave questions which have arisen.

THE REAL ISSUE

WE GLADLY give space to the following statement by Mr. Bryan, issued to the press simultaneously with the President's note to Germany. It expresses, with remarkable fidelity and in most eloquent terms, the Christian doctrine of peace, and points out our duty as a Christian nation to give to the world an honorable example of the avoidance of war. This is in line with the policy and teachings of the Christian Herald, which has been unwaveringly on the side of peace for nearly half a century. Mr. Bryan's article will be welcomed by our readers and by peace lovers everywhere, as the most convincing presentation of the higher and nobler view of the subject that has appeared since the beginning of the crisis.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—W. J. Bryan made public the following statement tonight simultaneously with the President's note to Germany:

To the American People:

You now have before you the text of the note to Germany—the note which it would have been my official duty to sign had I remained Secretary of State. I ask you to sit in judgment upon my decision to resign rather than to share responsibility for it.

I am sure you will credit me with honorable motives, but that is not enough. Good intentions could not atone for a mistake at such a time, on such a subject and under such circumstances. If your verdict is against me, I ask no mercy; I desire none if I have acted unwisely.

A man in public life must act according to his conscience, but however conscientiously he acts, he must be prepared to accept without complaint any condemnation which his own errors may bring upon him; he must be willing to bear any deserved punishment, from ostracism to execution. But hear me before you pass sentence.

The President and I agree in purpose: We desire a peaceful solution of the dispute which has arisen between the United States and Germany. We not only desire it, but with equal fervor we pray for it. But we differ irreconcilably as to the means of securing it.

If it were merely a personal difference it would be a matter of little moment, for all the presumptions are on his side—the presumptions that go with power and authority. He is your President; I am a private citizen, without office or title, but one of the hundred millions of inhabitants.

But the real issue is not between persons, it is between systems; and I rely for vindication wholly upon the strength of the position taken.

Among the influences which governments employ in dealing with each other there are two which are pre-eminent and antagonistic—force and persuasion. Force speaks with firmness and acts through the ultimatum; persuasion employs argument, courts investigation and depends upon negotiation.

Force represents the old system—the system that must pass away. Persuasion represents the new system—the system that has been growing—all too slowly, it is true, but growing—for nineteen hundred years.

In the old system war is the chief cornerstone—war which at its best is little better than war at its worst; the new system contemplates an universal brotherhood established through the uplifting power of example.

If I correctly interpret the note to Germany it conforms to the standards of the old system rather than to the rules of the new, and I cheerfully admit that it is absolutely supported by precedents—precedents written in characters of blood upon almost every page of human history.

Austria furnishes the most recent precedent. It was Austria's firmness that dictated the ultimatum against Serbia, which set the world at war.

Every ruler now participating in this unparalleled conflict has proclaimed his desire for peace and denied responsibility for the war, and it is only charitable that we should credit all of them with good faith. They desired peace, but they sought it according to the rules of the old system. They believed that firmness would give the best assurance of the maintenance of peace, and faithfully following the precedent they went so near the fire that they were, one after another, sucked into the contest.

Never before have the frightful follies of this fatal system been so clearly revealed as now. The most civilized and enlightened—ay, the most Christian—of the nations of Europe are grappling with each other as if in a death struggle.

They are sacrificing the best and bravest of their sons on the battlefield; they are converting their gardens into cemeteries and their homes into houses of mourning; they are taxing the wealth of today and laying a burden of debt on the toil of the future; they have filled the air with thunderbolts more deadly than those of Jove, and they have multiplied the perils of the deep.

Adding fresh fuel to the flame of hate they have

As we fully endorse Mr. Bryan's statement, we give it here in lieu of other comments at present upon the President's note to Germany, reproduced on the opposite page.

Read most carefully both of these documents. Upon which platform of international relations do you stand? Which course of procedure would you, yourself, pledge your life, your fortune and your sacred honor?

If you would have the counsels of peace, as embodied in Mr. Bryan's statement, prevail, write or telegraph your opinion without delay to the Christian Herald, Bible House, New York. We in turn will present your message, with all others received, to President Wilson at the White House.

daily devised new horrors, until one side endeavoring to drown non-combatant men, women and children at sea, while the other side seeks to carve non-combatant men, women and children on land.

And they are so absorbed in alternate retaliations and in competitive cruelties that they seem, in the time being, blind to the rights of neutrals and deaf to the appeals of humanity. A tree is known by its fruit. The war in Europe is the ripened fruit of the old system.

This is what firmness, supported by force, has done in the Old World. Shall we invite it to cross the Atlantic? Already the jingoes of our country have caught the rabies from the dogs of war; shall the opponents of organized slaughter be silenced while the disease spreads?

As an humble follower of the Prince of Peace, as a devoted believer in the prophecy that they that take the sword shall perish with the sword, I beg to be counted among those who earnestly urge the adoption of a course in this matter which will leave no doubt of our government's willingness to continue negotiations with Germany until an amicable understanding is reached, or at least until the stress of war over, we can appeal from the drunk with carnage to Philip sobered by the memories of an historic friendship and by a recollection of the innumerable ties of kinship that bind the Fatherland to the United States.

Some nation must lead the world out of the black night of war into the light of that day when "swords shall be beaten into plowshares."

Why not make that honor ours? Some day, why not now?—the nations will learn that enduring peace cannot be built upon fear, that good will does not grow upon the stalk of violence. Some of the nations will place their trust in Love, the weapon for which there is no shield; in love, that suzereth long and is kind; in love, that is not easily provoked, that beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things; in love, which, though despised as weakness by the worshippers of Mars, abideth when all else fails.

W. J. BRYAN

THE SPIRIT OF THE NATION

FROM a remarkable editorial which appeared in the New York American of June 10, we take the following extracts, as bearing on the immediate issue between this country and Germany:

"Mr. Wilson has declared, not once only, but many times, that the voice of the plain people could not be heard in Washington; that the truth is seldom heard in those political circles; that the environment is highly unfavorable to any right appreciation of the common people's desires and opinions.

"That is the truth. "And never was that more true than in this critical time.

"The interests and influences which surround Mr. Wilson and environ his cabinet not only do not speak the opinions and desires of plain Richard, John and Henry, but they do not even begin to know what Henry, John and Richard are thinking and saying to one another.

"It is as certain as anything can be that Mr. Bryan has far more accurately judged the temper and the sentiment of his fellow citizens—not of those who eat government bread in Washington, certainly; not of those who are figures in the life of the larger cities, perhaps, but of those millions of quiet, industrious, sensible men and women who do the work of the shops, the factories and the farms and make the little homes of the land.

"These people, these citizens, these Americans who must inevitably fill the armies and fight the battles of the nation, we declare and affirm to be resolutely opposed to dragging this country into this European war as an ally of any of the warring powers.

"The very men upon whom the nation alone must rely to march, to endure, to fight, are the very men who are saying to one another that neither honor nor necessity requires that we Americans should put humiliating and truculent demands upon Great Britain, upon Germany, or upon any other nation.

"Is this not the truth, citizens? Do we want war?

"Do we want a diplomacy which points directly to war?

"Is there any sense in American participation in war waged in Europe over ancient feuds and dynastical and trade jealousies—a senseless, savage, colossally destructive and inhuman war?

"What say you—you plain people, you men who must do the fighting, and you women who must do the suffering, while those who are urging on this insane and wicked course will sit at home, in sleek and fat safety?

"Not in Washington, amid the jealousies and fawnings and schemings of paid agents and flexible politicians; not in the rooms of clubs and the corridors of glittering hotels; not in the board rooms where rich directors knock knees under the mahogany; not in newspapers whose owners are knit by ties of finance and materialism to aristocracies and huge interests across the sea—not in such environments is heard the true voice of the American people.

"That voice is heard in the street car, at the factory door, in the village street, in the farmhouse and everywhere that men in the garb of labor meet to talk and to conjecture.

"Let him who would hear the voice of the workers has to say this time of anxiety go among the men who work.

"He will know then whether the plain people desire their seats in high places to thrust this nation into war which may widow and orphan so many thousands upon thousands and of which history could on that victory had brought what honor belonged to assailing a people which was already waging a war against four other great powers when we attacked it."

President Wilson's Answer to Germany's Note

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, June 9, 1915.
The Secretary of State ad Interim to the American Ambassador at Berlin:

YOU are instructed to deliver textually the following note to the Minister of Foreign Affairs:

In compliance with your Excellency's request I did not fail to transmit to my government, immediately upon their receipt, your note of May 28 in reply to my note of May 15, and your supplementary note of June 1, setting forth the conclusions, so far as reached, by the Imperial German Government concerning the attacks on the American steamers Cushing and Gulflight. I am now instructed by my government to communicate the following in reply:

The Government of the United States notes with gratification the full recognition by the Imperial German Government, in discussing the cases of the Cushing and the Gulflight, of the principle of the freedom of all parts of the open sea to neutral ships, and the frank willingness of the Imperial German Government to acknowledge and meet its liability where the fact of attack upon neutral "ships, which have not been guilty of any hostile act," by German air craft or vessels of war is satisfactorily established, and the Government of the United States will in due course lay before the Imperial German Government, as it requests, full information concerning the attack on the steamer Cushing.

With regard to the sinking of the steamer Falaba, by which an American citizen lost his life, the Government of the United States is surprised to find the Imperial German Government contending that an effort on the part of a merchantman to escape capture and secure assistance alters the obligation of the officer seeking to make the capture in respect of the safety of the lives of those on board the merchantman, although the vessel has ceased her attempt to escape when torpedoed. These are not new circumstances. They have been in the minds of statesmen and of international jurists throughout the development of naval warfare, and the Government of the United States does not understand that they have ever been held to alter the principles of humanity upon which it has insisted. Nothing but actual forcible resistance or continued efforts to escape by flight when ordered to stop for the purpose of visit, on the part of the merchantman, has ever been held to forfeit the lives of her passengers or crew. The Government of the United States, however, does not understand that the Imperial German Government is seeking in this case to relieve itself of liability, but only intends to set forth the circumstances which led the commander of the submarine to allow himself to be hurried into the course which he took.

Your Excellency's note, in discussing the loss of American lives, resulting from the sinking of the steamship Lusitania, adverts at some length to certain information which the Imperial German Government has received with regard to the character and outfit of that vessel, and your Excellency expresses the fear that this information may not have been brought to the attention of the United States. It is stated that the Lusitania was undoubtedly equipped with masked guns, supplied with trained gunners and special ammunition, transporting troops from Canada, carrying a cargo not permitted under the laws of the United States to a vessel also carrying passengers, and serving, in virtual effect, as an auxiliary to the naval forces of Great Britain.

Fortunately these are matters concerning which the Government of the United States is in a position to give the Imperial German Government official information. Of the facts alleged in your Excellency's note, if true, the Government of the United States would have been bound to take official cognizance in performing its recognized duty as a neutral power, and in enforcing its national laws. It was its duty to see to it that the Lusitania was not armed for offensive action, that she was not serving as a transport, that she did not carry a cargo prohibited by the statutes of the United States, and that, if in fact she was a naval vessel of Great Britain, she should not receive clearance as a merchantman; and it performed that duty and enforced its statutes with scrupulous vigilance through its regularly constituted officials. It is able, therefore, to assure the Imperial German Government that it has been misinformed. If the Imperial Government should deem itself to be in possession of convincing evidence that the officials of the Government of the United States did not perform these duties with thoroughness, the Government of the United States sincerely hopes that it will submit that evidence for consideration.

Whatever may be the contentions of the Imperial German Government regarding the carriage of contraband of war on board the Lusitania, or regarding the explosion of that material by the torpedo, it need only be said that in the view of this government these contentions are irrelevant to the question of the legality of the methods used by the German naval authorities in sinking the vessel.

But the sinking of passenger ships involves principles of humanity which throw into the background any special circumstances of detail that may be thought to affect the cases; principles which lift it, as the Imperial German Government will no doubt be quick to recognize and acknowledge, out of the class of ordinary subjects of diplomatic discussion or of international controversy. Whatever be the other facts regarding the Lusitania, the principal fact is that a great steamer, primarily and chiefly a conveyance for passengers, and carrying more than a thousand souls who had no part or lot in the conduct of the war, was torpedoed and sunk without so much as a challenge or a warning, and that men, women, and children were sent to their death in circumstances unparalleled in modern warfare. The fact that more than 100 American citizens were among those who perished made it the duty of the Government of the United States to speak of these things, and once more, with solemn emphasis, to call the attention of the Imperial German Government to the grave responsibility which the Government of the United States conceives that it has incurred in this tragic occurrence, and to the indisputable principle upon which that responsibility rests.

The Government of the United States is contending for something much greater than mere rights of property or privileges of commerce. It is contending for nothing less high and sacred than the rights of humanity, which every government honors itself in respecting, and which no government is justified in resigning on behalf of those under its care and authority. Only her actual resistance to capture, or refusal to stop when ordered to do so for the purpose of visit, could have afforded the commander of the submarine any justification for so much as putting the lives of those on board the ship in jeopardy. This principle the Government of the United States understands the explicit instructions issued on August 3, 1914, by the Imperial German Admiralty to its commanders at sea to have recognized and embodied, as do the naval codes of all other nations, and upon it every traveler and seaman had a right to depend. It is upon this principle of humanity, as well as upon the law founded upon this principle, that the United States must stand.

The Government of the United States is happy to observe that your Excellency's note closes with the intimation that the Imperial German Government is willing, now as before, to accept the good offices of the United States in an attempt to come to an understanding with the Government of Great Britain by which the character and conditions of war upon the sea may be changed. The Government of the United States would consider it a privilege thus to serve its friends and the world. It stands ready at any time to convey to either government any intimation or suggestion the other may be willing to have it convey, and cordially invites the Imperial German Government to make use of its services in this way at its convenience. The whole world is concerned in anything that may bring about even a partial accommodation of interests or in any way mitigate the terrors of the present distressing conflict.

In the meantime, whatever arrangement may happily be made between the parties to the war, and whatever may, in the opinion of the Imperial German Government, have been the provocation or the circumstantial justification for the past acts of its commanders at sea, the Government of the United States confidently looks to see the justice and humanity of the Government of Germany vindicated in all cases where Americans have been wronged or their rights as neutrals invaded.

The Government of the United States, therefore, very earnestly and very solemnly renews the representations of its note transmitted to the Imperial German Government on the 15th of May, and relies in these representations upon the principles of humanity, the universally recognized understandings of international law, and the ancient friendship of the German nation.

The Government of the United States cannot admit that the proclamation of a war zone from which neutral ships have been warned to keep away may be made to operate as in any degree an abbreviation of the rights either of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of belligerent nationality. It does not understand the Imperial German Government to question those rights. It understands it also to accept as established beyond question the principle that the lives of non-combatants cannot lawfully or rightfully be put in jeopardy by the capture or destruction of an unresisting merchantman, and to recognize the obligation to take sufficient precaution to ascertain whether a suspected merchantman is in fact of belligerent nationality or is in fact carrying contraband of war under a neutral flag. The Government of the United States deems it reasonable to expect that the Imperial German Government will adopt the measures necessary to put these principles into practice in respect of the safeguarding of American lives and American ships, and asks for assurances that this will be done.

ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State ad Interim.

THE SOBER SECOND THOUGHT

BY J. DUNCAN SPAETH, Professor of English, Princeton University

THERE is a disposition in many quarters to criticize the note of the German Government as an attempt to evade the issue because it seeks to reach agreement on the facts in the case before the principles involved are discussed, the responsibility fixed, and the decision reached. Only the intensity of our feelings, our sense of outraged humanity, our sympathy with the sufferers of undeserved woe prevent us from recognizing in the German note an appeal to essential principles of justice as conceived by the Anglo-Saxon mind.

The fact that one is willing to serve on a jury and listen to evidence does not mean that he condones crime or lacks conscience. The law recognizes the establishment of motive as an important element in reaching a just verdict. To insist on the execution of sentence before the establishment of facts that bear essentially on the question of motive is equivalent to hanging first and hearing evidence afterward. There is danger that public opinion in America in its just and swift condemnation of the fearful sacrifice of innocent lives by the sinking of the Lusitania be swept by impulses of humanity from the solid ground of justice. Every judge knows how difficult it is to combine justice with humanity. To write them together is not to unite them.

We may well heed at this time the sober words of President H. A. Garfield of Williams College (New York Evening Post, June 2):

"America is united in its condemnation of killing women and children. Moreover, in condemning we ought to discriminate between things worthy of condemnation and things not to be condemned. The United States rightly insists that the killing of women and children is one thing and the destruction of commerce quite another. Both must be stopped; but the President wisely deals with the two things separately—one at a time. We ought also to recognize that these offenses are one thing and the apportionment of the blame another, and that the blame cannot be fixed until certain facts are cleared up. This the German reply seeks to do. Her reply is not final, and she has not said that she fails to appreciate or refuses to concede the President's main point. It seems to me, therefore, unjust to impute to the German Government unworthy motives or moral callousness on the basis of its reply."

While there may be disagreement as to the facts alluded to in the German note, there are certain other facts of paramount importance at the present juncture which are fortunately not open to challenge. An excellent summary of them is to be found in the Washington despatch to the New York Times of June 2, under the caption, "Chronological Review of Correspondence with the Belligerents." From the summary as given by the Times, it appears that at the beginning of the war (August 6) our government asked the belligerents whether they intended to abide by the Declaration of London of 1909. Germany and Austria answered in the affirmative, conditional on a like observance on the part of the enemy. Russia and France awaited the decision of the British Government, which was (August 27) to the effect that they decided to adopt generally the rules of the declaration in question, subject to certain modifications and additions which they judge indispensable to the efficient conduct of their naval operations. (The plea of military necessity.)

The Succession of Events

THESE modifications and additions so interfered with American rights at sea that on December 26 Secretary Bryan sent a note to Great Britain protesting against the seizure and detention of American cargoes. As an answer to this protest Great Britain sent her notes of January 7 and February 10, "explaining the reasons for these seizures and detentions." Meanwhile, the Government of the United States having failed in its effort to protect against seizure by Great Britain American wheat and cotton cargoes bound for Germany, the German Government, following the precedent of Great Britain's proclamation of a mined war zone around the north of Ireland and Scotland, gave warning of the establishment of a naval war zone around the British Isles to prevent the importation of supplies to England. February 18 this policy went into effect. February 20 the American Government suggested that a modus vivendi be entered into by England and Germany by which submarine warfare and the sowing of mines at sea might be abandoned if foodstuffs were allowed to reach the German civil population under American consular inspection. March 1 Germany agreed to this proposal. March 15 the British Government "flatly refused" (Times summary) the arrangement proposed by the United States, and published the British Order in Council, the object of which was and is to prevent commodities of all kinds from reaching or leaving Germany. This order has never been recognized by the American Government as in accord with international law.

These are the facts. What light do they throw on the present relations between the United States and Germany? On two occasions our government made proposals to Great Britain and Germany to secure their adherence to those "rules of fairness, reason, justice and humanity which all modern opinion regards as imperative." On each of these occasions Germany accepted and Great Britain refused the proposals of the Government of the United States. Having failed to secure Great Britain's assent to our interpretation of international law, can we now consistently ask Germany's assent to an interpretation of international law which has Great Britain's unqualified approval because it throws upon us the responsibility of securing for all her merchant ships immunity from attack by German submarines?

It is to be remembered that it would be unjust to our government to suggest that the proposals above referred to were pro-German. They were made in the interest of justice and humanity to both sides. When Germany agreed to abandon submarine attacks on merchantmen on condition of Great Britain's allowing the entry of foodstuffs, Germany's willingness to accede to our suggestion was sneered at in many quarters as an "empty concession" on the ground that her submarine policy was mere bluff. Having proved at terrible cost that she had an effectual if desperate weapon of defense and retaliation, the substantial character of the concessions she was willing to make to the demands of the United States ought to be in fairness recognized in our negotiations with her now.

Moreover, the export of ammunition to the Allies from America has assumed such enormous proportions since February that attacks on merchantmen laden with ammunition have increased in frequency, culminating May 7 in the sinking of the Lusitania. It is too late for any but the governments involved to discuss the question of the reparation owed to this country for the loss of American lives. But the question of the future of submarine warfare is still open to discussion, and international law must take cognizance of it.

American Rights and Humanity

OUR government might have confined itself to demanding protection for the lives and interests of American citizens only. It has taken higher ground. But when once we leave the ground of our technical rights under international law, and take our stand on universal principles of humanity and justice, can the question of our manufacture of ammunition for European belligerents be entirely ignored, and can we in fairness demand of Germany that she deprive herself absolutely and unconditionally of the only means she has of preventing American shrapnel from destroying the defenders of her women and children? On the necessity of protecting the lives of non-combatants at sea, all Americans of whatever sympathies are united. The only question is how shall it be done. If we were not manufacturing arms for the enemies of Germany, it would be easier for us to ask, it would be easier for Germany to grant the entire cessation of submarine warfare against merchantmen.

Is it inconsistent with our national honor and with humanity to suggest: (1) That we guarantee that no ammunition or arms of any kind shall be part of the cargo of passenger-carrying ships out of United States ports?

(2) That we demand from Germany absolute immunity from attack by submarines for all such unarmed passenger-carrying ships sailing from our ports, under whatever flag?

(3) Whether the crews of merchant vessels carrying munitions of war to any belligerent are non-combatants in any essential sense is open to question. But if ammunition and explosives were carried on slow cargo boats instead of on swift passenger steamers, our insistence on visit and search would be more likely to be complied with.

In insisting, and insisting rightly, on the elimination of the submarine as an indiscriminate menace to innocent lives at sea, is it wise to estop ourselves for all future time from the use of our own invention as a commerce destroyer and a legitimate weapon of defense against economic strangulation or the importation of ammunition from abroad? Is it wise to put ourselves into a position where, if at any future time our own existence is threatened, we shall have to depend on the friendship of other nations rather than on the justice of our own cause and our own rights? Where we shall have to substitute the doctrine of foreign alliances for the American doctrine of self-reliance? Ought not a nation that is as proud of its rectitude of purpose and as conscious of its power as the American nation to be too proud to rely on the fighting of others, too proud to cement its own prosperity with the blood of kindred peoples across the sea, too proud to be driven by fear of loss or hope of gain into alliances foreign to America's great tradition, and, in the words of Washington, "calculated to create dissension, disturb the public tranquillity, and destroy, perhaps forever, the cement which binds the Union"? The cement that binds the Union will never be destroyed. Too much German blood has been shed in the kneading of that cement for America's German descent or sympathy ever to permit its destruction.

The Part of the People

THE American people are a unit behind their government in all its efforts to defend and safeguard the lives, property, and interests of American citizens. They are a unit behind their government in all its efforts to enable America to render disinterested service to humanity. But they are far from a unit in wishing to see the material and moral power of this country used to render successful the most gigantic conspiracy in restraint of trade ever organized by wealth and power against a nation which has in all its dealings with the United States shown an attitude characterized by the President of the United States in his note to Germany as "humane and enlightened," a characterization that will be borne out by a study of the correspondence between our government and Germany since the beginning of the war.

If it be argued that the British Order in Council is not a conspiracy in restraint of trade the answer may be made that our government in its notes to England has so construed it. And the American people are not united in wishing the United States to use its power and influence to deprive Germany now, and perhaps ourselves in the future, of the most effectual weapon of defense against a form of embargo we held and still hold to be in violation of international law.

The writer of this letter was born in Africa, and owes no allegiance but to America. His ties of blood he is bound both to Great Britain and Germany, but his deepest loyalty is to that spirit of liberty which is the breath of American institutions. When he hears on all sides counsels of expediency first and the wisdom of conforming to an overpowering majority opinion he remembers the brave words of the American poet:

'Tis man's perdition to be safe
When for the Truth he ought to die.

President Wilson, in his noble Memorial Day address, used these words: "Duty for a man is made up of so many complicated elements that no man can determine it. No group of men, without wide common counsel, can possibly determine what the duty of the day is. That is the strength of a democracy because there daily rises in the great body of democracy the expression of an unmeasured opinion which seems to fill the air with suggestions of duty, and those who stand at the head of affairs have it as their bounden duty to endeavor to express in their own actions those things that seem to rise out of the conscience and hope and purpose of the great body of the people themselves." In praying that the President's hour of grave responsibility may voice the conscience and purpose of a united people it is the solemn duty of all of us that have convictions to express those things that rise out of our conscience and our hope for America, so that those who stand at the head of affairs may hear indeed a note of sullen discord, but, amid the general loud acclaim, the deep undertone of loyal minority, dedicated not less passionately than the majority to the hope that when the verdict of history upon America's part in this tragic world comes to be written it may be: "Her thought was Freedom; her words were Truth; her deed was Justice."

[The above timely article, in somewhat shorter form, originally appeared as a letter in the New York Times of June 8, and is now extended in the Christian Herald by the author in the light of late developments.—THE EDITOR.]

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

JERUSALEM BESIEGED IN EARTH AND AIR

THE startling information is brought to the Christian Herald, by mail and by visitors from abroad, that the land made sacred to the world by the Life which spent itself for mankind has not remained unscathed by the war of the nations.

active in behalf of the economic welfare of Palestine as have been the lands beyond the seas which have seen a great Light, nevertheless that narrow strip of territory is regarded as supreme in the sentimental interest of all the regions of earth. And to know that the Holy Land has become a victim of the circumstances of war is sufficient to arouse the instinctive interest of practically every person in the civilized world. We give below two very informative letters and other material which have come direct to us from Jerusalem:

Jerusalem, April 16, 1915.

THE Holy City is in the grip of a threefold visitation. While war has ravaged and impoverished the country, pestilence has appeared and famine is raging. Not in the memory of the oldest person now living in the City of David have the people of Jerusalem seen so much of sorrow, privation and suffering as today.

We are most grateful to the Christian Herald for the generous gift sent for the relief of the poor in and around Jerusalem. It was indeed a godsend. We have been very busy since it arrived and now the money has nearly all been distributed, and you will no doubt get a personal report of the work accomplished. About three weeks ago the money arrived, and when we heard of it we were overjoyed, knowing how welcome it would be to the poor of Jerusalem. The communities were notified to send in lists of their poor. When the news became known there was a frantic rush of the sufferers to have their names registered."

The utmost care was exercised in tabulating the lists so that there should be no duplication, in order to insure the widest possible relief.)

It was a trying ordeal to live through and it was especially sad when at last the Jerusalem allowance was used up. Saturday last was a very harrowing day, with a crowd of poor, sick and sad women, with crying babies in their arms, and older children clinging to their skirts, all clamoring for help, and we unable to alleviate their distress.

Many of the fortunate ones, who received tickets and were paid at the consulate, returned to tell us of their joy and to show us the shirts and shoes they had bought; others bought shoes for their husbands.

Mr. Warren, of Three Oaks, Mich., sent us a timely gift of $1,000, $700 of which he wished to be used for the needy Samaritans in Nablous, and $300 for the poor in Jerusalem. We bought 4,800 pounds of lentils and distributed them and bread for many weeks to the poor. The applicants went away satisfied, and you may be sure it reached the needy; for nothing but absolute poverty would be driven by such a gift. We visited them, and when they were ill or in want we provided for them as far as we could. That fund is now exhausted, and with business tied up as it now is, we find it impossible to continue, as the demands from these pitiable people keep increasing.

We are employing a great many of the poor girls and women in lace-making, and so enabling them to find a means of support. The need is becoming overwhelming, however, and we cannot face it alone. Will you not help us again in His Name?

"We have just returned from visiting one of the disappointed families, who were unable to get any help because their names were presented too late. The old mother came to show us the way. We found one daughter had been bedridden for twenty years.

Another daughter is a dwarf, and somewhat feeble-minded; the third daughter used to support an order for all adult males between the ages of fifteen and sixty to collect these unhatched eggs, imposing upon each twenty kilos' weight, to be delivered in a given time, that thus the insect ravages may be averted. Also we are enclosing a very interesting page from one of the days when we were registering the names of the poor for relief, so you can see the character of the work done.

"BERTHA VESTER."

Another correspondent in Jerusalem, who is actively interested in the relief work, sends us this letter:

"Can you not interest the American people in the Mohammedan women and children of Jerusalem? The husbands are all in the army and the government can do nothing for their poor. The well-to-do and the rich cannot buy much, on account of the high prices and lack of food; but the poor are starving! Begging is useless, as there is no one of whom to beg. All institutions from which help might come are closed.

"The Mohammedan women, as you know, are ignorant and helpless, and absolutely dependent upon the men of the family. So now they sit behind their barred windows, hungry, and their little ones crying for bread. Today a poor woman was crying aloud in the streets for bread; she had not had a mouthful for four days. Outside of our window there were hundreds begging for bread at one time. As soon as they would see any one appear they would all drop to their knees and lift up their hands in supplication.

"The locusts are now so thick that they obscure the sun. Soon there will not be a leaf left in the country! It is now reported that they have destroyed all gardens and are now eating the bark off the fruit trees. The locusts are coming by the millions, and if the fight against them is not successful it means a dreadful famine in the land. The Turkish soldiers are working for this purpose from Tiberias to Hebron, a distance of ninety miles. This requires much money, both for feeding the men and for the means of exterminating the insects.

"Who knows what will be the next calamity to befall us? We have had three visits from these pests, and it means quick work to get rid of them; for they infect even the water, if care is not taken at once to wash all terraces and roofs.

"Last, but not least of our troubles, there is an epidemic of typhus in Jerusalem, and as we have no Board of Health, we avoid riding in the rickety old wagons and thus save the old horses and try to take care of ourselves. The Red Cross Hospital keeps us busy, as it is always more than crowded with typhus and small-pox patients, the responsibility being even greater than for ordinary illness. "Today a regiment of soldiers passed in front of our house, begging for water. We gave them one tankful and then had to stop, as the rainfall is eight inches short this year; and with the increased population, it is a serious matter to be too generous with water.

"If one has plenty of gold for the present time he can keep from starving, but there are thousands who haven't a cent, and are facing starvation. Within the last hour I have just heard of three old women who have shut themselves in their room to die. Also of six young girls, who could not obtain sufficient food to keep them alive, and who had died. One good woman has been trying to feed the family by sewing. The work-rooms are closed at present, and the son, who also aided in their support, is serving his country. They did not want charity, they wanted work; but we had none to give them. We filled a basket with bread and meat and eggs and vegetables and took it to them. This is only one case out of many."

PHOTOGRAPH OF THE SWARMS OF LOCUSTS WHICH PASSED FROM NORTH TO SOUTH OVER JERUSALEM THIS APRIL, OFTEN BLOTTING OUT THE SUN, TO SETTLE ON THE SURROUNDING COUNTRY AND DEVOUR ALL FOLIAGE AND CROPS

(The photograph of swarming locusts seems to show only a scattered multitude, but these were nearest the lens, the great solid masses that often blotted out the sun flying higher.) "These have laid their innumerable eggs, and the development of their brood portends the greatest calamity that has visited Palestine in half a century. However, the government has taken energetic steps, and issued seven hundred and fifty children a day. All she can give them is one piece of bread and a little soup one day, and a little fruit the next. Many of these children die because they try to share their small portion with other members of their families. The only meat we can occasionally get is a little lamb, which is very nice, but not good for steady diet. Chickens are becoming a great treat, and beef is not to be thought of. Our vegetables are spinach and cusa (a kind of squash). The oranges have been delicious, but, sad to relate, will not last much longer. Oranges are cheap, but everything else is sold at war prices. It is reported that the orange groves will die from lack of means to irrigate them. We have to be most careful about the preparation of food and water, and eat nothing that has not been first boiled, not even the oranges. No tea, coffee, rice, flour or sugar can be secured in Jerusalem."

AND a member of the American Colony in Jerusalem, in a letter dated April 9, describes the condition of affairs in the Holy City in these words: "One who has formerly visited Jerusalem would not find it the same city now. Mobilization under universal conscription has removed from the streets all the men between the ages of 20 and 45. This, instead of increasing the chances of work for those left, is more than offset by the war conditions and the moratorium, which tell on every line of life and activity. Naturally there is no building, carpenter or blacksmith work doing, and of course there is not a single tourist or pilgrim, so that we have had a different 'Holy Fire' celebration and 'Neby Mousa' procession from any that have been known or experienced for centuries. Recently, vast swarms of locusts—such as have not scourged this land for forty years—have appeared in various localities, causing the price of wheat to rise and threatening devastation such as sickens the heart to contemplate, when the new brood, of which these have laid the eggs, appears in three weeks! All the way down from Damascus, this scourge has cast its dread into the hearts of the people. So thick were the locusts that the sun was darkened. Around Bethlehem, where the authorities are taking steps to have them killed, the people collected in one day twenty tons! It is said that the coming orange crop in some of the orange gardens in Jaffa and vicinity has been entirely destroyed. The young fresh summer crop has also been destroyed. What is in store for us it is very difficult to foresee." It seemed the natural thing to send this to the Christian Herald.

There is just one thing we would say in addition to these direct-from-the-scene letters: "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." And then,

Progress of Christian Herald Relief Work

Among Widows and Orphans of the War

THE Christian Herald has succeeded, after much difficulty, in appointing a committee in Poland for the relief there of widows and orphans of the European war. The committee will work for the most part from headquarters in Lodz, but there will be distributing depots in Czenstochau, Bendzin-Sosnowice and Wloclawek. The chief committee in Lodz consists of Police Commissioner von Oppen, as chairman, and the Rev. Superintendent Angerstein and Pastor Gundlach as members.

For the district of Bendzin the committee will be headed by Mr. Nordmann-Lagisza; for the district of Czenstochau, Mr. Dichmann of Rakow, and for the district of Wloclawek, Lord-Mayor Bauer of that city. The committee, the members of which are prominent persons highly respected in the districts where they reside, guarantees that the fund will be used for the needy families among the population.

This makes nine committees which the Christian Herald has appointed for the distribution of funds for the relief of the non-combatants of the European war.

Immediately upon the receipt of the names of those composing the committee, the Christian Herald despatched $20,000 to Poland to be used as quickly as possible for the relief of the suffering people.

Previously the following amounts had been forwarded:

Belgium	$40,000.00
England	10,000.00
France	10,000.00
Holland	10,000.00
Germany	10,000.00
Austria	10,000.00
Galicia	10,000.00
Jerusalem	3,000.00
Persia (Special Com.)	500.00
Total	$103,500.00

The reports of committees in the above countries showed that these amounts were being rapidly used up, some of them entirely so, whereupon the Christian Herald on May 31 immediately despatched the following amounts:

(Poland, as above)	$20,000.00
England	2,500.00
France	2,500.00
Belgium	2,500.00
Holland	2,500.00
Germany	2,500.00
Austria	2,500.00
Galicia	2,500.00
Jerusalem	2,500.00
Total	$40,000.00
Grand Total Remitted Abroad	$143,500.00

states: "It is a great joy to have your check for $500 and to feel that the Persian Relief work is thus endorsed by the Christian Herald, which is well known as a leader in such movements." The total of the Christian Herald Fund to June 3 amounted to $157,467.11. Please address all gifts to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

how simple and direct and sufficient are the admonitions which Christ gave to his followers! What a transformation would come over the world if all who profess his name ruled their lives by his counsels! We often say ourselves, we Christians, that the Bible contains guidance for every occasion of life. Simple, direct and sufficient is our guidance in respect to the suffering caused by the war to the helpless women and children: "Blessed are the merciful."

And if there is any spot on the earth which will awaken a quick and deeper and more active concern suffering lays siege thereto, it is the Land of the Book, the Holy Land. Changed as its population is, it comes to us as its government, the less Palestine is where Christ lived, and its people, whoever they are, have a peculiar and undeniable claim upon our sympathy and interest. Moreover, the teeming population of Jerusalem, and the peasantry of the hills and plains, are caught in a calamity that seems to outdarken the suffering in any section of Europe, caused by the war. And we bespeak from our readers an outburst of generosity in their behalf such as will testify our love and obedience to that compassionate Saviour who himself wept over Jerusalem.

It has always been the privilege of donors to this relief fund to indicate to which country they prefer their gifts to go. Comparatively few have failed themselves of this offer, preferring to regard all these sad hearts as one great host made kin by suffering. But it may be that many individual and in an especial way, churches, Sunday schools and so on, wish to feel that they have had specific part in ministering to the sufferers in Palestine, so we make that reminder. If your gift is especially intended for use in the Holy Land, please surely mention that fact. As custodian of this fund the Christian Herald shows no partiality whatever in administering it; it is the case of the need that has arisen in Jerusalem and environs, which is justified in making the present suggestion.

RESPONDING to an earnest call for help for the suffering in Persia, we remitted $500 from the Widows and Orphans Fund to the Persian War Relief Fund Committee, of which Mr. Robert E. Speer is chairman, and have received an acknowledgment which

JOHN HUSS, MARTYR *

THE 500th ANNIVERSARY OF WHOSE TRIUMPHANT DEATH THE CHRISTIAN WORLD WILL CELEBRATE NEXT MONTH. BY PROFESSOR W. H. T. D.

Continued from last week

WYCLIFISM wrecked Hus. At first Hus was wary in endorsing the teachings of the British reformer. "I confess," he said in one of his sermons, "that I agree with the true opinions which Magister John Wyclif has presented, not because he has presented them, but because they are substantiated from Holy Writ and by reasonable arguments. However, if he has maintained any error, I propose not to follow him nor any one else in error." As early as 1403 the university had culled from Wyclif's writings forty-five propositions which were proscribed as heretical. In 1404 two young Britons brought to Prague a counterfeited document bearing the seal of the University of Oxford, in which Wyclif's doctrines were declared orthodox. Hus accepted the document in good faith, and even read it from his pulpit, and eulogized Wyclif. But the German members of the university, professors and students, denounced the document, and the matter being argued pro and con throughout Bohemia, a perceptible tension was created. The opponents divided not only on doctrinal but also on national lines. On June 4, 1405, Pope Innocent VII directed Archbishop Zbynek to take measures against the spread of the heretical teachings of Wyclif, especially against the doctrine of the impanation of the Eucharist. The British students were forbidden to engage in public disputations on Wyclif's teachings. They now began to display on the walls of their dwelling pictures which contrasted the lowly and meek Jesus with the pomp and show of the Pope. On one side Christ was shown entering Jerusalem surrounded by his humble, barefooted disciples; on the other the Pope was seen entering Rome, accompanied by the gorgeously clad hierarchy. Again, the thorn-crowned Saviour was placed over against the Pope with his triple crown. Hus befriended the young Englishmen whose actions exasperated the clergy.

In order to understand the next acts in the drama of Hus's life, we shall have to digress somewhat and review a portion of the history of the papacy. Ever since the death of Pope Gregory XI in 1378, when Hus was a boy of nine years, there had been a papal schism that rent the church into opposing factions and lasted till 1417. One faction wanted the Pope to reside at Rome, the other at Avignon in France. When Pope Innocent VII, of the Rome faction, died in 1406, his followers gave their votes to Angelus Canarius, Cardinal of Venice, of noble blood, who assumed the papal power under the name of Gregory XII. The Avignon faction, which had been headed by Clement VII, upon the death of their pope elected Pedro de Luna, of princely descent, who ruled as Benedict XIII. Thus the papacy had become bicephalous. After a great deal of disorder a council was called at Pisa to elect a Pope for the entire church.

A Tricephalous Papacy

BOTH Gregory and Benedict, through their representatives, strongly protested against this proceeding, but the cardinals charged both with schism and deposed them. Gregory fled to Ariminum and created a number of cardinals. Benedict took refuge in a castle at Parpiano. Neither recognized the council's act of deposition as valid. The council now (1409) proceeded to elect Peter of Candia, a doctor of theology in the order of Barefooted Friars and Archbishop of Milan, Pope. He took the name of Alexander V, and set up his residence at Rome. He promised the council that he would endeavor to have new laws which were to secure quiet to the church. The papacy had now become tricephalous. Alexander V died after a reign of ten months, and the two anti-popes maintained themselves in power. In 1410 the cardinals met at Bononia to elect a successor to Alexander V. To this conclave there came the cardinal of Venice, Balduino Cossa. He came with a large following, many noblemen among them, and began to terrorize the cardinals. He demanded that no one be elected Pope without his approval.

though many candidates were proposed to him, he approved none. Finally he proposed that the cardinals had the papal insignia over to him, and he would deliver them to the new Pope. They did so, and throwing the papal robe about him, Cossa declared himself Pope, and took the name of John XXIII. Reluctantly the cardinals yielded to this coup d'état, and received from John the promise that he would summon a council in three years for the pacification of the church.

King Wenceslaus had at first favored Gregory XII, but when the cardinals promised him that they would support his claims for the imperial crown, he sided with the so-called neutral party which advocated the convening of the Council of Pisa and the election of a new Pope. The Archbishop of Prague and the majority of the clergy refused to renounce Gregory. The university was divided: the Czech professors and students, under the leadership of Hus, sided with the king, but the Bavarians, Saxons and Poles, who were also called Silesians, cast their votes against the king. The king now published a decree that henceforth in all deliberations of the university the Czechs were to have the votes and the other nations only an advisory vote. This roused the German professors and students to anger. They left Prague and founded the University of Leipzig. The University of Prague now lost its international character and was reduced to mere Czech high school. Hus had no part in the fatal decree of Wenceslaus. He declared: "Christ knows that I love a good German more than a bad Bohemian, even though the latter were my own brother." But on objective grounds and from love of his homeland, Bohemia, and from being pleased with the king's decree. The citizens of Prague now began to charge Hus with having wrecked their university. Thus another cause was added to the opposition that had first formed against him because of his Wyclifism.

Incensed at Hus because of his partisanship with the king and the council pay, Archbishop Zbynek plotted revenge. He obtained from Pope Alexander V a bull which prohibited preaching in any but the parish and cloister churches, and threatened severe punishment to all who would proclaim the teachings of Wyclif. This was to stop Hus from preaching at Bethlehem Chapel. The archbishop also ordered the writings of Wyclif burned. Fierce riots ensued at Prague. The archbishop was hooted in the streets. The king confiscated archiepiscopal revenues to indemnify the people whose books the archbishop had burned, and declared that he would not recognize the excommunication of Hus, which the archbishop had pushed, though Hus had handed over the writings of Wyclif in his possession with the request that he be shown in what parts they were wrong. The king also appealed to the new Pope John XXIII to rescind the acts of the archbishop, and Queen Sophia and many Bohemian noblemen interceded for Hus. But the archbishop also had written to the Pope, and the result was that Hus was cited to appear before the Pope at Bologna. He was ready to go, but his friends dissuaded him. As a consequence he was condemned in absentia. But his influence in Bohemia was still spreading despite the ban and interdict which had been hurled against him. Hus wrote to England about this time: "The entire Bohemian nation is panting after the truth. It refuses to know anything except the Gospel and the Epistles. Wherever a preacher of the sacred truth makes his appearance in a village or castle, the people flock to him in crowds. Our king, our entire court, the barons and the common people are for the Word of Christ."

Hus Defies the Pope

IN THE meantime King Wenceslaus was anxious to remove from his country the suspicion of heresy. He labored to get Archbishop Zbynek on his side, without losing the friendship of Hus. The archbishop, after months of negotiation, publicly made his peace with the king; Hus made a "confession" before the university; and the archbishop wrote the Pope that all things were lovely in Bohemia, and there was not a trace of heresy in the land. But this letter never reached the Pope, and the archbishop died in the fall of 1411, while on a journey to King Sigismund of Hungary. Accordingly, the reconciliation that had been effected among all parties at Prague seems to have had no effect on the excommunication which Pope John had decreed against Hus in February, 1411, and which was published in all the churches of Prague on March 15.

After the death of Zbynek, King Wenceslaus had prevailed on the cathedral chapter to elect his body physician and private counselor, the aged and widowed Albicus von Unitschow, archbishop, and the Pope had readily sent him the pallium. But the papal legate who brought the pallium brought at the same time a papal bull which summoned the faithful to a crusade against King Ladislaus of Naples, who refused to acknowledge John as Pope. The bull promised abundant indulgences to all who would participate in the crusade, and threatened all sorts of punishment to such as might resist it. Against the opposition of the university, the king, who was eager to conciliate the Pope, sanctioned the bull, and this brought on a rupture between the king and Hus. After the king's sanction, many professors had yielded, but not Hus. Even his friend Stephen von Paletz could not swerve him, and henceforth became a bitter enemy of Hus. On June 7, 1412, Hus issued a public challenge for a debate on the question whether the Pope had authority to announce such a crusade and whether the crusade was for the glory of God and the welfare of the people. Hus and his friend, Jerome of Prague, in a stormy meeting routed those who defended the crusade and the indulgences.

Hus Declared an Outlaw

THERE was rioting in the city; workshops at the churches were being disturbed; the papal bull was hanging about the neck of vile women and paraded through the streets amid the jeers of the populace. Three young men were arrested by order of the city council because of their opposition to the papal indulgence and were threatened with death. Hus with a crowd of his adherents hastened to the city hall. He was overwhelmed with execrations by the city fathers; they told him that he had inflicted an incurable wound to the prosperity of the university by driving away the Germans, and now he was even inciting the people to riot. In answer to his pleading the city fathers finally promised that the young men would not be punished "because of the indulgences." But no sooner had he calmed the excited multitude than the young men were secretly beheaded as rioters. This ruthless action aroused the people to terrible anger. They conducted the bodies of the young men in procession to Bethlehem Chapel, where Hus eulogized them as martyrs.

The city council now sent a delegation to the Pope, asking him to take sterner measures against Hus, whose writings, they claimed, were stirring up all Bohemia, Moravia, Hungary and Poland. The Pope replied by reiterating the excommunication of Hus, which was again published in all the churches of Prague. Moreover, Hus was now outlawed, and it was declared unlawful to give him shelter. A band of opponents, with the connivance of the city authorities, gathered at Bethlehem Chapel on October 2, determined to do him violence, and it was only through the resistance of his faithful followers that Hus escaped. The king, being terrified by the interdict that was laid on the city for sheltering Hus, now requested him to leave Prague, and promised that he would in the meantime compose the strife that had broken out against Hus. Hus yielded after a severe battle with his conscience, and on June 7, 1413, retired to Castle Kozi Hradek. Here and in the vicinity he often preached to large concourses of people. Nearly all Bohemian noblemen were on his side. With his faithful adherents in Prague he remained in correspondence, and many letters written during this exile testify to his evangelical spirit, the increasing clearness and firmness in his doctrinal views, and his determination to suffer death rather than surrender his conscientious convictions. During this exile, too, four of his principal writings were composed: "On the Church," "The Six Errors" (of the Papists), "The Abomination of Monasticism," and "The Society of Antichrist." Especially the first treatise furnished his enemies at Constance the evidence for their charge of heresy against him. With a strange infatuation, however, Hus, even in these writings in which he attacked his Roman opponents, clung to the belief that the church was with him, and would never condemn the truth which he proclaimed and sanctioned the error which he opposed. He did not know Rome.

Hus Summoned to Constance

MEANWHILE the three Popes were lustily fulminating against each other. At the same time the Turks were preparing an invasion of Central Europe. In order to unite the forces of Christendom against them, Emperor Sigismund held that the schism in the church must first be removed, and prevailed upon Pope John to summon a council to meet at Pisa. For a time the wily Pope resisted the appeals of the emperor, because he feared for his safety because of the violent manner in which he had wrested the papal authority to himself, but finally he consented, and the council was summoned to meet at Constance in northern Switzerland, near the German border. The Pope himself started on his way to this place with grave misgivings. When his vehicle was overturned on an Alpine road, he considered it an ill omen, and shocked his pious attendants by uttering imprecations. When he had reached the end of the Alpine country where the valley of the Rhine begins to open up, he exclaimed: "This looks like a pit for catching foxes." Well, he was caught in this pit.

The emperor now summoned Hus to appear before the council at Constance and defend himself against the charge of heresy. He promised Hus safe conduct to and from the council. Hus now returned to Prague to prepare for the journey and take leave of his friends. He offered to appear before a synod in Bohemia which met in August, to submit a statement of his faith, but was told that this was not necessary. Upon his request the papal inquisitor for Bohemia furnished him a written testimony to the effect that Hus had offered to defend his teachings in public debate, but no one had appeared to contest his views. On October 11 he left Prague for Constance, traveling via Nuernberg and Biberach. All along the route he was hailed by the people, preached, and engaged in doctrinal discussions. He arrived at Constance on November 3, two days after the opening of the council. Though nominally a free man while under the emperor's safe conduct, he was closely watched by his opponents. On November 28 he was asked to attend an informal meeting with Pope John and the cardinals. The emperor had not yet arrived. From this meeting Hus did not return to his dwelling. Against the protest of his attendants, John von Chlum, Wenzel von Duba and Heinrich von Latzenbock, who declared that they were responsible to the emperor for his safety, Hus was thrown into the dungeon of the Dominican monastery, a veritable pesthole. The emperor, informed of this faithless

Continued on page 633

HUS GOING TO THE STAKE. FROM A PAINTING BY C. G. HELLQUIST

THE IVY-COVERED MONUMENT TO THE MARTYR

THE GREAT RACE

A REVIVAL SERMON BY REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, D.D.*

Test: "Know ye not that . . . but one receiveth the prize? so run that ye may obtain." 1 Cor. 9: 24

THESE were celebrated games in the time of Paul. He pictures the course, the spectators wrought up to the highest pitch as they sat or stood in the presence of the contestants. One sees the racers stripped and running for the goal, and has a view of the judge waiting at the end with the prize which he is to bestow upon the successful runner. Then the scene changes and to Paul the Christian life is a race. This is evidently one of his favorite figures, for in the first of his epistles we find him describing the Christian life as a racecourse, and when he reaches the end of his career he uses the same expression (II Tim. 4: 7): "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."

The text is both a warning and an encouragement—a warning because failure is possible, for one may miss gaining the reward. "But one receiveth the prize," the text declares. The word "one" in this case means any one who will strive according to the rule of God. The text is an encouragement, because success is possible: "So run that ye may obtain," is Paul's injunction.

The Christian life is a race. There are many points in this comparison which help us in our everyday contest with the world. First: In its severity it is like a race. If a man is to pass the goal and win the prize, he must use all his energy; no laggard is found winning a prize upon this racecourse. The same thing is true of the Christian. There can be no folding of the hands, no drifting with the tide of the world. It requires the use of all our time and the use of all our strength and enthusiasm to be true Christians. It is a good thing to be obliged to struggle; the strongest oaks in this country grow on the northern coasts, where the storms are the heaviest. This figure of the runner on the race-course is in striking contrast with the indifference of the modern church. It has been said that on an average the members of the church in the city of New York are in the house of God but one Sunday in four. I do not know that this statement is exactly correct; if it is, and if the same statistics hold elsewhere, we are living in perilous times. No man could be as God would have him be, and neglect the church.

Second: The race-course is a prescribed way, and so is the Christian life. It is described in the Old Testament under the figure of the Nazirite who must live separated from the contaminating influence of the world. He must not touch a bone nor come in contact with a dead body; and if he did, then until the time of his cleansing his days were lost in the sight of God. In the New Testament the life is described as a "narrow way"; but then, for that matter, all life is narrow and concentrated if it is successful. "This one thing I do" must be the principle of the lawyer, the merchant, the business man. Then let us not forget that every life is a plan of God.

The Overcoming Power of Faith

The late Dr. G. C. Lorimer once said: "In the charming villa of Count Fabbriotti at Florence there is a remarkable picture representing Michael Angelo selecting material from which to shape his immortal conception of Moses. The scene is laid at Carrara; the mountains, whose white quarries glisten like snow in a garden of verdure, forming a striking background to an interesting group of admirably executed figures. Near the front of the painting a youth bends over an open portfolio, and among the sketches one is disclosed of the Hebrew lawgiver; to the right appears the form of the master workman, directing attention to an enormous block of spotless marble, while in the center stands, most conspicuous of all, the famous artist himself. Both the pose and the countenance of Michael Angelo are indescribably impressive and suggestive. He seems to be intent on searching the flawless stone for the outlines, proportions and features of the wondrous hero who had dared supplicate the Almighty for the vision of his glory. But there is a touch of pathetic indecision in the noble face of the sculptor, otherwise strong and resolute, as though he feared his hand might lose its cunning before the lofty ideal born of his genius could be imparted to the virgin marble." One greater than Michael Angelo trod the obscure ways of Palestine nearly two thousand years ago. A sublime purpose ruled his mind and heart. The Christ had come to inaugurate a kingdom unlike any empire that had been established in ages gone by, and which was to be shaped out of discordant and anarchical humanity. It requires but a slight effort of the imagination to picture him with thoughtful brow, contemplating the rude and poor material not yet hewn from the quarries of worldliness and heathenism, in which and through which he should achieve most marvelously, and which, alas! would sometimes splinter beneath the stroke of his fashioning chisel. But, unlike the Italian artist, there is never in his manner or expression the least sign of doubt as to his ultimate success. And history since has proven that while the sculptor left his statue of Moses in an unfinished state—evidence that he had conceived beyond his skill to execute—Jesus has neither failed nor been discouraged; and never will he cease to persevere until "the isles wait for his law," and until the stone which Daniel saw "cut out of the mountain without hands—the kingdom set up by God of heaven—shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it, itself, and none other, stand forever."

The Christian life is like a race in its brevity. The Bible declares it, for we are told that our life is but a span, or even as a vapor, which appeareth for a little while and then vanisheth away.

Rules for the running are also given (II Tim. 2: 5): "And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully." Three things were necessary in the olden times, if men were to run on the race-course. There must be a public entry; no man could run until his name was down. That is true of the Christian life. What an easy thing it is to be a Christian if we but take God's way! Men would have us develop character and finally graduate into the kingdom; but God declares that "that which is born of the flesh is flesh," and never can be anything else. The work has all been done by Christ, and if we would enter upon the race-course, we must simply put our names down, signifying our acceptance. Remember, however, that this is just the beginning; the whole race-course stretches out from this point; having accepted his plan, we are to live as he would live and run the race as he would have us.

Doing All Things in Order

There must be self-examination. If we are to run successfully, it is necessary for us to stop and examine our secret life. Men judge by what they see in open, everyday living; but our public life is determined by what Peter speaks of as the "hidden man of the heart." It is a good thing for us to stop occasionally and say, "Search me, O God, and know my heart." A public failure is caused by the secret sin.

Advice is given to the runners. Whenever a man entered on the race-course in the time of Paul, suggestions were made to him, the first of which was, "run light." This is further described in the Scriptures in these words, "Lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us." Sins are always weights, and no one can run as God would have him if he regards iniquity in his heart; but weights may not always be sins in themselves. Many things are not sinful in themselves; they may just be doubtful, and no one can please God who is in the habit of doing doubtful things, nor can he run well the race set before him. It is far better for us, if we must put a question mark before or after anything in our conduct, to give up that questionable thing and run well the race that is set before us, realizing that He waits at the end of the course to say, "Well done!"

Whenever the contestants started to run, there were three things that were suggested to them.

First: That there was a crown before them. Different crowns are mentioned in the New Testament, the crown of life for conspicuous service, the crown that is incorruptible for enthusiastic service, the crown of rejoicing for soul-winning, the crown of glory for caring for the flock, and the crown of righteousness for those who love the Lord's appearing. The crowns of this world are corruptible, but those which await us are incorruptible.

Second: They ran in the presence of spectators.

Those were marvelous words written in Hebrews 11: 33-40: "Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection. And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings; yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented (of whom the world was not worthy); they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in caves and caves of the earth. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

The Gift of God

And it is most significant that in Hebrews 11, following on this description of the heroic people of the olden times, we read: "Wherefore sing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." Here is the strongest emphasis to be placed upon the word "wherefore." In the presence of such a company of saints and angels, we run.

Third: There is a judge at the end. (Re 3: 21), "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." The judgment seat of Christ, mentioned in Corinthians and Romans, is the beema of ancient Roman days, where the prize was bestowed for faithful running and successful contests. The question of sin for us has been settled, but not the question of reward for service. One day God shall ask us how we have used our time and talents, our money and our strength; and if it should be that these have not been used for his glory, then may God pity us.

The twenty-seventh verse of this ninth chapter of I Corinthians is a striking expression: "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." What an Paul mean by this when he says in the Epistle to the Romans: "What can separate us from the love of God?" and when he writes to Timothy that he has put his trust in One who is able to keep him against that day, and now, here he writes to the Corinthians about being a castaway? The word "castaway" may be translated "disapproved," and Paul was not thinking of losing his life, but rather of missing the prize which was possible for him to obtain. If we are saved we cannot be separated from Christ; but oh, the sadness of it! we may miss our reward.

All that has been said about the race which the Christian is to run may be turned to a good account if applied to the one who is unsaved, because he will not turn to God. Jesus said, "I am the way."

To accept Christ is to realize our own weakness and his strength, our own sin and his righteousness. Then just turn to him and by an act of faith appropriate all that he offers to us. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews speaks of "the things that accompany salvation." What are they? Sure he means pardon, peace, forgiveness and divine justification. The word "accompany" suggests the mutual accompaniment to a song. What a beautiful figure! The theme of the song is redemption; it is the thought that I am His and that He is mine; and all the many blessings of the Christian life are like the perfect accompaniment of a master player.

It would be sad indeed to run and not run well; to put forth much effort, but to have the direction of our lives to be wrong; to be blind to the Cross because we would not see; to turn from Calvary because we thought there might be another way that would do just as well. And sadder still, after all the struggle of an aimless life, hear him say, "I never knew you!"

I present to you a great race, a companion for your running, and a prize at the end of the way, and I beseech you, "So run that you may obtain."

* Dr. Chapman is America's leading interdenominational evangelist.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON S. COOPER

The Kindling Ministry of Zeal

SUNDAY, June 20. II Corinthians 9: 2. "Your zeal hath stirred very many." Yes, our hidden fires have deep and far-reaching influences. The power of our speech may spend itself in a day. Even our deeds may be so anemic as to speedily exhaust their effects. But the hidden fire is always emitting its rays; it is constantly acting the moral atmosphere, and is therefore always related to the lives of others.

What is that hidden fire? It can be clean or unclean. It can be the fire of an impure passion, such as jealousy, avarice, or lust. It can burn with the fire of destruction, and be always consuming the precious relationships of common life. Or it can be a pure fire and lucent as a sea of glass, and its constant glow can make the moral climate like an inspiring summer's day. It can be the fire of hope, stirring everybody to sacred cheer. Or it may be the fire of love, making everybody breathe the air of heaven. Yes, the fire can be kindled of heaven or kindled of hell.

These Corinthian disciples had the fire of zeal. They did nothing coldly. All the issues of their lives were hot with a passionate devotion. When they prayed aloud others were warmed at their fire. When they gave their witness, others were kindled by their enthusiasm. When they moved in ways of common duty their blazing ardor encouraged the smoldering energy of others. These disciples went about lighting the fires of others.

Where had they got their fire? This is the secret: "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." "The God that answereth by fire, let him be God." J. H. J.

Singing on the Road to Zion

MONDAY, June 21. Isaiah 35: 1-10. "The ransomed of the Lord shall come with singing into Zion." This is the prophet's vision of the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon. Nature welcomes them. Parched lands sing; desert places rejoice. There are no lame, no dumb, no leaf. The march is with light feet, beaming faces and glowing hearts. Sorrow and sighing—twined sisters—whisper to each other, after surviving the happy scene, "Let us begone; there is no room for us here." Was this dream ever realized? Compare it with Ezra's account of the return (8: 15, etc.). He makes, to say the least, no mention of these transformations.

What then? Was the vision a delusion? No, it was all true, because the fresh, happy joy of emancipation lit up the gray rocks and the sand-waves of the desert with a perfect mystery of beauty. "The beauty of the Lord" was upon the scene, which to other eyes might have seemed bare and uninteresting. Nature robes herself in hues which are borrowed from the heart. If we are filled with the joy of the Lord, it awakens echoes of musical response from all creation. The laughter of the pure soul is infectious. If a little child bends laughing heartily, a smile will break out on the faces of an entire carriageful or roomful of wintry-looking faces. Let us go to our home in Zion with songs. When Francis of Assisi heard that he was near his journey's end, he stretched out his hands with indescribable joy, saying, "Welcome, Sister Death!" Then he began to sing, and set for Brothers Angelo and Leo. On their arrival they were made, in spite of their emotion, to sing, and from that day the house rang unceasingly with songs. Even through the night he would sing one of his favorite songs, and when wearied out he would beg them to go on. He came with singing to his end. F. B. M.

Our Ever-Present Helper

TUESDAY, June 22. Deuteronomy 32: 11, 12. "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, so the Lord almighty did lead him." These were the words taken from the song of Moses shortly before his death. In beautiful allegory they represent the great Jewish leader's experience with God through all the vicissitudes of his turbulent years. God is likened to a mother eagle who, in her desire to teach the young eaglets to fly, tears up the home nest so that they are obliged to try their wings upon the mountain air; but the mother bird never leaves them, she always hovers near, ready to fly to their aid and bear them up when they are about to fall.

my people. He has forced us out of our home nests. He has led us in ways we knew not of; at times the way was dark, but the guiding pillar of fire always appeared by night. So the Lord alone did lead us, and no foreign god.

It was Tennyson who spoke out of his comparatively quiet life, saying: "Life is not an idle ore, but iron dug from central gloom." For all of us life is filled with discipline and hard things, mysterious things often, to bear and to suffer. Even Jesus was made perfect through the things he suffered. We earn our bread by the sweat of our brow. Many a home nest is stirred up and we, like the young eagles, seem to be left alone to beat our wings against the unknown air. If we carry this text in our thought and heart, however, we shall always remember that God is faithful. He does not go away in our testing times. We often express his nearness in times of misfortune by saying in a somewhat thoughtless way, "It is always darkest just before dawn." Jesus said: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." C. S. C.

The Reality of Jesus' Presence

WEDNESDAY, June 23. John 8: 41-59. "Before Abraham was, I AM." Do you wonder that the Jews, holding him to be one like themselves, took up stones to cast at Jesus when he spoke thus? He appropriated to himself the high great Name by which the Eternal had revealed himself to Moses. "Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you." He thought it not robbery to be equal with God, because so inwardly conscious of the deep unity of his Nature with the Father's. Abraham became (such is the literal Greek). He passed through all the processes of birth, growth, maturity and decline. But Jesus Christ is. "The same yesterday, today, and forever."

Dr. Dale of Birmingham records in his diary that on one occasion he was preparing a sermon for Easter, and there broke on him the vivid realization that the Lord was actually living and present. He sprang from his desk, and walked his study in indescribable emotion, saying over and over: "He is really alive; he is here." Let us ask that the Holy Spirit may make us equally aware that he is, that he is here, that he is absolutely the same as he was in those early days when he gathered his apostles and disciples, was handled by them, wrought miracles of forgiveness and healing, and founded his church. In the storm he said to the terrified disciples: "Do not fear, I AM." To the woman at Sychar he said, "I AM." He leaves us, from this Gospel, to fill in the blank space, as it may suit our need, with "the Door," "the Vine," "the Good Shepherd," "the Life." But always believe—as the angels affirmed on the Mount of Ascension—that he is "this same Jesus." All through the coming years let this ring as music in your heart—"I AM." F. B. M.

On Yielding to Temptation

THURSDAY, June 24. Exodus 20: 15. "Thou shalt not steal." Four significant, searching words! The eighth commandment is the briefest in words of any of the ten commandments. It stands among the other great rules for successful conduct without description or modification. It is definite yet comprehensive as life itself. The man who takes a street-car fare that does not rightfully belong to him breaks the eighth commandment as truly as the man who robs the bank. We found some years ago a hill people among whom stealing was one of the two things punishable by death. It seems to be instinctive in the human heart to believe that stealing is wrong. Lowell said:

In vain we call old notions fudge,
And bend our conscience to our dealing.
The ten commandments will not budge,
And stealing will continue stealing.

The writer has seldom witnessed deeper feeling or more enthusiastic applause from a student audience than that which greeted the confession of a Southern student who arose before the men of his university and confessed dishonesty in debate. The young man had recently won the sophomore-junior prize debate, but later in chapel he asked permission to make a statement to the student body, saying: "I overheard my opponent rehearsing his debate in an adjoining room, and although I stopped my ears and refused to listen, my roommate took down the points. Afterwards the temptation was so subtle and strong that I took the notes and arranged my debate accordingly, and won. But," said the student, with feeling, "I stole it, and I have come to plead the forgiveness of the student body."

It may take courage to put ourselves right with this divine and human law by confessing our fault or by "restoring fourfold," as did the man who talked with Jesus. It is the price of peace, however, and it will help us to a keener conscience to remember that the only safety is in a rigid determination, made habitual by disciplining ourselves in regard to the least infraction of this principle, to the end that whether poorer or richer, fortunate or unfortunate, stealing shall not come near me. "Thou shalt not steal." C. S. C.

Draw on Him for All Our Need

FRIDAY, June 25. Colossians 2: 1-11. "In him ye are made full." We learn from 1: 19 that it pleased the Father that all the fulness, i.e., the fulness of every possible supply, should live deep in the nature of our Lord, so that we might go to him at every hour of need, as the friend in the parable went to his neighbor's house for three loaves, and obtained "as many as he needed" for the other poor friend who had come to him on his journey. But here the apostle goes a step further, and tells us that this fulness is stored in a body; in semblance human, though in texture more ethereal than these bodies of clay. It was as though he felt that the human mind could not apprehend the great spiritual essence of God, and needed a human channel of conveyance. Thank God there is a Mediator between God and man—the Man—Christ Jesus.

Then, says the apostle, in him ye have been made full. We are told in Genesis that Abraham died "an old man and full of years." He had filled out the full possibilities of his life. There was nothing more to be added. So in Christ we have all that we require to meet every emergency that may occur in our earthly experience. It is as though our heavenly Father, when he sent us forth, forecasted every possible event, put its adequate supply in the Son of his love, and told us that we might draw on him for every hour and moment of need. Jesus Christ is the complement, i.e., the complement of the tiny segment of our life. We often see only a crescent moon, but the whole moon is there: so the holiest and best life has only attained to a small proportion of its possibilities; but it is destined to grow into the full measure of the stature of Christ. F. B. M.

Outward Conformance But Inward Sin

SATURDAY, June 26. Luke 18: 21. "And he said, All these have I kept from my youth up." The rich young ruler was morally true, but if he was like the Pharisees, keeping the letter of the law while the motives of his heart were evil, he was but a whitened sepulcher. He may have had a horror of worldly frivolities and fleshly appetites, while his soul was full of envy, bigotry, hatred, uncharitableness and selfishness. Like Dives, he loved money more than God. He was in good standing in church and social life. He gave some crumbs to the beggar at his gate, but on his way to church, like the priest and the Levite, he deserted the wounded man, just as some of the rulers of Europe, while on their way to prayer, issued proclamations of war, forgetting about the millions of killed and wounded, starving and suffering, who would fall by the way-side, and whom the Good Samaritans among peaceful nations would have to nurse and comfort. Our Peace Lord desires heart honesty and unconventional worship. He wants brotherly kindness, manifested to all fellow beings, even to enemies. He was put to death for showing that the Jerusalem saints were not as good as they appeared to be. E. W. C.

The Upward Vision

MY SOUL, be not thou weary in well-doing,
Nor faint because of fruitage long delayed;
The path of duty steadfastly pursuing,
The Lord will guide thy steps; be not afraid.

Though through the day the lowering clouds may hover,
And hide the sunshine from our longing sight,
Look up, my soul! The storm will soon be over.
"At eventide," we're told, "there shall be light."
Salem, Ohio. A. C.

THE WAR IN EUROPE *

BY ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

SO MUCH of general interest has happened during the week last past (closing June 3) that it is really difficult to know with which series of events to begin.

The final episode in the British cabinet crisis was the appointment May 28 of Admiral Sir Henry Bradwardine Jackson as first sea lord of the Admiralty, in succession to Lord Fisher, the bluff sea-dog whose quarrel with Winston Churchill really precipitated the crisis.

Late in the week the king, on the occasion of his birthday, conferred one of the highest honors possible on Lord Kitchener by making him a Knight of the Garter, the most prized British order. This honor indicates clearly that Kitchener has not fallen in the opinion of the sovereign, the government or the British nation, as a result of the attacks made on him by Lord Northcliffe (Harmsworth) through his chain of papers and his news agencies. By the way, the respectable and influential London weeklies are now attacking Northcliffe and his instrumentalities in their turn.

The British Government on May 31 began its first important prosecution of a newspaper under the Defense of the Realm Act. The paper in question was the London Times, with whom was joined a retired officer, Major E. H. Richardson. The charge was "furnishing and printing information useful to the enemy." Major Richardson wrote a letter to the Times in which, among other things, he said: "The last of the French reserves are out. At the present moment young, raw recruits have been called up." The French Government complained of this publication, and the prosecution followed. The case does not turn on the truth or falsity of the statement, but on the fact that, as the prosecutor said, "It was calculated to give confidence to the Germans and to depress the Allies."

The British Admiralty issued a statement during the week setting forth the loss in merchant shipping since the beginning of the war. This shows that 130 ships and 83 trawlers have been sunk, of which ships 56 were sunk by the enemy's cruisers, 12 by mines and 62 by submarines. The total tonnage amounts to 458,006, an average of about 3,500 tons.

The interesting information that the British chancellor of the exchequer, the governor of the Bank of England and the financial secretary of the treasury would meet the Italian financial minister at Nice, in the south of France, this week to discuss financial questions arising from Italy's entrance into the war, has come to us from London in the form of an official bulletin. As the expression, "to discuss financial questions arising, etc.," means to see how much money Italy will have need of to prosecute her campaign, and as Great Britain is already financing, wholly or in part, all of her other allies, it would seem that England is bearing alone one burden that in itself is almost a crushing one. Still, in quick assets, Great Britain is probably the richest country in the world, and most probably the load will not be beyond her strength.

That Russia, with her enormous extent of territory and her equally enormous undeveloped resources—potentially, Russia is the richest country in the world—can manage, one day or another, to pay back such advances as may be made to her is almost a certainty; but Serbia, Belgium, Montenegro and Italy are much more doubtful as debtors.

The Austro-Italian campaign itself is still in its preliminary stages, and nothing more important than skirmishing for position has taken place during the week. In the land campaign the Italians suffer under the disadvantage of having to advance uphill on almost the whole length of the frontier, from the plains to the mountains, and consequently their along the line, and now hold some sixty Austrian villages, with advance guards some eight or miles from Trent on the western end of the line and nearly to the defenses of Trieste on the east. Next week, if events permit the space, I shall give a detailed description of the Austro-Italian front and the adjacent country on both sides of the line, which will perhaps be of great help subsequently in understanding the various movements of the contending troops, and in forming a just idea of the strategic importance thereof.

GERMAN SOLDIERS TREATING THEIR MOUNTS TO A BATH IN THE MEURTHE, FRANCE

The severity of the fighting on the peninsula of Gallipoli continues unabated, though it appears certain that neither side is making any gain of importance; in fact, neither side claims to have done so. The casualties are, however, enormous, and it is very doubtful whether so much human blood has been shed in so small an area in any other theater of war in this conflict. Neither side has as yet given any detailed figures as to their casualties, but from such meager and vague data as we possess it does not seem an exaggeration to say that they are even now well over 50,000 in the aggregate.

At present the situation seems to be that the Turks are unable to drive the Allies from their position, supported as these are by the fire of the warships, and on the other hand, the Allies are unable to advance to any degree from the points at which they landed; hence, the combat seems destined to be a long one, and in the nature of a test of endurance.

The bombardment of the defenses of the straits themselves by the warships still continues, but here, too, a negative result only seems to have been attained. The forts have been somewhat damaged, and two British warships have been sunk, but apparently the efficiency of neither the fleet nor the forts has been at all seriously impaired.

The British submarine which succeeded in getting through the Dardanelles into the Sea of Marmora still continues her career of destruction. During the week she sank a gunboat and two more transports. So great has been the effect of her presence on the Turks that they have abandoned transporting troops by water in the Sea of Marmara.

The Russians recaptured an area in Persia, during the week and the Turks claim a victory over the British at Kurna, a little northwest of the Persian Gulf.

The Turkish Government has issued notice to the neutrals that henceforth the Suez Canal will be included in the sphere of its military operations; whether this presages increased activity in operations here and not now be said.

In the eastern campaign the interest has centered in Galicia, where the Austro-German advance has continued. This army, which had succeeded in establishing itself on the east bank of the San River, north and south of Jaroslau, was assailed repeatedly by the Russians, who fought with the energy of despair to drive their enemies across the San River and thereby relieve the pressure on Przemyśl to the south.

These efforts, however, were not crowned with any degree of success. From Jaroslau north to the outer rim of the defenses of Przemyśl, fighting was general on both banks of the San the whole week. Here, too, the Russians endeavored to break through, while the Austro-German forces were content to hold their ground, this being sufficient to protect the forces around the fortress itself, engaged in its siege. The town of Przemyśl is in almost the exact center of the defenses, comprising progress is normally slow, besides which, so far, their operations have been greatly hampered by the weather.

Continued on page 624

PRIMOLANA, ONE OF THE STRATEGIC SPOTS ON THE ITALIAN-AUSTRIAN BOUNDARY

The Austrians, momentarily at all events, seem to have adopted the policy of retreating to their first lines of defense. The Italians have succeeded in advancing in Austrian territory practically all

A DISGUISE ADOPTED BY ONE OF THE ALLIED BATTLESHIPS IN THE DARDANELLES TO CONFUSE THE SHORE GUNS

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood

ENGLAND'S OPEN-AIR HOSPITALS +

BY EARLE HARRISON
Photographs by the Author

A NEW KIND OF HOSPITAL HAS BEEN CREATED TO MEET NEW CONDITIONS

DURING the past year or year and a half, many scientific men of Europe have been busily engaged in constructing weapons and machines of destruction. How well these men have succeeded, we have only to read accounts of the various battles in France and Flanders in order to ascertain. While this organization of scientific men has been engaged in a work of destruction, another group of scientists has been engaged in the great humane work of repairing the havoc wrought by the weapons of destruction. It is of this latter class I am writing.

They are the R. A. M. C. (Royal Army Medical Corps of England). Early in August, when the papers began to publish long lists of dead and wounded, these men began a campaign to relieve the suffering of the wounded. Many hospitals were equipped in England to provide treatment for the wounded brought in from the front, but the most interesting of all the English hospitals is the Great Eastern Base Hospital, located at Cambridge. It is novel, for here the wounded soldiers are treated not only by the best medical attention, but the hospital is an "open air" cure.

Colonel Griffith, a noted physician and surgeon at Cambridge, offered his services to the English Government, and also proffered plans for a hospital, to be constructed on the beautiful campus of the Cambridge University. His plan was to construct the hospital with many wards, all facing the south, and these wards to be open.

It was his belief that if the wounded were kept in the open during treatment they would not become soft or tender, and when dismissed would be ready for service without as great delay as would be the case should their treatment have been in steam-heated buildings.

The week this hospital was opened I visited it, finding the wards nearly filled with wounded Belgians and English. I talked with many of them and found that they were happy and comfortable. The sun shone on their cots, and the fresh breezes blew through the wards. There are shades which can be drawn in bad weather.

The arrangement of the hospital is simple. In the rear is the kitchen and quarters of staff; next come the wards, a dozen each, three hundred feet long, with front and sides open. To one side is the operating room—and here fresh air plays its important part, for there is no odor such as characterizes the conventional operating room.

country for an hour or hour and a half.

A week after the first visit I returned again, and in another week made a third visit. The recovery of these wounded was astonishing. In talking with the wounded and the medical staff I found that only a very few had died; in fact, only those whose wounds were exceedingly severe. The ordinary gun-shot wound healed in a week's time.

A feature of the treatment here is the anti-tetanus serum. Many of the patients have developed lockjaw, a disease ordinarily considered fatal. Yet here in Cambridge I have seen many whose jaws were firmly set, and with a high fever, apparently dying, recover after the serum had been given them.

I could write indefinitely of the wonders of this hospital, but to confine myself to a reasonable space, I will say that if there were more, yes, many more Colonel Griffiths and open-air hospitals, there would be less women clad all in black, with weeping eyes, slowly approaching the church on Sunday, yes, daily, for the toll of death has been beyond description the past four months.

AUTOMOBILE RIDES ARE A PRIME PART OF THE TREATMENT

BLINDS KEEP OUT BAD WEATHER AND TOO BRIGHT SUNSHINE

SCATTERING SUNSHINE

BY DR. ORISON S. MARDEN

I KNOW a rich man who sours everything he touches and spreads gloom wherever he goes. I have never heard him say a cheerful word to anybody. He is always morose, hard, exacting, critical, selfish, greedy. No one loves him, not even his own children; and his wife merely endures him because she is dependent upon him. When he leaves this world I doubt if any soul will really regret it.

If I were allowed to choose but one thing in life I would rather have above all others, it would be a sunny disposition. I would rather have a sunny disposition and poverty than all of that man's wealth. I would infinitely prefer it to a great fortune with a discontented mind, an unhappy disposition, for money cannot buy soul sunshine. No fortune can compensate for the possession of a sour disposition.

But no one need be gloomy, sour, disagreeable, pessimistic or discouraged unless he deliberately chooses to be so. No one can add "a cubit to his stature," or change the color of his eyes or hair; but he can change the expression of his face; he can always wear a smile instead of a frown; he can, if he will, always say an encouraging, uplifting word instead of a discouraging, depressing one. These things cost nothing but a little effort, and their influence goes deeper and farther than we dream. And, most significant of all, the kind words and cheerful smiles help the giver even more than the receiver.

I wish I could sing; I think I'd feel well then!" said a little seven-year-old lad in Bellevue Hospital, New York, while a surgeon was examining him for what injuries he had sustained in a fall into a twelve-foot-deep excavation.

All right, laddie; you can sing if you will sing something nice," said the kind-hearted Dr. McLean. The little fellow began to sing in a high, clear soprano: "Nearer, My God, to Thee." As the childish notes rang out, nurses, doctors and attendants from various parts of the hospital began to steal in, until there were fully a hundred people in the room.

"Well, I guess you are all right, little man," said the doctor as he finished his examination; "I can't find any broken bones."

"I guess it was the singin' that fixed me," replied the boy. "I always sing when I feel bad."

If we grown-ups would do as this little chap did—sing when we "feel bad," no matter what our loss or misfortune or trouble—we would certainly "feel well."

If we cannot always so control our moods as to be really happy, we can at least appear cheerful. This is a duty we owe ourselves and society. It is a sin to go about radiating mental poison, the poison of discouragement, of gloom, the poison of worry and anxiety. It is weak to go about the world wearing mourning in our expression. It is a sin to peddle this gloom and despondency. We owe it to the world and to ourselves to scatter sunshine, to appear at our best, and not at our worst.

No matter what discouragement or disappointment you may be struggling with, cover it, hide it, bury it. Always wear a cheerful face. Don't hang out the black flag; hoist the bright and cheerful colors. Just say to yourself: "Whatever misfortune comes to me it cannot conquer my indomitable spirit. No matter what sorrow may be gnawing at my heart, I will go through the world with a good front, with a cheerful face. No one shall ever say that I am a pessimist or a weakling; that I have soured on life."

I have a friend who calls on me every now and then, and always gives me a new lease on life. He makes me think more of myself; makes me more ambitious, more determined to see my opportunities and to make the most of them. His calls are like the coming of spring after a long, cold winter, which awakens the sleeping buds and calls out the flowers. The sunshine of his cheerful mind, the alchemy of his optimism, awakens me to renewed effort and encourages me to outdo myself. I am never too busy to see him, and I always urge him to stay, because his presence makes me a larger man, makes life seem more worth while than ever. He helps me to get a new grip upon myself. He arouses me, so that I feel equal to any task when he leaves.

Many of us carry precious memories of sunny faces, which we glimpse but once, perhaps, while traveling in a far land, but whose cheerful, uplifting expression we never forget. "Well, I had thought about you a hundred times, I guess, between the first and second visit," said a storekeeper in the West to a traveling man, "and when you came in the second time, with that contented, happy smile and those laughing eyes, and said you were just making a friendly visit, I made up my mind that you were the kind of man I could buy goods of."

Cheerful, encouraging people create a vitalizing, health-giving atmosphere. They radiate strength and courage. People who are strong, robust, cheerful, bring new life to those who have physical infirmities. Low spirits are apt to accompany a low state of vitality and depleted strength, and everything that brightens, cheers and encourages tends to keep up health and strength and to buoy up the physical condition. Helen Keller said, "Although the world is full of suffering, it is full of the overcoming of it." What a rebuke are such words, coming from a deaf, dumb and blind girl, to those who have all their senses intact! This girl, handicapped as she is, always keeps her avenues of joy open, always, in season and out of season, preaches the gospel of happiness!

"Be of good cheer!" How many times this was repeated in the Saviour's sayings! Even when his heart was rent with anguish, he urged his disciples to "be of good cheer," and further he said: "And your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man shall take from you."

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

The Great Hope

ONE of the most inspiring passages in the Old Testament is that which tells how Elisha, surrounded by enemies who sought his life, remained calm and imperturbable, and when his servant, in great agitation, spoke of the imminent danger, the man of God told him to look up, whereupon "his eyes were opened" and he saw the mountains full of the chariots of divine reinforcement. So it is even today, when with the impulse of faith we lift our faces Godward and receive the new vision.

Some revelation of this far-reaching character is now taking place in the world. Men have grown sick of the great war, with its endless slaughter and its masses of new victims moving on to their destruction. They are appalled by the stupendous material forces that have been evoked, and they shudder as they reflect that civilization may go down in utter wreck before all is ended. But to some the new vision has already come. They see, far beyond the present chaos, new conditions emerging, a new state of society, a world harmoniously governed, a world in which there will be no strife for supremacy among the nations.

This thought is finely presented by a writer in the Toronto Globe: "There must be no world-mastership in any nation," he says; "not German, not Russian, not Oriental, not American, and, please God, not British! No nation is good enough to stereotype the national aspirations of humanity. No race is pure enough to make its life-blood the motive power of all the world. No people are so near perfection that their culture is fit to dominate civilization. When any nation sets itself to mold all peoples after its own type, the great Lord God does as he has done many times in history: he smashes the pattern and begins again. Partnership, not antagonism! Co-operation, not conflict! Law, not force! Justice, not power! Equality for all, because mastership for none! Nothing less is worth while. Nothing else matters."

This is the great thought that is asserting itself insistently in the minds of those who take the wider view. It is the one thought which should energize this nation—that the Supreme Power will not only bring order out of the world-disaster, but that it is already on the way. Our whole attitude should be centered upon this great hope. If we are to lift up the flag of world-redemption it must be the flag of God's peace, not the blood-red banner of war. God forbid that we should be tempted to join in this great madness, which is the outcome of the struggle for national supremacy and the result of long years of active assertion of that principle. We, who have no aspirations like those of the warring powers of the old world, who are not driven by greed of gain or conquest, and who profess to hold as our ideal the love of justice and humanity, would be false to the vision and to our avowed principles if we yielded through pride or anger to this temptation.

And the church, too, is beginning to see more clearly the path of duty. Had she been inflexibly on the side of God and peace, instead of stirring up the hearts of the nations against each other, the church might have done much to avert the great disaster that has happened. Now, the opportunity is here for the Church of Christ in all lands to unite resolutely for peace. The world must know on which side the church stands—whether on the side of force or of faith in God and his promise. It is a testing time for the Church of Christ, and by its attitude now it must be judged hereafter. We have had many militant voices in the church. Let them be militant no longer, but preach the doctrine of faith in God and love among men. By and through these only can the church serve and help to save the world.

In the language of the President: "Greater days lie before this nation than it has ever yet seen: . . . to lead the nations of the world in those things that make for hope and for the benefit of mankind."

"Thy Money Perish with Thee!"

SOME of the New York dailies contained in their issue of Saturday, May 22, a very singular advertisement. It was a quarter-page spread, beginning with these words: "In this commercial age, here is a business asset"; and closing with the appeal, "Go to church tomorrow." It is true that the appeal to the business interests was acknowledged to be but a means to an end. That is, the advertisement stated that church attendance would be a business gain, and went on to state that spiritual gain would undoubtedly result. But the advertisement contained these words: "Right within your reach is a business asset—a very definite one—which you are perhaps overlooking. This asset is derived from your going to church. Undoubtedly you have never looked upon it in this light. It is obvious, if you are known as a steady, sober-minded churchman, those with whom you deal have greater confidence in you. Going to church will tend toward establishing you in the mind of every one as a man to be trusted. This is a decided business advantage, a personal asset, and worth while in every way."

It is simply impossible to think of Jesus or any of his first followers using this appeal to induce people to come into their fellowship. Their call was quite opposite: a call to poverty, a call to sacrifice, a call to danger, a call to probable death. This advertisement in the New York papers is a striking indication of how far the church has in some quarters allowed itself to drift from the spirit and teachings of Jesus.

One of the greatest reproaches of the church has always been the fact that some men have sought membership in it for this very cause, and it is inexcusable to make this very thing which has been the church's shame the basis of an appeal to outsiders to come in. Peter on one occasion said to a man who sought to gain spiritual information and gifts in order that he might coin them into money: "Thy money perish with thee!"

Some such spirit as this would do much to bring the church back to the purity and the power she has lost. For the most part, we are altogether overdoing the appeal to the prosperous. These were not the people whom Jesus particularly sought. It was the common people who heard him gladly, and it is the common people, with their poverty and their woes, their struggles and their hopes, that the church must try to reach and help today.

Of course we should try also to help the well-to-do, but we may help him best by sounding again the warning which Jesus spoke that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. Particularly must we do all we can to purge the church of the reproach of containing people who have sought her courts for the sake of gain. It is to be hoped that the churches of New York will in emphatic terms repudiate the advertisement referred to and bring to an accounting the men who were responsible for its insertion in the public press.

The President and Mexico

THE Mexican tangle is becoming more tangled, and during the first days of June it looked very much as though the United States might determine to use armed force in an effort to untangle it. But there have been grave fears that this will merely make the tangle larger and more difficult.

On June 2 President Wilson despatched a warning to the three military leaders of Mexico's factions, Carranza, Villa and Zapata, saying that "if they cannot accommodate their differences and unite for this great purpose" [the purpose of restoring order in Mexico] "within a very short time this government will be constrained to decide what means should be employed by the United States in order to help Mexico save herself and serve her people." It was expected that President Wilson would suggest a man in whom he had confidence to take the lead in restoring order in Mexico.

It is pointed out as most decidedly inconsistent that President Wilson would consider the feasibility of again forbidding shipments of arms to Mexico, while insisting that he cannot stop their shipment to Europe. The recent bloodshed in Mexico, which he and all other lovers of peace deplore, could have been almost entirely prevented if the original embargo on arms had been continued. And the woful war in Europe would doubtless have come to an end already if the American Government had forbidden its manufacturers and merchants to ship arms and ammunition to the belligerent nations.

During the anxious days at the end of May and the beginning of June the question was persistently recurring: "Why does not President Wilson summon Congress?" The developments of the last few weeks in regard to our relationships with both Mexico and Germany have emphasized the distressing fact that in the very matter of the most desperate seriousness to the American people, the matter of going to war, we are not a democracy at all, but practically a monarchy. There seems to be no reason for withholding the calm opinion that in the matter of foreign relations and in making decisions which might be of such a character as to lead inevitably to war, the constitution of the United States gives far too much opportunity of independent action to the President.

Religion in Politics

CHICAGO'S newly elected mayor, William Hale Thompson, appears to be an officer of commonsense views. A few days ago he received a letter from the Rev. W. B. Millard, executive of the Chicago Church Federation Council (which has since been published on the subject of the proposed prizefight bill to the State of Illinois, in which the writer said:

As you know, the United Protestant Churches put forth every possible effort at the recent election in your behalf our representatives stood at the door of every Protestant church in the city Sunday, April 4, and distributed a letter signed by Harry Wheeler, George Dixon, Marquis Eaton and other prominent citizens. I am sure, therefore, that the wishes of the church people will receive consideration at your hands. While the question is before the legislature at Springfield, and before the city council, your influence now carries great weight and we hope that you will throw it against the fight here for it.

We have had occasion at different times to comment on the pernicious activity of the Roman Catholic Church in state and national politics. And here we find the Protestant churches of Chicago admittedly engaging in the same business. This should stand as a warning to other churches not to be led into the same blunder through the over-zeal of church officials. The church has no proper place in practical politics and it should keep out. While it is eminently fitting that a pastor should speak frankly and fearlessly with any question of public morals or principle, and should not hesitate to denounce bad legislation or corrupt government, he should see to it that his own activities and those of his congregation are so directed that they cannot be charged with adopting the vulgar methods of machine politics in "boosting" or opposing certain candidates. If the line is not drawn at the point where commonsense would indicate it should be, we may soon expect to hear of church primaries, church nominations and church watchers at the polls. Every self-respecting church member has a right to protest against the use of the church as a political machine.

The Case of Leo Frank

SELDOM have so many citizens of America been interested in the life of a single individual as are now interested in the life of Leo M. Frank, sentenced to be executed at Atlanta, Ga. on June 22. Aside from the fast growing disapproval of capital punishment the popular movement to save Frank's life has been inspired by the horror of putting a man to death so long as there remain the slightest doubt of his guilt.

In his charming autobiography "The Making of an American," Jacob A. Riis related an incident from his own experience which he declared would have made it forever impossible for him to vote to execute a man on circumstantial evidence. While editing a paper in Brooklyn, Mr. Riis narrated he was annoyed by a drunken denizen of the neighborhood, whom, one afternoon, he threw out of his office, threatening to do him still further damage if he appeared again. That same evening at twilight Mr. Riis saw a small white vagrant dog which had bothered the neighborhood run into a lumber yard adjoining the newspaper office. He took up his shotgun, entered the yard, saw the dog lying near a pile of lumber, raised his gun and took aim. Just as he was about to pull the trigger, he felt a strange warning not to do so. Putting down his gun he went forward to investigate, and found that what he had supposed was the dog was in reality the white shirt of his drunken annoy, who lay asleep upon the ground. Riis declared that if he had shot and killed the man it would have been impossible to convince a jury that in his heart he had been absolutely innocent.

The courts must use the most rigorous and reverent care not to condemn a man to death without whose guilt there can be the slightest shadow of doubt. It is earnestly hoped that by the time this issue of the Christian Herald appears Leo Frank will have had his sentence of death commuted.

The BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

West Point's Oldest Graduate

THE oldest living graduate of the United States Naval Academy shook hands with the oldest living graduate of the United States Military Academy the other day, when Rear Admiral John H. Upshur, president of the Aztec Club, congratulated General Horatio V. Gibson upon his eighty-eighth birthday. The members of the Aztec Club living in Washington called upon General Gibson at his home and filled the house with floral offerings and with heartiest congratulations. In the evening the women of the Madaloupe Society, an auxiliary of the Aztec Society, held an informal reception for General Gibson at his home. General Gibson responded to the greeting. As one of the seven primary members of the Aztec Society, who served in the Mexican War, he spoke with great feeling of the comrades of the days when he was with Scott in Mexico. General Gibson was selected this year to make the commencement address at West Point. The veteran officer, besides his patriotic service, has been a man of character and of Christian fidelity, and can take up these words employed by another: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." (II Tim. 4: 7.)

Bridge-Jumper's Fatal Leap

HENRY CLARK, a machinist in the Pennsylvania Railroad Shops at Philadelphia, jumped from the Brooklyn Bridge the other day and was drowned. He had a desire to emulate Steve Brodie. He has made a number of successful leaps from high bridges into rivers, and went to Brooklyn to drop from the bridge into fame and fortune. His proposed jump had been advertised, and the bridge policemen were watching for him, and they pushed after him so closely that he had to make a clumsy leap, turning a number of somersaults and striking the water on his back. His body appeared a moment after and nothing more was seen of him. His wife and other relatives and friends came over from Philadelphia to witness his daring leap. He spoke to his friends about the great part he would play in the moving picture shows of the land. It was a pity the poor man should have taken so awful a risk, and for so insignificant a reason. How many, in climbing the steps of fame, have slipped and fallen to their death! "Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall." (Prov. 16: 18.)

Trinity Removes Last Saloon

TRINITY Church, New York, no longer has a saloon on its lands. This improvement in the condition of the church property was pointed out recently by Miss Emily W. Dinwiddie, in a report to the Trinity Parish, which is included in the Year Book. The report states that the ground lease that had been running for forty years on one block of houses expired last year, and the parish bought the buildings, refused renewal of the lease and ousted the saloon. And the Trinity Corporation did that which it has long desired—divorced itself from all relationship to the saloon, which is the acknowledged enemy of all for which the church stands. The assessed valuation of Trinity's property, not including property used exclusively for church or religious purposes, is now $15,403,700. The Trinity Parish, refusing to renew the old saloon licenses, is keeping pace with the rapid march of temperance public sentiment, and setting a good example to those persons of wealth who rent their property to be used for immoral and criminal purposes. The action of the parish calls to mind these words: "Your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand." (Isa. 28: 18.)

Sixty Adrift in Niagara

THE lives of sixty passengers were imperiled on the Niagara River recently when the steering gear on the ferryboat Niagara Frontier, plying between Buffalo and Fort Erie, Canada, became disabled. Rescue was effected by the tug International, as the ferryboat was approaching the treacherous "Devil's Half-Acre," a swirling patch of water, where several boats have been capsized. The dangerous currents in the river of life catch the soul and bear it on against the rocks, or overturn and sink it. It is important that the conscience and will so direct the soul amidst life's perilous currents that it shall safely reach the other shore. It is not necessary to row down the Niagara to be lost; all that is necessary is to fail to use the oars in battling against the current. This ferryboat, whose rudder had gotten out from under control, calls to mind this reference to the relationship of the steering gear grown in nurseries at different points in the West. The seed for the nurseries is gathered by the ton in the fall. As a result of the work this year there are about ten million young trees set out to go to housekeeping on their own account, and probably an equal number just starting in life as young plants, still in the higher grades of nurseries. These trees decorate the mountains and add to the beauty and sublimity of nature. They will also—many of them—find their way into the house of God or the home for Christmas decoration. These trees are a fitting symbol of Christ and of the Evergreen life, untouched by the frost and snow of winter, and of our unending life through him, unchecked and unspoiled by the blight of sin and death. The ten million newly planted evergreens are symbols of the infinite life of love, which is the Christ whose salvation is thus typified in the vision: "And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." (Rev. 22: 2.)

Carrier's Valuable Service

OUR splendid army of letter-carriers is worthy of special praise. They tramp the streets early and late, in all weathers. They run the risk of contagious diseases in the mail they handle and in the homes they visit, and other dangers. And yet, as a rule, they are patient, cheerful and happy. The government has a way of marking them with its favor. One black star indicates five years' service; two stars, ten years; one red star, fifteen years; two, twenty; one silver star, twenty-five years; two, thirty; one gold star, thirty-five years; two, forty or more. There are six members of the force in New York City who have three gold stars, indicating forty-five years or over of service. The government ought not only to decorate the men with stars for long service, but should show its appreciation in a way that will be a help to them in old age. The salaries paid the carriers do not include provision for a rainy day. Only those peculiarly provident or fortunate can save a competency for old age. Men and women who are Christians have a beautiful spiritual provision for old age, and for the limitless years on the other side of the river. The appeal the letter-carriers are making to Congress contains the principle of this prayer: "Now also when I am old and gray-headed, O God, forsake me not." (Ps. 71: 18.)

Heredity Determines Height

THE professor of the department of genetics in the Connecticut Agricultural College, after a series of experiments, declares that people and plants are tall or short according to the stock from which they come, rather than from the environment in which they are placed. He says that unfriendly environment may shorten a man or a stalk, but that no circumstances, however friendly, can increase the height of a person or a plant. Whatever truth there may be in the contention of the professor, it is true that heredity has much to do with the intellectual, business or professional success to which one arises in this world. There are little stalks of popcorn that can never be made large field corn, no matter how much fertilizer and care are bestowed. Good popcorn is not to be laughed at. The stalk that raises a good grade of popcorn does better than to try to grow taller, or raise ears of bigger corn. Where brains and moral qualities have been inherited, it is a shame and a sin not to rise to the tallest height, and raise the largest product. While there are limitations to earthly success, we can determine what our character shall be and what shall be our spiritual stature. Environments are powerful, but the human will, backed by the divine Spirit, can use friendly, and overcome unfriendly, circumstances, and lift the soul into the mountain ranges of thought, service and enjoyment, "till we all come in the . . . knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." (Eph. 4: 13.)

AFRICAN ANT HOUSES ON RAILROAD

THE ant is a tiny creature, but it has a very important place in natural history. It travels, works incessantly, builds itself in its colonies, makes a living, has milk cows at its tribes, lays up food for a rainy day, fights its enemies, makes captive slaves. Most of the work is done by the imperfect females. The white ants of Africa build precarious houses which they throw up above the ground as hills. Such ant-hills are from twenty to thirty feet in height and were used as lookout stations on the Cape-to-Cairo Railroad in Africa. These insects are very destructive, eating away the wooden erections of the railroad and sometimes the supports of houses. The industry of the ant is typified in the great African railroad, and is thus recorded in the Scriptures: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise." (Prov. 6: 6.)

to the movement of the ship: "Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth." (James 3: 4.)

Ten Million Trees Planted

THE United States Forest Service is about finishing up its huge task of planting ten million evergreen trees, many of which are to be used for Christmas decoration in the churches and homes. All over the vast areas of the national forest reserves in the Western States, mostly in mountainous regions, this work has been prosecuted for two months. Under the forest service men's care an area equaling roughly 14,000 acres has been put out this year in pines, larches, spruce, cedars, furs, and similar varieties. These young trees are

FEEDING WAR'S FLAME

BY REV. THOMAS C. HALL, D.D.
Professor of Christian Ethics, Union Theological Seminary

THE United States stands before God's judgment seat and at the parting of the ways. We have prayed for peace and preached disarmament, and now we turn as a nation from all our professions, and pour out weapons of destruction to prolong indefinitely the bloody agony across the sea. The blood of our brothers on the battlefield, who never did us any harm, we turn into golden dividends on our stocks and bonds, and when the Christian conscience revolts at the hideous mockery of all that is best in our communal life and hope, we are told it would be unneutral to exercise our sovereign right! We must not, we are taught, change our conduct during the war, although there are excellent precedents for our doing so.

For generations to come we may expect the cry of "hypocrisy" to paralyze every appeal we may make for world-peace. For peace is now almost in our sole power. Were we today to stop all exportation of food and of arms peace would come within five weeks.

Every one knows full well that only a few already dangerously rash persons are profiting by the blood-stained traffic; but the working class, whose real interests are being betrayed, and the church, whose missionary life is being sacrificed, will bear their part in the national shame and the national demoralization.

That national demoralization has already set in. Rumors and more than rumors of graft, corruption, extravagant contracts and wild stock manipulation are in the air. Peaceful factories are being changed into arsenals. Vast amounts of capital are being put into the various plants; and when this war is over, we shall have raised up a vested interest in death-dealing devices. Then an active and insistent lobby will continue to still further corrupt our press and plague our Congress in its endeavor to dispose of the products of these factories, in order to pay rich dividends on the inflated stock. We shall have the coming war with Japan or Patagonia dinged into our ears. Our fears will be capitalized, and our terrors turned into profits on rich monopolies. War may even be forced upon us to satisfy the insensate greed that now gluttons on the gains of an infamous traffic.

This whole miserable business has been exposed in England by J. T. Walton Newbold, M.A., in his The War Trust Exposed, and by Philip Snowden, M.P., before the English Parliament, as well as by Dr. Karl Liebknecht in the German Reichstag.

We may stop this before it is too late. When Mexico was in question, we placed embargoes and removed embargoes just as best seemed to serve the purpose we had in hand. Bitterly did we in days ago curse England for supplying to the South the means for carrying on a hopeless struggle. With equal bitterness will nations in Europe curse the land of the Almighty Dollar and sneer at our hollow pretenses to be Christian, remembering how for greed and gold we lengthened out of the days of this orgy of blood.

God also will not forget. We are flinging away in reckless unrighteousness a supreme opportunity. If an embargo will stop the fulfilment of contracts and inflict pecuniary injury on individuals, let the nation bear the burden. We as a people are surely in vast numbers, if not in an overwhelming majority, against the lengthening out of this insane struggle.

We have a sovereign right at any time to cut out such a cancerous growth as this wholesale manufacture and sale of arms and ammunition, and to add ourselves to the honorable roll of European neutrals who not only do not permit the sale of arms by private persons to belligerents, but actually prohibit the transportation of arms over their territory. No country in Europe permits the sale of munitions of war to belligerents. We alone, the professed apostles of peace, in hypocritical phrases about neutrality defend our sordid gain!

We have not only a sovereign right but a sovereign duty to conserve our own spiritual and national unity. Our unneutral activity, the pouring of arms and munitions of war into England, France and Russia, and the placing at their disposal of the enormous resources of our Federal Reserve Board, is sowing a hatred in the hearts of millions of our most faithful and industrious fellow citizens. It is making that unity of feel-ened since Congress adjourned, and the feeling is rising every day.

It is the sheerest cant to be praying for peace, when the voice of God says: "Why cryest thou unto me? Go forward!" We can have peace in five weeks on the basis of fair and honorable respect for national life and destiny if we really want it, and demand it as a condition of our neutrality.

To all our appeals for the acceptance of Christianity as the salvation of the world, we have had the charge flung in our faces that we sent more rum and opium than missionaries. Shall our missionaries now carry the added weight of this charge of rank hypocrisy in the matter of peace? Shall our trade in gunpowder furnish another sneer?

What hope can we cherish as a nation to take an honorable part in the final settlement of peace after we have planted a deep and well-founded distrust of the sincerity of our professions in the hearts of other nations. They will justly laugh at our pretensions to be impartial, and will rightly scoff at any professions of being disinterested. Have not Americans, they will say, piled up fortunes out of our agony, and lined their pockets while smugly canting about "putting down militarism"? The horrors of war we coin into our dollars, and prate about God and peace and brotherhood!

These contracts to supply the ma-can die hardest? Is this real protection for Serbia, Belgium, Poland, France? Must this war go on until on the one hand the vitality of France is utterly sapped and Belgium is a charred fragment in the ruinous wake of a victorious advance by the hordes upon Germany, a process that must take at least two years; or on the other hand until Germany has demonstrated her power to hold indefinitely territory she professedly does not want? No military expert expects the reconquest of northern France and Belgium under two years, and by an army maintained at less than three to four millions. What will be left of poor France and Belgium at the end of those two years?

We are told all can buy, as though trading in death were justified because in theory we reserve the right to assist in murder on both sides. For it is little less than murder when private persons take part in war; yet here a large and tragic scale private persons apart from government, and without shadow of excuse that they are defending their country at the behest of their community, are taking part in war. We pretended to be dreadfully shocked because a war correspondent fired on the trenches in the darkness of the night at men that were not his foes the foes of his country. But here we have our fellow citizens firing millions of bullets at our actual friends in broad daylight from behind the wardice of the counting-room!

The testimony is borne on all lands that life in France and Germany being spiritualized and cleansed of each dross by the awful visitation of the war. We may awaken to find the use of the war has left us demoralized, materialized and degraded by our senseless and greedy participation in this sordid trade. The mockery of our peace committees and our peace congresses, our professions and our prayers will haunt our memories, and sicken in the future our protesting tongues. We are raising up a cynical crew of men interested in promoting national suspicion, and trading on fears they themselves nourish and provoke. If we go on exporting munitions of war, we all emerge from the smoke of Europe's battlefield soiled, stained, divided and groaning under the curses of those who will attribute to us the lengthening of the dreary tragedy. Our whole national life will suffer, our ideals become less real, our profession will grow hollow and false. We shall have wounded hosts among the best religious elements in our community and have barred the doors of our churches to untold thousands to whom our Christian professions will henceforth be but a signal for scoffing jest and ironical mockery.

Is this worth while? Can we not be brave and adventurous in our fight for freedom from the blood-stains of this internecine struggle? Shall we not storm the President of these United States with our prayers and petitions until an embargo on this hideous business compels the warring nations to lay down the sword, and seek in honorable compromise a basis for a permanent peace?

CRATED WAR MATERIAL ON WHITE STAR LINER CYRMIC
Several hundred passengers, including Americans, sailed on this ship, May 14, for Liverpool.

ing so essential to sound national life almost impossible. The seed thus sown is bound to have bitter fruit in the near future. It is certain to produce baleful political separations and unfortunate nationalistic activities; it will lay the foundations for passions and jealousies that will inhibit wholesome common social activity on the part of right-minded men of all nationalities for a long time to come.

If President Wilson fears to take upon himself the power of embargo let him call Congress again together and throw the responsibility upon them. The agitation has enormously quick-terials of war are pacts with hell, and a national life can survive almost any sin save such terrible pacts and such hypocrisy.

The most this trade can do is to prolong the war until exhaustion overtakes all parties, an exhaustion that will leave France bled white, and Belgium gasping, and Poland utterly ruined and crushed. Russia, England and Germany cannot be completely crushed and exhausted. Their resources are perhaps too great. Are we, however, willing to stand by and see the issues of this war staked on the question as to which of the lesser lands

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

Copyright, Harris & Lowry

PRESIDENT WILSON (AT CENTER), SECRETARY BRYAN (AT HIS RIGHT), WITH DELEGATES AND THEIR WIVES, AT WHITE HOUSE RECEPTION TO THE PAN-AMERICAN CONFERENCE IN WASHINGTON

THE LUSITANIA NOTES. The President is proceeding with great deliberation in regard to Germany's reply (received May 21) to his note of May 15 on the Lusitania and other submarine attacks. On June 3 he received Ambassador von Bernstorff, who is reported to have presented that he has been unable to have sufficiently uninterrupted communication with his government to make clear to Germany the actual state of mind of the American administration, and at the ambassador's request arrangements were made for him to use the facilities of our State Department to transmit a note in the diplomatic cipher code of the United States, and also to dispatch a personal emissary to Berlin, in a safe conduct arranged by our government, to lay before the German Government the facts as the ambassador understands them. Independently of the German ambassador's activity, it is understood that the President will reply to the German note, declining to discuss the points raised until Germany gives assurance that the lives of innocent non-combatant, armed unarmed merchantmen, of either neutral or belligerent countries, shall be respected, and that such vessels shall be attacked or treated in any way without warning and ample opportunity being given her passengers and crew to escape in safety. (If the President's reply is given out before the issue of the Christian Herald goes to press, it will be found on page 649.)

THIS WOULD HAVE HELPED OUR RELIEF FUND! What is said to be the largest check ever given in America was drawn by the bankers Kuhn, Loeb & Co. June 1 for $65,000,000 in payment for gold mortgage bonds purchased from the Pennsylvania Railroad for delivery to bankers and others who had underwritten the deal as a syndicate and sold the bonds by public subscription, as is the usual course.

OUR CHINESE GUESTS. The delegation of Chinese men from the republic of China, whose intended visit to America to study our industrial institutions was announced in advance in the Christian Herald, is now in this country and has received marked attention in several cities. The Honorary Commercial Commission, as the delegation is called, includes twenty-one Chinese and seven Americans, and most of the Chinese are young men and wear American dress, only two of them being unable to speak English. The chairman, Cheng Hsuan Chang, is an aged man, reputed the wealthiest and most influential of Chinese business men, and worth over $100,000,000. The visitors were entertained by business men of New York City at luncheon, twelve hundred guests being present. Their two months' tour of the United States is expected to greatly stimulate business between the two countries.

ALL OVER NOW BUT THE SHOUTING. The smallest republic in the world, the tiny independent state of San Marino, declared the war, having issued a declaration against Austria and placed its entire army of 39 officers and 950 men in the field. San Marino is a territory thirty-eight miles square with a population of 11,000. It lies south of Rimini, near the Adriatic coast.

EX-PRESIDENT TAFT ON NATIONAL DEFENSE. In an article published by a contemporary, William Howard Taft sets out that while we have the finest military and naval forces in the world, we fail to make use of them in any official capacity; that political parties are responsible for a great waste of public money that could be devoted to the improvement of our defensive naval system; that the efficiency of our land fortifications is underestimated, being "as extensive and as defensive as a coast fortification in the world." He asserts that there is not the slightest resemblance between the Belgian fortifications at Liege and elsewhere and our coast fortifications and that the Dardanelles forts are not as strong as ours, although they have withstood bombardment by the most powerful fleet ever got together. He insists that in time of war we should have an army of 500,000 men, and our navy should be brought up in numbers and efficiency to the point recommended by the Naval Board, and strengthening in its personnel. Further, he favors a National League of Peace, as such an organization would have the moral effect of restraining the disposition to go to war; and requests that no more President is now in the White House (Of whom was he talking?)

WAR TAX ON CANADIAN MAIL. Letters mailed in Canada at the two-cent-advance rate, postcards, and postal notes issued in Canada, now bear a war tax imposed by the 125,000 men. If the Mexican situation is acute, I do not expect opposition."

ENGLAND'S WAR BABY PROBLEM. England is preparing to deal with the problem of "war babies," born out of wedlock in the vicinity of the great camps. It is estimated that there are 35,000 of these unfortunate waifs who will have to be provided for by the government. A fund has been started for the establishment of a "war babies' home" on a large scale.

AN INTERNATIONAL INVENTORY. The important Pan-American Financial Conference held in Washington is expected to result in many reciprocal business undertakings because of the information about each other's industrial needs acquired by the delegates. Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury states that he will appoint eighteen committees of American business men to follow up what was begun at the conference. The delegates left Washington to make a tour of inspection of the principal industrial plants of this country.

SECRETARY BRYAN AND CHINESE COMMISSION WHICH IS STUDYING AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS

Canadian Government, and United States postmasters have been notified to refuse mail matter tendered in this country for the obvious purpose of evading the tax.

CONGRESS MAY CONVENE IN SPECIAL SESSION. There is increasing talk of a special session of Congress being called at an early date. Senator B. F. Chamberlain, chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, speaking at Portland, Ore., June 2, said: "I am convinced that a special session will be called within a few months. I don't believe the Mexican situation will hurry the call, however. When the special session is called, I shall propose legislation to give us a standing army of STEEL TRUST GOOD IN SPITE OF ITSELF. The suit filed by the United States Government in October, 1911, to dissolve the United States Steel Corporation for violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, hearings upon which began in May, 1912, and arguments in October, 1914, was decided in favor of the corporation June 3 by the United States District Court for New Jersey in a unanimous refusal of the petition. The government had based its action on the notorious Gary dinners, which were in substance committee meetings of 95 per cent. of the steel industry of the country for the purpose of fixing prices to control the trade; the acquisition by the United States Steel of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, during the financial panic of 1907, in which ex-President Roosevelt figured; and allegations of monopolistic control of ore resources and undue restriction and obstruction of the trade. The court's opinion, covering 150 pages, holds that the Gary dinners were illegal, but had ceased before the filing of the suit; that the acquisition of the Tennessee corporation and other similar purchases before that were legitimate; that as 80 per cent. of the steel of this country is produced by independent competitors of United Steel, and the business of eight of those competitors had increased from 63 per cent. in the case of Lackawanna Steel to 3779 per cent. in the case of Bethlehem Steel, as against between 40 per cent. and 50 per cent. increase in the business of United Steel, undue restriction of competition and obstruction of trade was not shown; and, quoting the Supreme Court's definition of unlawful restraints and monopolies contemplated by the Sherman Act, namely "such combinations as by reason of intent or the inherent nature of the contemplated acts, prejudice the public interests by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade," finds that the original intent and inherent nature of the United States Steel Corporation was to monopolize and unduly restrain trade, but that forces beyond its control in the trade itself frustrated both the intent and natural tendency of the trust, and consequently the Steel Corporation neither attempted nor was able to monopolize the business. An appeal by the government is possible, but its probability is not so sure. The effort of the government in its suit to show that Andrew Carnegie was a party to the "unlawful combination" also failed, in the opinion of the court.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The officers are: Otto Kuening, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE: $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE: Four copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE: It takes at least two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION: The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS: It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

HUDSON

$1350

F. O. B.
DETROIT

"The Road Cruiser"

Ready—the 1916 Hudson

Countless tongues in the past few months have voiced this question everywhere:

What more can HUDSON do?

Now the answer is ready. And we believe this answer will amaze the most zealous HUDSON admirers.

Another $200 Reduction

First, we've reduced the price by another $200. That makes $400—23 per cent since this new type first came out.

To grasp that, remember former conditions. Only a little time ago, \$4000 was a low price for a Six. The cheapest Six cost $2\frac{1}{2}$ times HUDSON'S price today.

We brought out this new-type HUDSON, late in 1913, at a $1750 price. It startled Motordom. Some of the oldest makers in the business told us the price was impossible.

But we gave it to you on a car of HUDSON standard—on a Howard E. Coffin design. And men bought that car in such numbers that next season we were able to quote $1550 on it.

At that new price, men bought 10,000 of the 15 model. They forced us to treble our output, to build enormous factory additions. And now we are able to quote you $1350 on this famous Six.

We Refined the Six

Old-time Sixes were heavier by some 1500 pounds. This vast weight reduction required better materials and better designing. It required higher quality, greater refinement. A thousand crudities had to be eliminated.

No iota of strength was sacrificed. Seating capacity was not reduced.

Four Innovations

- 1—Yacht-Line Body
- 2—Ever-Lustre Finish
- 3—Roomier Tonneau
- 4—$200 Reduction

In beauty, luxury and equipment we gave you the best of the times. Yet, while adding class and quality, we gave you a moderate price. And, by cutting out excess, crudity and waste, we cut tire cost and fuel cost in two.

Now this model, whose price suggested low grade, has become the modern ideal of a high-grade car.

New, Graceful Yacht Lines Now The New HUDSON Ever-Lustre Finish A Roomier Tonneau—A $1350 Price

Another attraction in this new-year model is a new conception of artistic beauty.

We have been growing toward this body type for years. First came fore doors, then the straight-line body, then the streamliner. Now, as a climax, come lines so graceful and sweeping that we call this the Yacht-Line Body. Every appearance suggests "The Road Cruiser," which its designers call it. Even the door tops are upholstered to secure unbroken lines. Now a leather binding protects the whole top of the body.

The tonneau is extra-wide and roomy. The rear seat has been widened, the sides and back are heightened. With seven in the car, no person is crowded. And two of the seats disappear when not wanted, doubling the tonneau room.

As a climax in luxury, we this year use enameled leather upholstery over deep curled hair. Never before has leather of this grade been used in a car at this price.

The Ever-Lustre Finish

And now comes what you have wanted most—finish that stays new.

We've attained in this chassis a car that stays new. After years of use, with proper care, it should run like the day you built it. The car grew old in looks alone, as the usual finish will.

The Roadster

Now we have a finish of wondrous lustre which will keep its newness. We have built in our factory enormous ovens, large enough for hundreds of bodies.

The result is a baked-on finish, brilliant, deep and enduring. It resists weather and washing, rubbing and mud. We call it the Ever-Lustre finish, found only on this new HUDSON car.

Experienced motorists, who have seen cars quickly grow dull and shabby, will consider this a great innovation.

Most HUDSON Dealers Now Have This New Model

Note that all these new attractions come to you in a $1350 HUDSON.

You used to look to high-priced cars for all the major advances. Now you get them all—all that seem worth having—in a $1350 Six.

This remarkable model, in the first place, came as the apostle of lightness. Then, after a year of refinement, it revealed new standards in beauty and equipment. This year it brings you the Yacht-Line Body, and this finish of lasting lustre.

The Cabriolet

HUDSON typifies in the highest degree the modern ideals of good taste.

That's the secret of its place and class. In all things we are coming to simplicity, away from excess, waste and show. And HUDSON typifies that trend.

You want quality, elegance, refinement just as much as ever. Makers who forget that sadly miss their cue. But you don't want over-weight, over-size, over-tax of any kind simply for impression.

Men who subscribe to that creed are driving 15,000 of these new-type HUDSONS now. And the vogue is just beginning. This year's advances, we believe, will attract 20,000 more.

See this car early if you want early delivery. Every new HUDSON model brings an overdemand. Last July found us 4000 cars behind orders. This 1916 model has no real competition. It is sure to oversell.

7-Passenger Phaeton or 3-Passenger Roadster, $1350, f. o. b. Detroit. Also a New Cabriolet, $1650 f. o. b. Detroit.

Ask your dealer to explain the far-reaching HUDSON service. This will show you one reason why HUDSON cars give such boundless satisfaction.

HUDSON MOTOR CAR COMPANY, Detroit, Michigan

Speed Tested Spark Plugs

Reliability—
We make sure that you get it in Champions.
We test them long and often in the motors they must serve.
We subject them to every conceivable speed and load strain.
That's how we get the invariable dependability which you appreciate in Champions.

are absolutely dependable in Overland motors.
The plugs we have developed for Ford-Studebaker—Maxwell—Metz and over 60 other cars are always installed in the new cars at the factories.
Their makers know and want you to have Champion Reliability.
Over 75% of all American made automobile, stationary and traction gasoline engines are originally equipped with Champion Spark Plugs.
When you replace your plugs insist on Champions—for reliability. Your dealer will supply you or write direct to us.

Champion Spark Plug Co.

305 Avondale Avenue, Toledo, Ohio
DEALERS:—Ask your jobber's salesman about our 1915 Pilot Shoring Contract or write to us about it at once.

"A HOUSE IS ONLY AS GOOD AS ITS ROOF"

The statement above is true, not alone from the standpoint of weather protection, but also from the standpoint of architectural appearance. If the roof does not harmonize with and add to the appearance of a house, it distinctly detracts from it. Roof of house illustrated is of best brown.

"WEATHERBEST" Stained Shingles
curved on the edges and bent over the eaves, giving a beautiful thatched effect and protecting the hard, plain, flat roof produced by straight lines. (Inset illustration shows effect clearly.)
Durability of this roof is as great as its artistic value, because "Weatherbest" Shingles are made only from selected Red and White Cedarstock, stained under a scientific process in our own factories with an extremely durable wood preserving stain.
You can get "Weatherbest" Shingles in any desired shade or size. They come to the job ready for use. Require no brush coat.
ASK US FOR A FREE SAMPLE PACKET of "Weatherbest" Stained Shingles, showing the natural wood in a great variety of colors. We will also gladly advise you as to quantity of shingles necessary and suggest color combinations if you give us size of house and character of construction. Ask for free samples and full information.
TRANSFER STAINED SHINGLE CO.
187 Main Street, North Tonawanda, N. Y.
Makers also of the superior
"TRANSFER BRAND" RED CEDAR SHINGLES.
Demanded by knowing builders, sold by best dealers everywhere.

LADIES! Ease Your Feet

Send for free catalog telling all about our Neat, Noiseless, Flexible, Comfortable, unbreakable Vici Kid O'Sullivanized PILLOW SHOE. New shoes, easy as air, and breaking in required. Fit and feel like a kid glove. O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on all styles.
$3.00 Postpaid
PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept. 3
184 Summer St., BOSTON, MASS.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen patents. Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I get patent on no fee. Manufacturing facilities.
RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

AMERICANIZATION DAY

A NEW MOVEMENT AND A PRIZE FOR IDEAS

A NEW movement is on foot to have in every city of the country on the Fourth of July a municipal celebration in honor of newly naturalized citizens, declarants, and resident aliens. In a year like this—the old flamboyant Fourth of July oratory would seem flat indeed. Living, as we now are, in a world shaken by "wars and rumors of wars," we are all keenly alive to the blessings of peace. And the Fourth of July rally around the Stars and Stripes will be no empty ceremonial. It is possible that our Fourth of July sentiment had become a bit conventionalized as a result of long years of peace and prosperity. In 1915 we should have on that day a passionate appreciation of the blessings of peace, and of the real meaning of American citizenship. The many races in America must as one nation be united in a consciousness of American nationality. The only "wars and rumors of wars" here should be the war against the barriers that divide the foreign-born citizens of America from their native-born fellows. If American ideals and purposes and opportunities are to be fully realized, these barriers, from whatever cause they arise, must be swept aside.

And so the mayors of American cities have received from Frederic C. Howe, commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island, the following letter suggesting the appointment in every city of a mayor's committee to arrange for making the Fourth of July a real Americanization Day for their community:

May 22, 1915.

You may be interested in learning of a most significant civic demonstration that may be of value to you in connection with Fourth of July celebration in your city. I refer to the "Citizenship Receptions," or "New Voters' Day," which the cities of Philadelphia, Cleveland, Baltimore and Los Angeles have recently held as a final step in the naturalization of foreign-born aliens.

Each year large numbers of aliens are admitted to citizenship. The procedure is for the most part informal, and is attended with no recognition on the part of the community of its significance to America and to the alien. The purpose of the reception is to give dignity to the ceremony and at the same time impress its meaning upon all citizens.

The significance of such a reception given on the Fourth of July is obvious. Should they become national in scope, they should have great civic value. I am sending you this information with the thought that you may desire to appoint a mayor's committee for the organization of such a reception in your city in connection with whatever exercise may be held on the Fourth of July.

There will be a "National Americanization Day Committee," which will furnish information and answer inquiries. I would appreciate having from you an expression of your ideas on this subject.

The Rooster

The Rooster crows and goodness knows I'm sleepy as can be!
I wonder why he has to cry
When it's too dark to see?
In father's tones, "You lazy bones!"
Comes shouting from the lawn,
I rise and sigh and wonder why
The Rooster crows at dawn?

I'll tell you true what I will do,
When I have grown a man—
I'll stay in bed a sleepy head,
As often as I can—
And when the sun has just begun
To cross my bedroom door;
I'll hear the Rooster crow, and Oh!
I'll let him crow some more.

Margaret C. Sangster, Jr.

Seventy-three cities have thus far responded, warmly adopting the idea. Some of these have already begun preparations. The great new stadium of City College, New York, will be utilized for the celebration in that city.

In further support of the movement, the following letter has been addressed to all foreign-born citizens in America through the columns of hundred of foreign language papers:

To Foreign-Born Citizens of America.

In 1776 the Declaration of Independence set this country free and made it a haven for the oppressed of many lands who have come seeking opportunity. In 1915 the Declaration of Independence is to be interpreted as a new Declaration of Citizenship.

We Americans and coming Americans, safe in the peace, prosperity and strength of our country, seek some way in which to express as one people our appreciation of these blessings. It is therefore proposed that on the Fourth of July the American-born citizens hold receptions with appropriate exercises in honor of our naturalized fellow citizens and declarants. On this occasion, we will all seek together to make this July the Fourth a day of inspiration and fulfillment to all citizens alike.

In order to do this, we need your advice, your active co-operation, and I shall be glad to receive your suggestions for the National Americanization Day Committee.

[Signed] FRANCES A. KER,
Editor, Immigrants in America Year.

TO THE native-born American, the greatest service the Americanization Day movement can render will be to define the real meaning and essence of American citizenship. What does it mean? In eight states of the country declarants, that is, immigrants, have taken out their first citizenship papers, which they can get immediately upon arrival in this country, can vote at all elections. On the other hand, in many states they are deprived of the simplest rights; in one Western state for instance, an immigrant, though not a citizen, may have been a law-abiding resident of the state for ten or twenty years and not be a barber. Only this winter New Jersey passed a law that an unnaturalized resident may not use, carry, or own a shotgun. In the Pennsylvania legislature a similar bill was passed forbidding such an immigrant to fish.

As a nation therefore we have not officially defined American citizenship. The Immigrant in America Review is therefore offering a first prize of $250 and a second prize of $100 for the best two papers on "What America Means and How to Americanize the Immigrant," accompanied by a plan for a municipal Fourth of July citizenship celebration that will make our national anniversary a memorable Americanization Day. Papers must be sent on or before June 1 to the Immigrants in America Review, 95 Madison Avenue, New York.

WHAT WE LOVE IS OURS

THIS is a world of beauty, not to those who have money to pluck and wear its roses, but to those who have souls sensitized to the sweet odors.

With love of the beautiful in man and in nature none can be poor; without it none can be rich.

Happiness is not carried in the pocket, but in the heart.

THE millionaire may make his thousand-acre park in the rich valley and by a fiction of the law call it his own; but it all is the front yard of the poorest squatter in the rudest cabin on the rugged hillside.

The one who has paid for it owns it? No! It is most truly possessed by the one who most enjoys it.

What can a beautiful park mean to a man whose heart is smothered in a money-bag?

And to him who loves the trees, the brooks, the hills, the sky, what matters it who holds the title? Why, Adam and Eve never had a deed to Eden!

Descendants of theirs today hold deeds, but not possession. It was not the land itself which was taken away, but the power to enjoy it.

WHAT we love is ours—and nothing more.

We can truly possess nothing that we sacrifice to our own selfish purposes. It is only to the man who is poor that wealth glows like a bright star in the night. The law of recompense always is in force. It is only when darkness shrouds the world that we can see the light of a million others.

Did we not learn in babyhood that the bubble is brilliant only until we grasp it?

The gems in the fine lady's hair and at her throat sparkle not for her eyes, but for the eyes of others. She owns only some costly stones—never the priceless light that dances in them. This priceless treasure is only for them who love it, and for them it is scattered broadcast at their very feet in countless myriads of frost flakes on the brown winter earth and in the morning dewdrops in the sunnier grass.

WHAT we love we own—and ere our real possessions end. I would love be greedy and lust, then these stinging serpents of vice will creep into the heart and make it their abode. But to the soul where love is put in the world that is good and flies straight and swift as homing doves.

Yes, what we love is ours, and in the same degree as we love, we may own, if we will.

CHARLES GRANT MILLER

JOHN HUSS, MARTYR

Continued from page 621

and on his arrival, grew furious and demanded that Hus be at once set at liberty. Several times he left a meeting of the cardinals in great anger, and threatened to leave the council altogether unless his safe conduct granted Hus were respected. But the papal party told him if he left they would all leave, and the council would come to nought. Rather than this he finally yielded up Hus to the tender mercies of his enemies, and suffered the pangs of an accusing conscience to the end of his life for having broken faith to Hus. Events now moved very rapidly. The charges against Hus had all been prepared by a commission consisting of Bishop Johann von Leitomischl, Stephan von Petz, Hus's former friend, and Michael von Deutschbrod. The clergy of Prague had raised a collection to delay the expenses of the prosecution. Hus had become so ill in his filthy prison that it was necessary to assign him better quarters. The Pope sent his physician to minister to him, not from fear that Hus might die before his trial than from sympathy. He was denied legal assistance, for it was held that no one dared plead the cause of a heretic. "Well, then," replied Hus on being told this news, "Jesus Christ shall be my advocate, before whose tribunal I shall one day appear. I have committed my cause to him, even as he committed his to God the Father."

Forty-two errors had been collected from the writings of Hus. In his defense Hus showed that every one of the statements cited against him had been garbled, torn from its connection, mutilated, and perverted by words that had been inserted and that he had never used. It was of no avail; the council held that Hus was essentially a Wyclifite.

Condemned by the Council

FINAL decision in the trial of Hus was retarded by the main business of the convention—the papal issue. Hus employed this time in writing letters to his friends in Prague, in studying, and in writing out his defense. For Pope John the situation at Constanze was becoming precarious. His former life as a pirate, his violence at the papal election at Bononia, his grossly immoral life, were being investigated. Toward the end of March, 1415, he fled from Constanze, disguised as a post rider, and sought refuge with Duke Frederick at Schaffhausen. As a heretic Hus became a prisoner of the church, and the flight of the Pope had this effect on the fortunes of Hus, that he was declared to be under the direct authority of the emperor. But the emperor, desiring to be rid of a bad business, gave the keys of Hus's prison, which had been handed over to him, to the Bishop of Constanze, who had Hus transferred to Castle Gottlieben, where he was confined in an extremely narrow cell in a tower. To this castle the fugitive Pope John, who had been arrested in the meantime, was also brought. On June 5 Hus was brought to Constanze and jailed in the city tower. His final hearing before the council began the same day. He denied and disproved the charges brought against him, and refused to recant. This meeting was held in the absence of the emperor and was very noisy and full of malice and violence to Hus. Two days later a more respectable treatment was accorded Hus in the presence of the emperor, whom Hus made blush with shame when in his discourse he referred to the fact that he had come to Constanze under the emperor's safe conduct. The last hearing which Hus had before the council occurred on June 8. He was told that he would be permitted to escape with a mild punishment and return to Prague if he would recant. He refused again, and was now granted thirty days of grace, during which time many attempts were made, some by well-meaning men, to change his mind. He adhered to his position that he could not retract or recant the truth. On July 6, 1415, he was brought into the cathedral. The Bishop of Lodi mounted the pulpit and harangued the council with a sermon on the words in Rom. 6: 6: "that the body of sin may cease." He called upon the emperor to destroy the heretic Hus. Hus fell upon his knees and commended his soul to Jesus. The accusation against him, together with the sentence of death, was now read to him, and then they proceeded to unfrock him, according to the prescribed ritual. He was then handed over "to the arm of the government."

Martyred at the Stake

THE emperor then charged the Palatine Ludwig with the execution, and he in turn summoned the marshal of Constanze, who took Hus to a place popularly known as "Little Bruehl," and situated between the city wall and the foss. Here a pyre was built and Hus was fastened to the stake with six wet cords and a rusty chain that was put about his neck. When it was discovered that he was facing east, they reversed his stake, as no heretic must be permitted to look into the rising sun. When the torch was applied to the pyre, Hus began to sing: "O Christ, thou Son of God, have mercy on me." When he wanted to repeat this well-known penitential chant, the wind blew the flames into his face, and he expired without a groan. When the wood had all been consumed, the executioners pushed the charred remains into the ashes. The heart they fastened on a spear and held it into the fire until it was burnt. The ashes were then scattered into the Rhine, to prevent people from worshipping the remains of Hus.

Thus died a confessor of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. His tragic end was the beginning of that tremendous conflict which is still going on, the conflict of evangelical truth with papal Rome. Hus did not die in vain. Luther has rightly said that the Spirit of the Lord scattered the ashes of martyrs through the whole world, and the martyred confessor continues speaking to all lovers of the truth more eloquently by his death than he ever did while he was living.

AMONG THE WORKERS

THE ENERGETIC city missionary at Mason City, Iowa, Rev. Eli Austin, was recently delighted by the gift of a large number of Testaments from Miss Elizabeth Merriam, of Framingham, Mass., and reports many evidences of the good results achieved by keeping continually at Gospel work in the missions and jails of the city. He reports the conversion of several prisoners.

UNIQUE PHILANTHROPIC work had been started in Auburn, N. Y., by a public-spirited Christian citizen, Mr. W. M. Brinkerhoff. He discovered that about 26 per cent. of the pupils in the public schools, belonging to the poorer families, had practically nothing to read in their homes. He formed a boys' and girls' organization for distributing good literature wherever it was needed, and over one thousand school children have been registered as members. School teachers, Y. M. C. A. and church workers are actively aiding the movement. Magazines and other reading matter are placed in special boxes in the schoolyards and any child or family in the city can obtain a supply by making proper application.

—REV. CHARLES O. SELEMAN, pastor of Trinity Auditorium M. E. Church, South, in Los Angeles, Calif., writes to correct the statement in a recent issue of the Christian Herald in which it was stated that the Auditorium seated 3,000 and was used for grand opera, moving pictures, lectures, etc., besides religious gatherings. Pastor Seleman stated that "the traditions and customs of the Methodist Church are such that it would not be consistent for us to furnish a home for grand opera or any other operative performances. No grand opera has ever been given in our auditorium." We take pleasure in giving his statement of the matter publicity in the Christian Herald.

The Story of the Little Red Bulldog

THIS BOOK FREE To Automobile Owners

Write your name, address and name of your car on the coupon and mail today for a copy of the Official Book of the Motorists Security Alliance. Join hands with the big National Organization whose protection and service is bettering conditions for motor owners everywhere. Learn how the "Little Red Bull-Dog" and protection plate of the M. S. A. on your car will benefit you—how it protects you from theft, extortion and fraud—how it comes to your aid in emergencies—how it works for your interests in pushing the good work for good roads, fair legislation, etc.

MOTORISTS Security Alliance

This Powerful National Organization looks after the motor owner's interests in a multitude of ways—keeps you out of legal difficulties—frees you from the extortion of supplymen, garages and hotels—aims you in all emergencies.

SOME OF THE BENEFITS

Emergency Certificate of Identification for Credit.
Best Legal Service Obtainable.
Best Medical Attendance.
25% Saving on Insurance Covering Automobile Risks.

Big Saving in Supplies.
Protection Plates for Your Car.
Official Routes and Touring Suggestions.
Prevention of Extortion.

Local Agents Wanted

We have a very attractive proposition for men qualified to represent M.S.A. If interested ask for details.

Send Coupon for FREE BOOK

J. LESTER WILLIAMS, Secretary
MOTORISTS SECURITY ALLIANCE
National Headquarters, Dept. 48,
327 S. La Salle Street,
CHICAGO

MOTORISTS: TEAR OFF AND MAIL FOR FREE BOOK
J. Lester Williams, Sec'y Motorists Security Alliance,
Dept. 48, 327 So. La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.
Name and the official M. S. A. Book. I want a

Firestone

NON-SKID TIRES

Non-Skid

The Mark of Perfect Quality

FIRESTONE Tires have never been brought down to a price: the price is brought down by the law of economical production.

Specialized efficiency in making and selling, with volume of output—this gives you Firestone extras with comparatively no extra charge.

Ask your dealer for a "section-view"—actual proof of extra built-in fabric and rubber. Profit by the proof—demand Firestones and enjoy—

Most Miles per Dollar

Firestone Tire & Rubber Company
Akron, Ohio

Branches and Dealers Everywhere
"America's Largest Exclusive Tire and Rim Makers"

	Case Round Tread	Case Non-Skid	Grey Tube	Red Tube
30x3 1/2	$ 9.40	$10.55	$2.20	$2.50
30x3 3/4	11.90	13.35	2.60	2.90
32x3 1/2	13.75	15.40	2.70	3.05
34x4	19.90	22.30	3.90	4.40
34x4 1/2	27.30	30.35	4.80	5.40
36x4 1/2	28.70	32.15	5.00	5.65
37x5	35.55	39.80	5.95	6.70
38x5 1/2	45.00	51.50	6.75	7.55

THE PRAYER LEAGUE

A NUMBER of letters bring the good news that some for whose mental restoration prayers have been made are improving or have been entirely restored. A Friend from Iowa writes: "I feel so grateful to our loving heavenly Father for the restoration of my dear young friend — to his right mind." A New York State friend writes to tell of the recovery of a friend for whom prayers have been made. She had been placed in the state hospital and physicians had pronounced her case hopeless. Her friend writes: "Still I felt that God, who is able to heal all our diseases, would restore her, and I continued to pray earnestly, and asked the prayers of the League in her behalf. Soon after she began to improve, and after five months in the hospital I was permitted, through God's goodness, to bring her home, her own bright self again. I feel fully convinced that her recovery was a direct answer to prayer." A Friend from Missouri writes: "I wish to acknowledge that my mental and physical health are much improved since I wrote the League almost a year ago."

News of gracious revivals continue to reach us. Another reader sends thanks to God for answering prayers for a revival at Hagerstown, Md., where, during the recent Biederwolf campaign, about two thousand professed conversion. Mrs. J. G. S. writes from Griggsville, Ill., to thank God for the revival in the Baptist Church, "which was the best we have had for a long time."

Mrs. J. W. A. writes from Alice, Texas, to acknowledge answer to prayer for the recovery of a friend who was in a dying condition. Mrs. William B. writes from an Iowa town: "Some time ago I sent a request for prayer, that two burdens might be lifted. I thank God that he has lifted them, and am so happy to tell it." Mrs. A. B. B. writes: "I asked your prayers for my husband, and thank the dear Lord that he has saved him."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

Reader, Darlington, Mo. (for the securing of positions for two men who have families to support); C. N. H., Toronto, Canada; E. Y., Elmira, N. Y.; Mrs. L. C., Stiles, Texas; A. Subscriber, South Carolina; Mrs. W. J. C., Winnebago, Minn.; C. G., Savona, N. Y.; Mrs. M. W. W., Fayetteville, Tenn.; Mrs. C. S., Columbus, Ohio (for the recovery of her daughter's health and husband's); E. C. F., Oneonta, N. Y.; M. E. D., Greensboro, N. C.; Mrs. A. C. R., Beverly, Mass.; Mrs. E. W. G., Pikesville, Md.; A. Reader, Calif.; Mrs. J. B., Frewsburg, N. Y.; Mrs. S. A. B., Mount Forest, Ontario; Mrs. L. I. S., Trenton, N. J.; Reader, Pittsburg, Pa. (for help in financial need).

prayer for the mental restoration of an aged lady, who is now a resident in a home for aged women, but in danger of being compelled to leave because of her mental condition.

Friends continue to suggest prayer for a world-wide revival. One friend, reviewing some conditions in America, urges the prayer that God will make this "in some true sense of the term a Christian nation."

A noble letter comes from a friend in the South, who writes to tell of a long career of yielding to temptations, to business dishonesty and her wrongs, but saying that about a year ago he awakened to the terrible guilt of his deeds and has been making the most earnest efforts to set everything straight. There were some matters, however, so intricate and numerous as to be almost impossible of rectifying. He asks prayer for soul-peace, and especially that his wife will sympathize with him in his efforts to right the wrongs of the past.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at Swanton, Vt.; Pomona, Calif.; Dunbar, Iowa; San Francisco, Calif. (for greater spiritual power); Toledo, Ohio; Norwich, Conn. (for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the weekly meetings of the young people); Keswick, Wash. (that souls may be saved the revival that has just started); Unityville, Pa.; Garrison, Kan. (that members of a day school may be brought to Christ); Crane, Miss. (in the Baptist Church). Prayers are asked that Rock Island, Ill., may become a clean temperance city. Prayers are asked for a church in Brant, N. Y., that people may think more about the religious side of life; also at a Christian Endeavor Society in Hibbing, Minn., may not disband. Prayers are also asked for the work among the Mexican people in Riverside, Calif., that the Mexicans may learn the truth as it is in Christ and not remain persecutors; also that a minister may be sent to Norwalk, Wis., and that many there may be converted.

TWENTY-ONE friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening of relatives, friends or ourselves.

Twenty-one friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for relatives, friends or ourselves.

Sixteen readers ask prayer that friends or relatives may be saved from the liquor habit.

Fifty-one friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

One hundred readers ask prayer for the conversion of relatives or friends; another that a family may be fully saved; another that brothers and seven physicians may be saved.

Thirteen friends ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for friends or relatives.

Eighty-five friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including one that a young woman going to a sanitarium for lung trouble, may be cured. Sixty-six friends ask prayer for the healing of themselves, including two that the use of their limbs may be regained; and another that the use of limbs and hands be restored.

Fourteen friends ask prayer for the healing of hearing for themselves or other friends.

Fifty-nine friends ask help for guidance in financial affairs.

Sixty friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs, including six who ask that burdens might be lifted or removed. Two ask prayer that they may be reconciled to their husbands; two request that they may be reconciled to friends. Another requests prayer for reconciliation with brother and sister and relatives; another that daughter and her husband may be reconciled and other that sisters may be reconciled to each other.

Read It for Twenty-Six Years

I could not live without the Christian Herald. I would live myself on bread and water. It comes first, next to my Bible. I have every week's paper since 1889.

MRS. J. C. Waxahachie, Texas.

Send for This Interesting and Instructive

Book on TRAVEL

Just Off
the Press

It Is Entirely
FREE

We expect a greater demand for this 40 page, illustrated booklet on travel, than has ever been known for any other ever published for free distribution.

Mother's Travel Book tells you what to take on a journey, and what to take new to pack, and how to best care for your baggage and gives exact information as to crossing facilities, weights, etc., in foreign countries, rates of money value, distances from New York, and where, who and how to get to "tip." In fact the booklet will be found a valuable to all who travel or are contemplating taking a trip in this country or abroad.

Published by the proprietors of the famous Mother's Sickness Remedy as a practical hand book for travelers.

"This edition is limited, so we suggest that you send your name and address at once, and receive a copy. A postage will bring it." Please address our Detroit office for the booklet.

MOTHERSILL REMEDY CO.
489 Henry Smith Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

Also at 19 St. Bride Street, London, England

Branches in Montreal, New York, Paris, Milan and Hamburg

BUY FROM THE MILL

Save Money On Hosiery

Tell us the size of your shoe, the color hose you prefer, and mention names of several friends who might be interested, and we will send you on approval two pairs of high quality

LAWRENCE "FLEXIBLE" HOSE

Two Pairs $1

Made from finest imported sea island cotton, mercerized, spiral knit—elastic sole—no yarrow top—Send no money—no obligations—we want you to know quality and the big saving in direct buying. Send today.

LAWRENCE KNITTING CO.
4 Charles St., Methuen, Mass.
Agents each city and town

WE TRUST YOU

DAISY FLY KILLER

PLACED ANYWHERE, ATTRACTS AND KILLS ALL FLIES. Not clear, ornamental, no odor, cheap.

LASTS ALL SEASON. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; and not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed effective. Sold by dealers, or 6 sent by express prepaid for $1.

HAROLD SOMERS, 150 DeKalb Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

SOFA PHILOSOPHY. IV

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

Clouds

"THAT'S my cloud!" said the Girl. She said it emphatically, one slim finger pointing in the direction of the sky. "It's my cloud."

The Boy followed the line of her finger, and saw a soft white billowy cloud—a little cloud, shaped like a pillow—that hung suspended in a dreary sea of blue.

"Why?" he questioned lazily; "why did you choose that one?"

The Girl considered. In the interval a gentle breeze, a June-time breeze, swept softly among the green branches, and a little bird, far off in the top of a tree, began to croon a song. All about them summertime glowed, a perfect flower-sprinkled, sunshine-painted summertime.

"I chose that one," the Girl answered finally, "I chose that one because it looked so comfortable."

The Boy glanced over thoughtfully at her face. It was a peaceful face, slightly tanned, a bit sunburned high on the cheekbones. Her eyes, which were strangely childish, looked straight off at the trees and the bird and the green leaves, to the little pillow-shaped cloud that nestled cozily in the sky. He sighed and pushed sharply against the ground with one rubber-sole shoe. The hammock rocked violently.

The Girl, startled out of her reverie, brought her eyes back to the things of earth. Her gaze roamed contentedly over the broad, green fields, restfully among the swaying green branches, and finally, sought the Boy's gloomy face. Something in his expression made her laugh.

"Why don't you choose a cloud, too?" she asked him.

The Boy's face brightened a bit—made because a ray of sunshine slanting among the leaves happened to touch it gently with a golden-fingered car.

"I guess I will," he assented gracefully.

"Here's another one," said the Girl; "this looks like mine." Interestedly she leaned forward. "You can have it," he told him.

The Boy looked up at another little pillow-shaped cloud that hung in the sky. With anxious, wrinkled forehead he surveyed the distance between the two. One hung in the extreme east, and the other tipped perilously off over the end of the setting sun. "That's a terrible cloud," he ventured finally. "I guess I won't choose that one."

The Girl opened wide blue eyes and stared in his direction. "But," she stammered, "but it's just like mine. And accusingly, 'you liked mine—you said so!'"

"Ours," admitted the Boy cheerfully, "is nice, but the one you picked for me is too far away from—everything. I think I'll take that one." His brown finger pointed to a cloud that stood up next to the Girl's soft little pillow-shaped one.

The Girl looked at the cloud, and her face puckered in an effort not to smile. "What a silly one to choose!" she giggled.

"I was a silly cloud to choose, for its rugged little sides sloped up sharply to a dangerous-looking, pointed center. It's an unpleasant cloud, touched with bits of gray color, and jagged little particles of the sky show through."

"It's not a silly cloud," said the Boy indignantly; "not a bit silly. It has lots of advantages. It's convenient, and the gray color will save washing; it's odd (for who ever saw such a shape?), and it's the pointedest one in the sky. I like it very much. It's not silly."

"It," the Girl was giggling unconsciously now, "how will you stay on?"

The Boy looked dubiously at the cloud, and all at once a light broke over his face.

"Why," he said, "that will give me something to do—up there in the sky. It will relieve the monotony of things wonderfully."

The Girl spurned the ground impatiently with the toe of one slipper, and again the hammock bounded forward. "I don't understand exactly what you mean," she ventured.

"It's this way," said the Boy. His face wore the pleased expression of a man about to expound a theory. "It's this way," he said happily; "it would be too comfortable to live on a nice pillow cloud all day long. I'd grow fat and lazy lying there with nothing to do but stare up into the blue of the sky. I wouldn't have any interest in life. But—" his voice rose triumphantly—"but if I lived on a little jagged cloud that slanted up to a point, I'd have a constant struggle—just staying on. I'd never have time to grow lazy or fat or bored. If I was on the comfortable little pillow cloud, I'd have nothing to do all day but lie looking up at the blue above me, and I'd grow tired of the blue; but if I was struggling all the time to keep my foot-hold, every glimpse that I got, in a moment of quietness, would be new to me—and exceedingly beautiful. And, because I'd be very busy, I'd be very happy. See?" He stopped abruptly.

The Girl looked at him in fervent, albeit silent, admiration. The Girl is always interested in theories, and idealizing, and brave words. "Yes, I believe that I do understand," she said softly, "and I rather like you for it."

The Boy beamed. It was not often that he received such pointblank compliments. Almost nervously he pushed with his foot, and again the hammock began to swing. Almost childishly he moved a little nearer to the Girl, who sat quiet as a piece of bisque statuary—lost in dream.

"Thanks," said the Boy at last. He said it lamely.

THE Girl did not hear him. At least she did not seem to hear him. Her eyes were fixed on the sky, and a soft breeze played in the tumbled strands of her hair. All about them were little rustling evening noises; the soft cuddling down of tiny birds, the faint mooing of a cow in the distance, the weary tramp of a horse coming home from work.

In the West the sun was setting like some glowing ball of fire. It sank slowly down behind a tall hill, and all the earth swam in a sea of violet and yellow and rose color. The little pillow-shaped cloud was tinged with a faint shell pink, but the rugged cloud beside it was touched with the magic of a magician. The gray tints were supplanted by lovely throbbing purples and the sky showed mysteriously through the ragged holes. Crimson blended regally with orange and sharp corners took on artistic outlines. Unconsciously, perhaps, the Boy's hand touched the Girl's fingers.

"Isn't it beautiful?" she murmured softly.

The Boy was triumphant. "And," he said ungrammatically, "it's my cloud that's the most beautiful, instead of your comfortable one."

The Girl showed unexpected generosity.

"It is, indeed!" she said.

The Boy leaned a little nearer in the growing dusk. Some of the light was fading from the world, and it was dusky, mysterious, throbbing with a strange breath of romance.

"Wouldn't you like to share my cloud with me?" asked the Boy softly.

The Girl rose to her feet and smiled down at him, but there was the faintest tinge of mockery in her smile.

"I'm afraid," she murmured gently, "that I couldn't stay on."

THE BEST OF THEM ALL

Of all the magazines I read none has ever given me as much genuine pleasure and benefit as the Christian Herald. MRS. G. F. Sanbury, Pa.

Oakland Six Model 32

Motor-Six Cylinder Oakland Northway-30-35 H.P.
 Weight ----- 2100 Pounds
 Wheelbase ----- 110 Inches
 Body ----- Touring ----- 5 Passenger
 Rear Seat 46 Inches Wide
 Electric Starting-Lighting-Ignition System
 Oakland-Stewart Vacuum Feed
 One Man Top-Complete Equipment

Our Chief Engineer Said:

"If you can sell 20,000 we'll get the cost down for a price of $795"

Great Strength with Light Weight
 High Speed Motor with Great Power
 Low Center of Gravity with Usual Road Clearance
 The Comfort of Roominess and Balance
 Economy with Luxury

Our Sales Manager Said:

"At $795 we can sell over 30,000"

But no!—We stop at 20,000—that's the limit of output for this model this season. Oakland high standards of care in manufacture forbid a greater number.

So there will be 20,000 owners at the wheel of this new OAKLAND SIX—proving its power and speed—proud of its name, its beauty, its performance.

20,000 pockets saving money because of low upkeep—Oakland economy of fuel and tires—Oakland assurance against repairs and depreciations.

Five times 20,000 owners—every passenger—enjoying the safety and comfort of Oakland construction, balance, roominess.

Get your name to your dealer now, so you'll be one of these happy 20,000.

Complete information with specifications mailed on request.

Dealers—wire for allotment. New territory given in order of application.

Oakland Motor Co., Pontiac, Mich.
 Branches and Distributors in All Principal Cities

Oakland Six $795

Touring and Roadster

"Sturdy as the Oak"

No one thinks of leaving poisons within reach of little children—except fly poisons. Yet fly poisons kill more children than all other poisons combined.

We quote from an editorial in the December issue of The Journal of the Michigan State Medical Society.

"From the first of July to October 15, the press of a few states reported 45 cases of poisoning of children from the use of fly poisons."

These children were all under six years of age. The poisoning was caused by swallowing the liquid covering poison fly paper or by sucking the poisoned and sweetened wicks protruding from tin boxes. The editorial suggests that a large number of cases of such poisoning probably escaped recognition because:

